The use of deadly force by shooting into a subject's vehicle in a dangerous high-speed chase situation is lawful so long as the danger continues to exist (Plumhoff v. Rickard (2014) 572 U.S. 765, 766 [134 S. Ct. 2012; 188 L.Ed.2nd 1056].), but not so when the subject is surrounded and poses no immediate danger to others. (A.D. v. State of California Highway Patrol (9th Cir. 2013) 712 F.3rd 446.)

A police officer violates the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause if he kills a suspect when acting with the purpose to harm, unrelated to a legitimate law enforcement objective. An officer was properly found to be civilly liable after shooting and killing the decedent (plaintiffs' mother) at the end of a high speed chase, but where the decedent was blocked in without a means of escape, and where no weapons were observed. (Id, at pp. 452-454, 456-460.)

> The officer held not to be entitled to qualified immunity. (Id., at pp. 454-455.)

Where officers shot and killed the plaintiff's father, there was no violation of the plaintiff/minor's Fourteenth Amendment rights because there was no evidence that the deputies acted with a purpose to harm unrelated to the legitimate law enforcement objective of defending themselves when the decedent approached with a knife in his hand. However, remand of the plaintiff/minor's negligent wrongful death claim was required because a reasonable jury could conclude that the use of deadly force was not objectively reasonable under the circumstances. (Hayes v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2013) 736 F.3rd 1223, 1229-1235; a negligence civil action.)

> An officer's pre-shooting conduct is properly included in the totality of the circumstances surrounding his use of deadly force. The officer's duty to act reasonably when using deadly force extends to pre-shooting conduct when officers shot a suicidal person who approached them with a knife in hand. (Id., at pp. 1235-1236; see also Mendez v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F.3rd 1067, 1073, 1082-1084.)

See Tabares v. City of Huntington Beach (9th Cir. 2021) 988 F.3rd 1119, holding that California's negligence rules are different than the Fourth Amendment excessive (i.e., "deadly") force rules, holding that the former may be violated despite an officer's use of force being reasonable under the Fourth Amendment. Citing Hayes, supra, at pg. 254, the Court noted that "(o)fficers are liable (under California's negligence standards) 'if the tactical conduct and decisions leading up to the use of deadly force show, as part of the totality of circumstances, that the use of deadly force was unreasonable.'" (Italics in original.) Fourth Amendment rules generally preclude the consideration of pre-incident decisions. (See Scott v. Henrich (9th Cir. 1994) 39 F.3rd 912, 914.)

> "Thus, California negligence law regarding the use of deadly force overall is 'broader than federal Fourth Amendment law.'" (Tabares v. City of Huntington Beach, supra, at p. 1125; quoting Villegas ex rel. C.V. v. City of Anaheim (9th Cir. 2016) 823 F.3rd 1252, 1257, fn.6.)

A police officer who shoots a person is not entitled to qualified immunity from a father's Fourteenth Amendment claim for deprivation of a familial relationship where the evidence shows that the decedent was already subdued, creating a genuine issue as to whether the officer's actions were required by a legitimate law enforcement purpose. (Johnson v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (9th Cir. 2013) 724 F.3rd 1159, 1168-1170.)

Shooting a mentally ill, mid-50's year-old-woman who threatened to kill the officers as she aggressively moved towards them (coming to within two to four feet) while wielding a knife, held to be legally justified as a matter of law under the circumstances. (City & County of San Francisco v. Sheehan (2015) 575 U.S. 600, 612-617 [135 S.Ct. 1765; 191 L.Ed.2nd 856].)

> The Court declined to decide whether making a second entry of plaintiff's room, having initially backed out when confronted by the knife-wielding plaintiff, was constitutional under the circumstances, it not having been briefed on appeal, but rather (in overruling the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal) found that the officers had qualified immunity from civil liability in that the officers' choice to reenter the room without waiting for backup or otherwise planning a strategy did not violate clearly established law. (Id., pgs. 612-616.)

An officer was properly denied qualified immunity for having shot an individual twice after ordering him to show his hands. The victim initially appeared to reach for something in his pocket but then (as it appeared in the officer's bodycam) raised both hands (that were empty) when the officer shot and killed him. Per the Court, a jury could well find that, at the moment he was shot, (1) Mr. Lopez presented no immediate threat to Officer Wright and (2) Officer Wright's use of deadly force was a violation of Mr. Lopez's Fourth Amendment rights. (Lopez v. City of Riverside (9th Cir. 2023) 2023 U.S.App. LEXIS 32066; Unpublished.)

> Note: Appellants' emergency motion for a stay of proceedings before the district court below was GRANTED pending issuance of the mandate or further order from this Court. (Jan. 12, 2024; 2024 U.S. App. LEXIS 898.)

The analysis did not change because the weapon turned out to be a replica given the officers' reasonable belief that the resident possessed a real firearm. The officers were reasonably justified in not taking the resident's assurances that the gun was not real at face value. Under the totality of the circumstances, it was objectively reasonable for the officers to believe the resident posed an immediate threat. Given the immediacy of the threat presented by these allegations, the estate could not state a plausible claim for excessive force, regardless of whatever additional facts the resident might allege. The district court did not abuse its discretion in denying the estate leave to amend the complaint. (Estate of Strickland v. Nevada County (9th Cir. 2023) 69 F.4th 614.)

Law Enforcement's Written Policy RE: Use of (Deadly) Force:

Seattle Example: In 2012, the Seattle Police Department issued a "Use of Force Policy" which necessarily included the use of deadly force through the use of firearms:

> Per the policy: "Officers shall only use objectively reasonable force, proportional to the threat or urgency of the situation, when necessary, to achieve a law-enforcement objective." The Use of Force Policy provides a set of factors that officers must consider to determine whether a proposed use of force is objectively reasonable, necessary, and proportional to the threat at issue. Although the Use of Force Policy requires officers to consider those factors before using a firearm, it also states that officers must consider those factors only "[w]hen safe under the totality of circumstances and time and circumstances permit[.]" The Use of Force Policy also requires officers to use de-escalation tactics to reduce the need for force only"[w]hen safe and feasible under the totality of circumstances[.]"
>
> In a civil suit filed by 125 Seattle Police Officers challenging the constitutionality of this policy under the Second Amendment right to bear arms, arguing that the policy unconstitutionally restricted the officers' right to use firearms, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, in Mahoney v. Sessions (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 873, upheld the trial court's determination that said policy was constitutional, concluding as follows:
>
> > "The City of Seattle has a significant interest in regulating the use of department-issued firearms by its police officers, and the UF (Use of Force) Policy does not impose a substantial burden on the Second Amendment right to use a firearm for the core lawful purpose of self-defense. Therefore, we apply intermediate scrutiny to determine whether the UF Policy violates the Second Amendment right of its police officers. We conclude that the UF Policy is constitutional under the Second Amendment because there is a reasonable fit between the UF Policy and the City of Seattle's important government interest in ensuring the safety of both the public and its police officers. We affirm the district court's dismissal of Appellants' Second Amendment claim." (pg. 883.)

Gov't. Code § 7286 (SB 230): California Law Enforcement and Established Policies: By January 2, 2021, all California law enforcement agencies are required to have established a policy that provides a minimum standard on the use of force and to make the policy accessible to the public.

The policy is required to include 20 items, including (but not limited to):

The requirement that officers use "de-escalation techniques," crisis intervention tactics," and other alternatives to force "when feasible."

See Estate of Strickland v. Nevada County (9th Cir. 2023) 69 F.4th 614, 619-620: Officers' failure to employ de-escalation techniques viewed as a factor in determining whether they used excessive force in subduing the soon-to-be deceased mentally disturbed individual.

That an officer may use only that level of force that is proportional to the seriousness of the offense or threat.

That officers are required to report excessive force to a superior officer.

Specific guidelines regarding situations in which an officer may or may not draw a firearm or point a firearm.

A requirement that officers consider the potential risks to bystanders before discharging a firearm.

A requirement that an officer intercede when seeing another officer use excessive force.

Specific guidelines under which the discharge of a firearm at or from a moving vehicle may or may not be permitted.

For purposes of these policies, the following definitions apply:

"Deadly force" is defined as force reasonably anticipated to create a substantial likelihood of causing death or great bodily injury.

"Feasible" is defined as reasonably capable of being done or carried out under the circumstances to successfully achieve the arrest or lawful objective without increasing risk to the officer or another person.

Note: This bill also created new Pen. Code § 13519.10, which requires the Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training (POST) to implement a course for the regular and periodic training of law enforcement officers in the use of force, and to develop minimum use of force guidelines for adoption by California law enforcement agencies.

Effective Jan. 1, 2022, the following list of necessary requirements that a law enforcement agency's policy on the use of force was added to Gov't. Code § 7286 by AB 26:

> 1. Procedures to prohibit an officer from training other officers for a period of at least three years from the date that an "abuse of force" complaint against that officer is substantiated.
>
> 2. A requirement that an officer who has received all required training on the requirement to intercede and fails to act, be disciplined up to and including in the same manner as the officer who committed the excessive force.
>
> > Note: Existing language in this section requires an officer to intercede when he or she observes another officer "using force that is clearly beyond that which is necessary."
>
> 3. A prohibition on retaliation against an officer who reports a suspected violation of a law or regulation by another officer, to a supervisor or other person at the agency that has the authority to investigate the violation.
>
> The following definitions were added:
>
> > "Retaliation" is defined as a demotion, failure to promote, denial of access to training, denial of access to resources necessary to properly perform duties, intimidation, harassment, or threat of injury.
> >
> > "Excessive force" is defined as a level of force that is found to have violated existing Pen Code § 835a, the requirements on the use of force in this section, or any other law or statute.
> >
> > "Intercede" is defined as physically stopping the excessive use of force; recording the excessive force if equipped with a body-worn camera;

documenting efforts to intervene or efforts to de-escalate; confronting the officer about the excessive force during the use of force; and, if the officer continues the excessive use of force, reporting to dispatch or the watch commander the offending officer's name, unit, location, time, and situation. Note: Pen Code § 835a describes the requirement that an officer use no more than "objectively reasonable force to effect the arrest, to prevent escape, or to overcome resistance," while defining all the relevant terms. (See Pen Code § 835a, above.)

Deadly Force Used Against Armed Individuals:

The simple fact that a suspect is known to be armed is not necessarily enough by itself to justify the use of deadly force against that person. (Nehad v. Browder (9th Cir. 2019) 929 F.3rd 1125, 1134; citing N.E.M. v. City of Salinas (9th Cir. 2019) 761 F. App'x. 698, 699-700, affirming denial of summary judgment to officers who shot garden shear-wielding suspect when he turned toward officers less than nine feet away, after having swung shears at officers; S.B. v. Cty. of San Diego (9th Cir. 2017) 864 F.3rd 1010, 1014, finding triable issue where decedent was armed with a knife; Hayes v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2013) 736 F.3rd 1223, at 1233-34 (same); Glenn v. Washington Cty (9th Cir. 2011) 673 F.3rd 864, at 878-979, finding triable issue where police used beanbag rounds on knife-wielding subject prior to using lethal force); Estate of Lopez v. Gelhaus (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 998, 1017, denying summary judgment where decedent was holding toy AK-47 rifle.)

In Nehad, the evidence as presented in the civil defendant's motion for summary judgment showed that the decedent was some 17 feet away when shot, although walking towards the officer, it was at a "relatively slow pace," he was "not aggressive in nature" and "didn't make any offensive motions" towards the officer, and "did not say anything, make any sudden movements, or move the supposed knife in any way." Under these circumstances, a jury could reasonably find that shooting the decedent constituted an unreasonable use of force even if armed with a knife (an object which, after the fact, turned out to be a ballpoint pen). (Nehad v. Browder, supra.)

Exacerbating the situation by aggressively shouting directions at the suspect is also a factor to consider in evaluating the necessity to use deadly force. (Estate of Strickland v. Nevada County (9th Cir.

May 31, 2023) 69 F.4th 614, 620 citing Nehad v. Browder, supra, at p. 1135.)

The estate of the deceased, Bernardo Palacios Carbajal, filed suit pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Defendants-Appellees Salt Lake City Police Officers Neil Iversen and Kevin Fortuna in their individual capacities, as well as Salt Lake City Corporation. Plaintiff alleged the officers violated Palacios' Fourth Amendment rights when he was fatally shot during a police pursuit. The district court granted summary judgment on the basis of qualified immunity in favor of defendants, finding a lack of a constitutional violation and that plaintiff failed to show a violation of clearly established law. On appeal, plaintiff contended that disputes about material and historical facts precluded summary judgment. According to plaintiff, the district court erred by not making reasonable factual inferences in plaintiff's favor, primarily that: (1) Palacios may have been unaware he was being pursued by police because officers did not verbally identify themselves, because he was severely intoxicated, and he did not match the full description of the robbery suspect. (2) Once Palacios fell onto his side during the shooting and did not point his gun at officers, he was effectively subdued. (3) Palacios' conduct showed he was attempting to avoid confrontation, not evade arrest. Plaintiff also contended that officers exaggerated the seriousness of the offenses that precipitated the pursuit and that officers should have used less intrusive means of apprehension because Palacios did not pose an imminent threat. The Eighth Circuit held that the district court did not abuse its discretion as to any of the above issues. Finding no reversible error, the Court affirmed the district court's dismissal of Plaintiff's case. (Palacios v. Fortuna (10th Cir. Mar. 7, 2023) 61 F.4th 1248.)

Use of a Police Dog and Deadly Force: The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal had previously held that "deadly force," when evaluating the use of force by a law enforcement agency through the use of a police dog, should be defined as: "Force which is reasonably likely to cause (or which 'had a reasonable probability of causing') death." (Vera Cruz v. City of Escondido (9th Cir. 1997) 139 F.3rd 659, 663; use of a police dog is not deadly force.)

E.g.: Use of a police dog to bite and hold a potentially dangerous fleeing felon for up to a minute, until the arresting officer could insure that the situation was safe, did not constitute the use of "deadly force," and was therefore not a violation of the Fourth Amendment (seizure), despite the fact that the suspect's arm was severely injured by the dog. (Miller v. Clark County (9th Cir. 2003) 340 F.3rd 959.)

The above, however, appears to be a minority opinion. As a result, the Ninth Circuit has recently changed its mind, adopting the majority rule, agreeing that even in the use of a police dog, "deadly force" should be defined as "force that creates a substantial risk of death or serious bodily injury." (Smith v. City of Hemet (9th Cir. 2005) 394 F.3rd 689.)

Note: The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal further held in Smith that the defendant pleading guilty to resisting arrest, per P.C. § 148(a)(1), does not preclude him from suing the officers for using unreasonable force so long as the officer's legal actions can be separated from his use of unreasonable force. The California Supreme Court later ruled in Yount v. City of Sacramento (2008) 43 Cal.4th 885, that it is not necessary to find the officers' lawful actions divisible from their use of unreasonable use of force in order for the criminal defendant to be guilty of resisting arrest and still sue. Based upon this theory, the Ninth Circuit found that a criminal defendant, even after pleading guilty to resisting arrest per P.C. § 148(a)(1), may sue the officer for using unreasonable force in a continuous course of action so long as at least part of the officer's actions were lawful. (Hooper v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2011) 629 F.3rd 1127.) Both Smith and Hooper are dog bite cases.

Where the dog's handler closely followed his police dog and called her off very quickly after the initial contact with the plaintiff, and due to the officer's close proximity to his dog, the encounter between plaintiff and the dog was so brief that the officer did not even know if contact had occurred, where the risk of harm posed by this particular use of force, and the actual harm caused, was moderate, the district court properly determined that the use of force in this instance was not severe. Summary judgment for the City of San Diego was upheld. (Lowry v. City of San Diego (9th 2017) 858 F.3rd 124.)

Use of Deadly Force Upheld:

Where the suspect violently resisted arrest, physically attacked the officer, and grabbed the officer's gun, the use of deadly force upheld. (Billington v. Smith (9th Cir. 2002) 292 F.3rd 1177, 1185.)

Where a suspect, who had been behaving erratically, swung a knife at an officer. (Reynolds v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 1996) 84 F.3rd 1162, 1168.)

Pointing a gun at a police officer. (See Scott v. Henrick (9th Cir. 1994) 39 F.3rd 912, 914; George v. Morris (9th Cir. 2013) 736 F.3rd 829, 838-839.)

Although "(l)aw enforcement officials may not kill suspects who do not pose an immediate threat to their safety or to the safety of others simply because they are armed" (see Harris v. Roderick (9th > Cir. 1997) 126 F.3rd 1189, 1204), "(w)hen an individual points his gun 'in the officers' direction,' the Constitution undoubtedly entitles the officer to respond with deadly force." (George v. Morris, supra, at p. 838.)

>
> > However, the mere fact alone that a person possesses deadly weapons does not justify the use of deadly force. (Harris v. Roderick, supra, at p. 1202.)

When the suspect attacked an officer with a rock and a stick. (Garcia v. United States (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2nd 806, 812.)

Defendant, acting in a bizarre manner, reported to have already assaulted someone, and apparently under the influence of drugs, holding a pen with its point facing toward the officers which "may inflict lethal force," justified three officers holding him down while he was handcuffed. (Gregory v. County of Maui (9th Cir. 2008) 523 F.3rd 1103; suspect died of a heart attack while being held down.)

Although "(l)aw enforcement officials may not kill suspects who do not pose an immediate threat to their safety or to the safety of others simply because they are armed" (see Harris v. Roderick (9th Cir. 1997) 126 F.3rd 1189, 1204), "(w)hen an individual points his gun 'in the officers' direction,' the Constitution undoubtedly entitles the officer to respond with deadly force." (George v. Morris (9th Cir. 2013) 736 F.3rd 829, 838.)

Officers were held to be entitled to qualified immunity where the officers shot and killed the decedent after he led them on a 45 minute chase following a domestic disturbance, tried to injure himself and provoke the officers into shooting him, threw rocks at the officers, and then finally advanced on the officers with a large rock over his head as if to assault the officers with it as the officers warned him that he would be shot if he didn't desist. The only alternative force then available, pepper spray, would not have alleviated the danger, and there was no reason to believe that the decedent would have acted rationally. Under the totality of the circumstances, the officers feared immediate serious physical harm. A reasonable officer would have believed that the decedent was threatening them with immediate serious harm that shooting him was a reasonable response. (Lal v. California (9th Cir. 2014) 746 F.3rd 1112, 1115-1119.)

When the fleeing felon was known to have shot a victim in the course of a burglary from which he was escaping, the use of deadly force to stop him is justified. (Forrett v. Richardson (9th Cir. 1997) 112 F.3rd 416, 420.)

A police officer was held not to have violated the Fourth Amendment when the decedent began reaching for the officer's gun, rushed at the officer, violently grappled with him, and slammed the officer into multiple cars. As a matter of law, decedent's violent, precipitate, and illegal attack on the officer severed any causal connection between the officer's initial actions and his subsequent use of deadly force during the struggle in the street. (Johnson v. City of Philadelphia (3rd Cir. 2016) 837 F.3rd 343.)

> See also fn. 2: "The question of proximate causation in this case is made straightforward by the exceptional circumstances presented—namely, a sudden, unexpected attack that instantly forced the officer into a defensive fight for his life. As discussed above, that rupture in the chain of events, coupled with the extraordinary violence of Newsuan's assault, makes the Fourth Amendment reasonableness analysis similarly straightforward. Given the extreme facts of this case, our opinion should not be misread to broadly immunize police officers from Fourth Amendment liability whenever a mentally disturbed person threatens an officer's physical safety. Depending on the severity and immediacy of the threat and any potential risk to public safety posed by an officer's delayed action, it may be appropriate for an officer to retreat or await backup when encountering a mentally disturbed individual. It may also be appropriate for the officer to attempt to de-escalate an encounter to eliminate the need for force or to reduce the amount of force necessary to control an individual. Nor should it be assumed that mentally disturbed persons are so inherently unpredictable that their reactions will always sever the chain of causation between an officer's initial actions and a subsequent use of force. If a plaintiff produces competent evidence that persons who have certain illnesses or who are under the influence of certain substances are likely to respond to particular police actions in a particular way that may be sufficient to create a jury issue on causation. And of course, nothing we say today should discourage police departments and municipalities from devising and rigorously enforcing policies to make tragic events like this one less likely. The facts of this case, however, are extraordinary. Whatever the Fourth Amendment requires of officers encountering emotionally or mentally disturbed individuals, it does not oblige an officer to passively endure a life-threatening physical assault, regardless of the assailant's mental state."

> But see newly enacted (effective 1/1/2020) P.C. § 835(a)(c)(2); "A peace officer shall not use deadly force against a person based on the danger that person poses to themselves, if an objectively reasonable officer would believe the person does not pose an imminent threat of death or serious bodily injury to the peace officer or to another person." (Italics added.)

Where an officer arrives late at an ongoing police action and witnesses shots being fired by one of several individuals in a house surrounded by other officers, and that officer then shoots and kills an armed occupant of the house without first giving a warning, the officer did not violate clearly established law based on his failure to provide a verbal warning before utilizing deadly force: "No settled Fourth Amendment principle requires that officer to second-guess the earlier steps already taken by his or her fellow officers in instances like the one [the officer] confronted here." (White v. Pauly (2017) 580 U.S. 73 [137 S.Ct. 548; 196 L.Ed.2nd 463].)

> However, the Court left open the issue of Officer White's civil liability if plaintiffs can prove that he witnessed deficient performance by other officers upon his arrival and should have realized that corrective action was necessary before he used deadly force in that this theory was not argued in the courts below.

Where officers shot and killed a minor who, while apparently high on drugs and alcohol, grabbed a knife in a threatening manner while within three to eight feet (the testimony varied) of the officers, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity even though a reasonable jury could find that the decedent's Fourth Amendment rights had been violated. It was not clearly established as of the date of the incident (i.e., August 24, 2013) that using deadly force in this situation, even viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, would constitute excessive force under the Fourth Amendment. (S.B. v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2017) 864 F.3rd 1010.)

When the decedent charged at officers from inside an apartment bedroom that was supposed to be vacant, wielding two feet of a broken hockey stick by holding it in a manner as if to strike the officers while within several feet of both police officers, and growling like an animal, shooting him in self-defense was held to be justified, the officers having qualified immunity from civil liability. (Woodward v. City of Tucson (9th Cir. 2017) 870 F.3rd 1154, 1161-1163.)

A number of officers shooting the decedent 61 times in eight seconds when he pointed what appeared to be a handgun (but was later discovered to be a BB gun) at one of the officers was not unreasonable, and not a violation of the Fourth Amendment. Officers are not required to stop shooting until the threat is neutralized. Also, the fact that a supervisor was told by a witness that the decedent's pistol was only a BB gun did not alter this conclusion when there was insufficient time to verify that fact. (Garza v. Briones (5th Cir. 2019) 943 F.3rd 740.)

An officer was held to be entitled to qualified immunity when he fatally shot a male suspect to death, where the male was over six feet tall and 250 pounds and apparently on drugs and violently resisting arrest, and where using a Taser merely aggravated him, prompting the decedent to knock the officer into a wall and then come at him, hitting him on the head, neck and back with his fists. Under these circumstances, where the decedent "clearly had the upper hand in the fight," the Court found that "there are strong reasons to believe that (the decedent) posed a risk of death or serious injury to the officers or to the family members in the home." (Isayeva v. Sacramento Sheriff's Department (9th Cir. 2017) 872 F.3rd 938, 950-953.)

"(W)hen an initially compliant suspect stops following officer commands and instead grabs a readily accessible firearm (and then points it at the officer), an officer "need not wait for [the] suspect to open fire on him . . . before the officer may fire back." (Jordan v. Howard (6th Cir. 2021) 987 F.3rd 537.)

See also Nehad v. Browder (9th Cir. 2019) 929 F.3rd 1125, at page 1135, where the Court concluded that a reasonable jury could find that the police officer acted with undue haste, unnecessarily creating a situation where shooting and killing an inebriated suspect became necessary, when the decedent was apparently walking (or staggering) towards the officer but still some 17 feet away, and although reported to have threatened others with a knife but where no knife was visible at the time, and where the officer failed to identify himself (the suspect being blinded by the high beams of the officer's patrol vehicle) and stepped out from behind the protection of his patrol car's door before shooting the decedent two seconds later.

The Court's analysis did not change just because the weapon turned out to be a replica given the responding officers' reasonable belief that the resident possessed a real firearm. The officers were reasonably justified in not taking the resident's assurances that the gun was not real at face value. Under the totality of the circumstances, it was objectively reasonable for the officers to believe the resident posed an immediate threat. Given the immediacy of the threat presented by these allegations, the estate could not state a plausible claim for excessive force, regardless of whatever additional facts the resident might allege. The district court, therefore, did not abuse its discretion in denying the estate leave to amend the complaint. (Estate of Strickland v. Nevada County (9th Cir. 2023) 69 F.4th 614.)

Deadly Force Held to be Unreasonable:

Civil jury verdict of officer liability upheld where the officer shot the victim in the back (paralyzing him) when the victim would not drop a knife he held, and even though the victim had turned away from the officer, holding the knife to his own stomach while threatening to hurt himself. (Lam v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 2017) 869 F.3rd 1077.)

See also Curnow v. Ridgecrest Police (9th Cir. 1991) 952 F.2nd 321, 324-325; holding that deadly force was unreasonable where the suspect possessed a gun but was not pointing it at the officers and was not facing the officers when they shot.

And Ting v. United States (9th Cir. 1991) 927 F.2nd 1504, 1508-1511; use of deadly force held to be unreasonable when the suspect had already dropped his gun.

Possession of a pocket knife, with which the deceased was threatening to cut his own throat but not brandishing it towards officers, resulting in the officers shooting and killing him after beanbag rounds failed to subdue him, may not have warranted the use of firearms (nor even the beanbag shotgun) and thus subjecting the officers to potential civil liability. (Glenn v. Washington County (9th Cir. 2011) 673 F.3rd 864, 870-880.)

> As a "less lethal" weapon, the lawfulness of the use of a beanbag shotgun is dependent upon a determination that its use was reasonable under the circumstances. In this case, where the out-of-control subject wasn't threatening anyone but himself, its use was unjustified. (Id., at 878-880.)

Officers were not entitled to qualified immunity for having shot and killed the decedent despite the lack of any evidence by plaintiffs contradicting the officers' version of the circumstances. Between the five officers involved, there were discrepancies as to whether defendant reached for his waistband with his left or his right hand, and whether he was inside or outside his car when he did so. A jury, therefore, could plausibly find the officers' civilly liable for the decedent's death. (Cruz v. City of Anaheim (9th Cir. 2014) 765 F.3rd 1076, 1078-1080.)

Pointing and "training" a firearm at a five-week-old infant while conducting a Fourth Waiver search is excessive, and a Fourth Amendment violation. (Motley v. Parks (9th Cir. 2005) 432 F.3rd 1072, 1088-1089.)

Shooting a person who had not yet been accused of any crime, did not appear to be a threat to the public, and could not escape, even though he had been uncooperative and refused to show his hands, held to raise questions of fact for a civil jury to decide whether the officers had used excessive force by shooting and killing him. (Espinosa v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2010) 598 F.3rd 528. 537-538.)

Where a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action requires a jury to sift through various disputed factual contentions, including whether officers were telling the truth about when, why, and how one officer shot the decedent, summary judgment was inappropriate. Specifically, the report from the autopsy performed on decedent's body conflicted with the officer's version of the events. A video taken by the sergeant's dashboard camera was inconsistent with the officer's version of the events. And the officer's and sergeant's statements were inconsistent with one another. (Newmaker v. City of Fortuna (9th Cir. 2016) 842 F.3rd 1108, 1115-1117.)

A police officer was held not to be entitled to qualified immunity for having shot and killed an unarmed suspect during an attempted investigatory stop. Deadly force was not justified as a matter of law when the reported domestic dispute had ended before the police became involved and information from the victim indicated that defendant was not known to carry weapons. With the decedent walking away from officers, he did not pose an immediate threat to the safety of the officers or others. Shooting the decedent without warning as he pulled his hand out of his pocket, as he was ordered to do by the defendant officer, with no indication that he had a weapon (or anything else) in his hand, violated the Fourth Amendment. Deadly force is permissible only if the suspect threatens the officer with a weapon or there is probable cause to believe that he had committed a crime involving the infliction or threatened infliction of serious physical harm. (A.K.H. v. City of Tustin (9th Cir. 2016) 837 F.3rd 1005, 1010-1013.)

An officer observing a thirteen-year-old boy walking down the street carrying what appeared to be an AK-47 rifle, shot and killed the victim after he ignored the officer's command to drop the weapon. The rifle turned out to be a toy with the bright orange tip removed. The officer was not entitled to qualified immunity where the plaintiff's evidence showed that the officer failed to warn the victim that he might get shot, the rifle was pointed towards the ground at all times, and the victim made no aggressive moves toward the officer. (Estate of Lopez v. Gelhaus (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 998, 1005-1017.)

A sheriff's deputy was not entitled to qualified immunity where he shot a violent knife-wielding suspect 18 times (and then, because he was still moving, stomped him in the head three times), killing him. A jury could determine that the decedent no longer posed an immediate threat before shooting him the last 9 times, and that any deadly force used after that point violated the Fourth Amendment. Although it is not necessary that a police officer cease shooting until the threat is over, a jury could reasonably conclude that the deputy in this case could have sufficiently protected himself and others after the decedent had fallen by pointing his gun at him and pulling the trigger only if he attempted to flee or attack. (Zion *v. County of Orange (9th Cir. 2017) 874 F.3rd 1072, 1075-1076.)

An officer is not entitled to qualified immunity for having shot an uncooperative mental patient who, after announcing that he was not going to allow the officer or hospital employees to recommit him to the hospital, was stabbing himself, and without any evidence in the record to show that anyone else was in any danger. (Begin v. Drouin (1st Cir. ME, 2018) 908 F.3rd 829.)

The use of deadly force by officers against a subject who is threatening himself only (holding a knife to his own throat), and not making any threatening moves towards officers (who, in this case, were some 34 feet away), is unreasonable and will subject the officers to potential civil liability. (Studdard v. Shelby County (6th Cir. TN, 2019) 934 F.3rd 478; denying the officers summary judgment.)

Shooting and killing an inebriated suspect, walking (or staggering) towards the officer but still some 17 feet away, and although reported to have threatened others with a knife but where no knife was visible at the time, and where the officer failed to identify himself (the suspect being blinded by the high beams of the officer's patrol vehicle), held to raise issues as to the reasonableness of the officer's conclusion that shooting him was necessary. The civil defendants' motion for summary judgment, granted by the trial court, was reversed and remanded for trial. (Nehad v. Browder (9th Cir. 2019) 929 F.3rd 1125.)

Where a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action requires a jury to sift through various disputed factual contentions, including whether officers were telling the truth about when, why, and how one officer shot the decedent, summary judgment was inappropriate. Specifically, the report from the autopsy performed on decedent's body conflicted with the officer's version of the events. A video taken by the sergeant's dashboard camera was inconsistent with the officer's version of the events. And the officer's and sergeant's statements were inconsistent with one another. (Newmaker v. City of Fortuna (9th Cir. 2016) 842 F.3rd 1108, 1115-1117.)

Where an officer arrives late at an ongoing police action and witnesses shots being fired by one of several individuals in a house surrounded by other officers, and that officer then shoots and kills an armed occupant of the house without first giving a warning, the officer did not violate clearly established law based on his failure to provide a verbal warning before utilizing deadly force: "No settled Fourth Amendment principle requires that officer to second-guess the earlier steps already taken by his or her fellow officers in instances like the one [the officer] confronted here." (White v. Pauly (2017) 580 U.S. 73 [137 S.Ct. 548; 196 L.Ed.2nd 463].)

Whether four to six officers pointing guns (and one shotgun) at the plaintiff during a felony "high risk" traffic stop, after an "automated license plate reader" had misidentified the plaintiff's car as being stolen, when the plaintiff was compliant and posed no threat to the officers, constituted excessive force is a jury question. (Green v. City & County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2014) 751 F.3rd 1039, 1049-1051.)

> See "High Speed Pursuits," under Use of Deadly Force by Police Officers," above.

An officer observing a thirteen-year-old boy walking down the street carrying what appeared to be an AK-47 rifle, shot and killed the victim after he ignored the officer's command to drop the weapon. The rifle turned out to be a toy with the bright orange tip removed. The officer was not entitled to qualified immunity where the plaintiff's evidence showed that the officer failed to warn the victim that he might get shot, the rifle was pointed towards the ground at all times, and the victim made no aggressive moves toward the officer. (Estate of Lopez v. Gelhaus (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 998, 1005-1017.)

A sheriff's deputy was not entitled to qualified immunity where he shot a violent knife-wielding suspect 18 times, and then, because he was still moving, stomped him in the head three times. A jury could determine that the decedent no longer posed an immediate threat before shooting him the last 9 times, and that any deadly force used after that point violated the Fourth Amendment. Although it is not necessary that a police officer cease shooting until the threat is over, a jury could reasonably conclude that the deputy in this case could have sufficiently protected himself and others after the decedent had fallen by pointing his gun at him and pulling the trigger only if he attempted to flee or attack. (Zion *v. County of Orange (9th Cir. 2017) 874 F.3rd 1072, 1075-1076.)

Where a sheriff's deputy shot an unarmed plaintiff in the chest, the Court ruled that the trial judge was correct in his determination that there was insufficient legal precedent to forewarn the deputy that when he was within striking distance of a suspect who had held a knife in a threatening manner a fraction of a second earlier, that it was objectively unreasonable to use deadly force (as a civil jury had so-held) instead of waiting to determine whether the suspect still possessed the knife and continued to be an immediate threat to the deputy's safety. The deputy, therefore, was held to be entitled to qualified immunity on this issue. (Reese v. County of Sacramento (9th Cir. 2018) 888 F.3rd 1030, 1036-1040.)

An officer is not entitled to qualified immunity for having shot an uncooperative mental patient who, after announcing that he was not going to allow the officer or hospital employees to recommit him to the hospital, was stabbing himself, and without any evidence in the record to show that anyone else was in any danger. (Begin v. Drouin (1st Cir. ME, 2018) 908 F.3rd 829.)

A reserve, off-duty (out of uniform) officer, holding three unresisting and compliant teenagers at gun point for two minutes while failing to identify himself, where one of the minors was guilty at worst of traffic infractions only (leading to a collision with the officer's personal vehicle), balancing the nature of the intrusion on an individual's Fourth Amendment interests against countervailing governmental interests, was held to be unreasonable and a violation of the teenagers' Fourth Amendment rights. Also, the rule is well-settled, making qualified immunity unavailable to the officer. (Vanderhoef v. Dixon (6th Cir. TN 2019) 938 F.3rd 271.)

Shooting and killing an inebriated suspect, walking (or staggering) towards the officer but still some 17 feet away, and although reported to have threatened others with a knife but where no knife was visible at the time, and where the officer failed to identify himself (the suspect being blinded by the high beams of the officer's patrol vehicle), held to raise issues as to the reasonableness of the officer's conclusion that shooting him was necessary. The civil defendants' motion for summary judgment, granted by the trial court, was reversed and remanded for trial. (Nehad v. Browder (9th Cir. 2019) 929 F.3rd 1125.)

A number of officers shooting the decedent 61 times in eight seconds when he pointed what appeared to be a handgun (but was later discovered to be a BB gun) at one of the officers was not unreasonable, and not a violation of the Fourth Amendment. Officers are not required to stop shooting until the threat is neutralized. Also, the fact that a supervisor was told by a witness that the decedent's pistol was only a BB gun did not alter this conclusion when there was insufficient time to verify that fact. (Garza v. Briones (5th Cir. 2019) 943 F.3rd 740.)

Officers who used deadly force (23 shots, 15 of which hit the decedent) to stop the decedent, armed with a knife, from running towards others and/or into traffic, when the decedent, acting irrationally, appeared to be under the influence of methamphetamine and after the use of a Taser failed to stop him, were held to be entitled to qualified immunity from civil liability. The court noted that even if the officers caused Kong to get out of this car by confronting him, it was reasonable for the officers to believe that the law allowed them to shoot him if he posed an immediate and significant threat. Consequently, the court held that the officers were entitled to qualified immunity because existing Supreme Court and Eighth

Circuit precedent did not provide fair warning to the officers that shooting Kong under these circumstances might be unreasonable. (Sok Kong v. City of Burnside (8th Cir. 2020) 960 F.3rd 985.)

In a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action, judgment for decedent's father on Fourth Amendment excessive use of force claim was affirmed because the jury found the officer retreated from decedent after firing the first shot and that decedent did not have scissors as he approached the officer before the second shot. The district court was correct in denying qualified immunity as a matter of law because the law was clearly established at the time of the shooting that an officer could not constitutionally kill a person who did not pose an immediate threat. The law was also clearly established at the time of the incident that firing a second shot at a person who had previously been aggressive, but posed no threat to the officer at the time of the second shot, would violate the victim's rights. (Lam v. City of Los Banos (9th Cir. 2020) 976 F.3rd 986.)

Punching and tasing a non-resisting and compliant arrestee who the officer knew was emotionally troubled and physically ill, and continued to do so when the arrestee did no more than flinch from the pain and cry for help, and then asphyxiating him by sitting on his chest, was unreasonable force. The officer also was not entitled to qualified immunity under the circumstances. (Mendoza v. City of West Covina (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 702, 714-720.)

Where a police officer shot and killed the decedent at point-blank range when the decedent had begun to drive away with the officer in the car (the officer having entered the car in a futile attempt to subdue him as he resisted two officers), pre-trial summary judgment in favor of the officer was not warranted where a reasonable jury could have found that the decedent's vehicle was not traveling at a high rate of speed and that the officer did not reasonably perceive an immediate threat of death or serious bodily injury when he shot the decedent in the head. Also, a jury could find that the officer reasonably perceived a threat, but not one that justified the immediate use of deadly force. A jury could also find that a warning was practicable and that the failure to give a warning before shooting the decedent was not reasonable. (Gonzalez v. City of Anaheim (9th Cir. 2014) 747 F.3rd 789, 793-797.)

> However, the Court also found that summary judgment on a Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process claim was warranted because there was no evidence that the officers had any ulterior motives for using force against the decedent unrelated to legitimate law enforcement objectives. (Id., at pp. 797-798.)

Where officers investigating a 911 call about a suspected drug dealer with a shotgun at an apartment complex found a suspect next to or holding a shotgun and an officer shot and killed him, deadly force was not objectively reasonable because none of the officers was able to provide a clear time line of when they switched from ordering the suspect to raise his arms to ordering him to drop the gun, or how long after that switch the suspect had to comply with the new command before the officer opened fire. However, the officer was entitled to qualified immunity as to the Fourth Amendment excessive force claim because it was not clearly established in the law that using deadly force in this situation would constitute excessive force. Summary judgment was inappropriate, however, as to the state law claims because the use of deadly force was not objectively reasonable as a matter of law. (C.V. v. City of Anaheim (9th Cir. 2016) 823 F.3rd 1252, 1255-1257.)

Shooting and killing an inebriated suspect, walking (or staggering) towards the officer but still some 17 feet away, and although reported to have threatened others with a knife but where no knife was visible at the time, and where the officer failed to identify himself (the suspect being blinded by the high beams of the officer's patrol vehicle), held to raise issues as to the reasonableness of the officer's conclusion that shooting him was necessary. The civil defendants' motion for summary judgment, granted by the trial court, was reversed and remanded for trial. (Nehad v. Browder (9th Cir. 2019) 929 F.3rd 1125.)

Supremacy Clause Immunity*:

Issue: There is an argument that federal officers are not necessarily bound by California's stricter "use of deadly force" statutes (i.e., P.C. § 835a; see above.), or at least, cannot be held accountable for any more than what the federal law requires.

The Westfall Act: It has been noted that this federal act, at 28 U.S.C. § 2679(b)(1), "accords federal employees absolute immunity from common-law tort claims arising out of acts they undertake in the course of their official duties." (Hoffman v. Preston (9th Cir. 2020) 26 F.4th 1059, 1066; quoting Osborn v. Haley (2007) 549 U.S. 225, 229 [127 S.Ct. 881; 166 L.Ed.2nd 819].)

28 U.S.C. § 1442; Removal Statute: Under the federal "removal statute" (28 U.S.C. § 1442), a federal civil or criminal case can be removed from state to federal court, increasing the likelihood of an outright dismissal, if the federal officer involved shows: (1) that he or she is a federal official; (2) that the prosecution arises out of acts committed by him or her under color of federal law; and, (3) that he or she has a "colorable" federal defense.

"Colorable" only means that the defense is "plausible," not necessarily "clearly sustainable." If the defense is plausible, the district court judge should remove the case. Removal provides the officer with a federal forum for the state trial, meaning the federal court shall decide the question of guilt or innocence and the availability of any defense, like immunity. (See 28 U.S.C. § 1442(a)(1); Texas v. Kleinhert (5th Cir. 2017) 855 F.3rd 305, 311-313.)

Case Law:

In re Neagle (1890) 135 U.S. 1 [10 S.Ct. 658; 34 L.Ed. 55]: Deputy United States Marshal David Neagle, after shooting and killing a person who was assaulting a U.S. Supreme Court Justice, was held to be immune from state prosecution for murder where he was doing no more than performing "an act which he was authorized to do by the law of the United States, which it was his duty to do as a marshal of the United States, and [] in doing that act he did no more than what was necessary and proper for him to do." Under such circumstances, "he cannot be guilty of a crime under the law of the State of California."

Clifton v. Cox (9th Cir. 1977) 549 F.2nd 722: Petitioner federal agent was a member of a task force from various agencies that secured a federal search warrant authorizing a search of a ranch, the alleged location of an illegal drug manufacturing operation. Petitioner, thinking that another agent had been shot, rushed the cabin and kicked in the door. As petitioner entered the front door, the owner started to flee, but petitioner leveled his pistol at the running figure, called halt twice, waited a second or two and then fired, killing the owner. Petitioner was indicted in the state court for second-degree murder and involuntary manslaughter. He subsequently petitioned and was granted a writ of habeas corpus and was released from state custody. On appeal, the court affirmed, holding that a federal agent could not be held on a state criminal charge where the alleged crime arose during the performance of his federal duties under the Supremacy Clause, U.S. Const. art. VI. The court concluded that even though petitioner federal agent's acts may have exceeded his express authority, this did not necessarily strip petitioner of his lawful power to act under the scope of authority given to him under the laws of the United States.

Use of Deadly Force Against Foreign Nationals, in a Foreign Country*:

Where a U.S. Border Patrol agent, in reaction to subjects throwing rocks at him while he attempted to detain a subject who had illegally crossed the international border with Mexico, shot across the border into Mexico, killing a Mexican national standing on the Mexico side, the U.S. Supreme Court (reversing the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal's holding that the agent was entitled to qualified immunity; see Hernandez v. Mesa (5th Cir. 2015) 785 F.3rd 117.) remanded the case to reconsider the viability of a civil suit on Fourth Amendment (excessive force) grounds in light of the Court's decision in Ziglar v. Abbasi (2017) 582 U.S. 120 [137 S.Ct. 1843; 198 L.Ed.2nd 290], which discussed various "special factors" that "counsel hesitation" in allowing a federal civil action per Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics (1971) 403 U.S. 388 [91 S.Ct. 1999; 29 L.Ed.2nd 619] against a federal officer for his alleged use of excessive force. (Hernandez v. Mesa (2017) 582 U.S. 548 [137 S.Ct. 2003; 198 L.Ed.2nd 625].)

> The Court also ruled that granting the federal agent qualified immunity from Fifth Amendment "due process" liability was inappropriate when the nationality and the extent of the victim's ties to the United States were unknown to the agent at the time of the shooting. "The qualified immunity analysis thus is limited to the facts that were knowable to the defendant officers at the time they engaged in the conduct in question." (Id., at p. 554.)

The federal district court properly denied qualified immunity to a U.S. Border Patrol agent who, while standing on American soil, shot and killed a teenage Mexican citizen who was walking down a street on the Mexico side of the border. The use of force was held to be unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment given that the teenager was not suspected of any crime, was not fleeing or resisting arrest, and did not pose a threat to anyone. No reasonable officer could have thought that he could shoot the teenager if, as pleaded, the teenager was innocently walking down a street in Mexico. (Rodriguez v. Swartz (9th Cir. 2018) 899 F.3rd 719, 728-734.)

> Plaintiff was also held to be entitled to bring a "Bivens cause of action" for money damages, per Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics (1971) 403 U.S. 388 [91 S.Ct. 1999; 29 L.Ed.2nd 619]. (Id., at pp. 734-739.)
>
> See CALCRIM # 500 et seq.

High Speed Pursuits*:

General Case Law:

> A police officer does not violate substantive due process by causing death through deliberate or reckless indifference to life in a high speed automobile chase aimed at apprehending a suspected offender. (County of Sacramento v. Lewis (1998) 523 U.S. 833, 840-855 [118 S.C. 1708; 140 L.Ed.2nd 1043].)

> The Court here first coined the phrase, "shocks the conscious," when referring to official misconduct that violates substantive due process.

A high speed pursuit may or may not allow for the use of deadly force, each case depending upon its individual circumstances. (Brosseau v. Haugen (2004) 543 U.S. 194 [125 S. Ct. 596; 160 L.Ed.2nd 583]; finding that an officer who shot a suspect who was attempting to flee in his vehicle did not have "fair notice" based upon the conflicting case law as to whether the force she used was excessive. She was therefore entitled to "qualified immunity" from civil liability.)

The issue of whether the Fourth Amendment allows for the shooting of a suspect in a high-speed pursuit situation, where the fleeing suspect does not necessarily pose a sufficient threat of harm to the officer or others, remains an open question, but, whether legal or not, at least allows for a finding that the officer is entitled to qualified immunity. (Mullenix v. Luna (2015) 577 U.S. 7 [193 L.Ed.2nd 255; 136 S. Ct. 305] Per the Court: "(E)xcessive force cases involving car chases reveal the hazy legal backdrop against which Mullenix acted." (Id., at p. 14.)

> A police officer was held to be entitled to qualified immunity for shooting and killing a reportedly intoxicated fugitive who was fleeing in a vehicle at high speed, twice threatened to kill officers, and was racing towards another officer's location before the vehicle reached a spike strip placed on the road. "It was not beyond debate that the officer acted unreasonably in the unclear border between excessive and acceptable force." (Mullenix v. Luna, supra, summary; reversing the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal's affirmance of a Texas federal trial court's denial of the officer's motion for summary judgment. Per the Court: "(E)xcessive force cases involving car chases reveal the hazy legal backdrop against which Mullenix acted." (Id., at p. 14.)

Federally, police officers involved in high speed chases are entitled to qualified immunity under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 unless a person who is injured (i.e., the plaintiff in the resulting civil suit) can prove that the officer acted with a deliberate intent to harm. (Bingue v. Prunchak (9th Cir. 2008) 512 F.3rd 1169; see also Veh. Code § 17004.7.)

For an officer to be entitled to qualified immunity on a claim that a high speed pursuit violated the plaintiff's rights, it must be shown that the officer's conduct was: 1) a discretionary act or function; 2) performed in good faith; and 3) within the scope of his authority. In this case, the officer's decision to initiate, and then continue, a high speed pursuit upon plaintiff's failure to stop when the officer observed the plaintiff's license plate light to be out, was within the officer's discretion pursuant to his department's written policies. The officer, therefore, was entitled to qualified immunity on this issue. (Browning v. Edmonson County (6th Cir. KY 2021) 18 F.4th 516)

Ending a dangerous high speed vehicle chase with speeds in excess of 85 miles per hour, where the suspect was driving recklessly and forcing other motorists off the road, by bumping the suspect's car and pushing him off the road severely injuring him, is reasonable force. Also, there is no duty to break off the chase. (Scott v. Harris (2007) 550 U.S. 372 [127 S.Ct. 1769; 167 L.Ed.2nd 686].)

> The Court held in Scott that there was no special Fourth Amendment standard for unconstitutional deadly force, but all that matters is whether the police officer's actions were reasonable. (Id., at pp. 381-383; see also Acosta v. Hill (9th Cir. 2007) 504 F.3rd 1323.)

A police officer's use of deadly force is constitutional where an escaping suspect constitutes a threat of serious physical harm to officers or others. (Wilkinson v. Torres (9th Cir. 2010) 610 F.3rd 546, 550-554; attempts to flee in a stolen vehicle endangered two officers lying on the ground and/or standing nearby.)

> It was further held that the officer's use of deadly force under these circumstances, where the officer did not act with an "intent to harm," but rather with a "legitimate law enforcement objective," did not deprive plaintiffs of their Fourteenth Amendment due process right to "familial association" with the deceased. (Id., at pp. 554-555.)

The United States Supreme Court held that using deadly force (firing 15 shots at the driver and his passenger) to stop a dangerous high-speed chase is appropriate where the driver's flight posed a grave public safety risk and never abandoned his attempt to flee. (Plumhoff v. Rickard (2014) 572 U.S. 765, 766 [134 S. Ct. 2012; 188 L. Ed.2nd 1056].)

> And even if not, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity in that as of the date of the shooting, the law was not clearly settled. (Id., at p. 766-767.)

Other federal circuits have approved the use of deadly force to halt a dangerous high-speed vehicular police pursuit, although under circumstances which, arguably, were more aggravated than in Brosseau v. Haugen, supra. See:

Scott v. Clay County (6th Cir. 2000) 205 F.3rd 867, 877: Shooting a fleeing felon whose reckless driving posed an immediate threat to the safety of officers and innocent civilians.

Smith v. Freland (6th Cir. 1992) 954 F.2nd 343, 347-348: Shooting a fleeing misdemeanant who posed a danger to officers at a police roadblock when it appeared likely he would "do almost anything to avoid capture."

Cole v. Bone (8th Cir. 1993) 993 F.2nd 1328, 1330-1333: Shooting a defendant fleeing in a truck when he posed a threat to travelers on a crowded highway.

Pace v. Capobrianco (11th Cir. 2002) 283 F.3rd 1275, 1281: Shooting a fleeing felon in a vehicle when it appeared likely he would continue to use his car aggressively during a police pursuit.

Bland v. City of Newark (3rd Cir. N.J. 2018) 900 F.3rd 77: At the end of a high speed pursuit of a carjacking suspect who was reportedly armed (although it turned out he was not), the suspect (plaintiff) refused to give up after several crashes and threatened to kill pursuing officers, resulting in the officers shooting him 16 to 18 times, causing extensive injuries. The officers were held to be, at the very least, entitled to qualified immunity.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, however, has not been so forgiving:

Deadly force may not be justified in a "nonchalant," or "rapid Sunday drive" speed pursuit where the driver was rammed twice (under circumstances that were contrary to CHP policy) and then shot six times without a prior warning and without a showing that the officer, or any other officer, was in immediate danger. (Adams v. Speers (9th Cir. 2007) 473 F.3rd 989.)

A police officer violates the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause if he kills a suspect when acting with the purpose to harm, unrelated to a legitimate law enforcement objective. An officer was properly found to be civilly liable after shooting and killing the decedent (plaintiffs' mother) at the end of a high speed chase, but where the decedent was blocked in without a means of escape, and where no weapons were observed. (A. D. v. State of California Highway Patrol (9th Cir. 2013) 712 F.3rd 446, 452-454, 456-460.)

The officer was also held not to be entitled to qualified immunity. (Id., at pp. 454-455.)

Following a 70-minuite high speed pursuit, during which time no weapons were observed in the decedent's possession (despite an earlier report that he was armed), shooting the decedent in the back and killing him after he was out of the vehicle and had his empty hands raised as if giving up (which the defendant-officer believed to be a "shooting stance"), the officer was not entitled to qualified immunity in the decedent's estate's Fourth Amendment excessive force 42 U.S.C. § 1983 lawsuit. (Longoria v. Pinal County (9th Cir. 2017) 873 F.3rd 699, 705-711; noting that only the decedent's estate, and not his relatives, had a valid Fourth Amendment claim; pg. 711.)

But see Wilkinson v. Torres (9th Cir. 2010) 610 F.3rd 546, 550-554, above, holding in a case where the defendant attempted to flee in a stolen vehicle endangered two officers lying on the ground and/or standing nearby, that a police officer's use of deadly force is constitutional where an escaping suspect constitutes a threat of serious physical harm to officers or others.

Because Sheriff's Deputies had been trained in accordance with the sheriff's vehicle pursuit policy, which included adequate consideration of speed limits under Pen. Code, § 13519.8(b), the sheriff's office was entitled to immunity under Veh. Code § 17004.7 in a personal injury suit brought by a motorcyclist who had been struck by fleeing suspects. The policy satisfied the promulgation requirement of V.C. § 17004.7(b)(2) because a general order requiring officers to sign off on all policies adequately ensured certification, an electronic sign-off procedure provided certification in writing consistent with Evid. Code § 250, and noncompliance by some officers did not amount to a failure to implement the policy. The policy complied with subdivision (c)(8) of V.C. § 17004.7 because it did not give officers unfettered discretion in determining whether to request air support. (Riley v. Alameda County Sheriff's Office (2019) 43 Cal.App.5th 492.)

California Statutes:

Gov't. Code § 815(a) provides a public entity with civil immunity for any injuries caused by its employees.

Veh. Code § 17001 creates a statutory exception, providing "(a) public entity is liable for death or injury to person or property proximately caused by a negligent or wrongful act or omission in the operation of any motor vehicle by an employee of the public entity acting within the scope of his employment."

However, V.C. § 17004.7(b)(1) provides that "(a) public agency employing peace officers that adopts and promulgates a written policy on, and provides regular and periodic training on an annual basis for, vehicular pursuits complying with subdivisions (c) and (d) is immune from liability for civil damages for personal injury to or death of any person or damage to property resulting from the collision of a vehicle being operated by an actual or suspected violator of the law who is being, has been, or believes he or she is being or has been, pursued in a motor vehicle by a peace officer employed by the public entity."

> Subd. (a) provides that "(t)he immunity provided by this section is in addition to any other immunity provided by law. The adoption of a vehicle pursuit policy by a public agency pursuant to this section is discretionary."
>
> Subd.(b)(2): The promulgation of the written policy must include "a requirement that all peace officers of the public agency certify in writing that they have received, read, and understand the policy. (However,) (t)he failure of an individual officer to sign a certification shall not be used to impose liability on an individual officer or a public entity."
>
> A California police agency which fails to "promulgate" and/or provide periodic training in vehicle pursuits is not entitled to qualified immunity when a plaintiff suffers injury as a result of such a pursuit. (Morgan v. Beaumont *Police Dept. (2016) 246 Cal.App.4th 244.)
>
> Although an agency's policy must require the written certification in order to qualify for immunity, 100% compliance with that requirement is not a prerequisite to receiving the immunity provided for in subd. (b)(1). Ramirez v. City of Gardena (2018) 5 Cal.5th 995; disapproving Morgan v. Beaumont, supra, to the extent it is inconsistent with this ruling, i.e., that all of the entity's peace officers must have complied with the written policy.)
>
> Subd. (c) lists the "minimum standards" for an agency's written policy.
>
> Subd. (d) defines "regular and periodic training" to be annual training which includes, at a minimum, those standards listed in Subd. (c).

Pen. Code § 13519.8 provides that the "commission" shall implement training courses for handling high-speed vehicle pursuits. The "commission" referred to is the "Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training" (i.e., "POST commission; Pen. Code § 13500(a).)

Chapter 7*:

The Bill of Rights Protections*:

Scope of the Chapter*: This chapter covers the various constitutional issues under the Bill of Rights (i.e., the first ten amendments to the U.S. Constitution), other than the Fourth Amendment.

Specifically covered is:

- The First Amendment:

  Freedom of Speech:

  True Threats
  Threatening Texts/Facebook Messages
  Freedom of Expression
  In Retaliation for Engaging in Protected Speech
  Compelling Governmental Interests
  Bullying
  Beauty Pageants
  Noise Regulation
  Anti-SLAPP
  Additional Case Law

  Religion Retaliation
  Verbally uncooperative
  A prisoner's access to the courts
  A newsman's shield law

- Fifth Amendment: Due process, as applied to the federal government.
- Eighth Amendment: Jail and prison prisoners.
- Fourteenth Amendment: Due process, as applied to the states.

First Amendment*: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

Freedom of Speech:

True Threats:

Rioting, and Advocating a Riot: Rioting or threatening to riot have sometimes been defended under the guise of a First Amendment free speech right However, the courts have drawn the line between one's freedom of expression and "true threats." The Ninth Circuit has explained the differences between the two where it held that a district court erred in finding the federal Anti-Riot Act was facially overbroad and dismissed an indictment against defendants that charged them with conspiracy to violate, and violating, the Act. The Ninth Circuit, in reversing the district court, held that 18 U.S.C. § 2101(a)(1), (2), and (4) do not violate the First Amendment except insofar as § 2101(a)(2) prohibits speech tending to "organize," "promote," or "encourage" a riot, and 18 U.S.C.S. § 2102(b) expands the prohibition to "urging" a riot and to mere advocacy. However, those offending portions of the Act were held by the Ninth Circuit to be severable from the remainder of the Act, and that once the offending language was removed, the remainder of the Act is not unconstitutional on its face. (United States v. Rundo (9th Cir. 2021) 990 F.3rd 709.)

> In discussing "true threats," the Ninth Circuit in Rundo meticulously defines its applicability under the First Amendment where the defendant was claiming that the term "riot" is unconstitutional on its face. Per the Court; "A 'riot' requires either one or more 'acts of violence' or one or more 'threats' to commit one or more acts of violence. (18 U.S.C.) § 2102(a). The completed acts of violence (or the threatened acts of violence) must 'constitute a clear and present danger of, or . . . result in, damage or injury to the property . . . or to the person of any other individual.' Id. (⁋) Acts of violence are not protected under the First Amendment. See NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, 916 . . . (1982). Nor are 'true threats," which involve subjective intent to threaten. See (United States v. *Cassel, 408 F.3rd (622) at 633 (9th Cir. 2005); see also Virginia v. Black, 538 U.S. 343, 359-60 . . . (2003). 'True threats' are not limited to bodily harm only but also include property damage. See Cassel, 408 F.3rd at 636-37; see also (United States v.) Miselis, 972 F.3rd at 540 (4th Cir. 2020); United States v. Coss, 677 F.3d 278, 283-84, 289-90 (6th Cir. 2012); United States v. Parr, 545 F.3rd 491, 497 (7th Cir. 2008). (⁋) '[W]e do not hesitate to construe' a statute punishing threats 'to require . . . intent' to threaten. Cassel, 408 F.3rd at 634; cf. Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, . . . (2015). By requiring proof of 'intent' and proof that the overt act was committed 'for [the] purpose' of a riot, (fn. omitted) which also indicates subjective intent, (fn. omitted) Congress limited the 'threats' part of the definition of a riot to 'true threats.'

> Thus, a 'riot,' as defined in the Act, is not protected under the First Amendment." (Id., at p. 719)

Stalking: Defendant appealed his conviction for stalking, pursuant to Pen. Code § 646.9. The Court reversed, holding that defendant's speech or speech-related acts did not support a conviction for stalking under Pen. Code § 646.9, because a reasonable listener would not have found them a true threat of violence. The conviction was based on odd comments to a politician's wife at an open house event for a school bond issue, a social media re-post of a publicly available photo of the family along with comments mentioning an open house event and the children, and a rambling letter to the wife criticizing local politics and containing a check made payable to "anyone who is not corrupt." Defendant's mere reference to the wife's birthday could not be seen as a serious expression of an intent to commit an act of unlawful violence. References to the children, while discomfiting, did not reflect efforts to learn about, locate, and contact them and did not imply a threat to their safety. (People v. Peterson (2023) 95 Cal.App.5th 1061.) In discussing the reason for the reversal, the Court noted at page 1068:

> "'The First Amendment affords protection to symbolic or expressive conduct as well as to actual speech.' (Virginia v. Black (2003) 538 U.S. 343, 358 [155 L. Ed. 2d 535, 123 S. Ct. 1536] . . . .) Yet its protections 'are not absolute, and we have long recognized that the government may regulate certain categories of expression consistent with the Constitution.' (Ibid.) As relevant here, the First Amendment 'permits a State to ban a 'true threat.' (Black, at p. 359.) '"True threats" encompass those statements where the speaker means to communicate a serious expression of an intent to commit an act of unlawful violence to a particular individual or group of individuals.' (Ibid.) In People v. Lowery (2011) 52 Cal.4th 419, 427 . . . , the California Supreme Court followed Black in construing a statute relating to threats of violence against a crime witness or victim 'as applying only to those threatening statements that a reasonable listener would understand, in light of the context and surrounding circumstances, to constitute a true threat, namely, "a serious expression of an intent to commit an act of unlawful violence" [citation], rather than an expression of jest or frustration.' (Lowery, at p. 427.)"

Threatening Texts/Facebook Messages:

> From 2014 to 2016, defendant sent hundreds of Facebook messages to C.W., a local musician. Each time C.W. tried to block him, defendant would create a new Facebook account and resumed contacting C.W. Several of his messages envisaged violent harm. C.W. stopped walking alone, declined social engagements, canceled performances, and eventually contacted the authorities. Defendant was charged under a Colorado statute making it unlawful to repeatedly make any form of communication with another person in a manner that would cause a reasonable person to suffer serious emotional distress, that does cause that person to suffer serious emotional distress. Colorado courts rejected defendant's First Amendment argument. The Supreme Court vacated defendant's conviction. In true-threat cases, the prosecution must prove that the defendant had some subjective understanding of his statements' threatening nature. The First Amendment permits restrictions upon the content of speech in a few areas, including true threats; i.e., serious expressions conveying that a speaker means to commit an act of unlawful violence. The existence of a threat depends on what the statement conveys to the person receiving it. However, the First Amendment may demand a subjective mental-state requirement shielding some true threats because bans on speech have the potential to deter speech outside their boundaries. In this context, a recklessness standard; i.e., a showing that a person consciously disregarded a substantial and unjustifiable risk that his conduct will cause harm to another, is the appropriate mental state. Requiring purpose or knowledge would make it harder for states to counter true threats with diminished returns for protected expression. (Counterman v. Colorado (June 27, 2023) __ U.S.__ [143 S.Ct. 2106; 216 L.Ed.2nd 775].)

Freedom of Expression:

> A jury could legally find that a school principal retaliated against a teacher for engaging in political speech protected by the First Amendment when the principal told the teacher he could not bring his hat with him to teacher-only trainings on threat of disciplinary action. (His hat had printed on it, "MAGA," for "Make America Great Again," a political statement in today's political climate.) At a minimum, there was a genuine issue of fact regarding whether the teacher reasonably interpreted a statement by the principal as a threat against his employment. Any violation of the teacher's First Amendment rights by the principal was clearly established where long-standing precedent held that concern over the reaction to controversial or disfavored speech itself did not justify restricting such speech. However, in that the record failed to establish that an HR officer took any adverse employment action against the teacher, the teacher's First Amendment retaliation claim against her failed as a matter of law. (Dodge v. Evergreen School District #114 (9th Cir. 2022) 56 F.4th 767.)

The confiscation of a protestor's signs (warning motorists that the "Police (were) Ahead") and his subsequent arrest violated the protestor's right to freedom of speech because the protestor was speaking on a matter of public concern, and Connecticut had not enacted any law that proscribed the protestor's conduct. (Friend v. Gasparino (2nd Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 77.)

In Novak v. City of Parma (6th Cir. 2022) 33 F.4th 296, out of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeal, Anthony Novak was prosecuted for a violation of an Ohio state law (Ohio Rev. Code § 2909.04(B)) that makes it illegal to use a computer to disrupt or impair police functions. His violation involved the creation of a Facebook page mocking the City of Parma's Police Department, doing such things as advertising free abortions in a police van and publicizing a fake "Pedophile Reform event." Posts on the page also included job postings for the police department that discouraged applications by members of minorities and an offer of "free abortions for teenagers provided by police in the Wal-Mart parking lot." Novak was charged criminally and prosecuted in a trial resulting in a not guilty verdict. Upon suing the City of Parma's Police Department for retaliation and a violation of his First Amendment freedom of speech, the Sixth Circuit held that the Parma Police Department officers who caused his arrest were entitled to qualified immunity from civil liability because they reasonably found probable cause in an unsettled area of the law that judges could debate. The officers had good reason to believe they had probable cause because both the city's law director and the judges who issued the arrest and search warrants agreed with them.

> The U.S. Supreme Court denied certiorari on February 21, 2022, at 2023 U.S. LEXIS 799.

Plaintiff and her friend, both dressed in "sexy cop" costumes, posed with pedestrians on the Strip and accepted tips in exchange for photos. Defendant police officers, working a plain-clothes Strip enforcement assignment, arrested plaintiff and her friend for doing business without a license after the officers were asked to pay a tip or delete a photo. The charges against plaintiff were ultimately dropped. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal filed (1) an order denying a petition for panel rehearing, denying a petition for rehearing en banc, and amending the opinion filed on May 24, 2017; and (2) an amended opinion reversing in part the district court's summary judgment in favor of Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department officers and remanding, in an action brought by a street performer who alleged she was unlawfully arrested for conducting business with another performer without a license on the Las Vegas Strip, in violation of her First Amendment rights. Viewing the record most favorably to plaintiff, the Court assumed that it was plaintiff's friend who asked that the officers pay a tip or delete the photo. The Court concluded that the First Amendment protections accorded to plaintiff's own activities did not lapse because of what her friend said or did without plaintiff's direct participation. There was no evidence at all, for example, of a prior agreement between the women to require a quid-pro-quo payment for posing in photos, nor of a demonstrated pattern of demanding quid-pro-quo payments during performances together. The Court held that plaintiff associated with her friend only for expressive activity protected under Berger v. City of Seattle (9th Cir 2009) 569 F.3rd 1029, and that the district court erred by deciding that the officers had probable cause to arrest plaintiff despite the First Amendment protections afforded to her expressive association. As to the denial of partial summary judgment to plaintiff, the Court remanded for a determination after trial of the disputed factual issues and for consideration in light of the Court's opinion as to whether, on the facts thus determined, plaintiff was validly arrested for her own statements and actions. (Santopietro v. Howell (9th Cir. 2023) 73 F.4th 1016.)

The act of using charcoal and sidewalk chalk to write political messages on a city's sidewalks may have First Amendment freedom of speech implications. The Ninth Circuit remanded the plaintiffs' lawsuit back to the district court to consider this issue along with whether the city's ordinance that sought to criminalize the intentional writing, painting, or drawing on property without the express permission of the property's owner or operator was constitutionally overbroad under the Fourteenth Amendment. (Tucson v. City of Seattle (9th Cir. 2024) 91 F.4th 1318.)

In Retaliation for Engaging in Protected Speech:

Plaintiff father sufficiently stated a First Amendment retaliation claim by alleging that a social worker coerced his former wife to file an ex parte custody application, because his criticism of the agency was protected activity, the threat of losing custody would chill a person of ordinary firmness from voicing criticism of official conduct, and the social worker allegedly lacked any substantiated concern for the children's safety and treated him differently than his former wife. The social worker was not entitled to qualified immunity because a reasonable official would have known that threatening to terminate a parent's custody of his children, when such step would not have been taken absent retaliatory intent, violated the First Amendment. However, the father's Fourth Amendment claim failed because he failed to show interviews of the children at their school were seizures. (Capp v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2019) 940 F.3rd 1046.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed in part and vacated in part a federal district court's order dismissing a complaint on qualified immunity grounds, and remanded, in an action brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against the Los Angeles County Department of Children and Family Services and four individual employees alleging sexual harassment in violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, retaliation under the First Amendment, and related constitutional claims. (Sampson v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2020) 974 F.3rd 1012.)

> Department of Children and Family Services social workers were not entitled to qualified immunity on a guardian's First Amendment retaliation claim because it was clearly established at the time of the workers' conduct that the First Amendment prohibited them from threatening to remove the child from her custody to chill her protected speech about her having been sexually harassed. However, the Court reluctantly affirmed qualified immunity for the social workers on the guardian's Fourth Amendment equal protection claim because the right of private individuals to be free from sexual harassment at the hands of social workers was not clearly established at the time of their conduct even though the social workers clearly violated the Equal Protection Clause when they sexually harassed plaintiff while providing her with social services. (Ibid.)

Where a city police department demoted a SWAT team sniper (transferring him to patrol and thus reducing his pay) after he commented on social media (i.e., "Facebook") that it was a "shame" that a suspect who ambushed and shot a police officer did not have any "holes" in him, and where the officer sued, alleging retaliation and a violation of his First Amendment freedom of speech rights, the federal district court erred in granting summary judgment for the government under Pickering (below) because there were disputed facts that required resolution by the trier of fact. In particular, there was a factual dispute about the objective meaning of the officer's comment because the officer contended that his comment suggested only that the wounded police officer should have fired defensive shots, while the government construed the statement as advocating unlawful violence. Also, a factual dispute existed over whether the officer's comment would have likely caused disruption in the police department. (Moser v. City of Las Vegas (9th Cir. 2021) 984 F.3rd 900.)

> Pickering v. Board of Education (1968) 391 U.S. 563 [88 S.Ct. 1731; 20 L.Ed.2nd 811], held that for a public employee in such a case to get judicial relief, he first has to establish that (1) he spoke on a matter of public concern; (2) he spoke as a private citizen rather than a public employee; and (3) the relevant speech was a substantial or motivating factor in the adverse employment action. If the plaintiff is able to establish this prima facie case, the burden then shifts to the government to show that (4) it had an adequate justification for treating its employee differently than other members of the general public; or (in the disjunctive) (5) it would have taken the adverse employment action even absent the protected speech. If the government does not meet its burden, then the First Amendment protects the plaintiff's speech as a matter of law. (See also Barone v. City of Springfield (9th Cir. 2018) 902 F.3rd 1091, 1098.)

In Connick v. Meyers (1983) 461 U.S. 138 [103 S.Ct. 1684; 75 L.Ed.2nd 708] it was held that a disgruntled assistant district attorney's questionnaire passed around the office, resulting in her termination, was not protected by the employee's First Amendment freedom of speech rights. Citing the 1968 landmark case decision of Pickering v. Board of Education, supra, the Supreme Court held that Myers' firing did not violate her First Amendment rights. In so finding, the Court noted that it is an issue of balancing the First Amendment rights implicated by Myers' questionnaire with the District Attorney's right to prevent any disruption in the smooth operation of his office. The Court here ruled in favor of the District Attorney, overruling the lower courts' rulings to the contrary.

And see Garcetti v. Ceballos (2006) 547 U.S. 410 [126 S.Ct. 1951; 164 L.Ed.2nd 689], where a deputy district attorney was demoted and transferred for writing an internal memo recommending dismissal of a case where the DDA decided that a necessary search warrant was defective, but where his supervisors disagreed. What the Court found to be dispositive was the context in which the DDA's memo and verbal concerns were expressed; i.e., "pursuant to his duties as a calendar deputy." As such, the First Amendment's Freedom of Speech rights did not protect him from discipline for writing the memo. Per the Court, the rule to be discerned from this case is that "when public employees make statements pursuant to their official duties, the employees are not speaking as citizens for First Amendment purposes, and the Constitution does not insulate their communications from employer discipline."

The Fifth Circuit rule in a retaliation case that a trio of Wood County, TX, officials must answer charges they conspired to retaliate against a police captain because he exercised his First Amendment right to freedom of speech. The police captain plausibly averred deprivation of his First Amendment rights by seeking on his own accord to help a friend outside of the workplace, which was protected by his First Amendment freedom of speech. Also, the Court held that the First Amendment right was clearly established at time it was violated. The employee's 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 conspiracy claim raised enough facts that discovery would reveal evidence of agreement. (Bevill v. Fletcher (5th Cir. 2022) 26 F.4th 270.)

In a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 suit, arrestees/plaintiffs, who were engaged in protesting police activities by writing messages in chalk on police and other public property, sufficiently showed that their arrests were done in retaliation for their exercise of their First Amendment rights because a reasonable factfinder could conclude that the anti-police content of the arrestees' chalk messages was a substantial or motivating factor for their arrests, particularly as the arresting officer knew that the arrestees were activists that were vocally critical of the police. The arresting officer was not entitled to qualified immunity because it was clearly established at the time of the arrests that an arrests, even though supported by probable cause, but made in retaliation for protected speech, violated the First Amendment. (Ballentine v. Tucker (9th Cir. 2022) 38 F.4th 54.)

To substantiate such a claim against a government official, a plaintiff must prove (1) he engaged in constitutionally protected

activity; (2) as a result, he was subjected to adverse action by the defendant that would chill a person of ordinary firmness from continuing to engage in the protected activity; and (3) there was a substantial causal relationship between the constitutionally protected activity and the adverse action. (Wheatcroft v. City of Glendale (U.S. Dist. AZ, 2022) 2022 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57006.)

> In Wheatcroft, plaintiff argued that the officer arrested him in retaliation for his refusing to identify himself as the passenger in a vehicle while being detained at the scene of a traffic stop. Finding that the right to not identify oneself in such a situation is not "clearly established," the Court ruled that the officer is entitled to qualified immunity, thus entitling him to summary judgment on this issue. (Ibid.)

Where plaintiff in a civil suit claimed that officers retaliated against him for being verbally uncooperative, he must prove two things: I.e., that (1) the officer's conduct "would chill or silence a person of ordinary firmness from future First Amendment activities," and (2) the officer's desire to chill speech was a "but-for cause" of the adverse action. In this case, after plaintiff was arrested (falsely, as it turned out, due to mistaken identity), the evidence showed that he was visibly angry at the deputies, swore at them, and threatened to sue them. In response, a deputy told him: "If you weren't being so argumentative, I'd probably just put you on the curb." The Court concluded that plaintiff suffered unconstitutional (First Amendment) retaliation that was clearly proscribed by established law. (Sharp v. County of Orange (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 901, 919-920.)

In another case, plaintiff claimed that two police officers retaliated against him for exercising his protected First Amendment speech rights when they arrested him for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest during an Alaskan winter sports festival. Defendant law enforcement officers claimed that plaintiff interfered at least twice with the officers' attempts to curb alleged underage drinking. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that plaintiff's lawsuit could not survive summary judgment. The only evidence of retaliatory animus identified by the court of appeals was plaintiff's affidavit alleging that one of the officers said "bet you wish you would have talked to me now." But that allegation said nothing about what motivated the second officer, who had no knowledge of plaintiff's prior run-in with the first officer. In any event, plaintiff's retaliatory arrest claim against both officers could not succeed because they had probable cause to arrest him. The existence of probable cause to arrest respondent defeated his First Amendment claim as a matter of law. (Nieves v. Barlett (May 28, 2019) __ U.S. __ [139 S.Ct. 1715; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1].)

The rule is that if a plaintiff is able to establish the lack of probable cause "then the Mt. Healthy test governs." (referring to Mt. Healthy City Board of Education* v. *Doyle (1977) 429 U.S. 274 [97 S.Ct. 568; 50 L.Ed.2nd 471].) "'The plaintiff must show that the retaliation was a substantial or motivating factor behind the [arrest], and, if that showing is made, the defendant can prevail only by showing that the [arrest] would have been initiated without respect to retaliation.'" (Hill v. City of Fountain Valley (9th Cir. 2023) 70 F.4th 507, 518-519; quoting Lozman v. City of Riviera Beach (June 18, 2018) __ U.S.__ [138 S.Ct. 1945, 1952-1953; 201 L.Ed.2nd 342.)

> "(T)he existence of probable cause defeats a retaliatory arrest claim." (Id., at p. 581; citing Nieves v. Bartlett (2019) __ U.S.__ [139 S.Ct. 1715, 1725; 204 L.Ed. 2nd 1]; citing in turn Hartman v. Moore (2006) 547 U.S. 250, 260 [126 S.Ct. 1695, 164 L. Ed.2nd 441].)
>
> In Hill, the Court ruled that plaintiff could not show that "retaliatory animus" was a substantial factor behind his arrest. In so ruling, the Court rejected plaintiff's claim that his comment; "what was really going on" and saying that he wanted to make sure "everything's on the up and up" had "perturbed the officers." Plaintiff was unable to provide any evidence to show that the officers were in fact perturbed, finding that "it seems dubious that the officers would be upset because of benign statements such as 'what was really going on,'" noting that "law enforcement officers are routinely subjected to much more vitriolic rhetoric." The Court further noted that "even if the officers were 'perturbed,' no evidence suggests that they would not have arrested him absent those statements." Rather, "(t)he record suggests the officers arrested (plaintiff) because they believed, though mistakenly, that he was hiding a suspect in a potential kidnapping case." (Pg. 519.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal reversed the district court's order on summary judgment denying qualified immunity to civil defendant police officers in an action alleging, in part, First Amendment retaliation arising from defendants' investigation of two arsons at properties connected to plaintiff Greg Moore. Plaintiffs alleged that in retaliation for Mr. Moore remaining silent during police questioning and plaintiffs' subsequent civil rights lawsuit and request for disclosures of public records, defendants, among other things, opened criminal investigations against them and attempted to induce the IRS into opening a criminal investigation. The Court first held that it had jurisdiction over the district court's denial of qualified immunity as to plaintiffs' First Amendment claims because defendants presented a purely legal issue; i.e., whether, taking as true plaintiffs' version of the facts, it was clearly established that defendants' conduct violated plaintiffs' First Amendment rights. The panel next concluded that plaintiffs failed to show that defendants' conduct violated clearly established law. It was not clearly established that Mr. Moore has a First Amendment right to remain silent when questioned by the police. Nor was it clearly established that a retaliatory investigation per se violates the First Amendment. Defendants were therefore entitled to qualified immunity on the First Amendment claims based on Mr. Moore's silence and plaintiffs' lawsuits and requests for public disclosures. (Moore v. Garnand (9th Cir. 2023) 83 F.4th 743.)

The panel addressed plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment claims in a concurrently filed unpublished memorandum disposition, at 2023 U.S. App. LEXIS 25824.

See also: "Arresting/Detaining an Individual for being Verbally Uncooperative," below.

Compelling Governmental Interests:

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal upheld summary judgment for the federal government in a case filed by Twitter over its desire to release its self-described "transparency report" without redactions the government said were necessary to protect national security. Noting that the government's redactions of appellant's report were narrowly tailored in support of the compelling government interest in national security, the Court held that as such, it did not violate the First Amendment because, as the Executive Assistant Director of the FBI's National Security Branch concluded, the granularity of the data appellant sought to publish would reveal or tend to reveal information about the extent, scope, and reach of the government's national security collection capabilities and investigative interests, including its limitations and vulnerabilities. The Court held that the specific procedural requirements of Freedman v. Maryland (1965) 380 U.S. 51 [85 S.Ct. 734; 13 L.Ed.2nd 649], which were designed to curb traditional censorship regimes, were not required in the context of government restrictions on the disclosure of information transmitted confidentially as part of a legitimate government process because such restrictions do not pose the same dangers to speech rights as do traditional censorship regimes. Even though Freedman's specific procedural framework did not apply, Twitter received considerable process—including some of the process that Freedman envisioned. (Twitter, Inc. v. Garland (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 686.)

Bullying:

The school district properly disciplined the two high school students for "private" off-campus social media posts that, once they made their way on to campus, amounted to severe bullying or harassment targeting particular classmates. The students' First Amendment rights were not violated by the district's disciplinary actions towards them. The students' speech "outside of the campus" was not protected from government restriction by the First Amendment. Also, the limitation in Cal. Educ. Code § 48950(a) was not violated. The speech constituted harassment that, under the circumstances of the case, was not constitutionally protected. Further, the due process issue that one student sought to raise in federal court was one that he already litigated and lost on the merits in a full and fair de novo review by a California court; the state court decision was entitled to preclusive effect. (Chen v. Shen (9th Cir. 2022) 56 F.4th 708.)

Beauty Pageants:

A federal district court did not err in awarding summary judgment to the beauty pageant because forcing the pageant to accept plaintiff, who identified as "an openly transgender female," would fundamentally alter the pageant's expressive message, in direct violation of the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The pageant expressed its message in part through whom it chose as its contestants, and the First Amendment afforded it the right to do so. (Green v. Miss United States of America LLC. (9th Cir. 2022) 52 F.4th 773.)

As noted by the Court, the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution ensures that the U.S. Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech. The Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution extends the principle to the states. First Amendment jurisprudence understands speech to extend beyond written or spoken words as mediums of expression, reaching so far as to include various forms of entertainment and visual expression as purely expressive activities. Unsurprisingly, the protections extend to theatrical productions that frequently mix speech with live action or conduct. (Id., at pp. 780-787.)

Noise Regulation:

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed the district court's conclusion that San Francisco's noise ordinance, Park Code § 7.03(m), constituted a reasonable time, place, and manner restriction. The district court therefor did not abuse its discretion by concluding that appellants were unlikely to succeed on the merits of their claims that the ordinance violated the First Amendment and the Liberty of Speech Clause of the California Constitution. (Stewart v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2023) 2023 U.S.App. LEXIS 3811; unpublished.

Anti-SLAPP:

"SLAPP is the acronym for 'strategic lawsuit against public participation,'" found at Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.16. (Flickinger v. Finwall (2022) 85 Cal.App.5th 822, 827, fn. 1.)

CCP § 425.16: Legislative Findings; Special Motion to Strike Action Arising From "Act in Furtherance of Person's Right of Petition Under United States or California Constitution in Connection With a Public Issue:"

(a) The Legislature finds and declares that there has been a disturbing increase in lawsuits brought primarily to chill the valid exercise of the constitutional rights of freedom of speech and petition for the redress of grievances. The Legislature finds and declares that it is in the public interest to encourage continued participation in matters of public significance, and that this participation should not be chilled through abuse of the judicial process. To this end, this section shall be construed broadly.

(b)

(1) A cause of action against a person arising from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the United States Constitution or the California Constitution in connection with a public issue shall be subject to a special motion to strike, unless the court determines that the plaintiff has established that there is a probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim.

(2) In making its determination, the court shall consider the pleadings, and supporting and opposing affidavits stating the facts upon which the liability or defense is based.

(3) If the court determines that the plaintiff has established a probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim, neither that determination nor the fact of that determination shall be admissible in evidence at any later stage of the case, or in any subsequent action, and no burden of proof or degree of proof otherwise applicable shall be affected by that determination in any later stage of the case or in any subsequent proceeding.

(c)

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), in any action subject to subdivision (b), a prevailing defendant on a special motion to strike shall be entitled to recover that defendant's attorney's fees and costs. If the court finds that a special motion to strike is frivolous or is solely intended to cause unnecessary delay, the court shall award costs and reasonable attorney's fees to a plaintiff prevailing on the motion, pursuant to Section 128.5.

(2) A defendant who prevails on a special motion to strike in an action subject to paragraph (1) shall not be entitled to attorney's fees and costs if that cause of action is brought pursuant to Section 11130, 11130.3, 54960, or 54960.1 of the Government Code, or pursuant to Chapter 2 (commencing with Section 7923.100) of Part 4 of Division 10 of Title 1 of the Government Code. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent a prevailing defendant from recovering attorney's fees and costs pursuant to Section 7923.115, 11130.5, or 54960.5 of the Government Code.

(d) This section shall not apply to any enforcement action brought in the name of the people of the State of California by the Attorney General, district attorney, or city attorney, acting as a public prosecutor.

(e) As used in this section, "act in furtherance of a person's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue" includes: (1) any written or oral statement or writing made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or any other official proceeding authorized by law, (2) any written or oral statement or writing made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a legislative, executive, or judicial body, or any other official proceeding authorized by law, (3) any written or oral statement or writing made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest, or (4) any other conduct in furtherance of the exercise of the constitutional right of petition or the constitutional right of free speech in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest.

(f) The special motion may be filed within 60 days of the service of the complaint or, in the court's discretion, at any later time upon terms it deems proper. The motion shall be scheduled by the clerk of the court for a hearing not more than 30 days after the service of the motion unless the docket conditions of the court require a later hearing.

(g) All discovery proceedings in the action shall be stayed upon the filing of a notice of motion made pursuant to this section. The stay of discovery shall remain in effect until notice of entry of the order ruling on the motion. The court, on noticed motion and for good cause shown, may order that specified discovery be conducted notwithstanding this subdivision.

(h) For purposes of this section, "complaint" includes "cross-complaint" and "petition," "plaintiff" includes "cross-complainant" and "petitioner," and "defendant" includes "cross-defendant" and "respondent."

(i) An order granting or denying a special motion to strike shall be appealable under Section 904.1.

(j)

> (1) Any party who files a special motion to strike pursuant to this section, and any party who files an opposition to a special motion to strike, shall, promptly upon so filing, transmit to the Judicial Council, by email or facsimile, a copy of the endorsed, filed caption page of the motion or opposition, a copy of any related notice of appeal or petition for a writ, and a conformed copy of any order issued pursuant to this section, including any order granting or denying a special motion to strike, discovery, or fees.
>
> (2) The Judicial Council shall maintain a public record of information transmitted pursuant to this subdivision for at least three years, and may store the information on microfilm or other appropriate electronic media.

Standard of Review on Appeal: An appellate court is to "review a trial court's order granting an anti-SLAPP motion de novo, considering the pleadings and affidavits submitted in support of, or in defense to, the subject claims. (Flickinger v. Finwall (2022) 85 Cal.App.5th 822, 831; citing Verceles v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (2021) 63 Cal.App.5th 776, 785.)

Overview of the Anti-SLAPP Statute, its purpose and procedures (per Flickinger v. Finwall, supra, at pp. 831-832.):

> The anti-SLAPP statute provides a mechanism for early assessment of claims implicating certain protected speech activities. Qualifying claims found to be without merit must be stricken and costs and expenses awarded to the defendant. (CCP § 425.16(c)(1).) This relieves defendants wrongfully sued for engaging in protected activities of the time and expense of litigation.
>
> The statute imposes on the defendant an initial burden to show the challenged claims qualify for protection under the statute. (CCP § 425.16(b)(1).) If the defendant satisfies this burden, the plaintiff then bears the burden to establish a probability of prevailing on the challenged claims.
>
> The statute applies only to claims "arising from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the United States Constitution or the California Constitution in connection with a public > issue." (CCP § 425.16(b)(1).) Such acts are broken into four illustrative categories of conduct in CCP § 425.16(e).

>
> Due to the important interests it seeks to protect, the Legislature commands the anti-SLAPP statute be construed broadly. (CCP § 425.16(a) (citing Navellier v. Sletten (2002) 29 Cal.4th 82, 92.) However, "not all speech or petition activity is protected by section 425.16." (Flatley v. Mauro (2006) 39 Cal.4th 299, 313.) Of relevance here, section 425.16 does not protect "speech or petition activity that [i]s illegal as a matter of law." (Flatley, at p. 320.), referred to as the "Flatley exception." The Flatley exception applies only in "narrow circumstance[s]" where "either the defendant concedes, or the evidence conclusively establishes" illegality as a matter of law. (Id., at pp. 316, 320; see below.)

In Flickinger v. Finwall, supra, the civil defendant's attorney in a "breach of contract" dispute, wrote a letter to the plaintiff's attorney, suggesting that if plaintiff filed his threatened lawsuit, the matter might result in plaintiff being investigated for "ill-gotten money obtained while in the employ of Apple," this allegation stemming from the plaintiff's alleged oral omission to defendant that "he had taken kickbacks from Apple vendors while on business in China." (pgs. 828 & 829.) The Court found that this was a "prelitigation communication" that "concerned the subject of the dispute" and was "made 'in anticipation of litigation "contemplated in good faith under serious consideration."'" (Id., at pp. 832-833; quoting Neville v. Chudacoff (2008) 160 Cal.App.4th 1255, 1268.)

The "Flatley Exception:" The Flickinger Court discussed the Flatley exception, as referenced above, at pp. 833-839, first noting the rule of Flatley that "not every threat by an attorney to settle or be sued is extortion." (Citing Flatley at p. 332, fn. 16.) Finding that the Flatley exception did not apply to the instant case, the Flickinger Court noted the extreme circumstances of the Flatley case:

> "First, Mauro's (Mauro being an attorney) letter contained accusations of criminal conduct which he threatened to expose directly 'to the "worldwide" media,' not merely indirectly as a result of commencing litigation. (Citation.) Second, his threat to expose 'criminal activity entirely unrelated to any alleged injury suffered by [his] client "exceeded the limits of [his] representation of his client"

> [which was] itself evidence of extortion.' (Citation.) Third, the Supreme Court found the threat of a rape allegation was extortion based on evidence that Mauro's client's initial police report was devoid of content and merely a sham designed to 'hold a police investigation over Flatley's head.' (Citation.) Fourth, Mauro threatened that Flatley's bad acts referenced in his letter 'were "just the beginning,"' suggesting that 'Flatley would be exposed to various kinds of opprobrium and he would be disgraced thereby unless he met Mauro's demands.' (Citation.) Fifth, and finally, in his followup calls to Flatley's counsel, 'Mauro did not discuss the particulars of the claim or show an interest in negotiations.' (Citation.) Rather, he simply reiterated his demand for payment and beat the drum of the consequences if Flatley refused to capitulate: Mauro would '"go public" and "ruin" Flatley . . . .' (Citation.)" (Flickinger v. Finwall, supra, at p. 834.)

The Flickinger Court also cites Malin v. Singer (2013) 217 Cal.App.4th 1283, at pp. 835-836, as an example at the other extreme—the Flatley exception being inapplicable—where "'Singer's demand letter did not expressly threaten to disclose Malin's alleged wrongdoing to a prosecuting agency or the public at large.' (Citation.) The court reasoned that the secret that would 'expose' Malin to 'disgrace' for purposes of the extortion statute was 'inextricably tied to [Singer's client's] pending complaint. The demand letter accused Malin of embezzling money and simply informed [Malin] that [Singer's client] knew how [Malin] had spent those funds.' (Citation.)" The Court saw "a critical distinction between Singer's demand letter, which made no overt threat to report Malin to prosecuting agencies or the Internal Revenue Service, and the letters in Flatley (as well as in another case,) Mendoza* [*v. Hamzeh (2013) 215 Cal.App.4th 799 . . . , which contained those express threats and others that had no reasonable connection to the underlying dispute.' (Citation.)"

Ultimately, in Flickerger, the Court determined that the plaintiff could not demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits, thus requiring a remand for the purpose of striking the plaintiff's lawsuit. (Flickinger v. Finwall, supra, at pp, 839-841.)

Additional Case Law:

The challenger in an election campaign sued the incumbent, alleging that she defamed him during the campaign when she accused him of a dishonorable discharge from the Navy. The trial court granted the incumbent's special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP (strategic lawsuit against public participation) statute. The Court of Appeal reversed the order and remanded for further proceedings. The preliminary posture of the case required the court to accept as true the challenger's evidence. His discharge document, produced during the campaign, put the incumbent on notice of a considerable risk that conclusive evidence disproved her accusation that the challenger was dishonorably discharged from the Navy. She failed to check the evidence and kept repeating the accusation, which could support an inference, relevant to actual malice, of willful blindness. (Collins v. Waters (2023) 92 Cal.App.5th 70.)

Freedom of Religion:

"There can be no doubt that the First Amendment protects the right to pray. Prayer unquestionably constitutes the 'exercise' of religion. At the same time, there are clearly circumstances in which a police officer may lawfully prevent a person from praying at a particular time and place. For example, if an officer places a suspect under arrest and orders the suspect to enter a police vehicle for transportation to jail, the suspect does not have a right to delay that trip by insisting on first engaging in conduct that, at another time, would be protected by the First Amendment. When an officer's order to stop praying is alleged to have occurred during the course of investigative conduct that implicates Fourth Amendment rights, the First and Fourth Amendment issues may be inextricable." (Sause v. Bauer (June 28, 2018) __ U.S. __, __ [138 S.Ct. 2561; 201 L.Ed.2nd 982]; reversing the 10th Circuit's decision to uphold the trial court's dismissal of a pro per defendant's 42 U.S.C. 1983 lawsuit for failure to state a claim, noting that the Fourth Amendment issues should not have been ignored.

In a case involving practicing Muslims who sued under Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA), claiming that federal FBI agents placed them on the "No Fly List" in retaliation for their refusal to act as informants against their religious communities, the Court held that RFRA's express remedies provision permits litigants, when appropriate, to obtain money damages against federal officials in their individual capacities. Under RFRA's definition, relief that can be executed against an "official of the United States" is relief against a government. Given that RFRA reinstated pre-Smith (see below) protections and rights, parties suing under RFRA must have at least the same avenues for relief against officials that they would have had before Smith. That means RFRA provides, as one avenue for relief, a right to seek damages against government employees. (Tanzin v. Tanvir (Dec. 10, 2020) __ U.S. __ [141 S.Ct. 486; 208 L.Ed.2nd 295].)

> "The Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA) was enacted in the wake of Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Ore. v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2nd 876, to provide a remedy to redress Federal Government violations of the right to free exercise under the First Amendment." (Id., at p. __.)

Where a Muslim inmate contended that he was unable to pray five times a day since he was housed with inmates who harassed him as he prayed, the correctional facility did not violate RLUIPA (Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc et seq.) by refusing to accommodate this request to be housed exclusively with other Muslims because infringement on the inmate's religious practice was justified as it was narrowly tailored to address the compelling interest of avoiding equal protection liability for classifying other inmates based on their religion. The facility's decision was the least restrictive means of furthering the compelling interest in avoiding equal protection liability as housing inmates based on religion would be constitutionally suspect. In addition, the facility did not violate the inmate's free exercise rights since denying his housing request was reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest. (Saud v. Days (9th Cir. 2022) 36 F.4th 949.)

In a case out of Wisconsin, plaintiff was a Muslim. Strip searches by prison guards of the opposite sex violated the moral tenets of his faith, which prohibit him from exposing his body to a woman who is not his wife. The prison where he was housed required him to submit to a strip search by a guard who is a transgender man; i.e., a woman who identifies as a man. Overruling the trail court, the Seventh Circuit ruled that the trial court's holding that a Muslim inmate was not entitled to summary judgment on his RLUIPA (Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc et seq.) claim was in error. The prison's strip search rules substantially burdened plaintiff's religious exercise by requiring him to either submit to cross-sex strip searches in violation of his faith or face discipline. Per the Court, this burden was unjustified under RLUIPA's strict-scrutiny standard and a violation of plaintiff's First Amendment freedom of religion and possibly his Fourth Amendment rights against unreasonable searches and seizures. (West v. Radtke (7th Cir. 2022) 48 F.4th 836.)

Plaintiff carried her burden at the motion-to-dismiss stage, showing that the defendant school district's policy prohibiting students from decorating their graduation caps was not generally applicable because it was enforced in a selective manner, plaintiff adequately alleging that the district violated her First Amendment right to the free exercise of religion. Plaintiff's complaint plausibly alleged that the district enforced its facially neutral policy in a selective way. Although plaintiff was prohibited from expressing her religious message on her graduation cap, other students in the school district were not prohibited from adorning their caps with stickers expressing other viewpoints. (Waln v. Dysart School District (2022) 54 F.4th 1152.)

The accommodation clause, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-34-601(2)(a), of the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Act, has been held by the U.S. Supreme Court to violate a putative wedding website designer's First Amendment right to speak freely by demanding that she either speak as the State demanded, i.e., celebrating marriages that she did not endorse, or face sanctions for expressing her own belief that marriage was a union between a man and a woman, and to include compulsory participation in remedial training, filing periodic compliance reports as officials deemed necessary, and paying monetary fines. (303 Creative LLC v. Elenis (June 30, 2023) __ U.S. __ [143 S.Ct. 2298; 216 L.Ed.2nd 1131].)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed in part, reversed in part, and vacated in part the district court's judgment in favor of prison officials in an action brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 by Hawaii prison inmate DeWitt Lamar Long, a practicing Muslim, alleging that prison officials violated his First Amendment right to free exercise of religion and unconstitutionally retaliated against him for engaging in protected First Amendment activity. The Court reversed the district court's dismissal, at the screening stage, of Long's claims for injunctive relief. Although Long's pro se complaint alleged only past actions by defendants, his "Request for Relief" asked, among other things, that staff be properly trained and that Ramadan meals be served hot. The district court should have allowed Long to amend his complaint to allege facts showing a need for injunctive relief. The Court vacated the district court's summary judgment in favor of Sergeant Lee, a prison guard, holding that delivery of Long's evening meal at 3:30 p.m. during Ramadan substantially burdened Long's free exercise of religion. The district court should have evaluated the four factors set forth in Turner v. Safley (1987) 482 U.S. 78 [107 S.Ct. 2254; 96 L.Ed.2nd 64], to determine whether the burden was justified. The Court remanded to allow the district court to conduct that analysis. The Court next affirmed the district court's partial summary judgment in favor of Chief of Security Antonio on Long's claim that he was transferred from a medium-security facility to a high-security facility in retaliation for filing grievances. The panel agreed with the district court that the sequence of events leading to the transfer was insufficient to show retaliatory intent. The Court affirmed the district court's judgment, following a bench trial, in favor of Sergeant Sugai on Long's free exercise of religion and retaliation claims, determining that ample evidence supported the district court's findings. Finally, the Court affirmed the district court's judgment, following a bench trial, in favor of Chief of Security Antonio on Long's free exercise claim. The district court did not err by concluding that (1) the substantial burden on Long's free exercise rights caused by his transfer to a high-security facility was justified; and (2) Chief of Security Antonio was not authorized to arrange weekly transportation to a medium-security facility for religious services and therefore was not a proper defendant. (Long v. Sugai (9th Cir. 2024) 91 F.4th 1331.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in favor of the United States in a dispute over the planned transfer of a site, Oak Flat, of spiritual importance to the Apache tribe to a mining company, Resolution Copper. The nonprofit Apache Stronghold had sought to block the transfer, arguing that it would violate its members' rights under the First Amendment, the Religious Freedom Restoration Act ("RFRA"), 42 U.S.C § 2000bb et seq., and an 1852 treaty between the U.S. and the Apaches. The court, however, disagreed. Applying the precedent set in Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association (1988) 485 U.S. 439 [108 S.Ct. 1319; 99 L.Ed.2nd 534].), the court held that while the transfer of Oak Flat would significantly interfere with the Apache tribe's religious practices, it would not coerce them into acting contrary to their religious beliefs, and therefore did not violate the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment. Further, the Court held that RFRA did not abrogate the holding in Lyng, and thus the planned land transfer did not "substantially burden" the Apache tribe's exercise of religion under RFRA. (Apache Stronghold v. United States (9th Cir. Mar. 1, 2024) __ F.4th __, __ [2024 U.S.App. LEXIS 5007].)

Arresting/Detaining an Individual for being Verbally Uncooperative:

Arresting and booking a person in retaliation for the defendant having made certain statements to the officer accusing the officer of being racially motivated, even where the officer had probable cause to make the arrest (but also had the option of releasing him on a citation), is a First Amendment violation of the arrestee's freedom of speech, subjecting the officer to potential civil liability. (Ford v. City of Yakima (9th Cir. 2013) 706 F.3rd 1188, 1192-1196.)

Exhorting a friend not to cooperate with law enforcement that does not cause any violent resistance to officers attempting to detain and question the friend is protected speech under the First Amendment (freedom of expression) and does not provide the necessary probable cause to arrest the defendant for a violation of P.C. § 148(a)(1); interfering with an officer in the performance of his duties. (In re* Chase C. (2015) 243 Cal.App.4th 107, 114-116.)

Where plaintiff in a civil suit claimed that officers retaliated against him for being verbally uncooperative, he must prove two things: I.e., that (1) the officer's conduct "would chill or silence a person of ordinary firmness from future First Amendment activities," and (2) the officer's desire to chill speech was a "but-for cause" of the adverse action. In this case, after plaintiff was arrested (falsely, as it turned out, due to mistaken identity), the evidence showed that he was visibly angry at the deputies, swore at them, and threatened to sue them. In response, a deputy told him: "If you weren't being so argumentative, I'd probably just put you on the curb." The Court concluded that plaintiff suffered unconstitutional (First Amendment) retaliation that was clearly proscribed by established law. (Sharp v. County of Orange (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 901, 919-920.)

Freedom of the Press:

Defendants/Appellants (the "Center for Medical Progress") used fake driver's licenses and a false tissue procurement company as cover to infiltrate conferences that Planned Parenthood hosted or attended. Using the same strategy, appellants also arranged and attended lunch meetings with Planned Parenthood and visited Planned Parenthood health clinics. During these conferences, meetings, and visits, appellants secretly recorded Planned Parenthood staff without their consent. After secretly recording for roughly a year-and-a-half, appellants released on the internet edited videos of the secretly recorded conversations. Planned Parenthood sued, with a jury finding in their favor. Upholding the verdict (at least in part), the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal held that journalists are required to obey laws of general applicability. Invoking journalism and the First Amendment does not shield individuals from liability for violations of laws applicable to all members of society. Appellants had no special license to break laws of general applicability in pursuit of a headline. Regardless of publication, it was probable that appellee would have protected its staff who had been secretly recorded and safeguarded its conferences and clinics from future infiltrations by appellants and third parties. However, the Court also held that appellants' violations of civil RICO (the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act) could not have served as the criminal or tortious purpose required by 18 U.S.C.S. § 2511(2)(d) (Federal Wiretap Act) because the criminal or tortious purpose had to be independent of and separate from the purpose of the recording. (Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc. v. Newman (9th Cir. 2022) 51 F.4th 1125.)

Eighth Amendment*: "Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted."

Issues; Excessive Bail and Fines, and Cruel and Unusual Punishment: Under the Eighth Amendment's "Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause:" "Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted."

In General:

Applicable to the States: The Eighth Amendment's "cruel and unusual" "excessive fines" provisions are incorporated within the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process clause, and thus applicable to the states as well as the federal government. (Timbs v. Indiana (Feb. 20, 2019) __ U.S. __ [139 S.Ct. 682; 203 L.Ed.2nd 11].)

But see Justice Clarence Thomas' concurring opinion, at pp. __-__, arguing that the "oxymoronic 'substantive due process' doctrine has no basis in the Constitution," but rather that the "privileges and immunities" clause of the Constitution incorporates the Bill of Rights to be applied to the states.

On the Issue of an Escaped Prisoner: "After conviction, 'the Eighth Amendment, which is specifically concerned with the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain in penal institutions, serves as the primary source of substantive protection to convicted prisoners.'" (Hughes v. Rodriguez (9th Cir. 2022) 31 F.4th 1211, 1221; quoting Whitley v. Albers (1986) 475 U.S. 312, 327 [106 S.Ct. 1078; 89 L.Ed.2nd 251].)

Per Hughes v. Rodriguez, this "applies equally to convicted prisoners inside or outside the walls of the penal institution," including escaped prisoners. (Id., at p. 1222; citing as consistent with the conclusion the Sixth Circuit case of Gravely v. Madden (6th Cir. 1998) 142 F.3rd 345, 346-348.)

Excessive Fines:

An order of forfeiture in the amount of $1,955,521 imposed on defendant by the federal district court as part of his sentence following conviction upon his plea of guilty to one count of structuring currency transactions to evade reporting requirements, in violation of 31 U.S.C. §§ 5324 (a)(3) and (d)(2), was held not to be in violation of the "excessive fines" provisions of the Eighth Amendment; i.e., that it was not "grossly disproportional" to his offense to which defendant pled guilty. (United States v. Singh (9th Cir. 2019) 783 Fed. Apprx. 765.)

In United States v. Bajakajian (1998) 524 U.S. 321, 336-337 [118 S.Ct. 2028; 141 L. Ed.2nd 314].), petitioner, the United States, filed a petition for a writ of certiorari that sought review of the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, which affirmed a trial court's judgment that the forfeiture of the entire $357,144 that respondent was carrying when he failed to report currency over $10,000, as required by 31 U.S.C.S. § 5316(a), would have violated the Excessive Fines Clause of Eighth Amendment of U.S. Constitution. Respondent attempted to leave the United States without reporting, as required by 31 U.S.C.S. § 5316(a), that he was transporting more than $10,000 in currency. Respondent pleaded guilty to a charge of having failed to report as required by § 5316(a)(1)(a), and with having done so willfully, in violation of 31 U.S.C.S. § 5322(a). The trial court found that respondent had failed to report the money because of fear stemming from cultural differences. Although the trial court found that the entire $357,144 was subject to forfeiture under the authority of 18 U.S.C.S. § 982(a)(1), it instead ordered a much smaller forfeiture because it found that a forfeiture of the entire amount would violate the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause. The United States appealed the trial court's judgment. The Ninth Circuit affirmed the trial court's judgment. The U.S. Supreme Court agreed that the forfeiture of the entire $357,144 that respondent failed to declare would violate the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause because the full forfeiture of respondent's currency would have been grossly disproportional to the gravity of his offense. In so holding, the Court considered four factors:

(1) The nature and extent of the underlying offense;

(2) Whether the underlying offense related to other illegal activities;

(3) Whether other penalties may be imposed for the offense; and

(4) The extent of the harm caused by the offense.

(Id., at pp. 336-337.)

The Eight Amendment's "Excessive Fines Clause" applies to municipal parking fines. Considering the Bajakajian factors (see above), the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the City of Los Angeles' initial parking fine of $63 was not grossly disproportional to the underlying offense of overstaying the time at a parking space. However, should the driver fail to pay that fine within 21 days, the City would levy a late fee of another $63. After 58 days of nonpayment, the City issues a second late-payment penalty of $25. Then after 80 days, the driver is subjected to a $3 Department of Motor Vehicles registration hold fee, as well as a $27 collection fee. In sum, a person who overstays a metered parking spot faces a fine of anywhere from $63 to $181, depending on her promptness of payment. While the appellate court affirmed the district court's grant of summary judgment on the initial parking fine, it could not endorse the trial court's conclusion that the late fee also did not constitute an excessive fine under the Eight Amendment. The district court failed to apply the Bajakajian factors to the late fee, but instead rejected the challenge to the late fee in a footnote citing two cases that themselves only provided conclusory assertions. (Pimentel v. City of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2020) 966 F.3rd 934.)

Excessive Bail:

The statutory scheme governing the forfeiture of bail and related proceedings, Pen. Code §§ 1305-1308, has been held not to be unconstitutional on its face. The Court therefore concluded that the statutory scheme, as applied to the circumstances of this case (i.e., where defendant was charged with possession of a controlled substance for sale and transportation of a controlled substance), did not unconstitutionally (as an alleged Eighth Amendment violation) impose an excessive fine (i.e., $50,000) or otherwise violate the constitutional rights of the criminal defendant or the surety. As a separate and independent ground for its decision, the Court held that even if it assumed that a constitutional violation had occurred, it concluded that such a violation of the criminal defendant's constitutional rights does not free the surety from its obligations under the bail bond. The bail bond was enforceable in its full amount and, therefore, the trial court correctly entered summary judgment on the bond. (People v. Accredited Surety & Casualty Co., Inc. (2021) 65 Cal.App.5th 122.)

Excessive Punishment:

In General:

The Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause circumscribes the criminal process in three ways:

(1) It limits the type of punishment the government may impose;

(2) It proscribes punishment "grossly disproportionate" to the severity of the crime; and

(3) It places substantive limits on what the government may criminalize.

(Martin v. City of Boise (9th Cir. 2019) 920 F.3rd 584, 613-614 (Rehearing and Review Denied at 2023 U.S.App. LEXIS 16984; July 5, 2023); citing Ingraham v. Wright (1977) 430 U.S. 651, 664 [97 S.Ct. 1401; 51 L.Ed.2nd 711].)

> Note: Certiorari has been granted in Martin v. City of Boise and is currently pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.

"Both the state and federal Constitutions bar the infliction of punishment that is grossly disproportionate to the offender's individual culpability. (U.S. Const., 8th Amend.; (and) Cal. Const., art. I, § 17.)" (In re Palmer (2021) 10 Cal.5th 959, 965.)

> An inmate claiming, in Palmer, that his sentence was excessive, arguing that after 10 parole denials by the Board of Parole Hearing, that the 30 years he had already served on a life sentence for an aggravated kidnapping committed when he was a juvenile, was constitutionally excessive. (Ibid.)
>
> In Palmer, the California Supreme Court ruled that even though the prisoner had finally been released, and while his 30 years of incarceration had in fact been unconstitutionally excessive, he was still subject to the standard parole conditions upon his release, reversing the lower Court of Appeal's ruling to the contrary on this issue. (Ibid.)

However, the Eighth Amendment does not prohibit a 63-year determinate sentence where the defendant is intellectually disabled. The case law under the Eighth Amendment and Cal. Const., art. I, § 17, does not support the premise that it is categorically unconstitutional to sentence a developmentally disabled adult recidivist to a 63-year determinate term for multiple armed robberies. The sentence was not grossly disproportionate because defendant's offenses were serious and numerous where he and his confederates committed a string of armed robberies and attempted armed robberies over a two-month period and would have continued to do so if not caught. (People v. Brewer (2021) 65 Cal.App.5th 199.)

"(A)cts by which cruel and sadistic purpose to harm another would be manifest" may also be a violation of the Eighth Amendment's proscription on "cruel and unusual" punishment. (Watts v. McKinney (9th Cir. 2005) 394 F.3rd 170; kicking a prisoner in the genitals.)

Defendant was convicted of attempting to extort and rob street vendors for a gang purpose, during which he would destroy merchandise. The Second District Court of Appeal (Div. 3) struck the resulting "Three Strikes" indeterminate sentence as an abuse of discretion (per *People v. Superior Court (Romero) (1996) 13 Cal.4th 497.) and as a cruel and unusual punishment (Cal. Const, art. I, § 17). "While we do not make light of this intimidating behavior, it was not violent or brutal by any stretch." Defendant's robbery strikes occurred nearly 30 years ago when he was youthful (under 21) and his intervening crimes were relatively minor and non-violent. The Court also rejected the trial court's insinuation that a long-standing drug problem is necessarily aggravating. Finally, "given his age [47], his three strikes sentence coupled with the determinate term means he will likely die in prison." For similar reasons, the sentence was deemed "cruel and unusual" as assessed under In re Lynch (1972) 8 Cal.3rd 410. Attempting to justify its sympathetic decision in this case, made at the expense (and while ignoring) the plight of the defendant's victims over the last four decades, the Court noted: "There comes a time when the people who populate the justice system must take a fresh look at old habits and the profound consequences they have in undermining our institutional credibility and public confidence." (People v. Avila (2020) 57 Cal.App.5th 1134.)

> It is also noted in Avila (at p. 1145, fn. 13) that this case was decided under California's "cruel and unusual punishment" prohibition only (i.e., Cal. Const, art. I, § 17), noting that "(t)he distinction in wording between the federal and state constitutions is substantive and not merely semantic," citing People v. Baker (2018) 20 Cal.App.5th 711, 723.
>
> Per In re Lynch, supra (at pg. 424); "A punishment is cruel or unusual in violation of the California Constitution if 'it is so disproportionate to the crime for which it is inflicted that it shocks the conscience and offends fundamental notions of human dignity.'"

Defendant's sentence of 85 years in prison upon conviction of ten counts of armed robbery held not to be cruel and unusual. (United States v. Holiday (9th Cir. 2021) 998 F.3rd 888, 985-986, citing United States v. Harris (9th Cir. 1998) 154 F.3rd 1082, where the defendant received 95 years of imprisonment for five counts of armed robbery.)

In an unpublished decision (i.e., People v. Long (2021) 2021 Cal.App. Unpub. LEXIS 6427), the Fifth District Court of Appeal upheld a 396 years-to-life sentence for a child molester, noting that the late California Supreme Court Justice Stanley Mosk's ruling in 1998 that a prison term exceeding a human life span is senseless and necessarily violates the Eighth Amendment (See People v. Deloza (1998)18 Cal.4th 585.) was a minority opinion, and thus not controlling, and has been rejected by other courts.

The Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court's denial of habeas relief to petitioner who argued that his 292-year total sentence by an Arizona state court was grossly disproportionate to his crimes and therefore cruel and unusual in violation of the Federal and Arizona Constitutions. In this case, petitioner was convicted of 25 felonies (mostly residential burglaries) committed against multiple victims over a three-month period. The trial court imposed consecutive sentences on all but two of the 25 counts, resulting in an overall sentence of 292 years imprisonment. The Court concluded that the Arizona Court of Appeals (ACA) made a merits determination and that Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act deference, 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254(d), applied. To grant petitioner's habeas petition, the court have had to conclude that there was no possibility fairminded jurists could disagree that the ACA's decision conflicted with the Supreme Court's clearly established precedents. The Ninth Circuit concluded that it could not do so given the limited Supreme Court precedent regarding the prohibition against disproportionality of a sentence to a term of years. Per the Court, it was noted that the Supreme Court has never required consideration of a cumulative sentence when considering an Eighth Amendment proportionality claim. Therefore, the court could not say that the ACA's decision was contrary to or unreasonably applied clearly established Federal law. (Patsalis v. Shinn (9th Cir. 2022) 47 F.4th 1092.)

A prison guard did not violate the inmate's Eighth Amendment rights because the guard's decision to shoot the inmate with sponge rounds was not an excessive use of force. Also, the guard used the lowest level of force available to him. The prison nurse did not violate the inmate's constitutional rights because the nurse's actions seemed to reflect the conduct of a medical professional who quickly and successfully ensured that her patient received the appropriate level of care. And lastly, the guard and the nurse were entitled to the protection offered by the qualified immunity doctrine because their actions did not violate some clearly established principle of constitutional law. Indeed, they both took reasonable steps to address urgent situations in short periods of time. (Simmons v. Arnett (9th Cir. 2022) 47 F.4th 927.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed in part and reversed in part the district court's dismissal of an action brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against the Nevada Department of Corrections and several Department officials alleging that they violated plaintiff's constitutional rights by failing to deduct education-credits he earned from his sentence, and remanded. While incarcerated, plaintiff completed several education courses which entitled him to sentence deductions under Nevada law. After he was released and his parole ended, plaintiff sued, asserting that defendants' failure to apply earned credit-deductions to his sentence deprived him of liberty without due process and denied him equal protection of the law by targeting him for the denial of credits because he is a sex offender. The Court first rejected defendants' argument that plaintiff's claims were barred by Heck v. Humphrey (1994) 512 U.S. 477 [114 S.Ct. 2364; 129 L.Ed.2nd 383], because they necessarily implied that the duration of his sentence was invalid. The Court held that Heck did not apply in this case. Plaintiff was no longer in custody and was thus unable to raise claims for credit deductions in a petition for habeas corpus. As such, this case fell within the limited exception to Heck the Court recognized in Nonnette v. Small (9th Cir. 2002) 316 F.3rd 872, 875-876. The Court then held that the district court erred by interpreting plaintiff's due process claim as asserting only a deprivation of minimum-sentence deductions affecting his parole eligibility date and ignoring his claim for maximum sentence deductions. Despite being instructed to brief the issue, defendants did not respond to plaintiff's argument that Nev. Rev. Stat. § 209.4465 contains the mandatory language necessary to create a constitutionally protected liberty interest in maximum-sentence deductions, similar to goodtime statutes this court previously found to create liberty interests. Accordingly, the Court reversed and remanded with respect to plaintiff's due process claim. Lastly, the Court affirmed the dismissal of the equal protection claim because plaintiff had not alleged facts supporting discrimination. (Galanti v. Nevada Department of Corrections (9th Cir. 2023) 65 F.4th 1152.)

> Note: For a discussion of Heck v. Humphrey issues, see "Effect of a Prior Conviction, Sentence, or Probable Cause Determination," under "Procedural Rules" (Chapter 2), above.

Capital Punishment:

The Eighth Amendment prohibits capital punishment for murderers who were under 18 at the time of their crimes. (Roper v. Simmons (2005) 543 U.S. 551 [125 S.Ct. 1183; 161 L.Ed.2nd 1].)

The U.S. Constitution places a substantive restriction on a state's power to take the life of a mentally retarded offender. (Atkins v. Virginia (2002) 536 U.S. 304, 312 [153 L.Ed.2nd 335; 122 S.Ct. 2242].)

However, "there exists no similar evidence that a national consensus has formed against the imposition of the death penalty against the class of persons with mental illness." (People v. Steskal (2021) 11 Cal.5th 332, 374, citing People v. Ghobrial (2018) 5 Cal.5th 250, 275; People v. Mendoza (2016) 62 Cal.4th 856, 909; and People v. Boyce (2014) 59 Cal.4th 672, 722.)

An inmate who was sentenced to death for murder and other crimes failed to establish that the State's lethal injection protocol was unconstitutional under the Eighth Amendment as applied to him due to his unusual medical condition of cavernous hemangioma. The "Baze and Glossip" test (see below) governed facial and as-applied Eighth Amendment challenges. This test does not require the avoidance of all risk of pain, and it required the inmate to prove a viable alternative execution method. The inmate did not satisfy the Baze*-*Glossip test because he did not show that his proposed alternative method of nitrogen hypoxia was feasible and readily implemented, the State had a legitimate reason to reject his proposal as it had never been used for an execution, and the inmate failed to present colorable evidence that his proposal would significantly reduce a substantial risk of severe pain. (Bucklew v. Precythe (Apr. 1, 2019) __ U.S. __ [139 S.Ct. 1112; 203 L.Ed.2nd 521].)

> Baze v. Rees (2008) 553 U. S. 35 [128 S.Ct. 1520; 170 L. Ed.2nd 420], and Glossip v. Gross (2015) 576 U.S. 863 [135 S.Ct. 2726; 192 L.Ed.2nd 761], recognized that the Eighth Amendment does not demand the avoidance of all risk of pain in carrying out executions. To the contrary, the Constitution affords a measure of deference to a State's choice of execution procedures and does not authorize courts to serve as boards of inquiry charged with determining best practices for executions. The Eighth Amendment does not come into play unless the risk of pain associated with the State's method is substantial when compared to a known and available alternative. Nor do Baze and Glossip suggest that traditionally accepted methods of execution—such as hanging, the firing squad, electrocution, and lethal injection—are necessarily rendered unconstitutional as soon as an arguably more > humane method like lethal injection becomes available. There are many legitimate reasons why a State might choose, consistent with the Eighth Amendment, not to adopt a prisoner's preferred method of execution. (Bucklew v. Precythe, supra, 139 S.Ct. at p. 1125.)

Life Without Parole:

> The Eighth Amendment also prohibits life without parole for offenders who were under 18 and committed non-homicidal offenses. (Graham v. Florida (2010) 560 U.S. 48 [130 S.Ct. 2011; 176 L.Ed.2nd 825].)
>
> > Note Jones v. Mississippi (Apr. 22, 2021) __ U.S. __ [141 S.Ct. 1307; 209 L.Ed.22nd 390], where it quoted Graham v. Florida, at p. 69, as saying that: "There is a line between homicide and other serious violent offenses against the individual."

Drug Addiction:

> The U.S Supreme Court held in Robinson v. California (1962) 370 U.S. 660, 667 [82 S.Ct. 1417; 8 L.Ed.2nd 758], that a California statute that "ma[de] the 'status' of narcotic addiction a criminal offense" is invalid under the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause. (Id., at p. 666) The California law at issue in Robinson was "not one which punishe[d] a person for the use of narcotics, for their purchase, sale or possession, or for antisocial or disorderly behavior resulting from their administration;" but rather punished addiction itself. Recognizing narcotics addiction as an illness or disease ("apparently an illness which may be contracted innocently or involuntarily") and observing that a "law which made a criminal offense of . . . a disease would doubtless be universally thought to be an infliction of cruel and unusual punishment," Robinson held the challenged statute to be a violation of the Eighth Amendment. (Id., at pp. 666-667; see Martin v. City of Boise (9th Cir. 2019) 920 F.3rd 584, 615-618; Rehearing and Review Denied at 2023 U.S.App. LEXIS 16984; July 5, 2023: Certiorari has been granted in Martin v. City of Boise and is currently pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.).
>
> > "Even one day in prison would be a cruel and unusual punishment for the 'crime' of having a common cold." (Robinson v. California, supra, at p. 667.)

Drunk in Public:

> The criminal offense of being "drunk in public," punishing an act and not the status of being a chronic drunkard, is not cruel and unusual under the Eighth Amendment. (Powell v. Texas (1968) 392 U.S. 514 [88 S.Ct. 2145; 20 L.Ed.2nd 1254].)

Homelessness:

> The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has held that because the Eighth Amendment prohibits the state from punishing an involuntary act or condition if it is the unavoidable consequence of one's status or being, it necessarily prohibits the imposition of criminal penalties for sitting, sleeping, or lying outside on public property for homeless individuals who cannot obtain shelter. Quoting its prior vacated decision in Jones v. City of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2006) 444 F.3rd 1118, at pg. 1136 (vacated as moot at 505 F.3rd 1006 (9th Cir. 2007)); "[w]hether sitting, lying, and sleeping are defined as acts or conditions, they are universal and unavoidable consequences of being human." Moreover, any "conduct at issue here is involuntary and inseparable from status—they are one and the same, given that human beings are biologically compelled to rest, whether by sitting, lying, or sleeping." (Id.) As a result, just as the state may not criminalize the state of being "homeless in public places," the state may not "criminalize conduct that is an unavoidable consequence of being homeless—namely sitting, lying, or sleeping on the streets. (Id., at p. 1137.) " (Martin v. City of Boise (9th Cir. 2019) 920 F.3rd 584, 604-618; Rehearing and Review Denied at 2023 U.S.App. LEXIS 16984; July 5, 2023).
>
> > The Court limited it holding, however, to the following: "(T)hat 'so long as there is a greater number of homeless individuals in [a jurisdiction] than the number of available beds [in shelters],' the jurisdiction cannot prosecute homeless individuals for 'involuntarily sitting, lying, and sleeping in public.' . . . That is, as long as there is no option of sleeping indoors, the government cannot criminalize indigent, homeless people for sleeping outdoors, on public property, on the false premise they had a choice in the matter." (Id., at p. 617.)
> >
> > "Persons are involuntarily homeless if they do not 'have access to adequate temporary shelter, whether because they have the means to pay for it or because it is realistically available to them for free.' . . . (S)omeone who has the financial means to obtain shelter, or someone who is staying in an emergency shelter is not involuntarily homeless." (Johnson v. City of Grants Pass (9th Cir. 2022) 50 F.4th 787, 792, fn. 2, quoting Martin v. City of Boise, supra, at 617 fn. 8.)

Note: Certiorari has been granted in Martin v. City of Boise and is currently pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.

See also Pottinger v. City of Miami (S.D. Fla. 1992) 810 F.Supp. 1551, 1565; and Johnson v. City of Dallas (N.D. Tex. 1994) 860 F.Supp. 344, 350; holding that a "sleeping in public ordinance as applied against the homeless is unconstitutional," rev'd on other grounds at 61 F.3rd 442 (5th Cir. 1995).

A city's argument that the district court lacked jurisdiction was improper, as none of the cases cited by the city credibly supported its argument that the district court injunction overstepped the judiciary's limited authority under the Constitution. There was no abuse of discretion in the certification of a class of involuntarily homeless persons under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23, as the class representatives' claims and defenses were typical of the class in that they were homeless persons who claimed that the city could not enforce the challenged ordinances against them when they had no shelter. At least portions of the city's anti-camping ordinance violated the Eight Amendment's Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause under Martin v. City of Boise, as they prohibited plaintiffs from engaging in activity they could not avoid. (Johnson v. City of Grants Pass (9th Cir. 2022) 50 F.4th 787; Rehearing and Review Denied at 2023 U.S.App. LEXIS 16984; July 5, 2023: Certiorari has been granted in Martin v. City of Boise and is currently pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.)

"A local government cannot avoid this ruling by issuing civil citations that, later, become criminal offenses. A recent decision by the en banc Fourth Circuit illustrates how the Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause looks to the eventual criminal penalty, even if there are preliminary civil steps." (Id., at p. 807; citing Manning v. Caldwell (4th Cir. 2019) 930 F.3rd 264.)

Force Used Against a Prison or Jail Inmate:

For purposes of prison cases, the Supreme Court identified five factors to consider in evaluating the lawfulness in the degree of force used by a prison guard against an inmate:

(1) The extent of injury suffered by an inmate;

(2) The need for application of force;

(3) The relationship between that need and the amount of force used;

(4) The threat reasonably perceived by the responsible officials; and

(5) Any efforts made to temper the severity of a forceful response.

(Hudson v. McMillian (1992) 503 U.S. 1, 6 [112 S.Ct. 995; 117 L.Ed.2nd 156]; Furnace v. Sullivan (9th Cir. 2013) 705 F.3rd 1021, 1028; Hughes v. Rodriguez (9th Cir. 2022) 31 F.4th 1211, 1221.)

The use of excessive force on a prison or jail inmate is an Eighth Amendment "cruel and unusual punishment" issue. Also, relevant inquiry is not the extent of the injury that results, but rather the degree of force used. (Wilkins v. Gaddy (2010) 559 U.S. 34 [175 L.Ed.2nd 995]; citing Hudson v. McMillian (1992) 503 U.S. 1, 4 [112 S.Ct. 995; 117 L.Ed.2nd 156].)

Officers are not entitled to summary judgment based on qualified immunity as to an inmate's Eighth Amendment excessive force claim because, under the Hudson factors (citing Hudson v. McMillian (1992) 503 U.S. 1, 4 [112 S.Ct. 995; 117 L.Ed.2nd 156].), a significant amount of force was employed without significant provocation from the inmate or warning from the officers since (1) his injuries caused by the pepper spray were moderate, though relatively enduring, (2) it was not clear that the application of force was required under his version of the facts, and (3) the force used seemed quite extensive and disproportionate relative to the disturbance posed by his fingertips on the food port, and (4) it remained a disputed fact whether he posed a threat to the officers. (Furnace v. Sullivan (9th Cir. 2013) 705 F.3rd 1021, 1026-1030.)

A summary judgment record in defendant prison guards' favor indicated that a genuine dispute of material fact existed regarding whether prison officials' use of force during a cell extraction resulted in the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain and suffering, requiring reversal for further hearings. Plaintiff inmate alleged that he was punched, kicked, and stomped while he was restrained in handcuffs and leg irons during the cell extraction necessitated by a fight in plaintiff's cell, but that a video of the extraction panned away from plaintiff when the force was allegedly used. The district court, however, correctly entered summary judgment on the inmate's deliberate indifference claim because he failed to exhaust his administrative remedies first, as required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA; 42 U.S.C. § 1997e) of 1996. (Manley v. Rowley (9th Cir. 2017) 847 F.3rd 705.)

In a case involving Los Angeles County Sheriff's Deputies conducting a number of cell extractions, as a part of quelling a jail riot, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal ruled that the district court did not err by denying the defendant sheriff's deputies' motion for Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50(b) relief, based upon qualified immunity, for judgment as a matter of law. The Court held that there was abundant evidence presented to the jury that the deputies inflicted severe injuries on the plaintiff prisoners while they were not resisting, and even while they were unconscious, and that the jury could reasonably reject the deputies' argument that they acted reasonably and instead determine that the force was not a part of a good-faith effort to maintain or restore discipline. The Court further found unpersuasive the deputies' arguments that the law regarding their conduct was not clearly established, holding that no reasonable deputy would have believed that beating a prisoner to the point of serious injury, unconsciousness, or hospitalization, solely to cause him pain, was constitutionally permissible, or that the proper use of Tasers were still unclear as of 2008, noting that once a jury has determined on the basis of sufficient evidence that prison officials maliciously and sadistically used more than de minimis force to cause harm, contemporary standards of decency, and thus the Eighth Amendment, are always violated. The Court further held that the supervising sergeants who directed the extraction teams and their superiors were not entitled to qualified immunity. Standing by and watching the extractions, but knowingly refusing to terminate the deputies' unconstitutional acts, made them individually liable. (Rodriguez v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2018) 891 F.3rd 776.)

In a civil case where plaintiff/inmate alleged that during a cell search a prison official repeatedly slammed his head against a steel door and a concrete floor, the Court held that the Eighth Amendment does not require proof that an officer enjoyed or otherwise derived pleasure from his or her use of force. The district court, therefore, plainly erred by instructing the jury that "maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm" required having or deriving pleasure from extreme cruelty, and the erroneous instructions prejudiced the plaintiff/inmate. (Hoard v. Hartman (9th Cir. 2018) 904 F.3rd 780.)

In a state prisoners' 42 U.S.C. § 1983 suit for damages due to increased risk of exposure to Valley Fever, without deciding whether the prison officials' actions actually violated the Eighth Amendment's prohibition on cruel and unusual punishment, the Court held that the prison officials were entitled to qualified immunity because an Eighth Amendment right to be free from heightened risk of exposure to fever was not clearly established when the officials acted. Prison officers are entitled to qualified immunity against claims that they racially discriminated against African-American inmates even though African-Americans are more susceptible to Valley Fever. There was no equal protection violation because all inmates were treated the same, regardless of race. State officials could have reasonably believed that their actions were constitutional as they complied with the orders from the court-appointed federal receiver. Also, a reasonable official could have believed that not excluding African-Americans from prisons was consistent with scientific data and expert recommendations. (Hines v. Youseff (9th Cir. 2019) 914 F.3rd 1218.)

Female prison guards subjecting male inmates to periodic body cavity searches was held not to be a Fourteenth Amendment due process violation, nor an Eighth Amendment "cruel and unusual punishment," and therefore will not subject the guards to any civil liability. (Somers v. Thurman (9th Cir. 1997) 109 F.3rd 614.)

It is not a violation of the constitutional right of association (First Amendment), against cruel and unusual punishment (Eight Amendment), nor due process (Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments) to limit the number and relationship of visitors, such regulations being reasonably related to "legitimate penological interests." (Overton v. Bazzetta (2003) 539 U.S. 126 [123 S.Ct. 2162; 156 L.Ed.2nd 162].)

California's provisions for extracting DNA samples from convicted felons, even over a prisoner's objection and through the use of reasonable force, does not violate either the Fourth Amendment search or seizure rules, the Eighth Amendment ("reckless and deliberate indifference"), nor Fourteen Amendment due process. (Hamilton v. Brown (9th Cir. 2010) 630 F.3rd 889.)

Reversing the district court's ruling granting the defendant prison officials' summary judgment motion, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled, assuming the plaintiff's allegations to be true, that defendants violated an inmate's Eighth Amendment rights when they failed to protect him from attack by another inmate. According to plaintiff's allegations, prison officials were aware through firsthand information or through representatives that there was a substantial risk of serious harm to the inmate, who had been threatened by another prisoner. A reasonable juror could find that one official's response was not reasonable because she either participated firsthand in a dangerous housing assignment or knew about the assignment and did nothing to alleviate the risk. A second official's response was also not reasonable. Through placement of the inmate, not only did he fail to protect the inmate and undercut the ability of other officers to protect the inmate, but he also actively misled the inmate regarding his safety, reducing the inmate's ability to protect himself. (Wilk v. Neven (9th Cir. 2020) 956 F.3rd 1143.)

Defendant, serving a life term for murder in San Quentin State Prison, filed a writ of habeas corpus petition because he is a 64 year old in poor health, and San Quentin had experienced a severe COVID-19 outbreak. He argued that the refusal to reduce San Quentin's prison population is cruel and unusual punishment. The Appellate Court agreed. "The need remains for petitioner to be immediately removed from San Quentin, by transfer to a CDCR facility that is able to provide the necessary physical distancing and other measures to protect against COVID-19 or to another placement meeting these criteria, and we so order." San Quentin was also ordered to immediately execute measures to reduce the population to 50% of the June 2020 population. (In re Von Staich (2020) 56 Cal.App.5th 53.)

> Note: The opinion includes an extensive historical account of how COVID-19 had spread within the CDCR. As noted by the Court: "By all accounts, the COVID-19 outbreak at San Quentin has been the worst epidemiological disaster in California correctional history."

See Hoffman v. Preston (9th Cir. 2022) 26 F.4th 1059, where, in a split 2-to-1 decision, the Ninth Circuit held that as a potential Eighth Amendment cruel and unusual violation, Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics (1971) 403 U.S. 388 [91 S.Ct. 1999; 29 L. Ed.2nd 619] also applied to a federal prisoner's claims that a federal prison guard intentionally targeted him for harm by spreading malicious rumors about and offering bribes to other inmates to attack him, the inmate was attacked because of the officer's conduct, and the officer failed to protect the inmate against the known risk of harm that the officer himself created.

Beating a handcuffed convict (accepting plaintiff's argument that such a beating occurred as true) violated the Eighth Amendment, and the police officer was not entitled to qualified immunity as to the claimed post-handcuff beating and dog-biting. (Hughes v. Rodriguez (9th Cir. 2022) 31 F.4th 1211.)

> "In excessive force cases brought under the Eighth Amendment, the relevant inquiry is 'whether force was applied in a good-faith effort to maintain or restore discipline, or maliciously and sadistically to cause harm.'" (Id., at p. 1221, quoting Hudson v. McMillian (1992) 503 U.S. 1, 7 [112 S.Ct. 995; 117 L.Ed.2nd 156].)
>
> Note: The "prisoner" in Hughes v. Rodriguez was an escapee. The Court held, however, that he was still considered to be a prisoner. (Id., at p. 1221.)

Also, "'an officer who failed to intercede when his colleagues were depriving a victim of his Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable force in the course of an arrest would, like his colleagues, be responsible for subjecting the victim to a deprivation of his Fourth Amendment rights.'" (United States v. Koon, 34 F.3d 1416, 1447 n.25 (9th Cir. 1994); see also Robins v. Meecham, 60 F.3rd 1436, 1442 (9th Cir. 1995) holding that 'a prison official can violate a prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights by failing to intervene' when another official acts unconstitutionally." (Tobias v. Arteaga (9th Cir. 2021) 996 F.3rd 571, 584.)

Also, "'an officer who failed to intercede when his colleagues were depriving a victim of his Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable force in the course of an arrest would, like his colleagues, be responsible for subjecting the victim to a deprivation of his Fourth Amendment rights.'" (United States v. Koon, 34 F.3d 1416, 1447 n.25 (9th Cir. 1994); see also Robins v. Meecham, 60 F.3rd 1436, 1442 (9th Cir. 1995) holding that 'a prison official can violate a prisoner's Eighth Amendment rights by failing to intervene' when another official acts unconstitutionally." (Tobias v. Arteaga (9th Cir. 2021) 996 F.3rd 571, 584.)

Deliberate Indifference, Conditions of Confinement, Excessive Noise, Televisions, and to Protect, in Prisons and Jails, COVID:

"Prisoner Eighth Amendment challenges generally fall into three broad categories. One type of claim arises when prison staff exhibit "deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of prisoners." Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S.Ct. 285, 50 L.Ed.2nd 251 (1976). A closely related type of case addresses prisoners' challenges to their conditions of confinement. See Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 737-738, 122 S.Ct. 2508, 153 L.Ed.2nd 666 (2002). A third type of claim asserts that prison staff used excessive force against an inmate. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 5-6, 112 S.Ct. 995, 117 L.Ed.2nd 156 (1992). Here, our inquiry focuses on the last category because Bearchild pleaded a sexual assault claim and we have consistently placed prisoner sexual assault claims within the same legal framework as excessive force claims. See Wood v. Beauclair, 692 F.3rd 1041, 1051 (9th Cir. 2012); Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3rd 1187, 1197 (9th Cir. 2000)." (Bearchild v. Cobban (9th Cir. 2020) 947 F.3rd 1130, 1140.)

In Bearchild, plaintiff, a state prison inmate, was held to have presented a viable Eighth Amendment claim in a civil lawsuit by proving that a prison staff member, acting under color of law and without legitimate penological justification, touched him in a sexual manner or otherwise engaged in sexual conduct for the staff member's own sexual gratification, or for the purpose of humiliating, degrading, or demeaning the defendant. The given jury instructions constituted plain error as they suggested that the plaintiff prisoner was required to show physical injury and the need to use force, and he had introduced evidence from which a jury could have found that the staff member stroked and fondled the plaintiff for the purpose of causing humiliation or for the staff member's own sexual gratification. (Id., at pp. 1139-1149.)

An implied claim was found under the Eighth Amendment's cruel and unusual punishment clause for prison officials' failure to provide adequate medical care to a severely asthmatic prisoner, resulting in the prisoner's death. (Carlson v. Green (1980) 446 U.S. 14, 16-18, & fn. 1. [100 S.Ct. 1468; 64 L. Ed.2nd 15].)

Inadequate "ventilation and air flow" violates the Eighth Amendment if it "undermines the health of inmates and the sanitation of the penitentiary." (Hoptowit v. Spellman (9th Cir. 1984) 753 F.2nd 779, 784.)

> Also, "(a)dequate lighting is one of the fundamental attributes of 'adequate shelter' required by the Eighth Amendment." (Hoptowit v. Spellman, supra, at 783.) "'Moreover, there is no legitimate penological justification for requiring [inmates] to suffer physical and psychological harm by living in constant illumination. This practice is unconstitutional.' LeMaire v. Maass, 745 F. Supp. 623, 636 (D. Or. 1990), vacated on other grounds, 12 F.3rd 1444, 1458-59 (9th Cir. 1993)." (Keenan v. Hall (9th Cir. Nov. 20, 2020) 83 F.3rd 1083, 1090-1091.)
>
> Note: Keenan v. Hall covers a whole host of prison living "conditions of confinement," at pp. 1089 to 1095.)

The U.S. Supreme Court held in a 7-to-1 decision that Texas prison guards can be sued over claims that they placed a mentally ill inmate in cells covered in feces and raw sewage, reversing a decision from the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal that shielded the guards under the doctrine of qualified immunity. The case stems from six days that inmate Trent Taylor spent at a psychiatric prison unit in Lubbock, Texas, where guards first placed him in a cell covered in what court documents described as "massive amounts of feces." After days of refusing to eat or drink for fear that his food would be contaminated, Taylor was moved to a separate cell without a bed. There, he was left to sleep in naked in a pool of sewage after a drain in the cell overflowed. The Fifth Circuit had ruled that the guards could not be held responsible because there was no "clearly established law" that prisoners cannot be held in such conditions for the specific time period of six days. The Supreme Court rejected that finding, holding that "no reasonable correctional officer could have concluded that, under the extreme circumstances of this case, it was constitutionally permissible to house Taylor in such deplorably unsanitary conditions for such an extended period of time." Per the Supreme Court, "a general constitutional rule already identified in the decisional law may apply with obvious clarity to the specific conduct in question." (Taylor v. Riojas (Nov. 2, 2020) __ U.S. __ [141 S.Ct. 52; 208

L.Ed.2nd 164; citing Hope v. Pelzer (2002) 536 U. S. 730, 741 [122 S.Ct. 2508; 153 L.Ed.2nd 666].)

In an Eighth Amendment civil rights action over prison noise, a district court's denial of qualified immunity to prison officials was reversed in part because no reasonable officer would have understood that the court-ordered actions (see Coleman v. Schwarzenegger (E.D. & N.D. Cal. 2009) 922 F. Supp.2nd 882) to implement round-the-clock welfare checks to prevent inmate suicides were violating the constitutional rights of the inmates. (Rico v. Ducart (9th Cir. 2020) 980 F.3rd 1292.)

> In so ruling, the Court (at pp. 1298-1299) noted that existing precedent does recognize general rights against excess noise and prison conditions that deprive inmates of "identifiable human need[s]," such as sleep, citing Wilson v. Seiter (1991) 501 U.S. 294, 304 [111 S.Ct. 2321; 115 L.Ed.2nd 271]; and Keenan v. Hall (9th Cir. 1996) 83 F.3rd 1083, 1090-1091, amended on denial of rehearing at (9th Cir. 1998) 135 F.3rd 1318, and holding "the Eighth Amendment require[s] that [inmates] be housed in an environment . . . reasonably free of excess noise" and denying summary judgment for prison officials on claims related to constant noise from other inmates and constant illumination alleged to be causing sleeping problems. (See also Walker v. Schult (2nd Cir. 2013) 717 F.3rd 119, 122, 126; finding an inmate plausibly alleged an Eighth Amendment violation for sleep deprivation caused by his five cellmates making constant and loud noise inside the cell all night); Harper v. Showers (5th Cir. 1999) 174 F.3rd 716, 717, 720; finding that "[c]onditions designed to prevent sleep . . . might violate the Eighth Amendment" when an inmate alleged sleep deprivation because of noise caused by other inmates); and Antonelli v. Sheahan (7th Cir. 1996) 81 F.3rd 1422, 1433; not addressing qualified immunity but finding that an inmate stated a cognizable Eighth Amendment claim when noise "occurred every night, often all night.")

See also Keenan v. Hall (9th Cir. 1996) 82 F.3rd 1083, 1090, where the Court held that while an inmate does not have a right to a quiet environment, an inmate does have a right to an environment that is "reasonably free" from constant, excessive noise caused by other inmates, finding a right to be free from excessive noise caused "at all times of day and night [by other] inmates . . . screaming, wailing, crying, singing, and yelling, often in groups."

In the jail inmates' action alleging that certain conditions of confinement at the jail violated the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments, the district court did not err in denying the inmates' request for a broader preliminary injunction than it had already ordered because they failed to show a likelihood of success on their claims. As to the inmates' theory concerning outdoor exercise time, the district court reasonably concluded on the record that inmates were given constitutionally sufficient recreation time, and the inmates failed to identify any risk of harm, substantial or otherwise, from having their exercise time take place indoors as opposed to outdoors. As to the inmates' theory concerning access to direct sunlight, the inmates failed to demonstrate a causal connection between the lack of direct sunlight and their medical problems. (Norbert v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2021) 10 F.4th 918.)

A deputy was properly awarded summary judgment in a lawsuit by the administrator of a prisoner's estate because the estate did not carry its burden to show that deputy's failure to check on prisoner during the 7:50 p.m. rounds amounted to deliberate indifference. The deputy ten minutes later alerted nurse to the prisoner's "shaking" out of concern that he might be seizing. (Estate of Beauford v. Mesa County (10th Cir. 2022) 35 F.4th 1248.)

In a medical deliberate indifference 42 U.S.C. § 1983 case, defendant prison officials violated the Eighth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution when they chose a medically unacceptable course of treatment for the circumstances. Despite his numerous complaints over a period of years and a visibly deteriorating condition, they ignored his enlarged prostate. Defendants were therefore properly denied qualified immunity because although plaintiff's condition sharply deteriorated during his last few years at the correctional center, the defendant medical staff never deviated from their wait and see treatment plan. As a result, plaintiff suffered from intractable pain over an approximately three-year period that interfered with his daily activities. (Stewart v. Aranas (9th Cir. 2022) 32 F.4th 1192.)

In a case in which two state prisoners asserted that they had the right to possess a personal television in their cells, the appellate court concluded the prisoners did not demonstrate any ministerial duty that civil defendant jail officials failed to fulfill related to inmate television access at the prison. Not one of the constitutional (e.g., due process, cruel and unusual punishment) or statutory provisions identified by the prisoners, or any other constitutional or statutory provision, specifically required a prison to allow inmates to possess personal televisions at the prison. Also, the appellate court was not persuaded that the prisoners were denied fair hearing of their claims related to television access at the prison, so as to require any remedy to effectuate their right of meaningful access to the courts. There was nothing to suggest that the prisoners' claims were not fully and fairly heard in the trial court or on appeal. (In re Dohner (2022) 79 Cal.App.5th 590.)

On the issue of a prisoner's lack of a constitutional right to a personal television in his cell, the Court cites (at p. 595.) the following out-of-state federal authority: Rahman X v. Morgan (8th Cir. 2002) 300 F.3rd 970, 973–974 [no denial of due process or cruel and unusual punishment from inmate's lack of access to television in his cell.]; Murphy v. Walker (7th Cir. 1995) 51 F.3rd 714, 718, fn. 8 [denial of television not a constitutional violation]; More v. Farrier (8th Cir. 1993) 984 F.2nd 269, 271 ["Despite television's importance in modern society, appellees have no fundamental right to in-cell cable television"]; James v. Milwaukee County (7th Cir. 1992) 956 F.2nd 696, 699 [denial of television does not constitute a cognizable civil rights claim]; Montana v. Commissioners Court (5th Cir. 1981) 659 F.2nd 19, 23 [claims relating to usage of radio and television did not pertain to federal constitutional rights and were properly dismissed as frivolous]; Kesling v. Tewalt (D. Idaho 2020) 476 F.Supp.3rd 1077, 1086 ["[T]here is no constitutional right to watch television in prison"]; Rawls v. Sundquist (M.D. Tenn. 1996) 929 F.Supp. 284, 288 ["There is no constitutional right to television while incarcerated"].)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal vacated the district court's judgment entered following a jury verdict in favor of prison officials in an action brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 alleging that defendant prison officials failed to protect plaintiff prisoner from violence by other prisoners. Between 2011 and 2013, plaintiff made six requests to be placed into protective custody, insisting that he was at risk of harm because he had received threats from the "Border Brothers," a gang active throughout Arizona's prisons. All six times, defendants denied plaintiff's requests for protective custody. After his sixth request was denied, plaintiff was physically assaulted in the prison yard by two other prisoners, at least one of whom was a suspected member of the Border Brothers. Plaintiff brought suit and after a four-day trial, the district court instructed the jury to "give deference to prison officials in the adoption and execution of policies and practices that, in their judgment, are needed to preserve discipline and to maintain internal security in a prison." The Court held on appeal that because the evidence at trial reflected a genuine dispute whether the decisions to deny plaintiff's requests for protective custody were made pursuant to a security-based policy, and, if so, whether the decisions were an unnecessary, unjustified, or exaggerated response to security concerns, the district court's deference instruction was erroneous. That error may have affected the verdict. Accordingly, the panel vacated and remanded for a new trial. (Fierro v. Smith (2022) 39 F.4th 640.)

Note: See "Pre-Trial Detainee Jail Condition Cases," under "Due Process; Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment Issues," below, for the pre-trial detainee's constitutional protections.

Prisoner Civil Rights/COVID-19: On interlocutory appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal (1) affirmed in part and reversed in part the district court's order denying defendants' motion to dismiss on the basis of immunity under the Public Readiness and Emergency Preparedness Act ("PREP Act") and qualified immunity in an action brought against California prison officials arising from the death of a San Quentin inmate from COVID-19; and (2) dismissed for lack of jurisdiction defendants' claims asserting immunity under state law. On May 30, 2020, defendants transferred 122 inmates from the California Institution for Men, which had suffered a severe COVID-19 outbreak, to San Quentin Prison, where there were no known cases of the virus, resulting in an outbreak that killed one prison guard and over twenty-five inmates, including plaintiff's husband, Michael Hampton. Determining that the denial of PREP Act immunity was an appealable collateral order, the Court held that defendants were not, on the face of the complaint, entitled to immunity under the PREP Act, which limits legal liability for the administration of medical countermeasures (such as diagnostics, treatments, and vaccines) during times of crisis. The Court held that the PREP Act does not provide immunity against claims arising from the failure to administer a covered countermeasure. Here, plaintiff alleged that defendants were aware prior to the inmates' transfer that their COVID-19 test results were so outdated as to be essentially irrelevant. It therefore was plausible to infer that the testing results did not contribute to the decision to transfer the inmates, and, accordingly, did not contribute to Hampton's death. Once post-transfer testing occurred, the damage had been done. Because the allegations did not describe a causal relationship between the administration of testing and Hampton's death, plaintiff's claims were not precluded by the PREP Act. The Court further held that defendants were not entitled to qualified immunity on plaintiff's

Eighth Amendment claim, which adequately alleged that defendants acted with deliberate indifference to the health and safety of San Quentin inmates, including Hampton. The right at issue—to be free from exposure to a serious disease—was clearly established since at least 1993, when the Supreme Court decided Helling v. McKinney (1993) 509 U.S. 25, and under the Ninth Circuit's precedent. All reasonable prison officials would have been on notice in 2020 that they could be held liable for exposing inmates to a serious disease, including a serious communicable disease. Finally, the Court held that it lacked jurisdiction to consider whether officials were entitled to immunity under state law. Because the state law immunities on which defendants relied were immunities from liability, not from suit, defendants could not invoke the collateral order doctrine to immediately appeal the district court's rejection of those state law defenses. In an accompanying memorandum disposition, the Court reversed the district court's denial of qualified immunity on plaintiff's due process claim for violation of her own right to familial association with Hampton. (Hampton v. California (9th Cir. 2023) 83 F.4th 754.)

A Prisoner's Access to the Courts:

Affirming the district court's summary judgment in favor of Nevada prison officials, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal held that plaintiff, a Nevada prisoner, lacked standing to pursue a claim that the prison officials denied him meaningful access to the courts under the First Amendment. Plaintiff alleged that the practice of requiring lockdown inmates to use a paging system to request law library materials—instead of physically visiting the law library—deprived him of access to the courts because the paging system required inmates to request the specific source by name, and thereby prevented him from discovering a Nevada Supreme Court decision that he alleged supported his claim for post-conviction relief. Specifically, plaintiff, who was convicted by a jury of first-degree murder, argued that the Nevada Supreme Court's decision in Nika v. State (Nev. 2008) 198 P.3rd 839, resurrected his habeas claim related to a jury instruction on mens rea, but because of the paging system he did not learn of Nika until seven years after it was decided, at which point he had already filed three unsuccessful habeas petitions. Upon discovering Nika, however, plaintiff filed additional petitions in 2016 and 2019, both of which were denied. The Court held that because plaintiff could not show actual injury—the hindrance of a non-frivolous underlying legal claim—he lacked standing. Plaintiff offered no reason, beyond speculation, to think that the Nevada courts would have reached a different decision had he filed a habeas claim within a year of Nika instead of seven years later. The Nevada Court of Appeal rejected plaintiff's 2016 habeas claim for a reason unrelated to the delay, finding that the evidence presented at trial was sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that he acted with the requisite mens rea. His habeas claim therefore would have failed no matter when it was raised. Because the claim had no chance of success, he did not suffer an actual injury sufficient to confer standing to pursue an access-to-courts claim. (Nasby v. State of Nevada (9th Cir. 2023) 79 F.4th 1052.)

The Newsman's Shield Law:

California's "shield laws protect journalists from disclosing information acquired in the course of making news. (See Cal. Const., art. I, § 2, subd. (b); Evid. Code, § 1070.) The state's shield law provides, in pertinent part, that a journalist 'shall not be adjudged in contempt by a [court] for refusing to disclose the source of any information procured while so connected or employed [as a news reporter], or for refusing to disclose any unpublished information obtained or prepared in gathering, receiving or processing of information for communication to the public.' (Cal. Const., art. I, § 2, subd. (b).) 'Unpublished information' includes recorded footage not shown to the public.' (Ibid.; see also Evid. Code, § 1070 [statutory predecessor to Cal. Const., art. I, § 2, subd. (b)].) The shield law applies whether or not the information was provided in confidence. (Delaney (v. Superior Court (199) . . . 50 Cal.3rd (785) at p. 798.)" (People v. Parker (2022) 13 Cal.5th 1, 33; upholding the trial court's refusal to allow defendant to view certain videotapes.)

The Parker Court further noted (at pp. 33-34) that "(i)n Delaney, we explained that the shield law may be overcome only 'on a showing that nondisclosure would deprive the defendant of his federal constitutional right to a fair trial.' (Delaney, supra, 50 Cal.3d at p. 805.) A defendant must make a threshold showing that there is a reasonable possibility the information sought will materially assist with the defense. (Id. at p. 808.) The showing 'need not be detailed or specific, but it must rest on more than mere speculation.' (Id. at p. 809.) If the defendant overcomes this threshold showing, the court then balances four factors to evaluate disclosure, including: (1) whether the unpublished information is confidential or sensitive; (2) whether the interests sought to be protected by the shield law will be thwarted by disclosure; (3) the importance of the information to the defendant; and (4) whether there is an alternative source for the information. (Id. at pp. 810–811.)"

Defendant Hansen promised hundreds of noncitizens a path to U.S. citizenship through "adult adoption," earning nearly $2 million from his fraudulent scheme. The government charged Hansen under 8 U.S.C. 1324(a)(1)(A)(iv), which forbids "encourag[ing] or induc[ing] an alien to come to, enter, or reside in the United States, knowing or in reckless disregard of the fact that such [activity] is or will be in violation of law." The Ninth Circuit found Clause (iv) unconstitutionally overbroad, in violation of the First Amendment. (See United States v. Hansen (9th Cir. 2022) 25 F.4th 1103.) The Supreme Court reversed. Because 1324(a)(1)(A)(iv) forbids only the purposeful solicitation and facilitation of specific acts known to violate federal law, the clause is not unconstitutionally overbroad. A statute is facially invalid under the overbreadth doctrine only if it "prohibits a substantial amount of protected speech" relative to its "plainly legitimate sweep." Here, Congress used "encourage" and "induce" as terms of art referring to criminal solicitation and facilitation (capturing only a narrow band of speech) not as those terms are used in ordinary conversation. Criminal solicitation is the intentional encouragement of an unlawful act. Facilitation—i.e., aiding and abetting—is the provision of assistance to a wrongdoer with the intent to further an offense's commission. Neither requires lending physical aid. Rather, both require an intent to bring about a particular unlawful act. The context of these words and statutory history indicate that Congress intended to refer to their well-established legal meanings. Section 1324(a)(1)(A)(iv) reaches no further than the purposeful solicitation and facilitation of specific acts known to violate federal law and does not "prohibi[t] a substantial amount of protected speech" relative to its "plainly legitimate sweep." (United States v. Hansen (June 23, 2023) __ U.S.__ [143 S.Ct. 1932; 216 L.Ed.2nd 692].)

A newspaper's motion to quash a criminal defendant's subpoena demanding all unpublished material relating to a jailhouse interview of his codefendant by the newspaper's reporter was properly denied because defendant's rights and discovery needs outweighed the protections of the "newsperson's shield law," Cal. Const., art. I, § 2, subd. (b); Evid. Code, § 1070. Defendant met his threshold burden to show a reasonable possibility the reporter's notes from her interview with the codefendant contained information materially helpful to his defense, the unpublished information was neither confidential nor sensitive, which gave the court discretion to give less weight to whether there was an alternative source for the unpublished information, and compelled disclosure would not give future criminal defendants a reason to decline to cooperate with journalists. (The Bakersfield Californian v. Superior Court (1923) 96 Cal.App.4th 1228.)

Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Issues*:

In General:

The Fifth Amendment—applicable to the federal government—provides that no person shall be "deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law." The Fourteenth Amendment, ratified in 1868, uses the same eleven words, is called the "Due Process Clause," and is intended to describe the legal obligation as it applies to the states.

"In a long line of cases, we have held that, in addition to the specific freedoms protected by the Bill of Rights, the 'liberty' specially protected by the Due Process Clause includes the rights to marry, Loving v. Virginia; to have children, Skinner v. Oklahoma ex rel. Williamson, 316 U.S. 535 (1942); to direct the education and upbringing of one's children, Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923); Pierce v. Society* of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925); to marital privacy, Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965); to use contraception, Ibid; Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972); to bodily integrity, Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165 (1952), and to abortion, (Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pa. v.) Casey (505 U.S. 833 (1992). We have also assumed, and strongly suggested, that the Due Process Clause protects the traditional right to refuse unwanted lifesaving medical treatment. Cruzan* (*v. Director, Mo. Dept. of Health, 497 U.S. 261 497 (at 278-279) (1990)." (Italics added: Washington v. Glucksberg (1997) 521 U.S. 702, 719-720 [117 S.Ct. 2258; 117 S.Ct. 2302; 138 L.Ed.2nd 772].)

As Applied to Illegal Aliens:

All persons within the territory of the United States are entitled to the protections guaranteed by the amendments, including the Fifth Amendment's due process clause. (Wong Wing v. United States (1896) 163 U.S. 288 [16 S.Ct. 977; 41 L.Ed. 140].)

In Wing Wong, certiorari was issued to the Federal District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California to determine whether a statute permitting the imposition on an alien of punishment by imprisonment at hard labor, to have been inflicted by the judgment of any justice, judge, or commissioner of the United States without a trial by jury, was constitutional. The United States Supreme Court reversed the lower court's judgment and held that an alien may not be held to answer for a capital or other infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The Court reasoned that the United States could, by Congressional enactment, forbid aliens or classes of aliens from > coming within their borders, and expel aliens or classes of aliens from their territory. The Court stated, however, that Congress could not further promote such a policy by subjecting persons of such aliens to infamous punishment at hard labor, or by confiscating their property, without providing for a judicial trial to establish the guilt of the accused. The Court applied the rule of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Fifth and Sixth Amendments, stating that the provisions contained therein are universal in their application to all persons within the territorial jurisdiction, and that all persons within the territory of the United States were entitled to the protection guaranteed by the amendments.

See also Zadvydas v. Davis (2001) 533 U.S. 678, at p. 693 [121 S.Ct. 2491; 150 L.Ed.2nd 653]: "(T)he Due Process Clause applies to all 'persons' within the United States, including aliens, whether their presence here is lawful, unlawful, temporary, or permanent."

However, a due process entitlement does not mean that different categories of people cannot be treated differently. For instance, see Mathews v. Diaz (1976) 426 U.S. 67 [96 S.Ct. 1883; 48 L.Ed.2nd 478]. In Mathews, plaintiff Cubans had been lawfully admitted to the United States for less than five years. Plaintiffs were over 65 years old and had been denied enrollment in the Medicare Part B supplemental medical insurance program under 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 1395j et seq. They attacked the statutory basis for the denial under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395o(2), which granted eligibility to resident citizens who were 65 or older but which denied eligibility to comparable aliens unless they had been admitted for permanent residence and also resided in the United States on a continuous basis for at least five years. The Federal District Court held that the five-year residence requirement violated the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment and that the alien-eligibility provisions of 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395o(2)(B) were unenforceable. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, finding that 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395o(2)(B) had not deprived appellees of liberty or property without due process of law in that aliens were not entitled to enjoy all the advantages of citizenship, and a legitimate distinction between citizens and aliens justified benefits for one class that were not accorded to the other.

Also, one's presence on United States soil does not necessarily provide him with the right to remain in the U.S. For instance, in Shaughnessy v. United States (1953) 345 U.S. 206 [73 S.Ct. 625; 97 L.Ed.2nd 956], the Supreme Court discussed what is now sometimes called the "entry fiction." The appeal stemmed from respondent having been permanently excluded without a hearing pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 175.57 for national security reasons. The Second Circuit Court of Appeal granted respondent's writ of habeas corpus. The Supreme Court reversed.

Respondent alien was born abroad and had previously lived in the United States for more than 25 years. He left the United States and spent 19 months in Hungary. Upon his return, he was permanently excluded from the United States on national security grounds, pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 175.57. Respondent was stranded on Ellis Island in that no other country would grant him entry. The Supreme Court held that respondent's continued exclusion without a hearing, lasting more than 21 months, did not constitute an unlawful detention and did not violate his due process rights, and that the lower court erred in granting him temporary entry on bond. The Court distinguished respondent's situation from other cases that granted hearings to aliens, noting that respondent was an entrant under the meaning of the regulation, and that he had no rights conferred upon him, and no protections under the Constitution. The Court held that neither respondent's harborage on Ellis Island, nor his previous residence in the United States, changed his status, and that he remained excludable.

It has also been held that neither the U.S. Constitution's "Suspension Clause" (grounds for suspending the right to writ of habeas corpus) nor the Due Process Clause are violated by an expedited removal of an illegal alien who, found in the United States without documentation, is removed from the country without a hearing. In Department of Homeland Security v. Thuraissigiam (June 25, 2020) __ U.S. __ [140 S.Ct. 1959; 207 L.Ed.2nd 427], respondent Vijayakumar Thuraissigiam, a Sri Lankan national, was stopped just 25 yards after crossing the southern border without inspection or an entry document. He was detained for expedited removal. An asylum officer rejected his credible-fear claim, a supervising officer agreed, and an Immigration Judge affirmed. Respondent then filed a federal habeas petition, asserting for the first time a fear of persecution based on his Tamil ethnicity and political views and requesting a new opportunity to apply for asylum. The District Court dismissed the petition but the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal reversed, holding that, as applied here, 8 U.S.C. §1252(e)(2) (limiting the review an alien in an expedited removal may obtain via a writ of habeas corpus) violates the Suspension Clause and the Due Process Clause. The U.S. Supreme Court reversed, holding that as applied here, 8 U.S.C. §1252(e)(2) does not violate the Suspension Clause. The Suspension Clause provides that "[t]he Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it." Art. I, § 9, cl. 2. The U.S. Supreme Court has held that, at a minimum, the Clause "protects the writ as it existed in 1789" when the Constitution was adopted. Habeas has traditionally provided a means to seek release from unlawful detention. Respondent did not seek release from custody but rather an additional opportunity to obtain asylum. The Court held, therefore, that his claims fell outside the scope of the writ as it existed when the Constitution was adopted. Also, as applied here, 8 U.S.C. § 1252(e)(2) was held not to violate the Due Process Clause. Per the Court, more than a century of precedent establishes that for aliens seeking initial entry, "the decisions of executive or administrative officers, acting within powers expressly conferred by Congress, are due process of law." Respondent argued that this rule did not apply to him because he succeeded in making it 25 yards into U. S. territory. The Court ruled, however, that the rule would be meaningless if it became inoperative as soon as an arriving alien set foot on U.S. soil. An alien who is detained shortly after unlawful entry cannot be said to have "effected an entry." An alien in respondent's position, therefore, has only those rights regarding admission that Congress has provided by statute. In respondent's case, Congress provided the right to a "determin[ation]" whether he had "a significant possibility" of "establish[ing] eligibility for asylum." He had been provided with that right upon an asylum officer considering his claim, a review of that decision by a supervising officer agreed, and an Immigration Judge affirming that decision. 8 U.S.C. §§1225(b)(1)(B)(ii), (v).) Per the Court, due process requires no more.

Under 8 U.S.C. § 1326(a); "any alien who . . . has been denied admission, excluded, deported, or removed . . . and thereafter . . . enters, attempts to enter, or is at any time found in, the United States," without proper authorization, is subject to criminal penalties. Section 1326(b) imposes enhanced criminal penalties for aliens who have previously been convicted of specified offenses. In United States v. Carrillo-Lopez (9th Cir. 2023) 68 F.4th 1133, the Ninth Circuit ruled that the lower district court had clearly erred when it found that Congress's enactment of 8 U.S.C.S. § 1326 was motivated in part by the purpose of discriminating against Mexicans or other Central and South Americans. The district court construed evidence in a light unfavorable to Congress, including finding that evidence unrelated to § 1326 indicated that Congress enacted § 1326 due to discriminatory animus against Mexicans and other Central and South Americans. In reversing this decision, the Court held that the petitioner did not meet his burden to prove that Congress enacted § 1326 because of discriminatory animus against Mexicans or other Central and South Americans, and it rejected his equal protection claim.

As Applied to Prison Inmates:

Where a state prison (Nevada) inmate alleged that correctional facility officials violated his constitutional rights by denying him the ability to examine certain documents that could serve as evidence in a prison disciplinary proceeding pending against him, the officials were properly denied qualified immunity under § 1983 because the inmate had a Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Clause right to be permitted to examine documentary evidence for use in the prison disciplinary hearing, and this right was clearly established when the inmate was denied access to the materials. (Melnik v. Dzurenda (9th Cir. 2021) 4 F.4th 981.)

At a parole rescission hearing conducted as a result of a referral from the California Governor, the California Board of Parole Hearings erred in denying the state prison inmate's request for the presence of evidentiary witnesses because the Board violated its own procedural rules as well as the inmate's due process rights, as the inmate should have been permitted to call witnesses whose testimony would have been relevant to understanding or interpreting the record before the parole suitability hearing. (In re Foster (2022) 84 Cal.App.5th 987, as modified at (Dec. 1, 2022) 2022 Cal.App. LEXIS 984.)

Use of Force Cases:

Five deputies holding down a resisting criminal defendant for the purpose of obtaining his fingerprints, in a courtroom (but out of the jury's presence), where there were found to be less violent alternatives to obtaining the same evidence, is force that "shocks the conscience" and a violation of the defendant's Fourteenth Amendment due process rights. (People v. Herndon (2007) 149 Cal.App.4th 274; held to be "harmless error" in light of other evidence and because defendant created the situation causing the force to be used.)

A police officer violates the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause if he kills a suspect when acting with the purpose to harm, unrelated to a legitimate law enforcement objective. An officer was properly found to be civilly liable after shooting and killing the decedent (plaintiffs' mother) at the end of a high speed chase, but where the decedent was blocked in without a means of escape, and where no weapons were observed. (A. D. v. State of California Highway Patrol (9th Cir. 2013) 712 F.3rd 446, 452-454, 456-460; the officer held not to be entitled to qualified immunity, Id., at pp. 454-455.)

Where a pretrial detainee alleged that jail officers used excessive force in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause in tasing him while removing him from his jail cell, the detainee need only show that the force purposely and knowingly used against him was objectively unreasonable. Remand was warranted in this case regarding the jury's finding for the officers in a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 excessive force claim because the jury instructions were erroneous, having suggested to the jury that they should weigh the officers' subjective reasons (i.e., whether "the officers were subjectively aware that their use of force was unreasonable") for using force. (Kingsley v. Hendrickson (2015) 576 U.S. 389 [135 S.Ct. 2466; 192 L.Ed.2nd 416].)

See Jones v. Las Vegas Metro. Police Department (9th Cir. 2017) 873 F.3rd 1123, 1132-1133: Although continually tasing a subject for over 90 seconds, even after he was on the ground and had gone limp, while being subdued by five officers, actions which contributed to the subject's death, was held to present a triable issue in a subsequent civil suit brought by the decedent's parents, the Court also held that the decedent's parents, in this case, did not have a valid Fourteenth Amendment due process claim. Citing Johnson v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (9th Cir. 2013) 724 F.3rd 1159, 1169, where the Court noted that: "[W]e have recognized a parent's right to a child's companionship without regard to the child's age," citing the case law. However, officers' actions in this regard do not constitute a Fourteenth Amendment due process violation unless the "[o]fficial conduct . . . 'shocks the conscience' in depriving parents of that interest . . ." (Wilkinson v. Torres (9th Cir. 2010) 610 F.3rd 546, 554.) In this (the Jones) case, "where officers must react quickly to a rapidly changing situation, the test is whether the officers acted with a purpose of causing harm unconnected to any legitimate law enforcement objective." (See also Porter v. Osborn (9th Cir. 2008) 546 F.3rd 1131, 1137, 1140.) The Court failed to find evidence of such a purpose in this case.

Aside from an Fourth Amendment excessive force issues, conduct that "shocks the conscious" violates due process. In using force, an officer violates a person's due process rights if he acted with "a purpose to harm without regard to legitimate law enforcement objectives." In this case, it was held that the officer did not violate the plaintiffs' due process rights when he shot their son 18 times in two nine-round volleys. The two volleys came in rapid succession, without time for reflection. Whether excessive or not, the shootings served the legitimate purpose of stopping a dangerous suspect. However, stomping the then comatose decedent in the head three times is different. After the two volleys, a video from a police patrol car shows the deputy walking around in a circle for several seconds before returning for the head strikes. He even took a running start before each strike. A reasonable jury could conclude that the deputy was acting out of anger or emotion rather than any legitimate law enforcement purpose. (Zion *v. County of Orange (9th Cir. 2017) 874 F.3rd 1072, 1076-1077.)

Prolonged Detentions:

A trial court's grant of summary judgment to the operator of private prison was reversed because a reasonable jury could find that the operator caused defendant's prolonged detention by failing to notify the Marshals of his continued detention without a hearing and by discouraging and preventing him from seeking outside help and that the operator's conduct, which resulted in prolonged detention of nearly a year without a court appearance, a "due process" violation, was extreme and outrageous.

(Rivera v. Corrections Corporation of America (9th Cir. 2021) 999 F.3rd 647.)

Speedy Trial Rights:

Although a pre-charging delay does not implicate speedy trial rights, a defendant is not without recourse if the delay is unjustified and prejudicial. The right of due process protects a criminal defendant's interest in fair adjudication by preventing unjustified delays that weaken the defense through the dimming of memories, the death or disappearance of witnesses, and the loss or destruction of material physical evidence. Accordingly, delay in prosecution that occurs before the accused is arrested or the complaint is filed may constitute a denial of the right to a fair trial and to due process of law under the California and United States Constitutions. A defendant seeking to dismiss a charge on this ground must demonstrate prejudice arising from the delay. The prosecution may offer justification for the delay, and the court considering a motion to dismiss balances the harm to the defendant against the justification for the delay. This includes both intentional and negligent delays. (People v. Bracamontes (2022) 12 Cal.5th 977, 987-988; the Court finding no due process violation in a 13-year delay which was due to the time it took to investigate the case and develop the necessary DNA testing.)

The same considerations pertain to the time it takes for judicial review. "This is true even where the process of judicial review results in substantial delays. (Citation) Here, Bloom does not argue that the state unnecessarily delayed retrial after the federal court granted him habeas corpus relief. The great bulk of the delay of which he complains is instead attributable to the process of appeal and post-conviction review. Where, as here, 'defendant has benefitted from the careful and meticulous process of judicial review, he cannot now complain that the process "which exists to protect him has violated other of his rights."'" (People v. Bloom (2022) 12 Cal.5th 1008, 1028, citing and quoting People v. McDowell (2012) 54 Cal.4th 395, 413-416.)

Defendant appealed his convictions for wire fraud, mail fraud, and various tax offenses, arguing that the 21-day period it took the U.S. Marshals Service to transport him from the District of New Jersey, where he was arrested, to the Central District of California, where he was indicted, violated the Speedy Trial Act and required the court to overturn his convictions. The argument centered on a provision of the Speedy Trial Act that mandates trial commencement within seventy days from the date a defendant appears before a judicial officer of the court where the charge is pending. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals rejected defendant's argument, affirming his convictions. The court ruled that the 21-day delay between defendant's detention in New Jersey and his first appearance before a judge in the federal Central District in California was immaterial to the Speedy Trial Act analysis. The court held that a plain reading of the relevant section of the Speedy Trial Act dictates that the 21-day delay did not trigger a Speedy Trial Act violation. The court also rejected defendant's argument that a different provision became relevant because he was detained. The court held that this provision applies to prisoners traveling between jurisdictions for court proceedings once the seventy-day clock has started, not to a pre-indictment or pre-appearance transfer. (United States v. Layfield (9th Cir. Mar. 7, 2024) __ F.4th __, __ [2024 U.S.App. LEXIS 5509].)

Excessive Fines and Driver's License Suspensions:

In an action challenging the constitutionality of Oregon's since-repealed system of suspending the driver's licenses of persons who failed to pay the fines in connection with traffic violations, the district court properly held plaintiff failed to state a claim on which relief could be granted, as the due process and equal protection principles recognized in Bearden v. Georgia (1983) 461 U.S. 660 [103 S.Ct. 2064; 76 L.Ed.2nd 221, and Griffin v. Illinois (1956) 351 U.S. 12 [76 S.Ct. 585; 100 L.Ed. 891] did not apply. Plaintiff's cause of action alleging that defendants' suspension of her license rested on a wealth distinction that did not survive rational basis review was properly dismissed, as plaintiff failed to plead facts establishing that her suspension lacked a rational basis. Plaintiff's due process claim also failed, as she failed to establish any basis to conclude that the Constitution required defendants to consider her inability to pay her traffic debt in deciding to suspend her license. (Mendoza v. Strickler (9th Cir. 2022) 51 F.4th 346.)

The Failure to Protect: Special Relationships:

General Rule:

"The Due Process Clause is a limitation on state action and is not a 'guarantee of certain minimal levels of safety and security." (Martinez v. City of Clovis (9th Cir. 2019) 943 F.3rd 1260, 1270-1271; quoting DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dep't of Soc. Servs. (1989) 489 U.S. 189, 194-195 [109 S.Ct. 998; 103 L.Ed.2nd 249].)

"Simply failing to prevent acts of a private party is insufficient to establish liability. See Patel v. Kent Sch. Dist., 648 F.3rd 965, 971 (9th Cir. 2011). 'The general rule is that a state is not liable for its omissions' and the Due Process Clause does not 'impose a duty on the state to protect individuals from third parties.' Id. (alterations omitted) (first quoting Munger v. City of Glasgow Police Dep't, 227 F.3rd 1082, 1086 (9th Cir. 2000), then quoting Morgan v. Gonzales, 495 F.3rd 1084, 1093 (9th Cir. 2007))" (Martinez v. City of Clovis, supra.)

"As a general rule, members of the public have no constitutional right to sue state employees who fail to protect them against harm inflicted by third parties." (L.W. v. Grubbs (9th Cir. 1992) 974 F.2nd 119, 121, citing DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dep't of Soc. Servs., *supra, at p. 197.)

Exception; A "special relationship" between the plaintiff and the state may give rise to a constitutional duty to protect; a "due process" issue.

"The special-relationship exception 'applies when [the] state "takes a person into its custody and holds him there against his will."' Patel (v. Kent School Dist. (9th Cir. 2011)) 648 F.3rd (965), at 972 (quoting DeShaney, 489 U.S. at 199-200). Examples of custody include 'incarceration, institutionalization, or other similar restraint[s] of personal liberty.' DeShaney (v. Winnebago Cty. Department of Soc. Servs. (1989)) 489 U.S. (189) at 200. 'When a person is placed in these types of custody, we allow due process claims against the state for a fairly simple reason: a state cannot restrain a person's liberty without also assuming some responsibility for the person's safety and well-being.' Patel, 648 F.3d at 972. 'In the case of a minor child, custody does not exist until the state has so restrained the child's liberty that the parents cannot care for the child's basic needs.' Id. at 974." (Murguia v. Langdon (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 1096, 1109.)

In Murguia, the Court rejected plaintiffs' argument that two infants were in the "de facto" custody of the police defendants in that the infants' mother (who subsequently drowned the infants in a bathtub) was experiencing an obvious mental breakdown at the time and should not have been left in the custody of their mother. (pgs. 1109-1110)

Per Murguia: "'(C)ustody' for the purposes of the special-relationship exception is a restriction on the plaintiff's liberty that limits the ability of the plaintiff (or the plaintiff's parents) to meet the plaintiff's basic needs (e.g., incarceration, institutionalization, foster care). See Patel, 648 F.3rd at 972-974 (holding that mandatory school attendance did not give rise to the special-relationship exception when the child was at school because the student lived at home with her mother, who was her primary > caretaker, and 'unlike incarceration or institutionalization, compulsory school attendance does not restrict a student's liberty such that neither the student nor the parents can attend to the student's basic needs.'") (Pg. 1110.)

By arresting the plaintiff's driver, impounding his car, and leaving plaintiff (a female) in a high-crime area at 2:30 a.m., after which plaintiff was picked up by a man who eventually raped her, "triggers a duty" on the officer's part "to afford her some measure of peace and safety." "(T)he inherent danger facing a woman left alone at night in an unsafe area is a matter of common sense." (Wood v. Ostrander (9th Cir. 1989) 879 F.2nd 583, 587-590; qualified immunity denied; pp. 590-596.)

> Note: It was not argued that the officer's actions in this case created a "special relationship." This case, therefore, could also be cited as authority under the second exception, below.

"The police owe duties of care only to the public at large and, except where they enter into a 'special relationship,' have no duty to offer affirmative assistance to anyone in particular." The Court ruled that the fact that officers had responded to plaintiffs' home a number of times concerning the same problem; i.e., a boyfriend's abusive actions, did not create a "special relationship" that would have made the officers civilly liable for the injuries the boyfriend caused. (Benavidez v. San Jose Police Dept. (1999) 71 Cal.App.4th 853, 859–860.)

In a wrongful death case, the Appellate Court concluded that an arrestee's negligence in swallowing methamphetamine was not relevant to the CHP officers' response, while his post-ingestion negligence was relevant. The trial court properly excluded evidence of the former and permitted the jury to consider evidence of the latter. The trial court did not err in denying defendants' motion in limine to exclude evidence or argument that the officers attempted to coerce the arrestee's confession to drug possession. It was relevant for the jury to understand that the arrestee had an incentive to lie about what he ingested and decline medical care in order to avoid admitting the crime of possession of a controlled substance, and to assess whether and how a reasonable officer would have taken this into account in responding to the situation. As a rule, one has no duty to come to the aid of another. A person who has not created a peril is not liable in tort merely for failure to take affirmative action to assist or protect another unless there is some relationship between them which gives rise to a duty to act.

There is a special relationship between a jailer and prisoner. It has been observed that a typical setting for the recognition of a special relationship is where the plaintiff is particularly vulnerable and dependent upon the defendant who, correspondingly, has some control over the plaintiff's welfare. Therefore, once in custody, an arrestee is vulnerable, dependent, subject to the control of the officer and unable to attend to his or her own medical needs. Due to this special relationship, the officer owes a duty of reasonable care to the arrestee. (Frausto v. Department of the California Highway Patrol (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 973.)

The "Danger Doctrine:"

General Rule: The state may be constitutionally required to protect a plaintiff that it "affirmatively places . . . in danger by acting with 'deliberate indifference' to a 'known or obvious danger.'" (I.e., the so-called "Danger Doctrine.") (DeShaney v. Winnebago Cty. Department of Soc. Servs. (1989) 489 U.S. 189, 198-202 [109 S.Ct. 998; 103 L.Ed.2nd 249].)

In DeShaney, it was held that "social workers and local officials were not liable under (42 U.S.C.) § 1983 on a failure-to-act theory for injuries inflicted on a child by his father. (pg. 191.) The state actors had received complaints that the child was abused by his father but failed to remove the child from his father's custody. Id. The court reasoned that '[w]hile the State may have been aware of the dangers that [the child] faced in the free world, it played no part in their creation, nor did it do anything to render him any more vulnerable to them.' Id. at 201 (emphasis added). The Court acknowledged that the state once took temporary custody of the child and then returned him to his father, but reasoned that the state 'placed [the child] in no worse position than that in which he would have been had it not acted at all[.]' Id. Given that the state actors did not create or enhance any danger to the child, the state did not have a constitutional duty to protect him from the private violence inflicted by his father. Id." (Murguia v. Langdon (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 1096, 1110-1111.)

The plaintiffs in Murguia v. Langdon, supra, at pp. 1106-1108, 1110, urged a third exception to the rule; i.e., based on a state's failure to act—a legal requirement exception. The Court held that no such exception exists.

See also Martinez v. City of Clovis (9th Cir. 2019) 943 F.3rd 1260, 1271; Patel v. Kent School Dist. (9th Cir. 2011) 648 F.3rd 965, 971-972; and L.W. v. Grubbs (9th Cir. 1992) 974 F.2nd 119, 121.

Necessary Elements: There are two over-all elements to the Danger Doctrine:

1. There must be "affirmative conduct on the part of the state in placing the plaintiff in danger."

2. There must be state action with "deliberate indifference" to a "known or obvious danger." (Murguia v. Langdon, supra, at p. 1111, citing Patel v. Kent School Dist. (9th Cir. 2011) 648 F.3rd 965, at 974.)

Note: In rejecting this proposed third exception, the Court discusses the differences between "substantive due process" and "procedural due process," ruling that the Murguia case deals with the former, while the cases supporting the Plaintiffs' argument deal with the latter. (pgs. 1106-1108.)

Other Court have held that there are three necessary elements to establishing a "danger doctrine" exception to the general rule of no-liability: A plaintiff must show that:

1. The officers' affirmative actions created or exposed him to an actual, particularized danger that he would not otherwise have faced;

"This is 'a stringent standard of fault, requiring proof that a municipal actor disregarded a known or obvious consequence of his action.' Patel (v. Kent School District (9th Cir. 2011)) 648 F.3rd (965) at 974 (quoting Bryan Cty. v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 410, 117 S.Ct. 1382, 137 L.Ed.2nd 626 (1997)). The standard is higher than gross negligence, because it requires a 'culpable mental state.' Id. (citing (L.W. v.) Grubbs ((9th Cir. 1996)) 92 F.3rd (894) at 898-900). 'The state actor must "recognize an unreasonable risk and actually intend to expose the plaintiff to such risks without regard to the consequences to the plaintiff."' Id. (alterations omitted) (quoting Grubbs, 92 F.3d at 899). In other words, the state actor must have known that something was going to happen, but 'ignored the risk and exposed the [plaintiff] to it anyway.' Hernandez (v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 2018)) 897 F.3rd (1125) at 1135 (alterations omitted) (quoting Patel, 648 F.3rd at 974)." (Martinez v. City of Clovis, supra, at p. 1274.)

To satisfy this first requirement, a plaintiff must show that the officers' affirmative actions created or exposed [him] to an actual, particularized danger that [he] would not otherwise have faced. (Murguia v. Langdon (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 1096, 1111; i.e.; "whether the officers left the person in a situation that was more dangerous than the one in which they found him."

> Also: Whether "the plaintiff's ultimate injury must have been foreseeable to the defendant." (Ibid.)

On the issue of "particularity," in Sinclair v. City of Seattle (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 674, at pgs. 682-683, the Ninth Circuit cites a number of cases where the danger caused was particular to the plaintiff him- or herself:

> L.W. v. Grubbs (9th Cir. 1992) 974 F.2nd 119, 121: The state left a nurse alone with a violent offender, who assaulted her.
>
> Hernandez v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F.3d 1125, 1138: Officers "shepherded [plaintiffs] into a violent crowd of protestors and actively prevented them from reaching safety."
>
> Munger v. City of Glasgow Police Department (9th Cir. 2000) 227 F.3rd 1082, 1086-1087: Officers expelled the inebriated plaintiff from a bar into the freezing night with nowhere to go, and he later succumbed to hypothermia.
>
> Wood v. Ostrander (9th Cir. 1989) 879 F.2d 583, 590: Troopers stopped a car, arrested the driver, and left the plaintiff passenger stranded in a high crime area in the middle of the night where she was subsequently raped.

Kennedy v. City of Ridgefield (9th Cir. 2006) 439 F.3rd 1055, 1057-1058: The plaintiff and her deceased husband were shot by their neighbor after a police officer notified the neighbor that the plaintiff had reported that the neighbor had molested their nine-year-old daughter.

Maxwell v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2013) 708 F.3rd 1075, 1082: A gunshot victim died after police officers prevented the ambulance from leaving for the hospital.

Hunters Capital LLC v. City of Seattle (W.D. Wash. 2020) 499 F. Supp.3rd 888, 895-899, 902, where plaintiffs, who lived or owned businesses within the CHOP zone, had their business and residences vandalized and/or looted, significantly narrowing the class of persons exposed to the alleged state-created danger.

In contrast, the harm was held not to be particularized to the plaintiffs in Johnson v. City of Seattle (9th Cir. 2007) 474 F.3rd 634, where in response to growing violence at a Mardi Gras festival, the City of Seattle altered its crowd control plan for riot officers monitoring the event from one focused on confronting problematic behavior to one in which officers would remain on the periphery of the crowd. The evidence showed that the assistant police chief in charge ordered the change because he "determined that ordering police officers to enter into the crowd, or any attempts by the police to disperse it would incite greater panic and violence, making the situation worse." Members of the crowd who were then assaulted by rogue revelers brought a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action against the City. The Court held that the City had not engaged in affirmative conduct that "enhanced the dangers the . . . [p]laintiffs exposed themselves to by participating in the Mardi Gras celebration." The City's decision to switch its tactical plan "did not place [the plaintiffs] in any worse position than they would have been in had the police not come up with any operational plan whatsoever." (Pg. 641.)

The Sinclair Court notes (at pg. 683) that "(o)nly one court, the Seventh Circuit, has held that the state-created danger need not be particular to a known plaintiff. In Reed v. Gardner, officers detained a sober driver, allowing his drunk passenger to take the wheel instead. 986 F.2nd 1122, 1123-1124 (7th Cir. 1993). The drunk driver soon caused an accident farther down the highway. Id. The Seventh Circuit held that the state-created danger doctrine could apply because 'the other motorists' in the area were 'worse off with a drunk driver heading toward them than a sober one.' Id. at 1125, 1127. At the same time, the Reed court reasoned that '[t]he dangers presented by drunk drivers are familiar and specific; in addition, the immediate threat of harm has a limited range and duration." Id. at 1127."

Ultimately, the Ninth Circuit in Sinclair held "that the alleged dangers in CHOP were of unchecked lawlessness and rampant crime affecting everyone" (pg. 684), and thus were not sufficiently particularized to warrant the application of the Danger Doctrine.

> In Sinclair, the City Seattle, on June 8, 2020, following the murder of George Floyd in Minneapolis, as a confrontation between the police and demonstrators escalated, the City withdrew all police officers from the Seattle Police Department's East Precinct building, which served the Capitol Hill neighborhood. Protesters used barricades left behind by the Seattle Police Department to block traffic and seized a roughly sixteen-block area of Capitol Hill, including Cal Anderson Park. They then declared it to be autonomous from City governance, calling it the "CHOP zone." Plaintiff's son went into this area and was murdered by a protestor as a result. Sinclair sued the City and others pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The Ninth Circuit eventually held that the danger created by the City in allowing the formation of the CHOP zone was not sufficiently particularized as to plaintiff's son to allow for the use of the Danger Doctrine to establish civil liability.

2. The injury he suffered as a result was foreseeable; and

3. The officers were deliberately indifferent to the known danger. (Martinez v. City of Clovis, supra, at p. 1271; see also Hernandez v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F.3rd 1125, 1133. See also Sinclair v. City of Seattle (2023) 61 F.4th 674, 680.)

"Deliberate indifference is 'a stringent standard of fault (i.e., 'higher than gross negligence'), requiring proof that a municipal actor disregarded a known or obvious consequence of his action.'" (Murguia v. Langdon, supra, quoting Patel v. Kent School District, supra, at p. 974, and citing Bryan Cnty v. Brown (1997) 520 U.S. 397, 410 [117 S.Ct. 1382; 137 L.Ed.2nd 626.)

"'For a defendant to act with deliberate indifference, he must "recognize[] the unreasonable risk and actually intend[] to expose the plaintiff to such risks without regard to the consequences to the plaintiff."'" (Murguia v. Langdon, supra, quoting Herrera v. L.A. Unified Sch. Dist. (9th Cir. 2021) 18 F.4th 1156, 1158.)

Additional Case Law:

The plaintiff raised a triable issue of fact as to whether an officer placed the plaintiff in danger by arresting the driver of the car plaintiff was riding in, impounding the car, and leaving her alone in a high-crime area at 2:30 a.m. (Wood v. Ostrander (9th Cir. 1989) 879 F.2nd 583, 589-590.)

Officers were held to have increased the risk of harm to a gravely-ill individual by cancelling a 911 call and locking him in his home where it would be impossible for anyone to provide him with emergency care. (Penilla v. City of Huntington Park (9th Cir. 1997) 115 F.3rd 707, 710.)

Officers increased the risk of harm to a severely intoxicated woman who was struggling to walk home with the assistance of her husband when the officers detained the plaintiff, let her husband leave, then sent the plaintiff to walk home unescorted in near-freezing conditions that resulted in hypothermia and brain damage. (Kneipp v. Tedder (3rd Cir. 1996) 95 F.3rd 1199, 1208-1209.)

An officer "affirmatively created a danger to [the plaintiff] she otherwise would not have faced" by informing her assailant of the accusations her family had made against him before they "had the opportunity to protect themselves from his violent response to the news . . . [thus] creat[ing] 'an opportunity for [him] to assault [the plaintiff] that otherwise would not have existed'" (Kennedy v. Ridgefield City (9th Cir. 2006) 439 F.3rd 1055, 1063.)

> "(A)lthough the state's failure to protect an individual against private violence does not generally violate the guarantee of due process, it can where the state action 'affirmatively place[s] the plaintiff in a position of danger,' that is, where state action creates or exposes an individual to a danger which he or she would not have otherwise faced." (Id., at p. 1061.)

Where plaintiff/nurse was employed at a custodial institution for young male offenders and was raped by an inmate, the Ninth Circuit reversed the trial court's dismissal of plaintiff's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 lawsuit. Plaintiff alleged that defendant correctional officers violated her constitutional rights by intentionally placing her in a position of known danger; i.e., in an unguarded proximity with an inmate whose record defendants' knew included attacks on women. Defendants employed plaintiff in the institution's medical clinic, leading her to believe that she would not be required to work alone with violent sex offenders. The Ninth Circuit reversed the judgment of the district court because plaintiff being in custody (as was argued by the defendants) was not a prerequisite to the "danger creation" basis for a § 1983 claim. Defendants affirmatively created the dangerous situation. (L.W. v. Grubbs (9th Cir. 1992) 974 F.2nd 119.)

In a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil action, political rally attendees sufficiently alleged that police officers were liable for a due process violation pursuant to the state-created danger theory of liability because they asserted that the officers placed them in a more dangerous position than the one in which they found themselves when the officers actively prevented them from leaving the rally except from a single exit, which sent them into a crowd of violent protestors. The attendees also sufficiently asserted that the danger from the protestors was actual and particularized since the officers had witnessed violence against attendees during the rally and there were prior reports of protestors attacking people at the rally, and thus, the attendees also adequately alleged that the officers were not entitled to qualified immunity as they acted with deliberate indifference to a known danger. (Hernandez v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F.3rd 1125.)

Under the state-created "danger doctrine," it was held that police officers violated the constitutional right to due process of a victim of domestic violence when they remarked positively about the alleged abuser's family while simultaneously ordering other officers not to arrest the abuser despite the presence of probable cause to arrest because they acted with deliberate indifference to the risk of future abuse when they ignored the risk of the abuser's violent tendencies. Nonetheless, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 because at the time of these events, a reasonable officer would not have known that such conduct violated the due process rights of the domestic violence victim. (Martinez v. City of Clovis (9th Cir. 2019) 943 F.3rd 1260, 1271-1277.)

> In a followup to above, another officer; Officer Channon High, who worked in the City of Clovis Police Department's records section, also had a number of contacts with the victim's abuser, Officer Pennington. In so doing, Officer High contradicted the victim's assertions to Officer Pennington that she wasn't reporting the abuse to anyone at the Clovis Police Department, resulting in Pennington inflicting more abuse on the victim. Upon Officer High's assertion that she too was entitled to qualified immunity, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal agreed despite the fact that "Officer High's affirmative conduct placed Ms. Martinez in actual, foreseeable danger," and that her actions were "deliberately indifferent to a known or obvious risk," thus triggering the "danger doctrine." (Martinez v. High (2024) 91 F.4th 1022.)

The Court applied the state-created danger exception in situations where an officer abandoned the plaintiff in a dangerous situation, separated the plaintiff from a third-party who may have offered assistance, or prevented other individuals from rendering assistance to the plaintiff. See Wood v. Ostrander, 879 F.2nd 583, 589-90 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that the plaintiff raised a triable issue of fact as to whether an officer placed the plaintiff in danger by arresting the driver of the car plaintiff was riding in, impounding the car, and leaving her alone in a high-crime area at 2:30 a.m.); Penilla (v. City of Huntington Park (9th Cir. 1997))

115 F.3rd (707) at 710 (holding that officers increased the risk of harm to a gravely-ill individual by cancelling a 911 call and locking him in his home where it would be impossible for anyone to provide him with emergency care); Kneipp v. Tedder, 95 F.3rd 1199, 1208-09 (3rd Cir. 1996) (holding that officers increased the risk of harm to a severely intoxicated woman who was struggling to walk home with the assistance of her husband when the officers detained the plaintiff, let her husband leave, then sent the plaintiff to walk home unescorted in near-freezing conditions that resulted in hypothermia and brain damage). Under this case law, if (officers) Lewis and Cerda had left the ten-month-old twins alone with (civil defendant) Langdon in her dangerous and unstable condition, such conduct would almost certainly have constituted affirmative action enhancing a risk of physical harm to the twins. (Murguia v. Langdon (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 1096, 1112-1114.)

The plaintiff, Desiree Martinez, sued Channon High, a City of Clovis police officer, under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleging that Officer High violated her due process rights by disclosing her confidential domestic violence report to her abuser, Kyle Pennington, who was also a Clovis police officer. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the district court's grant of qualified immunity to Officer High. The Court held that while Officer High did in fact violate Ms. Martinez's due process rights under the state-created danger doctrine by disclosing her confidential domestic violence report to Mr. Pennington, the right was not clearly established at the time of the violation. The Court explained that state actors (e.g., police officers) are generally not liable for failing to prevent the acts of private parties, but an exception applies where the state affirmatively places the plaintiff in danger by acting with deliberate indifference to a known or obvious danger. In this case, Officer High's disclosure of Ms. Martinez's confidential report to Pennington, whom the officer knew was an alleged abuser, placed Ms. Martinez in actual, foreseeable danger. However, it was not clearly established in 2013 that Officer High's actions violated Ms. Martinez's substantive due process rights. The court clarified that going forward, however, an officer would be liable under the state-created danger doctrine when the officer discloses a victim's confidential report to a violent perpetrator in a manner that increases the risk of retaliation against the victim. (Martinez v. High (9th Cir. 2019) 943 F.3rd 1260.)

Cases where Danger Doctrine held not to apply:

In response to growing violence at a Mardi Gras festival, the City of Seattle altered its crowd control plan for riot officers monitoring the event from one focused on confronting problematic behavior to one in which officers would remain on the periphery of the crowd. The assistant police chief in charge ordered the change because he "determined that ordering police officers to enter into the crowd, or any attempts by the police to disperse it would incite greater panic and violence, making the situation worse." Members of the crowd who were then assaulted by rogue revelers brought a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action against the City. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal held that the City had not engaged in affirmative conduct that "enhanced the dangers the . . . [p]laintiffs exposed themselves to by participating in the Mardi Gras celebration." The City's decision to switch its tactical plan "did not place [the plaintiffs] in any worse position than they would have been in had the police not come up with any operational plan whatsoever." (Johnson v. City of Seattle (9th Cir. 2007) 474 F.3rd 634.)

Deprivation of Liberty Cases:

A detention pursuant to a valid warrant but in the face of repeated protests of innocence, "after the lapse of a certain amount of time," was held to have deprived the accused of his liberty without due process of law, a Fifth or Fourteenth Amendment violation. A wrongful detention can ripen into a due process violation, but it is the plaintiff's burden to show that "it was or should have been known [by the defendant] that the [plaintiff] was entitled to release." (Gant v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2014) 772 F.3rd 608, 619-623.)

A detainee's habeas petition challenging his detention at Guantanamo Bay, arguing that his "due process" rights were violated by being detained indefinitely, was properly denied because the President has the authority to detain him under Authorization for Use of Military Force and National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2012 in that the government demonstrated that detainee "substantially supported" Al Qaeda and its associated forces. Per the Court: "the Due Process Clause may not be invoked by aliens without property or presence in the sovereign territory of the United States." (Abdulsalam Ali Abdulrahman Al Hela v. Trump (D.C. Cir. 2020) 972 F.3rd 120.)

Deprivation of Property Cases:

It is a procedural due process (Fourteenth Amendment) requirement that when practical, a pre-seizure court hearing must be provided to the owner of the property. (Mathews v. Eldridge (1979) 424 U.S. 319 [96 S.Ct. 893; 47 L.Ed.2nd 18]; see also Yagman v. Garcetti (9th Cir. 2017) 852 F.3rd 859, 864; and Shinault v. Hawks (9th Cir. 2015) 782 F.3rd 1053, 1057; Recchia

v. City of Los Angeles Department of Animal Services (9th Cir. 2018) 889 F.3rd 553, 561-562.)

> However, "where exigent or emergency circumstances justify a warrantless seizure there will be no need to have a hearing before a seizure. See United States v. James Daniel Good Real Prop., 510 U.S. 43, 62, 114 S.Ct. 492, 126 L.Ed.2nd 490 (1993) ('Unless exigent circumstances are present, the Due Process Clause requires the Government to afford notice and a meaningful opportunity to be heard before seizing real property subject to civil forfeiture.')" (Recchia v. City of Los Angeles Department of Animal Services, supra, at p. 561, fn. 6.)

The "Mathews factors" that must be considered in determining the need for such a pre-seizure hearing are:

> (1) The private interest affected;
>
> (2) The risk of erroneous deprivation through the procedures used, and the value of additional procedural safeguards; and
>
> (3) The government's interest, including the burdens of additional procedural requirements.
>
> (Mathews v. Eldridge, supra, at p. 335; Recchia v. City of Los Angeles Department of Animal Services, supra, at pp. 561-562.)

> In Recchia, which involved the seizure of some twenty birds (18 pigeons, a crow and a seagull) under authority of P.C. § 597.1, most of which were sick and/or injured, from a homeless person who kept the birds in cardboard boxes while living on the street, the Court ruled that (1) a pet owner's interest in keeping his pets is strong, (2) the risk of an erroneous deprivation by animal welfare officers (trained in making such a decision) is low and there is no real value in imposing additional procedural safeguards, and (3) the governmental interest in seizing such birds without a prior court hearing is strong: "(T)here is a strong general governmental interest in being able to seize animals that may be in imminent danger of harm due to their living conditions, may carry pathogens harmful to humans or other animals, or may otherwise threaten public safety without first needing to have a hearing on the subject." (Ibid.)

> As to factor #3, see Hodel v. Va. Surface Mining & Reclamation Ass'n (1981) 452 U.S. 264, 300 [101 S.Ct. 2352; 69 L.Ed.2nd 1]: "Protection of the health and safety of the public is a paramount governmental interest which justifies summary administrative action."

A continued official retention of property legal to possess with no further criminal action pending violates the owner's due process rights. (Smith v. Superior Court* (San Francisco Police Department) (2018) 28 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1, 4; citing City of Garden Grove v. Superior Court* [Kha] (2007) 157 Cal.App.4th 355, 387.)

Fourteenth Amendment:

Seizure of Property:

Seizures also may also constitute a Fourteenth Amendment "due process" violation, at least when there is a "significant taking of property by the State." (Fuentes v. Shevin (1972) 407 U.S. 67, 86 [92 S.Ct. 1983; 32 L.Ed.2nd 556]; Lavan v. City of Los Angeles, supra, at p. 1031-1033.) To find a due process violation, a court must determine:

(1) Whether the asserted individual interests are encompassed within the Fourteenth Amendment's protection of "life, liberty or property," and is so;

(2) What procedures constitute "due process of law."

(Lavan v. City of Los Angeles, supra, at p. 1031.)

Parent-Child Relationship Cases:

Rule: A potential civil cause of action might lie where plaintiffs assert a claim for "civil rights violations," alleging a violation of the plaintiff's "constitutionally protected liberty interest under the Fourteenth Amendment in the companionship and society of the parent/child relationship without governmental interference;" i.e., a violation of familial rights. (See Lee v. County. of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F.3rd 668, 685-686.)

> "For more than a century, the Supreme Court has recognized parental constitutional rights to the care, custody, and control of minor children. See, e.g., Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399, 43 S. Ct. 625, 67 L. Ed. 1042 (1923) (describing the right to 'establish a home and bring up children' as among the 'privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men'); Troxel v. Granville, 530 U.S. 57, 65-

66, 120 S. Ct. 2054, 147 L. Ed. 2d 49 (2000) (plurality opinion); Lassiter v. Dep't of Soc. Servs. of Durham Cnty., 452 U.S. 18, 27, 101 S. Ct. 2153, 68 L. Ed. 2d 640 (1981); see also Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 617-19, 104 S. Ct. 3244, 82 L. Ed. 2d 462 (1984)." (Sinclair v. City of Seattle (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 674, 678; noting, however, at pg. 679, "that the Supreme Court has not decided whether parental rights to the companionship of a child retains its constitutional dimension after the child reaches the age of majority."

> The Court further noted, however, that the Ninth Circuit is an "outlier" among the other federal circuits, having "implicitly" recognized a 14th Amendment, due process, right for "parents (to) maintain a constitutionally protected liberty interest in the companionship of their adult children." (Ibid, citing Strandberg v. City of Helena (9th Cir. 1986) 791 F.2nd 744, 748, fn.1; and Moreland v. Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department (9th Cir. 1998) 159 F.3rd 365, 371. See also concurring opinion in Sinclair, at pg. 685.)
>
> Of the circuits that have expressly considered the question, only the Tenth Circuit has held that the right extends to adult children. (Sinclair v. City of Seattle, supra, at p. 679; citing Trujillo v. Board of County Commissioners (10th Cir. 1985) 768 F.2nd 1186, 1188-1189; which relied mainly on the First Amendment right to intimate association instead of the Fourteenth Amendment, to define the scope of that right.)

"[T]he custody, care and nurture of the child reside first in the parents, whose primary function and freedom include preparation for obligations the state can neither supply nor hinder." (Prince v. Massachusetts (1944) 321 U.S. 158, 166 [64 S.Ct. 438; 88 L.Ed. 645].)

"The standard for analyzing a (42 U.S.C.) § 1983 claim for interference with the right to familial association depends on the context in which the case arises. See Brittain v. Hansen, 451 F.3rd 982, 989-90 (9th Cir. 2006) (distinguishing cases where the state terminated parental rights due to allegations of child abuse from cases where a state actor intervened in a child custody dispute). When the case involves the seizure of children from their parents based on suspicions of danger to the child, '[o]fficials may not remove children from their parents without a court order unless they have "information at the time of the seizure that establishes reasonable cause to believe that the child is in imminent danger of serious bodily injury."' Keates (v. Koile (9th Cir. 2018)) 883 F.3rd (1228) at p. 1236. (quoting Rogers v. Cnty. of San Joaquin, 487 F.3rd 1288, 1294 (9th Cir. 2007)). When the case involves the intervention of a state officer in an ongoing custody dispute, the parent 'must show both a deprivation of [his] liberty and conscience shocking behavior by the government.' Brittain, 451 F.3d at 991." (Murguia v. Langdon (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 1096, 1118.)

The contours of this right are not well-established. (See Kaur *v. City of Lodi (E.D. Cal. 2017) 263 F. Supp. 3rd 947, 973.) However, plaintiffs must show that Defendants' "actions and policies constituted an 'unwarranted interference' with [Plaintiffs'] right to familial association." (Lee v. County of Los Angeles, supra, at p. 686.)

"'[A] parent has a constitutionally protected liberty interest under the Fourteenth Amendment in the companionship and society of his or her child and . . . a "child's interest in her relationship with a parent is sufficiently weighty by itself to constitute a cognizable liberty interest."'" (Ochoa v. City of Mesa (9th Cir. 2022) 26 F.4th 1050, 1056, quoting Curnow ex rel. Curnow v. Ridgecrest Police (9th Cir. 1991) 952 F.2nd 321, 325, which in turn quotes Smith v. City of Fontana (9th Cir. 1987) 818 F.2nd 1411, 1419.)

Additionally, the Defendant's alleged harmful conduct "must shock the conscience or offend the community's sense of fair play and decency." (Crosby v. Wellpath, Inc. (N.D. Cal. 2021) 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 135260.)

See also Ochoa v. City of Mesa (9th Cir. 2022) 26 F.4th 1050, at p. 1056: "A claim asserting that police officers violated these Fourteenth Amendment rights during a police shooting must show that the officers' conduct 'shocks the conscience.'" (Quoting Porter v. Osborn (9th Cir. 2008) 546 F.3rd 1131, 1137.)

"Shocking the conscience," by the way, has been defined elsewhere as actions that are those taken with (1) "deliberate indifference" or (2) a "purpose to harm . . . unrelated to legitimate law enforcement objectives." (See A. D. v. State of California Highway Patrol (9th Cir. 2013) 712 F.3rd 446, 453.)

> "Police action sufficiently shocks the conscience, and therefore violates substantive due process, if it is taken with either '(1) deliberate indifference or (2) a purpose to harm[,] unrelated to legitimate law enforcement objectives.'" (Nehad v. Browder (9th Cir. 2019) 929 F.3rd 1125, 1139, quoting A.D. v. California Highway Patrol (9th Cir. 2013) 712 F.3d 446, 453.)

Note that no court, except the Ninth Circuit, has recognized a substantive due process right to the companionship of an adult child. (See Sinclair v. City of Seattle (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 674, 685; concurring opinion.)

Case Law:

In a case where the decedent's children, their mother, and the decedent's mother, sued the defendant law enforcement officers in federal court for (1) violating the Fourteenth Amendment under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 by wrongfully depriving the plaintiffs of the decedent's companionship and familial association and (2) violated Arizona law, A.R.S. § 12-611, by wrongfully killing the decedent, it was held that the federal district court properly granted summary judgment to the police officers and the municipalities they worked. It was held that the district court correctly chose to apply the "purpose-to-harm" test. The record reflected that the officers' actions reflected that in their attempts to satisfy legitimate law enforcement objectives— apprehension of an armed, dangerous suspect and protection of the safety of the officers, the home's inhabitants, and the public—the officers did not have time to deliberate before firing. Therefore, the officers' conduct did not violate the plaintiff relatives' Fourteenth Amendment rights. (Ochoa v. City of Mesa (9th Cir. 2022) 26 F.4th 1050.)

"(T)he purpose-to-harm test applies if the situation at issue 'escalate[d] so quickly that the officer [had to] make a snap judgment.' . . . This test requires 'a more demanding showing that [the officers] acted with a purpose to harm [the decedent] for reasons unrelated to legitimate law enforcement objectives.'" (Id., at p. 1056; quoting Porter v. Osborn (9th Cir. 2008) 546 F.3rd 1131, 1137.)

"Illegitimate objectives include 'when the officer "had any ulterior motives for using force against" the suspect, such as "to bully a suspect or 'get even,'"' or when an officer uses force against a clearly harmless or subdued suspect.'" (Ibid., quoting Gonzalez v. City of Anaheim (9th Cir. 2014) 747 F.3rd 789, 798.)

> The Court in Ochoa also recognized, however, that "(w)hether evaluated under the deliberate-indifference test or the purpose-to-harm test, the Fourteenth Amendment 'shocks the conscience' standard is not the standard that typically comes to mind in police shooting cases. Another standard—the standard applicable to Fourth Amendment excessive-force claims—is more familiar in this context. That standard asks whether the officers' conduct was 'objectively unreasonable.'" (Ibid., citing Graham v. Connor (1989) 490 U.S. 386, 397 [109 S.Ct. 1865, 104 L.Ed. 2nd 443].)

"But the Fourteenth Amendment standard applicable to a claim by a relative demands more of such a plaintiff than a Fourth Amendment claim by the victim of an officer's actions. Moreland v. Las Vegas Metro. Police Dep't., 159 F.3rd 365, 371 n.4 (9th Cir. 1998), as amended (Nov. 24, 1998). The Supreme Court has held that 'Fourth Amendment rights are personal rights which . . . may not be vicariously asserted.' Plumhoff v. Rickard, 572 U.S. 765, 778, 134 S.Ct. 2012, 188 L.Ed.2nd 1056 (2014) (omission in original) (quoting Aldermn v. United States, 394 U.S. 165, 174, 89 S.Ct. 961, 22 L.Ed.2nd 176 (1969)). The plaintiffs here cannot sidestep this prohibition and assert Ochoa's Fourth Amendment rights through a Fourteenth Amendment claim. See Byrd, 137 F.3rd at 1134. Instead, they must show more: not just that the officers' actions were objectively unreasonable and thus violated Ochoa's Fourth Amendment rights, but that the officers' actions 'shock[ed] the conscience' and thus violated the plaintiff' Fourteenth Amendment rights. See Porter (v. Osborn (9th Cir. 2008)) 546 F.3rd (1131) at 1137." (Id., at pp. 1056-1057.)

The Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court's dismissal for failure to state a claim of an action brought against the City of Seattle pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 by Donnitta Sinclair, whose nineteen-year-old son was shot to death in 2020 in the Capitol Hill Occupied Protest ("CHOP") zone, an area that the Seattle Police Department and the Mayor of Seattle had surrendered to protestors. Sinclair alleged that the City's actions and failures to act regarding CHOP created a foreseeable danger for her son, that the City was deliberately indifferent to that danger, and that as a result, the City was liable for violating her Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process right to the companionship of her adult son. The Court held that, unlike almost every other circuit, this circuit recognized Sinclair's substantive due process right to the companionship of her adult son. And Sinclair properly alleged that the City acted with deliberate indifference to the danger it helped create, which caused her son's death. It was self-evident that the Seattle Police Department's wholesale abandonment of its East Precinct building, combined with Mayor Durkan's promotion of CHOP's supposedly festival-like atmosphere, would create a toxic brew of criminality that would endanger City residents. But the danger to which the City contributed was not particularized to Sinclair or her son, or differentiated from the generalized dangers posed by crime, as the Ninth Circuit's precedent required. Because the City's actions were not directed toward Sinclair's son and did not otherwise expose him to a specific risk, the connection between Sinclair's alleged injuries and the City's affirmative actions was too remote to support a § 1983 claim. One concurring Justice stated that this circuit has created a split with other circuits by recognizing a substantive due process right to the companionship of one's adult children. In establishing the right on which Sinclair's claim depended, this circuit's precedent failed to engage in the proper analysis required by Washington v. Glucksberg (1997) 521 U.S. 702. [117 S.Ct. 2302; 138 L.Ed.2nd 772]. Had the Court done so, it should have reached the conclusion that sister circuits already have; i.e. there being no constitutional right to recover for the loss of Sinclair's companionship with her adult son. (Sinclair v. City of Seattle (9th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 674.)

Case law Implicating the Custody of a Child:

"(F)amilies have a 'well-elaborated constitutional right to live together without governmental interference.'" (Demaree v. Pederson (9th Cir. 2018) 887 F.3rd 870, 873; citing Wallis v. Spencer (9th Cir. 2000) 202 F.3rd 1126, 1136.)

"(U)nder the Fourth Amendment, government officials are ordinarily required to obtain prior judicial authorization before removing a child from the custody of her parent." (Demaree v. Pederson, supra, at p. 878; citing Kirkpatrick v. County of Washoe (9th Cir. 2016) 843 F.3rd 784, 780.)

However: "In an emergency, government officials may take a child out of her home and away from her parents without a court order 'when officials have reasonable cause to believe that the child is likely to experience serious bodily harm in the time that would be required to obtain a warrant.' Kirkpatrick, 843 F.3rd at 790 (original italics and internal quotation marks omitted). This requirement "balance[s], on the one hand, the need to protect children from abuse and neglect and, on the other, the preservation of the essential privacy and liberty interests that families are guaranteed under both the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments of our Constitution.' Rogers v. County. of San Joaquin, 487 F.3rd 1288, 1297 (9th Cir. 2007)." (Demaree v. Pederson, supra.)

The state's decision to take custody of a child implicates the constitutional rights of the parent and the child under the Fourteenth (Due Process) and Fourth Amendments, respectively. (Mabe v. San Bernardino County, Department of Public Social Services (9th Cir. 2001) 237 F.3rd 1101, 1106.)

Where doctors recommended immediate medical care (spinal tap and infusion of antibiotics) to determine and treat possible meningitis in a 5-week-old infant, a pre-hearing taking of the child from an uncooperative parent, and temporary detention of that irate parent, is lawful as a "special needs" taking. (Mueller v. Auker (9th Cir. 2012) 700 F.3rd 1180, 1185-1190; adopting the factual description as provided at (9th Cir. 2009) 576 F.3rd 979, 982-986; and finding that the officer/civil defendant was entitled to qualified immunity in that the issue is an unsettled one.)

However, separating father and son for a limited amount of time (i.e., 40 minutes), they both being detained, is not sufficient to constitute a Fourteenth Amendment due process "fundamental liberty interest" violation. (Sandoval v. Las Vegas Metro. Police Dep't. (9th Cir. 2014) 756 F.3rd 1154, 1167.)

> It was also noted that shooting the family dog, "albeit sad and unfortunate, does not fall within the ambit of deprivation of a familial relationship." (Ibid.)

Where social workers took a two-day-old child into protective custody from a hospital without prior judicial authorization due to the mother's addiction to methamphetamine, the father's Fourteenth Amendment claim failed because he did not have a constitutionally recognized liberty interest in his relationship with the child since, at the time, no one was confident about whether he was the biological father. There was evidence, however, to support a finding that the child's Fourth Amendment had in fact been violated. A reasonable juror could have found that the social workers could not have reasonably believed that the child would likely experience bodily harm during the time it would have taken to obtain a warrant since the child would have very likely remained in the hospital. However, because this issue was not well-settled in the law, the social workers were entitled to qualified immunity on that issue. (Kirkpatrick v. County of Washoe (9th Cir. 2016) 843 F.3rd 784, 788-793.)

> While, however, the parents' right to the custody of their children without governmental interference is to be measured under the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause, the child's right not to be taken from his or her parents is a Fourth Amendment seizure issue. (Id., at pp. 788-789.)

There was a "genuine issue of material fact" regarding whether the County maintained a policy of unconstitutionally seizing children in non-exigent circumstances, and summary judgment on that issue was held to be improperly granted. The case was remanded for consideration of that issue under the principles of Monell v. Dep't. of Soc. Servs. of N.Y. (1978) 436 U.S. 658, 691 [98 S.Ct. 2018; 56 L.Ed.2nd 611].

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed in part the district court's summary judgment ruling in favor of the parents, finding that a county violated the parents' Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process rights when it removed their children from their family home under no more than a "suspicion" of child abuse, and subjected the children to invasive medical examinations, including a gynecological and rectal exam, without the parents' knowledge or consent or court order where the examinations were at least partly investigatory and where there was no emergency medical situation or reasonable concern that material physical evidence might dissipate. (Mann v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2018) 907 F.3rd 1154, 1160-1164.)

> The county in Mann also violated the children's Fourth Amendment rights by failing to obtain a warrant or to provide constitutional safeguards before subjecting the children to the examinations. (Id., at pp. 1164-1167.)
>
> "The right to family association includes the right of parents to make important medical decisions for their children, and of children to have those decisions made by their parents rather than the state." (Id., at p. 1161; quoting Wallis v. Spencer (9th Cir. 2000) 202 F.3rd 1126, 1141; see also Parham v. J.R. (1979) 442 U.S. 584, 602 [99 S.Ct. 2493; 61 L.Ed.2nd 101].)

See also Parkes v. County of San Diego (S.D. Cal. 2004) 345 F.Supp. 2nd 1071, 1091-1095, concluding that the County's policy of failing to notify or obtain consent from the children's parents to conduct the Polinsky Medical Center examinations violated the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments; Reynolds v. County of San Diego (S.D. Cal. 2016) 224 F.Supp.3rd 1034, 1062-1069, concluding that the County's policy of excluding parents from the Polinsky medical examinations was unconstitutional; and Swartwood v. County of San Diego (S.D. Cal. 2014) 84 F.Supp.3rd 1093, 1016-1124, where San Diego county adopted revised procedures for notification to parents and guardians of their right to be present at their child's Polinsky Center physical exams, allowing for parental presence at examinations upon request, adopting procedures and modifying the Polinsky Children's Center's facilities to allow for a parent's observations of such exams, and modifying the San Diego County Health and Human Services Agency's requests to the Juvenile Court for child-specific orders authorizing exams and treatment of children in those cases where the parents refuse to consent to the examinations.

Clark County (Nevada) was properly granted summary judgment on plaintiffs' claim alleging that the county violated their Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights when the department of family services seized their children, including a deceased infant, because plaintiffs failed to present a genuine dispute that the infant was wrongfully removed. The county was properly granted summary judgment on plaintiffs' due process claim because plaintiff failed to point to any department practice or policy that violated the infant's due process rights and failed to prove that the department acted with deliberate indifference. Neither the special relationship nor the state-created danger exception applied to overcome the hurdle that the Due Process Clause did not confer an affirmative right to governmental aid or impose a duty on the state to protect individuals from third parties. (Momox-Caselis v. Donohue (9th Cir. 2021) 987 F.3rd 835.)

Where plaintiff sued under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleging that defendant, a police department employee, deceived the family court when she assisted a non-custodial parent in obtaining a temporary restraining order that prevented plaintiff, the sole custodial parent, from having contact with her daughter for 21 days, dismissal of the suit based on qualified immunity was not warranted. In particular, such dismissal was not warranted because plaintiff's constitutional right to "familial association" was clearly established at the time of the underlying actions such that a reasonable official would have understood that defendant's actions violated the U.S. Constitution; i.e., the "due process" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. (David v. Kaulukukui (9th Cir. 2022) 38 F.4th 792.)

> An officer's interference with a non-custodial parent's visitation rights was held not to have violated the parent's constitutional rights. In the case, the father had sole legal custody of the child, and the mother (plaintiff) had visitation rights governed by a visitation schedule. The father attempted to take the child on vacation at a time when the mother believed she was entitled to a week of visitation. The father arrived at the mother's house with a police officer. The officer believed the father was entitled under the visitation schedule to take the child that week and threatened to arrest the mother if she did not comply. The mother allowed the child to leave with the father, but later brought a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action against the officer for violating her right to familial association. The Court held that no constitutional violation occurred. (Brittain v. Hansen (9th Cir. 2006) 451 F.3rd 982, 985-987, 989-990, 996.)

Note: See "Warrantless Seizure of a Child for Protective Custody Purposes," under "Warrantless Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 9), below.

Statutory Vagueness as a Due Process Issue:

"It has been recognized for over 80 years that due process requires inter alia some level of definiteness in criminal statutes. [Citation.] Today it is established that due process requires a statute to be definite enough to provide (1) a standard of conduct for those whose activities are proscribed and (2) a standard for police enforcement and for ascertainment of guilt. [Citations.]" (People v. Ballard (1988) 203 Cal.App.3rd 311, 315; quoting Burg v. Municipal Court (1983) 35 Cal.3rd 257, 269; and rejecting the argument that P.C. § 273.5 (spousal abuse) is void for vagueness.)

> "The fundamental policy behind the constitutional prohibition of vaguely worded criminal statutes was stated in Lanzetta v. New Jersey (1939) 306 U.S. 451, at page 453 . . .: 'No one may be required at peril of life, liberty or property to speculate as to the meaning of penal statutes. All are entitled to be informed as to what the State commands or forbids.' [The California Supreme] court noted a further purpose of the prohibition in People v. McCaughan (1957) 49 Cal.2d 409, 414 . . ., where Justice Traynor stated, 'A statute must be definite enough to provide a standard of conduct for those whose activities are proscribed as well as a standard for the ascertainment of guilt by the courts called upon to apply it.' [Italics omitted.] The generally accepted criterion is whether the terms of the challenged statute are 'so vague that [people] of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application.' [Citation.] [Citation.]"

(People v. Ballard, supra, at p. 315; citing People v. Smith (1984) 35 Cal.3rd 798, 809.)

Predictability of the Consequences of a Charged Offense:

"[A]lthough clarity at the requisite level may be supplied by judicial gloss on an otherwise uncertain statute, [citations], due process bars courts from applying a novel construction of a criminal statute to conduct that neither the statute nor any prior judicial decision has fairly disclosed to be within its scope." (People v. Blakeley (2000) 23 Cal.4th 82, 91.) "Courts violate constitutional due process guarantees (U.S. Const., 5th and 14th Amends.; Cal. Const., art. I, § 7) when they impose unexpected criminal penalties by construing existing laws in a manner that the accused could not have foreseen at the time of the alleged criminal conduct." (Citing United States v. Lanier (1997) 520 U.S. 259, 266–267 [137 L.Ed.2nd 432; 117 S.Ct. 1219]. See People v. Reyes (2020) 56 Cal.App.5th 972, 987, fn. 9.)

Pre-Trial Detainee Jail Condition Cases:

A pretrial detainee's constitutional claims arise from the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause of U.S. Constitution, and not the Eighth Amendment's Cruel and Unusual Punishment protections. Plaintiff in a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 federal lawsuit presented evidence that the County, tasked with supervising high-observation housing for mentally ill women, had a policy of shackling the women to steel tables in the middle of an indoor recreation room as their sole form of recreation, and that jail officials routinely left detainees who resisted body searches naked and chained to their cell doors for hours at a time without access to food, water, or a toilet. The jail's daily logs showed that during plaintiff's pretrial detention, she was deprived of meals, showers, and recreation due, in part, to overcrowding and understaffing at detention facility. Ninth Circuit ruled that a magistrate judge erred in giving a jury instruction requiring deference to prison officials in a pretrial detainee's conditions of confinement claims because the deference instruction is to be given only when there was evidence that the treatment to which the detainee objected was provided pursuant to a security-based policy. It was also error to give a jury instructions requiring deference to prison officials on the detainee's excessive search claim because there was no justification for the treatment and the search practice was an unnecessary, unjustified, and exaggerated response to jail officials' need for prison security. The prison officials were not entitled to deference for their practice of shackling mentally ill inmates without clothing, food, water, or toilet access because they could offer no justification for the conduct. (Shorter v. Baca (9th Cir. 2018) 895 F.3rd 1176.)

A pretrial detainee is protected by the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause. Under the Due Process Clause, detainees have a right against jail conditions or restrictions that amount to punishment. This standard differs significantly from the standard relevant to convicted prisoners, who may be subject to punishment so long as it does not violate the Eighth Amendment's bar against cruel and unusual punishment. In an action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, defendant sheriff was entitled to summary judgment on a Fourteenth Amendment claim alleging that the sheriff failed to provide plaintiff with a bed during a three-and-a-half day jail stay because the lockdown that resulted in plaintiff's delayed transfer to a permanent housing was within the scope of the sheriff department's authority to maintain security of its facilities and there was no basis to conclude that department's response to the inmate disturbances constituted an unnecessary or unjustified response to problems of jail security. Also, defendant sheriff was entitled to qualified immunity because collateral estoppel did not apply since the issue of sleeping on the floor due to exigent circumstances was not addressed in any of the cited cases by plaintiff. (Olivier v. Baca (9th Cir. 2019) 913 F.3rd 852, 857-861.)

A jail nurse acted as gatekeeper by serving as the screening nurse and was therefore responsible for identifying an inmate's urgent medical needs, and whether she failed to do so was properly considered under the first prong of the qualified immunity analysis. Therefore, as to her, summary judgment was not proper because the available law at the time of the incident clearly established Matthew Gordon's constitutional rights to proper medical screening to ensure that a medically appropriate protocol was initiated. Given that the County instituted two screening forms to ensure the initiation of a medically appropriate protocol, the Court remanded the case for a factual analysis of the remaining prong of the qualified immunity test. The deputy sheriff, however, was entitled to qualified immunity because the due process right to an adequate safety check for pretrial detainees was not clearly established at the time of the incident. The Court nevertheless held that pre-trial detainees do have a right to direct-view safety checks sufficient to determine whether their presentation indicates the need for medical treatment. The Court also warned that law enforcement and prison personnel should heed this warning because the recognition of this constitutional due process right will protect future detainees. It was further held that the district court properly granted summary judgment in favor of the county on the Gordon's claim for municipal liability because he did not identify any other instance in which jail personnel used the Clinical Institute Withdrawal Assessment for Alcohol protocol (as opposed to the Clinical Opiate Withdrawal Scale) for inmates withdrawing on opiate use or a low-visibility safety check resulted in the provision of inadequate medical care, and his Monell claim therefore failed. (Gordon v. County of Orange (9th Cir. 2021) 6 F.4th 961.)

Use of Coerced Testimony as a Due Process Issue: "Medina Error*:"

Defendants were charged with two counts of first-degree murder and were tried and convicted. At the trial, three prosecution witnesses, accessories to the crimes, testified under conditional immunity. Upon conviction, the trial court sentenced defendants to life in prison. Among other arguments, defendants argued that the trial court deprived them of a fair trial by using prosecution witnesses granting conditional immunity and commenting on their failure to testify. The trial Appellate court agreed in part, finding that the orders granting conditional immunity to the three principal prosecution witnesses denied defendants a fair trial. The Court found that each of these witnesses was an accomplice liable to prosecution for the murders of which defendants were convicted, and that the threat of prosecution therefor contained in the conditional immunity orders denied to defendants any effective cross-examination of the witnesses, thereby depriving them of the fundamental due process right to a fair trial. The Court also found that the use of such tainted testimony was a denial of the fundamental right to a fair trial in violation of federal constitutional due process principles and mandated reversal. (People v. Medina (1974) 41 Cal.App.3rd 438.)

> In order to offend due process, "the bargain [must be] expressly contingent on the witness sticking to a particular version [of her story]." (People v. Reyes (2008) 165 Cal.App.4th 426, 434, quoting People v. Garrison (1989) 47 Cal.3rd 746, 771.)

"'The California Supreme Court has refused to extend Medina beyond the instance in which a plea agreement expressly requires consistency between accomplice testimony and a prior statement.' (People v. Reyes, supra, 165 Cal.App.4th at p. 434.) In Garrison, the court held that 'unless the bargain is expressly contingent on the witness sticking to a particular version, the principles of Medina . . . are not violated.' (People v. Garrison, supra, 47 Cal.3rd at p. 771.) 'The court reiterated this language—with emphasis on the words "expressly contingent"—in its most recent decision on the subject. (People v. Boyer (2006) 38 Cal.4th 412, 456 . . . .)' (Reyes, at pp. 434–435.)" (People v. Fultz (2021) 69 Cal.App.5th 395, 422.)

> "A witness who testifies pursuant to a plea agreement does not give coerced testimony if the agreement requires only that the witness testify truthfully and completely and does not require that the witness testify in a particular fashion." (People v. Fultz, supra, at p. 421; no "Medina error" found, pp. 421-424.)

Even where defense counsel elicited from a prosecution witness that her immunity was conditioned on testimony consistent with her prior statement, no Medina error was found. That is because on redirect, the witness made it clear that her prior statement was the truth, that the prosecutor had asked her to testify to the truth, and that she was never asked to testify to specific facts. The California Supreme Court explained, the record suggested, at most, the witness understood she was obliged to recount her prior statement because it was the truth. The Supreme Court found the evidence insufficient to conclude that the grant of immunity required the witness to testify in accord with a prior statement regardless of its truth. (People v. Fields (1983) 35 Cal.3rd 329, 359-361.)

No Medina error was found where two witnesses were granted immunity on condition and agreement that they testify truthfully (or be subject to perjury prosecution). The agreements also recited that the witnesses had represented their testimony would be consistent with specific recorded statements made to the police. Rejecting the contention that the witnesses' testimony had been coerced to follow the prior statements, the California Supreme Court stressed that the witnesses were expressly obligated only to testify in accordance with the truth. The portions of the immunity agreements reciting expectations that the witnesses' testimony would be in accord with their prior statements reflected the witnesses' and the prosecution's understanding that those statements had been truthful. But there was no agreement requiring the witnesses to reiterate the statements regardless of their truth, and therefore the testimony had been proper. (People v. Boyer (2006) 38 Cal.4th 412, 455-457.)

Due Process in General:

The County of Los Angeles was held not to violate plaintiff's due process and privacy rights by retaining in its internal database 2014 allegations against him of child abuse which had been determined by a judge of the Los Angeles Superior Court's Juvenile Court to be unfounded. Per the Ninth Circuit, plaintiff failed to show that his inclusion in a statewide database, the Child Welfare Services Case Management System, implicated his liberty interest so as to require procedural due process where he failed to raise a triable issue of material fact that the records of his unfounded allegations in the database caused him reputational harm or that they were used by the county to alter or extinguish his rights to employment, child placement, or child visitation. Plaintiff also had not shown that the county publicly disseminated or misused his information in a manner that would have violated his constitutional right to privacy as he provided no evidence that his information had been publicly disseminated or disclosed. Finally, the district court held that the County could not be held liable under Monell v. Department of Social Services (1978) 36 U.S. 658 [98 S.Ct. 2018; 56 L.Ed.2nd 611], reasoning that no County policy or custom could be blamed for a § 1983 constitutional deprivation without a sufficient showing that such a deprivation had occurred. (Endy v. City of Los Angeles (9Th Cir. 2020) 975 F.3rd 757.)

Outrageous Government Misconduct and Due Process:

Rule:

> "A prosecution results from outrageous government conduct when the actions of law enforcement officers or informants are 'so outrageous that due process principles would absolutely bar the government from invoking judicial processes to obtain a conviction.' United States v. Russell, 411 U.S. 423 431-32, 93 S.Ct. 1637, 36 L.Ed.2nd 366 (1973). A federal court must dismiss a prosecution based on such actions. The standard for dismissal on this ground is 'extremely high.' United States v. Smith, 924 F.2nd 899, 897 (9th Cir 1991). Dismissals are 'limited to extreme cases in which the government's conduct violates fundamental fairness.' United States v. Gurolla, 333 F.3rd 944, 950 (9th Cir. 2003). An indictment can be dismissed only where the government's conduct is 'so grossly shocking and so outrageous as to violate the universal sense of justice.' United States v. Stinson, 647 F.3rd 1196, 1209 (9th Cir. 2011) (quoting United States v. Restrepo, 930 F.2nd 705, 712 (9th Cir 1991))." (United States v. Pedrin (9th Cir. 2015) 797 F.3rd 792, 795-796.)
>
> The outrageous government conduct doctrine is "an 'extremely high standard'" that is "'limited to extreme cases' in which the defendant can demonstrate that the government's conduct 'violates fundamental fairness' and is 'so grossly shocking and so outrageous as to violate the universal sense of justice.'" (United States v. Black (9th Cir. 2013) 733 F.3rd 294, 302; quoting United States v. Garza-Juarez (9th Cir. 1993) 992 F.2nd 896, 904; see also United States v. Stinson (9th Cir. 2011) 647 F.3rd 1196, 1209.)

Relevant Factors: In determining whether a defendant has proven that the government's conduct is outrageous, the Ninth Circuit has established six factors courts must consider:

> (1) Known criminal characteristics of the defendants;
>
> (2) Individualized suspicion of the defendants;
>
> (3) The government's role in creating the crime of conviction;

(4) The government's encouragement of the defendants to commit the offense conduct;

(5) The nature of the government's participation in the offense conduct; and

(6) The nature of the crime being pursued and necessity for the actions taken in light of the nature of the criminal enterprise at issue.

(United States v. Black (9th Cir. 2013) 733 F.3rd 294, 303; see also United States v. Vortman (9th Cir. 2020) 81 Fed. Appx. 470, 473-474, unpublished; and United States v. Pedrin (9th Cir. 2015) 797 F.3rd 792, 796.)

Case Law:

In United States v. Pedrin (9th Cir. 2015) 797 F.3rd 792, 795-796, it was held that there was no due process violation where defendant was the target of a "reverse sting operation" pursuant to which an undercover ATF agent suggested that defendant and others rob a drug "stash house" (i.e, a house in which drugs ae "stashed.") Defendant was convicted of conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute 40 to 50 kilograms of cocaine under 21 U.S.C. §§ 841 and 846. Defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment was properly denied because the prosecution did not result from "outrageous government conduct" since one of the co-conspirators reached out to the government, defendant readily agreed to participate in the supposed stash-house robbery, and defendant supplied plans and materials. This all provided a sufficient basis for the Government to infer that defendant had a predisposition to take part in the planned robbery.

The Pedrin Court cites a number of other cases involving the same ATF sting operation: United States v. Cortes (9th Cir. 2014) 757 F.3rd 850; United States v. Black (9th Cir. 2013) 733 F.3rd 294; United States v. Docampo (11th Cir. 2009) 573 F.3rd 1091; United States v. Paisley (11th Cir. 2006) 178 F.App'x. 995; United States v. Kindle (7th Cir. 2012) 698 F.3rd 401; United States v. Mayfield (7th Cir. 2014) 771 F.3rd 417.

Pedrin (at p. 797) further notes that "(w)hat the government learns only after the fact cannot supply the individualized suspicion that is necessary to justify the > sting if the government had little or no basis for such individualized suspicion when it was setting up the sting."

Defendant's motion for dismissal based on a claim of outrageous government misconduct was barred because defendant's actions in using a website to access child pornography were completely voluntary. The government did not threaten, coerce, or prod him to use the website. The Court's consideration of the six Black factors (see United States v. Black (9th Cir. 2013) 733 F.3rd 294, 303.) also required a finding that the government's conduct was not outrageous. A "Network Investigative Technique" (NIT) warrant obtained by the Government (taking over and operating a child porn site) did not violate the Fourth Amendment as it was issued by a neutral magistrate, backed by probable cause, and was sufficiently particular to be constitutional. While the NIT warrant violated Fed. Rules of Crim. Pro. 41(b), suppression was not warranted because the government's violation was technical, the violation did not prejudice defendant, and the government did not deliberately disregard Rule 41(b) (limiting the general territorial scope of a warrant). (United States v. Vortman (9th Cir. 2020) 81 Fed. Appx. 470; unpublished.)

Chapter 8*:

Searches and Seizures:

Rule*:

"A 'search' involves governmental infringement on 'an expectation of privacy that society is prepared to consider reasonable,' while a 'seizure' of property involves 'some meaningful interference [by the government] with an individual's possessory interests in that property.'" (United States v. Baker (9th Cir. 2023) 58 F.4th 1109, 1116; citing United States v. Jacobsen (1984) 466 U.S. 109, 113 [104 S.Ct. 1652; 80 L.Ed.2nd 85].)

"If an activity is not a search or seizure (assuming the activity does not violate some other constitutional or statutory provision), then the government enjoys a virtual carte blanche to do as it pleases. The activity is 'excluded from judicial control and the command of reasonableness.'" (Horton v. Goose Creek Independent School District (5th Cir. 1982) 693 F.2nd 524, 476; quoting from Amsterdam, Perspectives on the Fourth Amendment, 58 Minn.L.Rev. 349, 393 (1974).)

Things Subject to Search and Seizure:

- Evidence of a crime.
- Contraband.
- Instrumentalities of a crime.
- Fruits of a crime.
- Persons (covered separately; see "Searches of Persons" (Chapter 11), below).

(People v. Thayer (1965) 63 Cal.2nd 635; Warden, Maryland Penitentiary v. Hayden (1967) 387 U.S. 294 [87 S.Ct. 1642; 18 L.Ed.2nd 782]; Guidi v. Superior Court (1973) 10 Cal.3rd 1.)

See Black's Law Dictionary (9th Ed. 2009) p. 365, defining "contraband" as "[g]oods that are unlawful to import, export, produce, or possess."

See also 3 Oxford English Dictionary (2nd Ed. 1989) p. 833: "Contraband" is "[a]nything prohibited to be imported or exported; goods imported or exported contrary to law or proclamation" or something "[f]orbidden, illegitimate, unauthorized."

Note: Not mentioned above, "persons" are also subject to "seizure," under the Fourth Amendment, when they are detained or arrested. (Florida v. Bostick (1991) 501 U.S. 429, 434 [111 S.Ct. 2382; 115 L.Ed.2nd 389, 398].)

As for "instrumentalities of a crime," the U.S. Supreme Court has noted that' "(n)othing in the language of the Fourth Amendment supports the distinction between 'mere evidence' and instrumentalities, fruits of crime, or contraband." (Warden, Maryland Penitentiary v. Hayden (1967) 387 U.S. 294, 301 [87 S. Ct. 1642; 18 L.Ed.2nd 782].)

> See also Coolidge v. New Hampshire (1971) 403 U.S. 443, 464 [91 S.Ct. 2022; 29 L.Ed.2nd 564]: "Of course, the distinction between an 'instrumentality of crime' and 'mere evidence' was done away with by Warden* v. *Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, . . ."

Protection from Unreasonable Searches and Seizures, and the Right to Privacy*:

Rule: "The Fourth Amendment protects, among other things, a person's right not to have their property unreasonably seized by the government." (Italics added; Recchia v. City of Los Angeles *Department of Animal Services (9th Cir. 2018) 889 F.3rd 553, 558; citing United States v. Place (1983) 462 U.S. 696, 700 [103 S.Ct. 2637; 77 L.Ed.2nd 110].)

> Although not mentioned specifically anywhere in the U.S. Constitution, one's "right to privacy" is inferred from a reading of the Constitution itself, and its amendments, which provide a "penumbra" (i.e., "umbrella") effect of privacy. (See Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479 [85 S.Ct. 1678; 14 L.Ed.2nd 510].)
>
> The California Constitution, on the other hand specifically provides for its citizens a right to privacy: "All people are by nature free and independent and have inalienable rights. Among these are enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety, happiness, and privacy." (Cal. Const., art. I, § 1; italics added.) (See People v. Lyon (2021) 61 Cal.App.5th 237, 244-245.)
>
> A juvenile's Juvenile Court records are private. Obtaining access to such records without a court order is a violation of the juvenile's right to privacy. (See Gonzalez v. Spencer (9th Cir 2003) 336 F.3rd 832.)
>
> > However, the Ninth Circuit also held in a subsequent decision that the rule in Gonzalez was too "opaque" to clearly establish this right, thus resulting in a subsequent decision holding that attorneys for the county who obtained plaintiff's juvenile court records without judicial authorization were entitled to qualified immunity from civil liability. (Nunes v. Arata, Swingle, Van Egmond & Goodwin (9th Cir. 2020) 983 F.3rd 1108.)
>
> Homeless people living on the street also enjoy the same protections under the Fourth Amendment. (Recchia v. City of* Los Angeles *Department of Animal Services, supra, citing Lavan v. City of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2012) 693 F.3rd 1022, 1029.)

The Fourth Amendment limits searches and seizures to where a defendant has a reasonable expectation of privacy in the place searched or item seized. (People v. Caro (2019) 7 Cal.5th 463, 496.)

Case Law:

"Few protections are as essential to individual liberty as the right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. The Framers made that right explicit in the Bill of Rights following their experience with the indignities and invasions of privacy wrought by 'general warrants and warrantless searches that had so alienated the colonists and had helped speed the movement for independence.' Chimel v. California, 395 U. S. 752, 761, 89 S. Ct. 2034, 23 L. Ed. 2d 685 (1969). Ever mindful of the Fourth Amendment and its history, the Court has viewed with disfavor practices that permit 'police officers unbridled discretion to rummage at will among a person's private effects.' Arizona v. Gant, 556 U. S. 332, 345, 129 S.Ct. 1710, 173 L.Ed.2nd 485 (2009)." (Byrd v. United States (2018) 584 U.S. 395, 402-403 [138 S.Ct. 1518; 200 L.Ed.2nd 805].)

"Article I, section 1 of the California Constitution guarantees certain inalienable rights. 'Among these are enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety, happiness, and privacy.' (Cal. Const., art. I, § 1.) The electorate added this protection for 'privacy' to the California Constitution by a ballot initiative (the Privacy Initiative) in 1972. The Privacy Initiative addressed the 'accelerating encroachment on personal freedom and security caused by increased surveillance and data collection activity in contemporary society.' (White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal.3rd 757, 774 . . . .) The principal 'mischiefs' that the Privacy Initiative addressed were: '(1) "government snooping" and the secret gathering of personal information; (2) the overbroad collection and retention of unnecessary personal information by government and business interests; (3) the improper use of information properly obtained for a specific purpose, for example, the use of it for another purpose or the disclosure of it to some third party; and (4) the lack of a reasonable check on the accuracy of existing records.'" (Id., a p. 775.)" (Lewis v. *Superior Court [Medical Board of California] (2017) 3 Cal.5th 561, 569-578; upholding the state medical board's accessing of patients' medical records in an investigation of a doctor accused of illegally prescribing controlled medications.)

Upon renting an e-scooter, plaintiff plainly understood that the e-scooter company had to collect location data for the scooter through its smartphone applications. Having "voluntarily conveyed" his location to the operator in the ordinary course of business, the resident could not later assert a reasonable expectation of privacy. The Mobile Data Specification (MDS) location data indicated a diminished expectation of privacy, and the collection of that data by the Los Angeles Department of Transportation was not a search. It therefore did not violate the Fourth Amendment. Penal Code § 1546.4(c) (providing for a P.C. § 1538.5 motion to suppress remedy) did not authorize the resident to bring an independent action to enforce its provisions. Because plaintiff had no reasonable expectation of privacy over the MDS location data, no additional facts could have cured the deficiency with his constitutional claims. (Sanchez v. Los Angeles Department of Transportation (9th Cir. 2022) 39 F.4th 548.)

Searches and Seizures*:

Difference Between "Searches" and "Seizures:"

Differentiating a "search" from a "seizure," the Second Circuit Court of Appeal discussed the difference between conducting a patdown (a search) and positioning the subject in preparation for doing a patdown (a seizure), noting the traditional conditions that must be present for it to be a search, i.e., whether police: (1) "physically intrud[es] on a constitutionally protected area" under United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400, or (2) violate a person's "reasonable expectation of privacy" under Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347. In this case, merely ordering defendant to stand at the rear quarter panel, even when the officers had the subjective intent to position defendant for a frisk, simply was not a search under either Jones or Katz. Consequently, the Court concluded that no Fourth Amendment search occurred until the frisking officer's "hands physically came into contact with Weaver['s]" person. (United States v. Weaver (2nd Cir. NY, 2021) 9 F.4th 129.)

Searches: A search occurs when an expectation of privacy that society is prepared to consider reasonable is infringed upon. (Lavan v. City of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2012) 693 F.3rd 1022, 1027.)

Trespassory Searches; Persons, Houses, Papers, and Effects: The Fourth Amendment protects against violations of one's right to privacy, but also trespassory searches, albeit only with regard to those items that it enumerates; i.e., "persons, houses, papers, and effects." (United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400, 404-413 [132 S.Ct. 945, 949-954; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911]; holding that placing a tracking device on a suspect's vehicle (i.e., the vehicle coming within the category of "effects") and then monitoring its movement is legally a "search." See also United States v. Dixon (9th Cir. Dec. 31, 2020) 984 F.3rd 814, 818-823, applying Jones' "property based analysis" to using a key on a vehicle without probable cause in order to determine whether defendant had control over that vehicle.)

Satellite-Based Monitor (SBM): Requiring a recidivist sex offender to wear a satellite-based monitor, or "SBM," for the rest of his life, done for the purpose of tracking the individual's movements and to "obtain information," constitutes a "search" under the Fourth Amendment, and under the theory of United States v. Jones, supra. The fact that North Carolina's SBM program is civil in nature does make it any less of a Fourth Amendment search issue. (Grady v. North Carolina (2015) 575 U.S. 306 [135 S.Ct. 1368; 191 L.Ed.2nd 459]; case remanded for the purpose of determining the reasonableness of the search under the circumstances.)

Taking a DNA sample via a "buccal swab" of the mouth is a search under the Fourth Amendment. (Friedman v. Boucher (9th Cir. 2009) 580 F.3rd 847, 852-853; Bill v. Brewer (9th Cir. 2015) 799 F.3rd 1295, 1299.)

The extraction of blood or other materials from a person's body for purposes of chemical testing is a search and seizure under the Fourth Amendment. (People v. Mason (2016) 8 Cal.App.5th Supp. 11, 19; citing People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1119; and Schmerber v. California (1996) 384 U.S. 757, 770 [86 S.Ct. 1826; 16 L.Ed.2nd 908; 86 S.Ct. 1826]; see also Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438 [195 L.Ed.2nd 560, 136 S.Ct. 2160].)

> See also People v. Cruz (2019) 34 Cal.App.5th 764, 768: "Invasions of the body, including nonconsensual extractions of blood, 'are searches entitled to the protections of the Fourth Amendment.'" (quoting People v. Robinson, supra, at pp. 1119-1120.)

The "Chalking" or "Tapping" of a Vehicle's Tires:

> The Sixth Circuit has held that when the chalking of a person's tires is done for the purpose of determining how long the vehicle is parked at a specific location, to do so constitutes a "search," and illegal absent a search warrant. Neither the automobile nor the community caretaking exceptions to the search warrant requirement applies. (Taylor v. City Saginaw (6th Cir. 2021) 11 F.4th 483.)
>
> > The Court also held that the "administrative-search exception" to the search warrant requirement does not justify the city's suspicionless chalking of car tires to enforce its parking regulations. The city's parking officer, however, was entitled to qualified immunity because every reasonable parking officer would not understand from prior case that suspicionless chalking of car tires violated Fourth Amendment. (Ibid.)

However, the Ninth Circuit, in a split, 2-to-1 decision, ruled to the contrary, finding that a city's practice of chalking tires as part of enforcing time limits on city parking spots fell within the administrative search exception to the Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement because complementing a broader program of traffic control, tire chalking was reasonable in its scope and manner of execution, it was not used for general crime control purposes, and its intrusion on personal liberty was de minimis at most. (Verdun v. City of San Diego (Oct. 26, 2022) 51 Cal.App.5th 1033.)

The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal has held that an officer tapping a stopped motorist's tires out of concern that, having viewed them wobbling, they were a hazard to the motorist and others, is a "search," under of United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S.Ct. 945; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911], albeit a reasonable one under the circumstances. (United States v. Richmond (5th Cir. Tex. 2019) 915 F.3rd 352.)

Seizure: A seizure of property occurs when there is some meaningful governmental interference with an individual's possessory interest in that property. (United States v. Jefferson (9th Cir. 2009) 566 F.3rd 928, 933, citing United States v. Jacobson (1984) 466 U.S. 109, 113 [104 S.Ct. 1652; 80 L.Ed.2nd 85]; United States v. Karo (1984) 468 U.S. 705, 713 [104 S.Ct. 3296; 82 L.Ed.2nd 530]; Lavan v. City of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2012) 693 F.3rd 1022, 1027-1031; Brewster v. Beck (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 1194, 1196.)

Rule #1: To be lawful, a "seizure" of evidence requires probable cause to believe that the item seized is contraband or evidence of a crime.

"In the ordinary case, the (U.S. Supreme) Court has viewed a seizure of personal property as per se unreasonable within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment unless it is accomplished pursuant to a judicial warrant issued upon probable cause and particularly describing the items to be seized. (fn. 2)" (Italics in original; United States v. Place (1983) 462 U.S. 696, 701 [103 S.Ct. 2637; 77 L. Ed.2nd 110]; citing Marron* v. *United States (1927) 275 U.S. 192, 196 [48 S.Ct. 74; 72 L.Ed. 231].)

Footnote 2: "The Warrant Clause of the Fourth Amendment provides that 'no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.'"

As an example: "Where law enforcement authorities have probable cause to believe that a container holds contraband or evidence of a crime, but have not secured a warrant, the Court has interpreted the (Fourth) Amendment to permit seizure of the property, pending issuance of a warrant to examine its contents, if the exigencies of the circumstances demand it or some other recognized exception to the warrant requirement is present." (United States v. Place, supra, at pp. 701-702, citing as examples: Arkansas v. Sanders (1979) 442 U.S. 753, 761 [99 S.Ct. 2586; 61 L.Ed.2nd 235]; United States* v. Chadwick (1977) 433 U.S. 1 [97 S.Ct. 2476; 53 L.Ed.2nd 538]; Coolidge v. New Hampshire (1971) 403 U.S. 443 [91 S.Ct. 2022; 29 L.Ed.2nd 564]; and Payton v. New York (1980) 445 U.S. 573, 587 [100 S.Ct. 1371; 63 L.Ed.2nd 639]: "'(O)bjects such as weapons or contraband found in a public place may be seized by the police without a warrant,' . . . because, under these circumstances, the risk of the item's disappearance or use for its intended purpose before a warrant may be obtained outweighs the interest in possession." See also G.M. Leasing Corp. v. *United State*s (1977) 429 U.S. 338, 354 [97 S.Ct. 619; 50 L.Ed.2nd 530].)

A warrantless seizure of personal property requires both (1) probable cause and (2) exigent circumstances. (United States v. Mays (8th Cir. 2021) 993 F.3rd 607; seizure of defendant's personal computer, when obtained from defendant's uncle who had possession of it at the time, after which a warrant was obtained to examine the contents of the computer.)

Rule #2: Despite the above, the Supreme Court upheld the temporary warrantless seizure of property when necessary to prevent the loss of relevant evidence, giving law enforcement the opportunity to determine whether the seized evidence is in fact seizeable. In such a case, only a "reasonable suspicion" (as opposed to "probable cause") to believe the seized property is contraband or evidence of a crime. United States v. Place (1983) 462 U.S. 696, 702-707 [103 S.Ct. 2637; 77 L. Ed.2nd 110]; upholding "the reasonableness under the Fourth Amendment of warrantless seizures of personal luggage from the custody of the owner on the basis of less than probable cause, for the purpose of pursuing a limited course of investigation, short of opening the luggage, that would quickly confirm or dispel the authorities' suspicion."

The Court held here that under these circumstances, the principles of Terry* v. *Ohio (1968) 392 U.S. 1 [88 S.Ct. 1868; 20 L.Ed.2nd 889], apply to permit such seizures on the basis of reasonable, articulable suspicion, premised on objective facts, that the luggage in issue contains contraband or evidence of a crime. (See "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above. However, in that the luggage seizure in this case before being subjected to the dog-sniff was 90 minutes, the Court held that Terry v. Ohio did not apply to such an extended time period. (United States v. Place, supra, at p. 709.)

Case Law:

The Eight Circuit Court of Appeal has held that seizing a firearm observed in plain sight under circumstances where there was no reason to believe anyone was in any danger, or other probable cause to believe that the firearm was associated with any crime, was a Fourth Amendment violation. (United States v. Lewis (8th Cir. 2017) 864 F.3rd 937.)

See also United States v. Arredondo (8th Cir. 2021) 996 F.3rd 903, where officers observed vials on a couch in plain sight, but were unsure of what the substance in it might be, the Court noting that while a deputy sheriff believed that the vials laying on the couch "seem[ed] a little odd," something seeming "a little odd" is usually a hunch and not probable cause.

"A seizure is 'far less intrusive than a search.' (United States v. Payton (9th Cir. 2009) 573 F.3rd 859, 863.) . . . . Whereas a search implicates a person's right to keep the contents of his or her belongings private, a seizure only affects their right to possess the particular item in question. (Segura v. United States (1984) 468 U.S. 796, 806, 104 S. Ct. 3380, 82 L.Ed.2nd 599) . . . . Consequently, the police generally have greater leeway in terms of conducting a warrantless seizure than they do in carrying out a warrantless search. The United States Supreme Court has 'frequently approved warrantless seizures of property . . . for the time necessary to secure a warrant, where a warrantless search was either held to be or likely would have been impermissible.' (Ibid.)" (People v. Tran (2019) 42 Cal.App.5th 1, 8; ruling legal an officer's immediate seizure of a dashboard camera from defendant's person, pending the obtaining of a search warrant, in a reckless driving with injuries case.)

The Fourth Amendment protects possessory and liberty interests even when privacy rights, involving an assessment of one's expectation of privacy, are not implicated. (Lavan v. City of Los Angeles, supra, at p. 1028; citing Soldal v. Cook County (1992) 506 U.S. 56, 63-64 [113 S.Ct. 538; 121 L.Ed.2nd 450].)

Also, "[A] seizure lawful at its inception can nevertheless violate the Fourth Amendment because its manner of execution unreasonably infringes possessory interests protected by the Fourth Amendment's prohibition on 'unreasonable seizures.'" (Lavan v. City of Los Angeles, supra, at p. 1030; United States v. Jacobsen (1984) 466 U.S. 109, 124 [104 S.Ct.1652; 80 L.Ed.2nd 85, & fn. 25; citing United States v. Place (1983) 462 U.S. 696, 707-710 [103 S.Ct. 2673; 77 L.Ed.2nd 110]; United States v. Dass (9th Cir. 1988) 849 F.2nd 414, 414-415; Brewster v. Beck (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 1194, 1196.)

"A seizure conducted without a warrant is 'per se unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment,' with some limited exceptions." (Rodriguez v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 2019) 930 F.3rd 1123, 1136; citing United States v. Hawkins (9th Cir. 2001) 249 F.3d 867, 872.)

Seizures also may also constitute a Fourteenth Amendment "due process" violation, at least when there is a "significant taking of property by the State." (Fuentes v. Shevin (1972) 407 U.S. 67, 86 [92 S.Ct. 1983; 32 L.Ed.2nd 556]; Lavan v. City of Los Angeles, supra, at p. 1031-1033.) To find a due process violation, a court must determine:

> (1) Whether the asserted individual interests are encompassed within the Fourteenth Amendment's protection of "life, liberty or property," and is so;
>
> (2) What procedures constitute "due process of law."
>
> (Lavan v. City of Los Angeles, supra, at p. 1031.)

A DUI vehicle check point, where vehicles are stopped on a random basis, constitutes a Fourth Amendment seizure. (Demarest v. City of Vallejo (9th Cir. 2022) 44 F.4th 1209, 1216.)

> See DUI (and Other Regulatory "Special Needs") Checkpoints," Chapter 4, above.

"'The Fourth Amendment protects against unreasonable interferences in property interests regardless of whether there is an invasion of privacy.' (Miranda v. City of Cornelius (9th Cir. 2005) 429 F.3rd 858, 862 . . . , citing Soldal (v. Cook County, Illinois (1992) 506 U.S. 56), at p. 62 ([112 S.Ct. 538; 121 L.Ed.2nd 450]); see also Soldal, at p. 62 ['our cases unmistakably hold that the [Fourth] Amendment protects property as well as privacy']; accord, N. Am. Butterfly Ass'n v. Wolf (D.C. Cir. 2020) 977 F.3rd 1244, 1264.) A property seizure . . . 'occurs when "there is some meaningful interference with an individual's possessory interests in [his or her] property."' (Soldal, at p. 61.)" (Coalition on Homelessness v. City and County of San Francisco (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 928, 938; noting that "(i)n the present case, it is undisputed that seizures occur when cars are towed under the SFMTA's towing policy. . . . "The impoundment of an automobile is a seizure within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment." (Pgs. 938-939.)

Note: Not mentioned above, "persons" are also subject to "seizure," under the Fourth Amendment, whenever they are detained or arrested. (Florida v. Bostick (1991) 501 U.S. 429, 434 [111 S.Ct. 2382; 115 L.Ed.2nd 389, 398]; District of Columbia v. Wesby et al. (2018) 583 U.S. 48 [138 S.Ct. 577; 199 L.Ed.2nd 453]; Torres v. Madrid (Mar. 25, 2021) __ U.S. __, __ [141 S.Ct. 989; 209 L.Ed.2nd 190]; Seidner v. De Vries (9th Cir. 2022) 39 F.4th 591, 596.)

> "'(W)henever an officer restrains the freedom of a person to walk away, he has seized that person.'" (Seidner v. De Vries, supra, quoting Brower v. County of Inyo (1989) 498 U.S. 593, 595 [109 S.Ct. 1378; 103 L.Ed.2nd 628], and "easily" holding that stopping the plaintiff by using his patrol car as a roadblock was a "seizure.")
>
> However, at least until Torres v. Madrid, supra and below, was decided, it had consistently been held that no such "seizure" occurs until the person is actually taken into physical custody. Officers shooting at a fleeing vehicle does not constitute a "seizure." (Farrell v. Montoya (10th Cir. N.M. 2017) 878 F.3rd 933; rejecting the argument of an "on-going seizure," where plaintiff had stopped several times, but then fled again at which point officers shot at her fleeing vehicle.)
>
> There is no constitutional violation in a "threatened unlawful detention." The Fourth Amendment does not apply to such a situation until the person is actually illegally detained; i.e., when the officer actually catches the defendant or the defendant otherwise submits to the officer's authority (i.e.; he gives up). (California v. Hodari

D. (1991) 499 U.S. 621 [111 S.Ct. 1547; 113 L.Ed.2nd 690].)

But then the United States Supreme Court in Torres v. Madrid, supra, expanded upon the theory concerning when a "seizure" occurs, ruling that "(t)he application of physical force to the body of a person with intent to restrain is a seizure, even if the force does not succeed in subduing the person."

The Madrid Court overruled a lower court's holding that a suspect's continued flight after being shot by police negates a Fourth Amendment excessive-force claim. (See Torres v. Madrid (10th Cir. 2019) 769 Fed.Appx. 654.)

Search vs. Seizure: A warrantless seizure of a container of contraband does not necessarily also allow for a warrantless search of that container. (Robey v. Superior Court (2013) 56 Cal.4th 1218, 1223-1243.)

The standards applicable to these two concepts are very similar, if not the same. As the U.S. Supreme Court has noted: "Although the interest protected by the Fourth Amendment injunction against unreasonable searches is quite different from that protected by its injunction against unreasonable seizures [citation], neither the one nor the other is of inferior worth or necessarily requires only lesser protection. We have not elsewhere drawn a categorical distinction between the two insofar as concerns the degree of justification needed to establish the reasonableness of police action, and we see no reason for a distinction in the particular circumstances before us here." (Arizona v. Hicks (1987) 480 U.S. 321, 328 [107 S.Ct. 1149; 94 L.Ed.2nd 347].)

See People v. Caro (2019) 7 Cal.5th 463, 487-489, where the Court upheld the warrantless seizure of defendant's bloody clothing seized in plain sight at a hospital where defendant was taken for emergency treatment, the recovery of scrapings from defendant's hands and feet after bags were placed over her appendages to preserve evidence, photographs taken of defendant during her surgery, and bullet fragments removed from defendant's head during surgery.

For a Search & Seizure to be Lawful*: *General Rule: In order for a search and seizure to be lawful, a search warrant, supported by probable cause, must first be obtained. (Fourth Amendment, United States Constitution; Art 1, § 13, California Constitution; (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 382[134 S.Ct. 2473, 2482; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430].)

Search Warrant Defined: "(A)n order in writing, in the name of the people, signed by a magistrate, directed to a peace officer, commanding him or her to search for a person or persons, a thing or things, or personal property, and bring it before the magistrate." (Pen. Code § 1523)

See "Searches With a Search Warrant" (Chapter 10), below.

Probable Cause: Roughly the same standards apply whether the issue is an arrest or a search. (Skelton v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3rd 144, 150.)

See "Arrests" (Chapter 5), above, and "Searches With a Search Warrant" (Chapter 10), below.

Exceptions:

"Warrantless searches and seizures (of persons) are presumed to be unreasonable, 'subject only to a few specifically established and well-delineated exceptions.'" (People v. Thomas (2018) 29 Cal.App.5th 1107, 1113; citing People v. Diaz (2011) 51 Cal.4th 84, 90.)

See "Unlawfulness," below, and "Searches With a Search Warrant" (Chapter 10), below.

Legal Presumptions:

Unreasonableness: Searches and seizures are presumed, as a general rule, to be unreasonable in the absence of sufficient "individualized suspicion" of wrongdoing to support a finding of "probable cause." (Chandler v. Miller (1997) 520 U.S. 305, 308 [117 S.Ct. 1295; 137 L.Ed.2nd 513, 519].)

See "The Rule of Reasonableness" under "The Constitutional Basis For Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 1), above.

Note: "Presumptions" are generally considered mandatory, absent evidence to the contrary, while "inferences" are suggestive. (See Francis v. Franklin (1985) 471 U.S. 307, 314 [105 S.Ct. 1965; 85 L.Ed.2nd 344]; and Sandstrom v. Montana (1979) 442 U.S. 510, 523-524 [99 S.Ct. 2450; 61 L.Ed.2nd 39].)

"The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution protects against unreasonable searches and seizures. (U.S. Const., 4th Amend.) It 'protects an individual's reasonable expectation of privacy against unreasonable intrusion on the part of the government.' (People v. Jenkins (2000) 22 Cal.4th 900, 971 . . . .) To successfully claim Fourth Amendment protection, 'a defendant must demonstrate that he personally has an expectation of privacy in the place searched, and that his > expectation is reasonable.' (Jenkins, at p. 972.) 'In other words, the defendant must show that he or she had a subjective expectation of privacy that was objectively reasonable.' (People v. Ayala (2000) 23 Cal.4th 225, 255 . . . .)" (People v. Cartwright (2024) 99 Cal.App.5th 98, 102.)

Unlawfulness: Even with probable cause, searches without a search warrant are presumed to be unlawful, absent one of the narrowly construed exceptions to the search warrant exception. (Mincey v. Arizona (1978) 437 U.S. 385, 390 [98 S.Ct. 2408; 57 L.Ed.2nd 290, 298-299]; In re Tyrell J. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 68, 76; reversed on other grounds.)

> The Fourth Amendment prohibits all unreasonable searches and seizures, and it is a cardinal principle that "searches conducted outside the judicial process, without prior approval by judge or magistrate, are per se unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment—subject only to a few specifically established and well-delineated exceptions." (Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347, 357 [88 S.Ct. 507; 19 L.Ed.2nd 576, 585]; Mincey v. Arizona (1978) 437 U.S. 385, 390 [57 L.Ed.2nd 290, 98 S.Ct. 2408]; People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1041; People v. Wilson (2020) 56 Cal.App.5th 128, 141, discussing the "Private Search Doctrine," and quoting Robey v. Superior Court (2013) 56 Cal.4th 1218, at p. 1224; see also Demarest v. City of Vallejo (9th Cir. 2022) 44 F.4th 1209, 1216, DUI checkpoint.)

Burden of Proof: The prosecution bears the burden of justifying a warrantless search, requiring proof of a recognized exception to the search warrant requirement in addition (usually) to having probable cause. (Welsh v. Wisconsin (1984) 466 U.S. 740, 749-750 [104 S.Ct. 2091; 80 L.Ed.2nd 732, 742-743]; People v. James (1977) 19 Cal.3rd 99, 106; People v. Redd (2010) 48 Cal.4th 691, 719; People v. Simon (2016) 1 Cal.5th 98, 120; People v. Gutierrez (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1146, 1152.)

Remedy for Violations*; The "Exclusionary Rule:" Warrantless searches, performed without probable cause and without an exception to the warrant requirement (or even when a warrant is used, but where the warrant is later determined to be legally defective), subjects any recovered evidence to exclusion from being used as evidence in court. (Weeks v. United States (1914) 232 U.S. 383 [34 S.Ct. 341; 58 L.Ed. 652].)

> The Fourth Amendment Applicable to the States: Although the Fourth Amendment was originally intended to restrict the actions of the federal government only, the same exclusionary rule, as a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment "due process" clause, has been held to be applicable to the states (which includes counties and municipalities) as well. (Mapp v. Ohio (1961) 367 U.S. 643 [81 S.Ct. 1684; 6 L.Ed.2nd 1081]; People v. Parrott (2017) 10 Cal.App.5th 485, 492.)

Reasoning: Violating one's Fourth Amendment rights is such a fundamental, important, issue that to do so is automatically a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment due process rights of the person subjected to the illegal search or seizure. (Mapp v. Ohio, supra.)

See "The Exclusionary Rule; Overview" under "The Constitutional Basis For Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 1), above.

Procedural Remedy*: *Motion to Suppress, per P.C. § 1538.5: California tests the constitutionality of a search or seizure (i.e., Fourth Amendment issues) via the procedures as spelled out in Pen. Code § 1538.5.

Procedure:

"Section 1538.5 affords criminal defendants a procedure by which they may seek suppression of illegally seized evidence. (§ 1538.5, subds. (a)(1), (d), (f)(1), (i), (m).) Our high court has said that section 1538.5 'provides a comprehensive and exclusive procedure for the final determination of search and seizure issues prior to trial.'" (People v. Romeo (2015) 240 Cal.App.4th 931, 940, quoting People v. Brooks (1980) 26 Cal.3rd 471, 475.)

> "A defendant may move to suppress evidence on the ground that '[t]he search or seizure without a warrant was unreasonable.' (§ 1538.5, subd. (a)(1)(A).) When a defendant files a motion to suppress, the People have 'the burden of proving that the warrantless search or seizure was reasonable' (People v. Williams (1999) 20 Cal.4th 119, 130 . . . , and alternatively, 'the burden . . . to prove that exclusion of the evidence is not necessary because of [the good faith] exception.' (People v. Willis (2002) 28 Cal.4th 22, 36 . . . .) The prosecution must establish by a preponderance of the evidence the facts justifying a warrantless search. (People v. Johnson (2006) 38 Cal.4th 717, 729 . . . .]" (People v. Smith (2020) 46 Cal.App.5th 375, 382-383; see also People v. Holiman (2022) 76 Cal.App.5th 825, 830-831.)

Pen. Code § 1538.5, subd. (b): When consistent with the procedures set forth in this section and subject to the provisions of Sections 170 to 170.6, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the motion should first be heard by the magistrate who issued the search warrant if there is a warrant, and if he or she is available.

Pen. Code § 1538.5 does not require the trial court to hold an evidentiary hearing when the defendant's stated issue to be decided is not relevant to the motion to suppress. Section 1538.5(c)(1) requires the trial court to receive evidence on any issue of fact necessary to determine the motion.

The lawfulness of the initial contact was not an issue of fact necessary for a determination of the motion in this case. The trial court properly rejected defendant's argument that he was entitled to an evidentiary hearing on any issue. The language of § 1538.5 limits the scope of such a hearing. In this case (a violation of P.C. § 148(a)(1)), "the lawfulness of the initial [police] contact is irrelevant to the suppression of evidence" because defendant's new criminal behavior broke any causal link to an underlying illegality. (People v. Chavez (2020) 54 Cal.App.5th 477.)

"A defendant may file a motion to suppress at the preliminary hearing based on the evidence introduced at that hearing. (Pen. Code § 1538.5, subd. (f)(1).) If the magistrate denies the motion, the defendant may either renew the motion before the trial court or file a motion to dismiss under Penal Code section 995 raising the suppression issue. (People v. Superior Court* (Cooper) 114 Cal.App.4th 713, 717 . . . ; see Pen. Code § 1538.5, subds. (i) & (m).) When the defendant files a renewed motion to suppress, the trial court independently reviews the magistrate's legal conclusion and evaluates any new evidence presented, and we review the court's determination. (Cooper, at p. 717.) In contrast, when the defendant raises the suppression issue in a Penal Code section 995 motion, the trial court reviews the magistrate's determination for substantial evidence, and we review the magistrate's determination, not the court's. (Cooper, at p. 717.)" (People v. Turner (2017) 13 Cal.App.5th 397, 404; see also People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, 556; and People v. Tacardon (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 89, 96 (petition granted), and Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, 34.)

"In ruling on a motion to suppress, the trial court is charged with:

> (1) Finding the historical facts;
> (2) Selecting the applicable rule of law; and
> (3) Applying the former to determine whether or not the rule of law as applied to the established facts has been violated."
>
> (People v. Parson (2008) 44 Cal.4th 332, 345; citing People v. Ayala (2000) 24 Cal.4th 243, 279; People v. Turner, supra.)

"The initial burden is on the defendant to establish that the government conducted a search without a warrant. The burden then shifts to the prosecution to justify the warrantless search." (People v. Marquez (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 402, 409; citing People v. Williams (1999) 20 Cal.4th 119, 127.)

> "The prosecution must then prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the search falls within an exception to the Fourth > Amendment warrant requirement." (Ibid, citing People v. Torres (1992) 6 Cal.App.4th 1324, 1334–1335.)

"This requires that the 'defendant[] must do more than merely assert that the search or seizure was without a warrant. The search or seizure must also be unreasonable; that is, it must not fall within any exception to the warrant requirement.' (Citation) A three-step allocation of the burden of producing evidence governs, with the ultimate burden of persuasion always remaining on the People. '[W]hen defendants move to suppress evidence, they must set forth the factual and legal bases for the motion, but they satisfy that obligation, at least in the first instance, by making a prima facie showing that the police acted without a warrant. The prosecution then has the burden of proving some justification for the warrantless search or seizure, after which, defendants can respond by pointing out any inadequacies in that justification.' (Citation) The prosecution retains the ultimate burden of 'proving that the warrantless search or seizure was reasonable under the circumstances.' (Citation)" (People v. Romeo (2015) 240 Cal.App.4th 931, 940-941; quoting People v. Williams (1999) 20 Cal.4th 119, 129-130.)

A defendant seeking to suppress evidence pursuant to P.C. § 1538.5, although not required to state the basis for his or her challenge to a warrantless search or seizure, must identify the government conduct being questioned. Defendant's motion to suppress in this case failed to identify which of several searches and seizures he was challenging. By failing to identify the government conduct being challenged, defendant's motion to suppress lacked the specificity required by P.C. § 1538.5. Therefore, defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied. (Davis v. Appellate Division of Superior Court (2018) 23 Cal.App.5th 387.)

Despite having had heard a motion to suppress during the defendant's preliminary hearing and a reconsideration of that motion to suppress under subdivision (i) of Pen. Code § 1538.5 in the trial court, a defendant also has the right to re-raise the constitutionality of his detention in a motion to set aside the information under Pen. Code § 995. (People v. Kidd (2019) 36 Cal.App.5th 12.)

> In fact, "(u)nder the statutory scheme of . . . sections 995, 999a, and 1538.5, an accused may have up to seven (Italics added) opportunities to challenge the validity of a temporary detention, arrest, or search and seizure:
>
> > (1) The accused can move to suppress the evidence obtained at the preliminary hearing (Pen. Code § 1538.5, subd. (f));

(2) If the motion is denied and the accused is held to answer, a motion may be made in the superior court to set aside the information for lack of probable cause on the ground that the evidence is the product of an illegal search (Pen. Code § 995);

(3) Upon the denial of a motion under Penal Code section 995, a defendant may file a petition for a writ of prohibition to stay the trial on the ground that the evidence is the product of an illegal search (Pen. Code, § 999a);

(4) A special hearing de novo in the superior court on the validity of the search is proper (Pen. Code § 1538.5, subd. (i));

(5) An adverse determination may be reviewed by means of a petition for a writ of prohibition or mandate in the appellate court (Pen. Code § 1538.5, subd. (i));

(6) If prior to trial the opportunity for a section 1538.5 motion did not exist or the accused was not aware of the grounds for the motion, the issue may be raised at trial. (Pen. Code § 1538.5, subds. (h) and (m); and

(7) Finally, the matter may be considered on appeal after the denial of the motion under Penal Code section 1538.5, even though the accused enters a plea of guilty after the denial (Pen. Code § 1538.5, subd. (m))." (People v. Gephart (93 Cal.App.3rd 989, 995-996; People v. Kidd, supra, at p. 19.)

In a non-jury trial on an infraction offense, it has been held that "in the ordinary infraction case, the prosecution is not required to oppose a motion to suppress by filing an opposition brief or appearing at the suppression hearing. Instead, it may meet its burden to provide justification for a warrantless search by subpoenaing relevant law enforcement witnesses, who may in turn provide narrative testimony to the court in the same manner as would be permitted in the prosecution's absence at an infraction trial. So long as the court's conduct in calling and questioning witnesses is fair and properly limited in scope, such a procedure provides a fair hearing, does not lessen the prosecution's burden of proof. . . ." (People v. Cotsirilos (2020) 50 Cal.App.5th 1023, 1026.)

Defendant could not challenge on appeal an order denying a motion to suppress evidence under Pen. Code § 1538.5, because a certificate of probable cause under Pen. Code § 1237.5, subd. (m), and Cal. Rules of Court, rule 8.304(b)(4)(A), specified only the denial of the suppression motion without addressing the validity of defendant's waiver of the right to appeal, which was a required issue. (People v. Codinha (2021) 71 Cal.App.5th 1047, 1073-1079.)

People's Motions to Continue:

On the date scheduled for a hearing on a defense motion to suppress evidence, the County of Mendocino Superior Court denied the People's motion to continue the hearing. Because the People were unable to proceed, the trial court ordered the evidence suppressed. Lacking the suppressed evidence, the People announced they could no longer successfully prosecute the case, and the trial court dismissed the action. The People appealed. The Fifth District Court of Appeal (Div. 5) held that the trial court erred in refusing to continue the hearing. Per the Court, Pen. Code §§ 1050 and 1050.5 prohibited the dismissal of an action due to the absence of good cause for a continuance or for the prosecutor's failure to provide proper notice of a request for a continuance. Although the trial court did not dismiss the action as an express sanction for the failure to show good cause, dismissal was the reasonably foreseeable result of denial of the motion to continue. Cases involving requests for continuances in the preliminary hearing and trial contexts supported a conclusion that the legislature did not intend to permit denial of a motion for a continuance in the present circumstances, where an information supported by probable cause was dismissed on a procedural ground not implicating defendant's speedy trial rights. (People v. Ferrer (2010) 184 Cal.App.4th 873.)

Disagreeing with People v. Ferrer, supra, the Sixth District Court of Appeal held that even if it is reasonably foreseeable that denial of a prosecutor's request to continue under Penal Code § 1050 will result in dismissal a trial court may deny a request to continue a motion to suppress under Penal Code § 1538.5. Here, on the prosecutor's own initiative, he released the subpoenaed officer so the officer could interview a witness in an unrelated investigation, and then requested a continuance of the hearing on the motion to suppress. The trial court rejected the continuance request on the grounds the unforeseen circumstances of the other investigation did not constitute good cause as it was not "workable" for parties to excuse necessary witnesses on their own and it didn't believe another investigator couldn't conduct the interview or that the officer was indispensable to the interview. The trial court then granted the suppression motion. The prosecutor moved for reconsideration citing Ferrer for the proposition the trial court didn't have authority to refuse to grant a continuance—even in the absence of good cause—when the foreseeable result would be dismissal of the case. The trial court vacated its order granting the suppression motion, confirming it still found no good cause but agreeing it did not have authority to deny the continuance under Ferrer. The trial court later conducted the suppression motion and denied it. The defendant then pled guilty and appealed. The Court of Appeal, in reversing, held "that if the trial court finds that the request for a continuance of a motion to suppress lacks good cause, the court has the authority to deny the requested continuance for lack of good cause under section 1050, subdivision (e), even if this decision may foreseeably result in a dismissal of the matter for lack of evidence." The decision as to any continuance is left to the discretion of the trial court. (People v. Brown (2021) 69 Cal.App.5th 15.)

Pre-Trial Review of the Magistrate's Ruling:

Pen. Code § 1510: The denial of a motion made pursuant to Section 995 or 1538.5 may be reviewed prior to trial only if the motion was made by the defendant in the trial court not later than 45 days following defendant's arraignment on the complaint if a misdemeanor, or 60 days following defendant's arraignment on the information or indictment if a felony, unless within these time limits the defendant was unaware of the issue or had no opportunity to raise the issue.

The defendant's failure to file a timely motion to suppress is waived by the People's failure to challenge this procedural error. (People v. Harris (2015) 234 Cal.App.4th 671, 677, fn. 1; People v. Ling (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1, 5, fn. 1.)

"If the magistrate (at the preliminary examination) denies the motion and holds the defendant to answer, the defendant must, as a prerequisite to appellate review, renew his challenge before the trial court by motion to dismiss under (P.C.) section 995 or in a special hearing. (Citation; P.C. § 1538.5, subds. (i), (m)) At that stage, the evidence is generally limited to the transcript of the preliminary hearing, testimony by witnesses who testified at the preliminary hearing (who may be recalled by the prosecution), and evidence that could not reasonably have been presented at the preliminary hearing. (§ 1538.5, subd. (i).) The factual findings of the magistrate are binding on the court, except as affected by any additional evidence presented at the special hearing." (People v. Romeo, supra, at p. 941; citing People v. Lilienthal (1978) 22 Cal.3rd 891, 896.)

Appellate Review:

"Where . . . a motion to suppress evidence is submitted to the superior court on the preliminary hearing transcript (see § 1538.5, subd. (i)), '"the appellate court disregards the findings of the superior court and reviews the determination of the magistrate who ruled on the motion to suppress, drawing all presumptions in favor of the factual determinations of the magistrate, upholding the magistrate's express or implied findings if they are supported by substantial evidence, and measuring the facts as found by the trier against the constitutional standard of reasonableness." [Citation.]'" (People v. Hua (2008) 158 Cal.App.4th 1027, 1033 . . . .) 'In determining whether, on the facts so found, the search or seizure was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment, we exercise our independent judgment. [Citations.]'" (People v. Glaser (1995) 11 Cal.4th 354, 362 . . . .) We affirm the lower court's ruling if correct under any legal theory. (People v. Hua, supra, at p. 1033.)" (People v. Cruz (2019) 34 Cal.App.5th 764, 769; see also People v. Johnson (2020) 50 Cal.App.5th 620; People v. Suff (2014) 58 Cal.4th 1013, 1053; and People v. Holiman (2022) 76 Cal.App.5th 825, 830-831.)

> "'In cases where the facts are essentially undisputed, we independently determine the constitutionality of the challenged search or seizure.'" (People v. Holiman, supra, at p. 831; quoting People v. Durant (2012) 205 Cal.App.4th 57, 62.)

An appellate court then "review(s) the trial court's resolution of the first inquiry (above), which involves questions of fact, under the deferential substantial-evidence standard, but subject(s) the second and third inquires to independent review." (People v. Parson (2008) 44 Cal.4th 332, 345, citing People v. Ayala (2000) 24 Cal.4th 243, 279, and People v. Weaver (2001) 26 Cal.4th 76, 924.)

An appeal of the denial of a motion to suppress evidence following a plea of guilty or no contest is authorized by Pen. Code § 1538.5(m) and California Rules of Court, rule 8.304(b)(4)(A). A failure to renew the motion to suppress following the filing of the information ordinarily forfeits the issue for appellate review. (People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1031, fn. 5, citing People v. Lilienthal (1978) 22 Cal.3rd 891, 896.)

"'[F]or a suppression ruling to be reviewable, the underlying objection, contention or theory must have been urged and determined in the trial court.' (People v. Manning (1973) 33 Cal.App.3rd 586, 600 . . . .) '[T]he scope of issues upon review must be limited to those raised during argument, whether that argument has been oral or in writing. This is an elemental matter of fairness in giving each of the parties an opportunity adequately to litigate the facts and inferences relating to the adverse party's contentions.' (Manning, at p. 601.)" (People v. Thomas (2018) 29 Cal.App.5th 1107, 1113-1114; failure to raise the issue of "equitable estoppel" at the trial-court level waived the issue.)

In reviewing a trial court's denial a defendant's motion to suppress, the appellate court defers to the trial court's factual findings where they are supported by substantial evidence, but, but then exercises its own independent judgment in determining the legality of a search on the facts so found. (People v. Meza (2018) 23 Cal.App.5th 604, 609; citing People v. Tully (2012) 54 Cal.4th 952, 979.)

"The appellate court (then) views the record in the light most favorable to the ruling and defers to the trial court's factual findings, express or implied, when supported by substantial evidence. But in determining whether, on the facts so found, the search or seizure was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment, the appellate court exercises its independent judgment. [Citations.] Appellate review is confined to the correctness or incorrectness of the trial court's ruling, not the reasons for its ruling. [Citation.]" (People v. Mason (2016) 8 Cal.App.5th Supp. 11, 19; citing People v. Superior Court* (Chapman) (2012) 204 Cal.App.4th 1004, 1011; People v. Bryant, Smith and Wheeler (2014) 60 Cal.4th 335, 364-365.)

The appellate court will affirm the magistrate's ruling if correct on any theory of the applicable law, even if the ruling was for an incorrect reason. (People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, 559; citing People v. Zapien (1993) 4 Cal.4th 929, 976.)

> "Although it is a settled principle of appellate review that a correct decision of the trial court will be affirmed even if based on erroneous reasons, the Supreme Court has cautioned that 'appellate courts should not consider a Fourth Amendment theory for the first time on appeal when "the People's new theory was not supported by the record made at the first hearing and would have necessitated the taking of considerably more evidence . . ." or when "the defendant had no notice of the new theory and thus no opportunity to present evidence in opposition."'" (Citation omitted) However, when 'the record fully establishes another basis for affirming the trial court's ruling and there does not appear to be any further evidence that could have been introduced to defeat the theory,' a ruling denying a motion to suppress will be upheld on appeal." (People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1032; citing Green v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal.3rd 126, 138–139; People v. Walker (2012) 210 Cal.App.4th 1372, 1383, and People v. Loudermilk (1987) 195 Cal.App.3rd 996, 1004–1005.)

"On appeal from a superior court's grant of a section 995 motion based on the conclusion a search or seizure was unreasonable, we 'must draw all presumptions in favor of the magistrate's factual determinations, and we must uphold the magistrate's express or implied findings if they are supported by substantial evidence. [Citations.]' [Citation.] 'We judge the legality of the search by "'measur[ing] the facts, as found by the [magistrate], against the constitutional standard of reasonableness." [Citation.] Thus, in determining whether the search or seizure was reasonable on the facts found by the magistrate, we exercise our independent judgment. [Citation.]" [Citation.]' (People v. Magee (2011) 194 Cal.App.4th 178, 182–183 . . . .)" (People v. Tacardon (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 89, 96; petition granted.)

"'A perfunctory request, buried amongst the footnotes, does not preserve an argument on appeal.' Coalition for a Healthy Cal. v. FCC, 87 F.3d 383, 384 n.2 (9th Cir. 1996). Thus, had the government argued that the issue was forfeited, we would have been compelled to agree. In that case, we could have considered (the defendant's) argument only if he could show good cause for not properly raising it in his motion to suppress. United States v. Guerrero, 921 F.3d 895, 897-98 (9th Cir. 2019) (per curiam) see Fed. R. Crim. P. 12(c)(3)." (United States and Ngumezi (9th Cir. 2020) 980 F.3rd 1285, 1287-1288; noting that because the government failed to argue that the defendant had waived a search issue, and then addressing it on its merits, it was the government that waived making a forfeiture argument on appeal.

But the government has not made a forfeiture argument. Instead, it has addressed the issue on the merits and invited us to do so as well. We conclude that the government has forfeited any claim of forfeiture, so we proceed to consider the merits. (United States v. Doe (9th Cir. 1995) 53 F.3rd 1081, 1083.)

In federal court, 18 U.S.C. § 3731 authorizes an interlocutory appeal "from a decision or order of a district court suppressing or excluding evidence . . . in a criminal proceeding." The section specifically states that an appeal must be filed "within thirty days after the decision, judgment or order. . . ." Under authority of this section, the Supreme Court has held that an order appealable by the United States in a criminal case is not final until a pending rehearing petition is resolved. (United States v. Healy (1964) 376 U.S. 75, 78 [84 S.Ct. 553; 11 L.Ed.2nd 527].) This includes a "motion for reconsideration." (United States v. Mora-Alcaraz (9th Cir. 2021) 986 F.3rd 1151, 1155.)

Juvenile Proceedings: The Juvenile Court equivalent of a motion to suppress is contained in Wel. & Inst. Code § 700.1:

Any motion to suppress as evidence any tangible or intangible thing obtained as a result of an unlawful search or seizure shall be heard prior to the attachment of jeopardy and shall be heard at least five judicial days after receipt of notice by the people unless the people are willing to waive a portion of this time.

If the court grants a motion to suppress prior to the attachment of jeopardy over the objection of the people, the court shall enter a judgment of dismissal as to all counts of the petition except those counts on which the prosecuting attorney elects to proceed pursuant to W&I Code § 701.

If, prior to the attachment of jeopardy, opportunity for this motion did not exist or the person alleged to come within the provisions of the juvenile court law was not aware of the grounds for the motion, that person shall have the right to make this motion during the course of the proceeding under W&I Code § 701.

Misdemeanors: A magistrate is not empowered to dismiss a misdemeanor charge (carrying a dirk or dagger, in this case) following a hearing under P.C. § 991 because section 991 does not vest the trial court with the discretion to consider, as part of its determination of probable cause, whether the misdemeanant defendant's detention prior to arrest complied with the Fourth Amendment's requirement that the detention be based on reasonable suspicion. P.C. § 1538.5 is the exclusive pretrial vehicle to test the unreasonableness of a search or seizure. (People v. Barajas (2018) 30 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1.)

One-Hearing Rule:

General Rule: "As a general rule, a defendant is allowed only one pretrial suppression motion under section 1538.5 in the superior court, and that court is without jurisdiction to hear a second motion." (People v. Arebalos-Cabrera (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 179, 191; quoting People v. Nelson (1981) 126 Cal.App.3rd 978, 981.)

Note: This rule does not take into account a suppression motion made during the preliminary examination; see above.

Exceptions:

An exception to this rule occurs, however, when a defendant has not had a full and fair opportunity to litigate his motion to suppress. (People v. Arebalos-Cabrera, supra., at pp. 191-194; the Court finding that defendant failed to show any newly discovered evidence or raise any new issues upon his attempt to relitigate a previously denied motion to suppress.)

The trial court initially granted defendant's motion to suppress based on one ground and did not consider an alternate ground. When that ruling was later reversed, the trial court considered the alternate ground in a renewed suppression hearing and granted the motion again. The Supreme Court held that the trial court correctly considered the alternate ground on remand: "[D]efendant was deprived of an opportunity for a full hearing on the merits of his entire motion to suppress as initially made. Consequently the renewed hearing amounted to neither consideration of a second section 1538.5 motion nor a relitigation of his original motion, but rather a completion of the full hearing to which he was entitled." (People v. Brooks (1980) 26 Cal.3rd 471.)

The trial court limited the issues in a motion to suppress based on a local procedural rule. When the defendant attempted to supplement his motion to raise the excluded issues, the trial court denied defendant's request for lack of jurisdiction. On appeal, the Court held that the trial court erred by limiting the issues in the first motion to suppress. The Court also held that the trial court erred by refusing the defendant's effort to supplement his motion: "Like the defendant in Brooks, Smith 'was deprived of an opportunity for a full hearing on the merits of his entire motion to suppress.' [Citation.] . . . Because Smith was entitled to fully litigate the adequacy of the prosecution's inventory search justification, the trial court erred by denying Smith's supplemental section 1538.5 motion that specifically set forth this infringement of his right to a full hearing." (*People v. Smith (2002) 95 Cal.App.4th 283.)

Fruit of the Poisonous Tree: The evidence that is suppressed is extended to the "indirect" as well as the "direct products" of the constitutional violation; i.e., the "fruit of the poisonous tree." (Wong Sun v. United States (1963) 371 U.S. 471, 484 [83 S.Ct. 407; 9 L.Ed.2nd 441].) (See "Fruit of the Poisonous Tree," under "The Constitutional Basis For Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 1), above.)

Rule: "Evidence obtained by such illegal action of the police is 'fruit of the poisonous tree,' warranting application of the exclusionary rule if, 'granting establishment of the primary illegality, the evidence to which instant objection is made has been come at by exploitation of the illegality or instead by means sufficiently distinguishable to be purged of the primary taint.'" (Emphasis added; United States v. Crawford (9th Cir. 2004) 372 F.3rd 1048, 1054, quoting Brown v. Illinois (1975) 422 U.S. 590, at p. 599 [95 S.Ct. 2254; 45 L.Ed.2nd 416].)

Not all courts are in agreement that such a remedy is reserved exclusively for constitutional violations. (See discussion in United States v. Lombera-Camorlinga (9th Cir. 2000) 206 F.3rd 882, 886-887, and in the dissenting opinion, p. 893.)

"To trigger the exclusionary rule, police conduct must be sufficiently deliberate that exclusion can meaningfully deter it, and sufficiently culpable that such deterrence is worth the price paid by the justice system. As laid out in [the Supreme Court's] cases, the exclusionary rule serves to deter deliberate, reckless, or grossly negligent conduct, or in some circumstances recurring or systemic negligence." (United States v. Jobe (9th Cir. 2019) 933 F.3rd 1074, 1077.)

Examples:

Observations made after an unlawful, warrantless entry into a structure cannot be used to establish probable cause for later obtaining a search warrant. (Murray v. United States (1988) 487 U.S. 533, 540 [108 S.Ct. 2529; 101 L.Ed.2nd 472, 482]; Burrows v. Superior Court (1974) 13 Cal.3rd 238, 251.)

A consent to search given "immediately following an illegal entry or search" is invalid because it "is inseparable from the unlawful conduct." (People v. Roberts (1956) 47 Cal.2nd 374, 377.)

Officers suspected that illegal activity was taking place at a small airstrip near Tucson, Arizona. After receiving a tip, officers stopped a truck leaving the airstrip and searched it without a warrant. The government conceded that this stop was illegal. As a result of the stop, however, the officers learned the identity of the driver and passenger, and began to surveil them, which led to the discovery and seizure of marijuana. The Court held that the marijuana evidence must be suppressed because the illegally obtained identification significantly directed the investigation which led to the marijuana. (United States v. Johns (9th Cir. 1989) 891 F.2nd 243, 245.)

> Note: This case is of questionable continuing validity in that it has subsequently been held that evidence of identity, as with defendant's person itself, is not subject to suppression, "regardless of the nature of the violation leading to his identity." (United States v. Gudino (9th Cir. 2004) 376 F.3rd 997; see also Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Lopez-Mendoza (1984) 468 U.S. 1032, 1039-1040 [104 S.Ct. 3479; 82 L.Ed.2nd 778].)

A consent to enter a residence, obtained immediately after a co-resident's arrest on the front porch and a contemporaneous illegal protective sweep of the residence, held to be invalid as the fruit of the illegal protective sweep. Plain sight observations made inside the residence during the allegedly consensual entry were held to be illegal. (People v. Werner (2012) 207 Cal.App.4th 1195, 1210-1212.)

Where defendant is arrested at some point following an arguably illegal search, and he discards an illegal firearm during that arrest, the fact that defendant attempted to walk away from the officers after the initial illegal search but before discarding the illegal firearm, such fleeing was held to be an intervening factor that dissipates the taint of the illegal search. (United States v. McClendon (9th Cir. 2013) 713 F.3rd 1211, 1217-1218.)

Where defendant was unlawfully arrested, evidence recovered from his person, incriminating statements, and the products of a search warrant that used all the above as part of its probable cause, were subject to being suppressed. (United States v. Nora (9th Cir. 2014) 765 F.3rd 1049, 1052-1060.)

In People v. McCurdy (2014) 59 Cal.4th 1063, at pp. 1092-1093, the Court ruled that nothing in the record suggested that any assumed illegality concerning defendant's arrest, which resulted in defendant's picture in the news media, influenced a witness's willingness to identify defendant as the man he saw with an 8-year-old abduction and murder victim outside a grocery store on the day she disappeared. Law enforcement did not generate the publicity over this case. And the witness came forward on his own, testifying voluntarily. As such, this testimony was too attenuated from any perceived illegality in defendant's arrest and was not subject to suppression.

In an asset forfeiture proceeding dealing with $167,070 seized from defendant's motorhome, it was held that the search of defendant's vehicle following the second half of a "coordinated traffic stop" (i.e., a first stop which itself lasted nearly half an hour, but didn't reveal any legal cause to search defendant's motorhome, followed by a second traffic stop set up with a drug-sniffing dog available to conduct a sniff around the exterior of the motorhome) violated the Fourth Amendment. Because the dog sniff, which gave the officer in the second stop the necessary probable cause to obtain a search warrant to search defendant's motorhome followed directly in an unbroken chain from the first prolonged traffic stop, the seized currency was held to be the "fruit of the poisonous tree" and was properly suppressed by the trial court. (United States v. Gorman (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 706, 714-719; as amended at 2017 U.S. App. LEXIS 18610.)

Exceptions: Three of the recognized exceptions to the use of the "Fruit of the Poisonous Tree Doctrine," as discussed in Utah v. Strieff (2016) 579 U.S. 232 [136 S.Ct. 2056; 195 L.Ed.2nd 400], United States v. Gorman (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 706, 718; as amended at 2017 U.S. App. LEXIS 18610, and People v. Marquez (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 402, 412-414, involve the causal relationship between the unconstitutional act and the discovery of evidence:

1. The Independent Source Doctrine: The independent source doctrine asks the question whether despite an initial illegality on the part of searching law enforcement officers, the evidence actually was "obtained independently from activities untainted by the initial illegality." If so, then the evidence is admissible. (See Murray v. United States (1988) 487 U. S. 533, 537, [108 S.Ct. 2529; 101 L.

Ed.2nd 472]; see "Independent Source Doctrine," under "Searches With a Search Warrant" (Chapter 10), below.)

2. The Inevitable Discovery Doctrine: Evidence that would have been discovered even without the unconstitutional source. (See Nix v. Williams (1984) 467 U. S. 431, 443-444 [104 S.Ct. 2501; 81 L.Ed.2nd 377]; see "Doctrine of Inevitable Discovery," below.)

3. The Attenuation Doctrine: When the connection between unconstitutional police conduct and the eventual discovery of the evidence in issue is so remote, or has been interrupted by some intervening circumstance, that "the interest protected by the constitutional guarantee that has been violated would not be served by suppression of the evidence obtained." (See Hudson v. Michigan (2006) 547 U.S. 586, 593 [126 S.Ct. 2159; 165 L.Ed.2nd 56]; Utah v. Strieff, supra.)

   "(E)ven when there is a Fourth Amendment violation, (the) exclusionary rule does not apply when the costs of exclusion outweigh its deterrent benefits. In some cases, for example, the link between the unconstitutional conduct and the discovery of the evidence is too attenuated to justify suppression." (Utah v. Strieff, supra; existence of an arrest warrant "attenuated the taint" between an unlawful detention and the discovery of evidence incident to the arrest on the warrant, at least where the police misconduct was not flagrant.)

   In Strieff, the Utah Supreme Court declined to apply the attenuation doctrine because it read the U.S. Supreme Court's precedents as applying the doctrine only "to circumstances involving an independent act of a defendant's 'free will' (such as) in confessing to a crime or consenting to a search." (2015 UT 2, 357 P. 3rd 532 at p. 544.) The Strieff Court specifically disagreed with this interpretation. "The attenuation doctrine evaluates the causal link between the government's unlawful act and the discovery of evidence, which often has nothing to do with a defendant's actions. Per the Supreme Court; "the logic of (its) prior attenuation cases is not limited to independent acts by the defendant." (Id. at p. 238.)

   See also People v. Brendlin (2008) 45 Cal.4th 262, where an illegal traffic stop did not require the suppression of evidence where the defendant had an outstanding arrest warrant. The discovery of an arrest warrant may, depending upon the circumstances, be sufficient of an intervening circumstance to allow for the admissibility of the evidence seized incident to arrest despite the fact that the original detention was illegal.

Defendant, the passenger in a motor vehicle stopped for illegally tinted windows (V.C. § 26708(a)), was arrested on an outstanding arrest warrant. Even had the traffic stop had been illegal, the discovery of the arrest warrant was sufficient to attenuate any possible taint of an illegal traffic stop. (People v. Carter (2010) 182 Cal.App.4th 522, 529-530.)

See also People v. Durant (2012) 205 Cal.App.4th 57, finding that a suspect's Fourth waiver (subjecting him to warrantless search and seizures) attenuated the taint of an illegal traffic stop, and People v. Bates (2013) 222 Cal.App.4th 60, 69-71, and People v. Kidd (2019) 36 Cal.App.5th 12, 23, both ruling to the contrary.

> The Bates Court both declined to adopt the Durant Court's reasoning, and differentiated the cases on their respective facts. (Ibid.)

A second traffic stop which resulted in a search of a vehicle, even if the stop is based upon an observed traffic violation, is not attenuated from an earlier illegally prolonged detention when the search was conducted pursuant to information obtained during the prior stop and illegally prolonged detention. (United States v. Gorman (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 706, 714-719; as amended at 2017 U.S. App. LEXIS 18610.)

Also, when information is contained in the affidavit which is the product of a prior illegal search, that information may be excised and the remainder retested for probable cause. "A search warrant is not 'rendered invalid merely because some of the evidence included in the affidavit is tainted.' (Citation) The warrant remains valid if, after excising the tainted evidence, the affidavit's 'remaining untainted evidence would provide a neutral magistrate with probable cause to issue a warrant.'" (United States v. Job (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 852, 863-864; citing United States v. Nora (9th Cir. 2014) 765 F.3rd 1049, 1058; and quoting United States v. Reed (9th Cir. 1994) 15 F.3rd 928, 933.)

What was determined to be the illegal collection of DNA from defendant in 2006 was held to be sufficiently attenuated from a "cold hit" in 2008 with DNA left at the scene of a robbery and a subsequent consensual collection of DNA from defendant himself. (People v. Marquez (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 402, 412-414; specifically:

- Two years between the two independent collections.

- Three intervening arrests and a probation order, after each of which defendant was ordered by a court to provide DNA samples (which did not get collected, but only because it was believed by law enforcement that his DNA was already on record).

- No improper motive on the part of law enforcement in the collection of the original (inadmissible) DNA sample.

However, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has held that a mere passage of time, even a significant amount, does not necessarily attenuate the taint of an earlier illegal detention. For instance, after someone at the defendant's address pointed a laser at a police aircraft in flight, officers went to the defendant's home, illegally detained him, interrogated him without Miranda warnings, and after the defendant confessed, seized the laser. Eight months later, an FBI agent approached the defendant outside his home and stated he was there to ask "follow-up" questions about the incident. The defendant repeated his earlier confession. Charged with aiming a laser at an aircraft in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 39A, defendant moved to suppress the inculpatory statements he made to the FBI agent, arguing that the illegality of the first encounter tainted the second. The government did not dispute that the initial encounter violated at least the Fourth Amendment. Agreeing with the defendant, the Ninth Circuit explained that when a confession results from certain types of Fourth Amendment violations, the government must go beyond proving that the later confession was voluntary. It must also show a sufficient break in events to undermine the inference that the confession was caused by the Fourth Amendment violation. After considering together the relevant factors as set forth in Brown v. Illinois (1975) 422 U.S. 590 [95 S.Ct. 2254; 45 L.Ed.2nd 416 (1975), the panel was persuaded that the second encounter, introduced as a "follow up" to the first, was directly linked to the original illegalities. Per the Court, although significant time had passed, and the record does not show that the officers' conduct was purposeful or flagrant, the eight-month time period was collapsed by the agent opening the conversation by stating that he was following up on the original investigation. Without other intervening circumstances that act to separate the incidents, the Court concluded that the government failed to carry its burden of proving that the defendant's statements were sufficiently attenuated from the illegal detention and seizure eight months prior. (United States v. Bocharnikov (9th Cir. 2020) 966 F.3rd 1000.)

After chasing a wanted suspect to defendant's home, and arresting him when he tried to escape via a back window, officers entered defendant's home without a warrant and without consent for the stated purposes of checking the welfare of anyone inside (i.e., the "emergency aid exception") and/or as a "protective sweep" for other suspects. While inside, officers contacted defendant, held him at gunpoint, handcuffed him, and took him outside. Once outside, it was discovered that defendant was subject to probationary Fourth waiver, and subject to warrantless searches. Officers then reentered his home and conducted a full search, discovering methamphetamine and other incriminating evidence. In a previous appeal, both reasons for entering defendant's home were held to have been in violation of the Fourth Amendment, as was defendant's arrest, in an unpublished decision. (See United States v. Garcia (9th Cir. 2018) 749 F. App'x 516.) Upon returning the case to the trial court for a determination of whether the "attenuation doctrine" applied; i.e., whether the discovery of the suspicionless search condition was an intervening circumstance that broke the causal chain between the initial unlawful entry and the discovery of the evidence supporting defendant's conviction, the trial court held that it did. In a second appeal, the Ninth Circuit disagreed and ruled that the evidence should have been suppressed after finding that all three of the factors as discussed in Utah v. Strieff, supra, favored suppression. (United States v. Garcia (9th Cir. 2020) 974 F.3rd 1071.)

After an officer initiated a traffic stop of Defendant and recovered approximately six pounds of methamphetamine from the vehicle Defendant was driving, he was charged with one count of possession with intent to distribute 500 grams or more of methamphetamine. Denial of defendant's motion to suppress, pursuant to the Fourth Amendment, was held to be proper because although the deputy did not have reasonable suspicion or probable cause to initiate the traffic stop, the unlawful stop was sufficiently attenuated by the discovery of defendant's expired license and lack of insurance. (United States v. Forjan (8th Cir. 2023) 66 F.4th 739.)

See "Factors," under "The Taint has been Attenuated," below, for the "relevant factors" as set out in Brown and other cases.

See also "Intervening (or Superseding) Circumstances," under "Use of Force" (Chapter 6), above.

And see "Fruit of the Poisonous Tree," under "The Constitutional Basis For Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 1), above.

Problem: The "Coordinated Traffic Stop:"

In an asset forfeiture proceeding dealing with $167,070 seized from defendant's motorhome, it was held that the search of defendant's vehicle following the second half of a "coordinated traffic stop" (i.e., a first stop which itself lasted nearly half an hour, but didn't reveal any legal cause to search defendant's motorhome, followed by a second traffic stop set up with a drug-sniffing dog available to conduct a sniff around the exterior of the motorhome) violated the Fourth Amendment. Because the dog sniff, which gave the officer in the second stop the necessary probable cause to obtain a search warrant to search defendant's motorhome followed directly in an unbroken chain from the first prolonged traffic stop, the seized currency was held to be the "fruit of the poisonous tree" and was properly suppressed by the trial court. (United States v. Gorman (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 706, 714-719; as amended at 2017 U.S. App. LEXIS 18610.)

The Gorman Court noted at p. 719: "Here, the officers' impermissible gamesmanship is precisely what the Constitution proscribes. . . . The coordinated action at issue in Gorman's case offers a prime illustration of the value of the 'fruit of the poisonous tree' analysis. The analysis allows us to see the officers' conduct in Gorman's case as what it is: a single integrated effort by police to circumvent the Constitution by making two coordinated stops. When the result of one stop is communicated and, on that basis, another stop is planned and implemented, the coordinated stops become, in effect, one integrated stop that must as a whole satisfy the Constitution's requirements. An illegal police venture cannot be made legal simply by dividing it into two coordinated stops. (Citations omitted.) The Constitution guards against this kind of gamesmanship because the Fourth Amendment's protections extend beyond the margins of one particular police stop and can extend to the integrated and purposeful conduct of the state."

Problem: The Naked Body and Privacy Rights:

Plaintiff had alleged sufficient facts to state an invasion of bodily privacy claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 when she alleged that three police officers took and distributed nude photos of her when she came to the station to report that she had been assaulted. According to the allegations in the complaint, the officers had insisted that it was necessary to take photos of the plaintiff for her case, and directed her to undress in a room of the police station despite the plaintiff's objections and insistence that she did not have bruises that required her to be photographed in the nude. Recognizing that the "naked body" is the most "basic subject of privacy," the Court concluded that the woman had alleged a valid claim that the officers' actions violated her privacy rights under the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause. (York v. Story (9th Cir. 1963) 324 F.2nd 450, 452, 455-456.)

Male inmates sued the department of corrections for allowing female guards to observe them in the showers and while using the restroom, claiming a violation of their right to privacy. The Court held that there was no violation of the right to bodily privacy because the inmates had a reduced privacy interest, the female guards observed the inmates naked only from a distance, and the department's policies were, on the whole, reasonable. (Grummett v. Rushen (9th Cir. 1985) 779 F.2nd 491, 494-496.)

A male probation officer violated a female probationer's right to bodily privacy when the male probation officer observed the female probationer urinating in a bathroom stall during a uranalysis test. (Sepulveda v. Ramirez (9th Cir. 1992) 967 F.2nd 1413, 1416.)

Qualified immunity for an Internal Revenue Service Agent was properly denied in an action alleging that the agent violated plaintiff's Fourth Amendment right to bodily privacy when, during the lawful execution of a search warrant at plaintiff's home, the agent (a female) escorted plaintiff (also a female) to the bathroom and monitored her while she relieved herself. Given the scope, manner, justification, and place of the search, a reasonable jury could conclude that the agent's actions were unreasonable and violated plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights. The agent's general interests in preventing destruction of evidence and promoting officer safety did not justify the scope or manner of the intrusion into plaintiff's most basic subject of privacy; her naked body. A reasonable officer in the agent's position would have known that such a significant intrusion into bodily privacy, in the absence of legitimate government justification, was unlawful. (Ioane v. Hodges (9th Cir. 2019) 939 F.3rd 945, 956-957.)

A pretrial detainee stated a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 claim for a Fourteenth Amendment due process violation, stemming from the deputies' act of walking him through public areas of a hospital completely unclothed except for an orange pair of mittens, where plaintiff alleged facts supporting the inference that the public exposure of his naked body was wholly unjustifiable, and the court could reasonably infer from the long (2 hour) delay in transporting him that the deputies' actions were not based on a medical need so pressing that they could not spare a little time to obtain a dignified covering. The deputies were held not to be entitled to qualified immunity. (Colbruno v. Kessler (10th Cir. CO. 2019) 928 F.3rd 1156.)

Defendants, a juvenile correctional officer and his supervisor, were improperly granted summary judgment by the trial court on a juvenile detainee's 42 U.S.C § 1983 Fourteenth Amendment claims because the officer violated the detainee's right to privacy when he allegedly watched her shower multiple times. A jury could find that the officer's alleged conduct in touching her without consent and making sexual comments to her violated her right to bodily integrity. The detainee asserted facts from which a jury could find that the officer violated the detainee's right to be free from punishment. The officer was not entitled to qualified immunity. A jury could also find that the officer's supervisor knew or reasonably should have known of the violations and failed to act to prevent them. (Vasquez v. County of Kern (9th Cir. 2020) 949 F.3rd 1153.)

Problem: Key in a Lock: Whether or not police using a key in a lock, where the lock is otherwise exposed to public view (e.g., the front door to a suspect's house), is a search has been the subject of a difference of opinion. (See People v. Robinson (2012) 208 Cal.App.4th 232, 242-255; discussing the conflicting cases, but noting that it need not be decided in this case because even if it was a search, the search was not unreasonable because when balanced with the governmental interest it served, the intrusion was minimal.

Held to be a Search:

United States v. Concepcion (7th Cir. 1991) 942 F.2nd 1170, 1172.: Concluding that testing a key in an apartment door lock was a search. "A keyhole contains information—information about who has access to the space beyond. As the [F]ourth [A]mendment protects private information rather than formal definitions of property, [citations], the lock is a potentially protected zone. And as the tumbler of a lock is not accessible to strangers . . . , the use of an instrument to examine its workings (that is, a key) looks a lot like a search. . . . [¶] Because the agents obtain information from the inside of the lock, which is both used frequently by the owner and not open to public view, it seems irresistible that inserting and turning the key is a 'search.'"

However, the Court held that the Fourth Amendment was not violated in that the insertion of the key into the door lock was such a "minimal intrusion." (Id., at p. 1173.) (See "Minimal Intrusion Exception," below.)

Portillo-Reyes (9th Cir. 1975) 529 F.2d 844, 848: Putting a key into the door lock of a Volkswagen automobile held to be "the beginning of the search" and thus the "reasonable expectancy of privacy" doctrine of Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347 [88 S.Ct. 507; 19 L.Ed.2nd 576] applies.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal had previously found that the warrantless use of a key to ascertain ownership or control over a motor vehicle was not unreasonable. "Fitting the key into the car door lock did not give police any knowledge about the contents inside the vehicle, but revealed only that (defendant) Maggio had access to that car. Given the strong governmental interests in investigating drug crimes, and Maggio's minimal privacy expectation in the lock on a car door, the police conduct here was reasonable under the circumstances. (fn. omitted) Therefore, inserting the key into the car door lock for the purpose of identifying Maggio was not an unreasonable search prohibited by the Fourth Amendment. (fn. omitted)" Thus, although the warrantless use of a key in a lock is in fact a search, it is generally held not to be unreasonable, and thus lawful. (United States v. $109,179 in United States Currency (2000) 228 F.3rd 1080, 1087-1088.)

But see United States v. Dixon (9th Cir. 2020) 984 F.3rd 814, below.

See also United States v. Baker (9th Cir. 2023) 58 F.4th 1109, where the seizure of the key, before using its electronics to beep defendant's nearby vehicle, may itself be illegal.

Held Not to be a Search:

United States v. Salgado (6th Cir. 2001) 250 F.3rd 438, 456: "(T)he mere insertion of a key into a(n apartment door) lock, by an officer who lawfully possesses the key and is in a location where he has a right to be, to determine whether the key operates the lock, is not a search."

United States v. Hawkins (1st Cir. 1998) 139 F.3rd 29, 33, fn. 1: "(I)nsertion of a key into the lock of a storage compartment for the purpose of identifying ownership does not constitute a search."

United States v. Lyons (1st Cir. 1990) 898 F.2nd 210, 212-213: Insertion of a key into padlock of storage unit for purpose of identifying ownership did not infringe on any reasonable expectation of privacy.

United States v. DeBardeleben (6th Cir. 1948) 740 F.2nd 440, 444: The defendant had no "reasonable expectation of privacy in the identity of his vehicle." A set of car keys lawfully found in defendant's possession after his arrest were found to fit the door and trunk locks of a car found in a parking lot and suspected to belong to defendant.

Mathis v. State (Alaska 1989) 778 P.2nd 1161, 1165: "Insertion of the key did not constitute a search of the locker, but merely an identification of it as belonging to the [defendants]."

People v. Carroll (1973) 12 Ill.App.3rd 869, 875-876: Insertion and turning of a key in the front door of defendant's apartment held not to be a search.

See also United States v. Correa (7th Cir. IL 2018) 908 F.3rd 208, where the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeal ruled that using a lawfully seized garage door opener, randomly, while looking for an arrestee's residence, was held not to be a search at all, and thus not a violation of the Fourth Amendment.

Possible Resolution of the Issue:

It is arguable that the recent United States Supreme Court case of United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S.Ct. 945; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911], reemphasizing the Common Law theory that a trespassory intrusion, where the government physically intrudes into a constitutionally protected area, is a search, and subject to the restrictions of the Fourth Amendment, arguably tips the scale towards finding that any use of a key in a lock belonging to a defendant is in fact a search. (See People v. Robinson (2012) 208 Cal.App.4th 232, 243, fn. 11, & 244.)

See United States v. Dixon (9th Cir. 2020) 984 F.3rd 814, 820-821, where this is exactly what the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal did; applying Jones' "property based analysis" to using a key on a vehicle without probable cause for the purpose of determining whether defendant had control over that vehicle, thus reversing its own prior decision of United States v. $109,179 in United States Currency (2000) 228 F.3rd 1080, above.

However, in another post-Jones case, the Eight Circuit Court of Appeal concluded that a police detective did not commit a trespass when he located a suspect's car in a parking lot by using the suspect's key fob to trigger the car's alarm. The court reasoned that the detective had lawfully seized the key fob and the "mere transmission of electric signals alone" through the key fob was not a trespass on the car. (United States v. Cowan (8th Cir. 2012) 674 F.3rd 947, 956.)

Problem: Street Light Cameras:

The City of San Diego has installed what the City refers to as its "City IQ Streetlight Camera" system. The cameras are situated so they cannot peer into businesses or residences, thus capturing only the "public right of way." They are fixed position and located throughout downtown San Diego and other parts of the city. The devices capture "environmental data, like temperature, humidity, pressure, … traffic data, like car speeds, car counts, pedestrian data, bicycle data, and even video data." The video feature creates high quality wide lens footage, but the devices do not record sound and do not act as gunshot detectors because the City did not "enable the microphones." Footage is stored on each camera's hard drive for five days; if it is not retrieved within five days, the camera records over the footage. Defendant Kevin Eugene Cartwright was convicted of first-degree murder with special circumstances, and other offense. On appeal, defendant contended that the trial court erred by denying his motion to suppress video footage from the City of San Diego's "City IQ" streetlight camera program and evidence derived from that footage. The Fourth Appellate District affirmed the trial court's decision. The court held that defendant did not have an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy when he traversed a public right of way in downtown San Diego in the middle of a business day. The court found that accessing the recordings from the City's streetlight cameras did not amount to a search within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment and, consequently, did not require a warrant. The court distinguished the cameras in this case from the aerial surveillance images and integrated police department systems addressed in other precedents, stating that the City's camera program stands alone and does not reveal the transit patterns of people throughout the county. The court concluded that the police did not conduct a "search" when they accessed footage from the City's streetlight cameras and, accordingly, there was no violation of the Fourth Amendment. (People v. Cartwright (2024) 99 Cal.App.5th 98.)

Exceptions to the Exclusionary Rule:

Private persons:

Rule: A private person, not associated or working with law enforcement, may violate a subject's constitutional rights without threat of suppression in that the constitutional protections apply to government searches only. (People v. Johnson (1947) 153 Cal.App.2nd 873.)

"Historically, courts have consistently held that the Fourth Amendment's prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure does not apply to searches by private citizens." (People v. North (1981) 29 Cal.3rd 509, 514.) Additionally, if a government search is preceded by a private search, the government search does not implicate the Fourth Amendment as long as it does not exceed the scope of the initial private search. (United States v. Jacobsen (1984) 466 U.S. 109, 115–117 [80 L.Ed.2nd 85; 104 S. Ct. 1652]; see also Walter v. United States (1980) 447 U.S. 649, 657 [65 L.Ed.2nd 410; 100 S.Ct. 2395]; and People v. Wilson (2020) 56 Cal.App.5th 128, 141-142.)

Examples:

A licensed private investigator who is acting in furtherance of a private interest, rather than for a law enforcement or government purpose, is not subject to the restrictions of the Fourth Amendment. (People v. Mangiefico (1972) 25 Cal.App.3rd 1041, 1046-1047; People v. De Juan (1985) 171 Cal.App.3rd 1110, 1119.)

*Bail bondsperson*s and "Bounty Hunters," although allowed to take a defendant into custody (P.C. §§ 847.5, 1300, 1301), they are acting as private citizens and are not subject to the Exclusionary Rule. (People v. Houle (1970) 13 Cal.App.3rd 892, 895; Landry v. A-Able Bonding, Inc. (1996) 75 F.3rd 200, 203-205.)

Even an off-duty police officer "may" not be acting as a law enforcement officer in conducting a search, when he acts in his capacity as a private citizen, and through mere curiosity. (People v. Wachter (1976) 58 Cal.App.3rd 311, 920-923; see also People v. Peterson (1972) 23 Cal.App.3rd 883, 893; off-duty police trainee acting out of concern for his own safety.)

Exception to Private Persons Exception: "Agents of Law Enforcement:"

"Private action may be attributed to the state . . . if 'there is such a "close nexus between the State and the challenged action" that seemingly private behavior "may be fairly treated as that of the State itself."' . . . Such a nexus may exist when, for instance, private action 'results from the State's exercise of "coercive power,"' or 'when the State provides "significant encouragement, either overt or covert,"' to the private actor." (George v. Edholm (9th Cir. 2014) 752 F.3rd 1206, 1215-1217; quoting Brentwood Acad. v. Tenn. Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass'n. (2001) 531 U.S. 288, 295-296 [148 L.Ed.2nd 807]; officers held responsible for E.R. doctor's warrantless removal of a bindle of cocaine from the plaintiff's rectum.)

Anyone acting at the request of, or under the direction of, a law enforcement officer, is an agent of the police and is held to the same standards as the police. (People v. Fierro (1965) 236 Cal.App.2nd 344, 347.)

Seizure of blood by a state hospital, working with law enforcement (i.e., an "agent" of law enforcement), taking and testing blood from expectant mothers and testing for drugs, held to be an illegal governmental search. (Ferguson v. City of Charleston (2001) 532 U.S. 67 [121 S.Ct. 1281; 149 L.Ed.2nd 205].)

In determining whether a person is acting as a police agent, two factors must be considered: (1) Whether the government knew of and acquiesced in the private search; and (2) whether the private individual intended to assist law enforcement or, instead, had some other independent motivation. The first factor requires evidence of more than mere knowledge and passive acquiescence by a police officer before finding an agency relationship. It takes some evidence of a police officer's control or encouragement. As for the second factor, a dual purpose (e.g., to help the police and himself) is not enough. (People v. Wilkinson (2008) 163 Cal.App.4th 1554, 1564-1569; also rejecting California's pre-Proposition 8 stricter standards.)

A civil rights action pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 was held to be proper against non-law enforcement employees of a private corporation that operated a federal prison under contract. (Pollard v. GEO Group, Inc. (9th Cir. 2010) 607 F.3rd 583.)

An employee of the defendant who assisted the government by collecting fraudulent documents belonging to the defendant may have violated the Fourth Amendment as a government agent even though her motive may have been simply to "do the right thing." (United States v.

Mazzarella (9th Cir. 2015) 784 F.3rd 53; evidentiary hearing on the issue required.)

While acknowledging that Title 18 U.S.C. § 2258A(a) requires an electronic communication service provider (ESP) to report to the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) any apparent violation of child pornography law it discovers, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals held that despite this reporting requirement, Section 2258A does not require ESP's to seek out and discover violations. Accordingly, the court held that Google did not act as an agent of the government simply because it chose to scan its users' emails voluntarily, out of its own private business interest of eradicating child pornography from its platform. Passing this information along to law enforcement held to be lawful. (United States v. Ringland (8th Cir. 2020) 966 F.3rd 731.)

Federal law did not transform an electronic communication service providers' (ESPs; Yahoo and Facebook) private searches into governmental action because the Stored Communications Act and the Protect Our Children Act of 2008 did not have the clear indices of the Government's encouragement, endorsement, and participation sufficient to implicate the Fourth Amendment. There was insufficient governmental involvement in the ESPs' private searches of defendant's accounts to trigger Fourth Amendment protection because there was no evidence law enforcement was involved in or participated in the investigations, and the ESPs investigated the accounts to further their own legitimate, independent motivations. Defendant did not have a legitimate expectation of privacy in the limited digital data sought in the government's subpoenas. They did not request any communication content from his accounts. (United States v. Rosenow (2022) 33 F.4th 529.)

Fire Department Officials:

Fire department officials, while performing their duties in investigating the cause, or looking for the source, of a fire, are held to the same standards as law enforcment officials. (Michigan v. Tyler (1978) 436 U.S. 499, 503 [98 S.Ct. 1942; 56 L.Ed.2nd 486]; "(A)ny entry onto fire-damaged private property by fire or police officials is subject to the warrant requirements of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments." (Italics added.)

Although not raised as an issue in the case, it is noted that in People v. Nunes (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 1, the Court applied that standard exclusionary rules to a search by a fire department caption.

The "Good Faith" Exception: In those cases where enforcing the "Exclusionary Rule" would not advance its remedial purposes, evidence seized unlawfully will not be suppressed. (Illinois v. Krull (1987) 480 U.S. 340, 347 [94 L.Ed.2nd 364, 373]; United States v. Leon (1984) 468 U.S. 897, 920-921 [104 S.Ct. 3405; 82 L.Ed.2nd 677, 697]; Herring v. United States (2009) 555 U.S. 135 [129 S.Ct. 695; 172 L.Ed.2nd 496]; United States v. Needham (9th Cir. 2013) 718 F.3rd 1190; 1194; People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 766-767.)

"As with any remedial device, the (exclusionary) rule's application has been restricted to those instances where its remedial objectives are thought most efficaciously served." (Arizona v. Evans (1995) 514 U.S. 1, 11 [131 L.Ed.2nd 34; 115 S. Ct. 1185].)

See People v. Lepere (2023) 91 Cal.App.5th 727, 735, where the Court notes that an officer's good faith reliance upon the validity of a search warrant will excuse a warrant that later shown to be thin in its probable cause.

Also see "Good Faith," below, and "Mistaken Belief in Existence of Probable Cause to Arrest or Search, an Arrest Warrant, or that a Fourth Waiver Exists, Based upon Erroneous Information Received from Various Sources," under "Arrests" (Chapter 5), above.

The Taint has been Attenuated: "(G)ranting establishment of the primary illegality," whether or not the resulting evidence is subject to suppression is a question of whether "the evidence . . . has been come at by exploitation of that illegality or instead by means sufficiently distinguishable to be purged of the primary taint." (Wong Sun v. United States (1963) 371 U.S. 471, 487-488 [83 S.Ct. 407; 9 L.Ed.2nd 441, 455].)

Factors: In determining whether the "primary taint" (i.e., an illegal search, detention or arrest) has been sufficiently "purged" requires consideration of three factors:

- The "Temporal Proximity" between the illegal act and the resulting evidence.

"Substantial time" must have elapsed between an unlawful act and when the evidence is obtained. (Kaupp v. Texas (2003) 538 U.S. 626, 633 [123 S.Ct. 1843; 155 L.Ed.2nd 814, 822].)

Less than two hours between an unconstitutional arrest and defendant's confession held not to be sufficient time to attenuate the taint. (Brown v. Illinois (1975) 422 U.S. 590, 604 [95 S.Ct. 2254; 45 L.Ed.2nd 416].)

- The presence of any "Intervening Circumstances" (e.g., an outstanding arrest warrant; see Utah v. Strieff (2016) 579 U.S. 232, 238-242 [136 S.Ct. 2056, 2060-2064; 195 L.Ed.2nd 400].); and

- The "Purpose and Flagrancy" of the official misconduct.

"For the violation to be flagrant, more severe police misconduct is required than the mere absence of proper cause for the seizure." (Utah v. Strieff, supra, at pp. 241-243.)

See, e.g., Kaupp v. Texas (2003) 538 U.S. 626, 633 [123 S.Ct. 1843; 155 L.Ed.2nd 814, 822]; finding flagrant violation where a warrantless arrest was made in the arrestee's home after police were denied a warrant and at least some officers knew they lacked probable cause: See also Taylor v. Alabama (1982) 457 U.S. 687, 690 [102 S.Ct. 2664; 73 L.Ed.2nd 314, 319]; United States v. Crawford (9th Cir. 2003) 323 F.3rd 700, 719-722; Brown v. Illinois (1975) 422 U.S. 590, 600-605 [95 S.Ct. 2254; 45 L.Ed.2nd 416, 425-428]; Utah v. Strieff, supra, People v. Marquez (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 402, 412-413; United States v. Bocharnikov (9th Cir. 2020) 966 F.3rd 1000; and United States v. Garcia (9th Cir. 2020) 974 F.3rd 1071, 1076.)

Miranda: A Miranda admonishment and waiver, alone, is legally insufficient to attenuate the taint of an illegal arrest. (Brown v. Illinois (1975) 422 U.S. 590, 600-605 [95 S.Ct. 2254; 45 L.Ed.2nd 416, 425-428]; Kaupp v. Texas (2003) 538 U.S. 626, 633 [123 S.Ct. 1843; 155 L.Ed.2nd 814, 822].)

Outstanding Arrest Warrant or Fourth Waiver:

> The fact that the defendant had an outstanding arrest warrant, depending upon the circumstances, may be sufficient of an intervening circumstance to allow for the admissibility of the evidence seized incident to arrest despite the fact that the original detention was illegal. (People v. Brendlin (2008) 45 Cal.4th 262; an illegal traffic stop; Utah v. Strieff (2016) 579 U.S. 232, 238-242 [136 S.Ct. 2056; 195 L.Ed.2nd 400]; or a Fourth waiver; People v. Bower (1979) 24 Cal.3rd 638; no.), depending upon the circumstances.)
>
> Defendant, the passenger in a motor vehicle stopped for illegally tinted windows (V.C. § 26708(a)), was arrested on an outstanding arrest warrant. Even had the traffic stop had been illegal, the discovery of the arrest warrant was sufficient to attenuate any possible taint of an illegal traffic stop. (*People v. Carter (2010) 182 Cal.App.4th 522, 529-530.)
>
> See People v. Durant (2012) 205 Cal.App.4th 57, finding that a suspect's Fourth waiver (subjecting him to warrantless search and seizures) attenuated the taint of an illegal traffic stop. But see People v. Bates (2013) 222 Cal.App.4th 60, 69-71, and People v. Kidd (2019) 36 Cal.App.5th 12, 23, both ruling to the contrary.
>
> > The Bates Court both declined to adopt the Durant Court's reasoning, and differentiated the cases on their respective facts. (Ibid.)

When the Purposes of the Exclusionary Rule are Not Served:

> The Exclusionary Rule is not intended to prevent all police misconduct or as a remedy for all police errors. "The use of the exclusionary rule is an exceptional remedy typically reserved for violations of constitutional rights." (United States v. Smith (9th Cir. 1999) 196 F.3rd 1034, 1040.)
>
> "To trigger the exclusionary rule, police conduct must be sufficiently deliberate that exclusion can meaningfully deter it, and sufficiently culpable that such deterrence is worth the price paid by the justice system." (Herring v. United States (2009) 555 U.S. 135 [129 S.Ct. 695; 172 L.Ed.2nd 496]; see also People v. Leal (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1051, 1064-1065.)

> The exclusionary rule should only be used when necessary to deter "deliberate, reckless, or grossly negligent conduct, or in some circumstances, recurring or systematic negligence." (Herring v. United States, at p. 144.)

The seizure of defendant's vehicle based upon it having been reported, and in the computer system, as "stolen," even though the defendant's acquisition of the vehicle did not fit "neatly" into the elements of V.C. § 10851 (i.e., the vehicle was purchased from a dealership, albeit with defendant providing the dealer with fraudulent information in his application for credit, after which defendant ceased making payments), did not make the seizure "unreasonable." There was no bad faith on the part of the detective who entered the vehicle into the computer system as stolen. The seizing officers were entitled to rely upon the information as contained in the computer system. (United States v. Noster (9th Cir. 2009) 590 F.3rd 624, 629-633.)

But note that according to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, a search incident to arrest that was lawful prior to the decision in Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [173 L.Ed.2nd 485; 129 S.Ct. 1710], is still subject to the new rule in Gant, applying the rule retroactively, in any case that was not yet final as of the date of the decision in Gant (April 21, 2009). The officer's good faith in applying the prior rule is irrelevant. (United States v. Gonzalez (9th Cir. 2009) 578 F.3rd 1130.)

> Arizona v. Gant, supra, held that once defendant is arrested and secured, a "search incident to arrest" of the subject's vehicle is not lawful unless there is some reason to believe that evidence relevant to the cause of arrest may be found. (See "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.)

"(E)ven when there is a Fourth Amendment violation, (the) exclusionary rule does not apply when the costs of exclusion outweigh its deterrent benefits. In some cases, for example, the link between the unconstitutional conduct and the discovery of the evidence is too attenuated to justify suppression." (Utah v. Strieff (2016) 579 U.S. 232, 235 [136 S.Ct. 2056; 195 L.Ed.2nd 400]; existence of an arrest warrant "attenuated the taint" between an unlawful detention and the discovery of evidence incident to the arrest on the warrant, at least where the police misconduct was not flagrant.

See "The Exclusionary Rule; Overview" under "The Constitutional Basis For Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 1), above.

The Minimal Intrusion Exception:

After stopping defendant's vehicle for speeding, an officer opened the car's door for the purpose of moving papers on the dash board that were covering the vehicle's VIN number. The U.S. Supreme Court held that this intrusion into the vehicle was in fact a Fourth Amendment search. However, taking into consideration that "the government interest in highway safety (is) served by obtaining the VIN," and that the VIN's location on the dashboard is "ordinarily in plain view of someone outside the automobile," the officer's intrusion involved in conducting such a search it was so "minimal" that it did not require the suppression of the resulting evidence. (New York v. Class (1986) 475 U.S. 106 [106 S.Ct. 960; 89 L.Ed.2nd 81]; noting that had the VIN not been covered by papers, and in plain view from outside the car, there would not have been any legal justification for the intrusion of opening the door and looking inside; at p. 119.)

The United States Supreme Court has recognized that in those instances where there is a "minimal intrusion" into a defendant's privacy rights, suppression of the resulting evidence may not be required. "When faced with special law enforcement needs, diminished expectations of privacy, minimal intrusions, or the like, [it] has found that certain general, or individual, circumstances may render a warrantless search or seizure reasonable." (Italics added; Illinois v. McArthur (2001) 531 U.S. 326, 330 [121 S.Ct. 946; 148 L.Ed.2nd 838].)

"(A)lthough a warrant may be an essential ingredient of reasonableness much of the time, for less intrusive searches it is not" (United States v. Concepcion (7th Cir. 1991) 942 F.2nd 1170, 1172; the issue being whether turning a key in a door lock was a search, but such a minimal intrusion that a search warrant was not necessary.)

Without obtaining a warrant, the police searched the defendant's cellphone for its phone number. The police later used the number to subpoena the phone's call history from the telephone company. Even though there was no urgent need to search the cellphone for its phone number, the Seventh Circuit pointed out "that bit of information might be so trivial that its seizure would not infringe the Fourth Amendment." (United States v. Flores-Lopez (7th Cir. 2012) 670 F.3rd 803, 806-807.)

California's First District Court of Appeal (Div. 5) has found this theory to be a whole separate exception to the search warrant requirement, calling it the "Minimal Intrusion Exception." (People v. Robinson (2012) 208 Cal.App.4th 232, 246-255; "The minimal intrusion exception to the warrant requirement rests on the conclusion that in a very narrow class of 'searches' the privacy interests implicated are 'so small that the officers do not need probable cause; for the search to be reasonable.'" (Id., at p. 247; the use of a key in a lock belonging to a defendant being the issue.)

> Noting that searches of the person, at least absent an officer-safety issue, and searches of a residence, may be outside the scope of the minimal intrusion theory. (Id., at p. 249.)
>
> Also, the fact that the defendant's front door was within the curtilage of his home, which also enjoys Fourth Amendment protection, does not alter the result. With the front door being an area open to the general public, there was no violation in approaching the door and inserting the key. (Id., at p. 253, fn. 23.)
>
> "Although the United States Supreme Court has not clearly articulated the parameters of the exception, federal authorities provide sufficient support for concluding that in appropriate circumstances, the minimal intrusion exception to the warrant requirement may be applied to uphold warrantless searches based on less than probable cause. Moreover, although the high court's decisions in the area have primarily been justified by officer safety concerns (Citations), nothing in the high court's jurisprudence appears to preclude the possibility that a justification less than officer safety could be sufficient to justify an intrusion as minimal as that involved in the present case." (Id., at pp. 249-250; citing, in particular, the Seventh Circuit's decision in United States v. Concepcion (7th Cir. 1991) 942 F.2nd 1170, 1172.)

See also United States v. Thompson (7th Cir. 2016) 842 F.3rd 1002: While recognizing that placing a key found on the detained defendant into the lock of an apartment constituted a Fourth Amendment search, the Court held that because the privacy interest in the information held by the lock (i.e. verification of the key holder's address) is so small, officers did not need a warrant or probable cause to perform such a search.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal had previously found that the warrantless use of a key to ascertain ownership or control over a motor vehicle was not unreasonable. "Fitting the key into the car door lock did not give police any knowledge about the contents inside the vehicle, but revealed only that (defendant) Maggio had access to that car. Given the strong governmental interests in investigating drug crimes, and Maggio's minimal privacy expectation in the lock on a car door, the police conduct here was reasonable under the circumstances. (Fn. omitted) Therefore, inserting the key into the car door lock for the purpose of identifying Maggio was not an unreasonable search prohibited by the Fourth Amendment. (fn. omitted)" (United States v. $109,179 in United States Currency (2000) 228 F.3rd 1080, 1087-1088.)

However, since the Ninth Circuit's decision in United States v. $109,179 in United States Currency, supra, the U.S. Supreme Court decided the case of United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S.Ct. 945; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911], where it was held that the Fourth Amendment protects not only against violations of one's right to privacy, but also against trespassory searches. In light of Jones, the Ninth Circuit overruled its decision in $109,179 in United States Currency and held that using a key in the door lock of a vehicle without prior probable cause, for the purpose of determining whether defendant had control over that vehicle, was a "trespassory search," and a violation of the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Dixon (9th Cir. 2020) 984 F.3rd 814.)

But note that the seizure of the key, before using its electronics to beep defendant's nearby vehicle, may itself be illegal. (See United States v. Baker (9th Cir. 2023) 58 F.4th 1109.)

See "Problem: Key in a Lock," above.

Statutory-Only Violations:

Rule: Relevant evidence will not be suppressed unless suppression is required by the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution, or when a statute violated by law enforcement commands suppression by its terms. (Cal. Const., Art. 1, § 28(d) (subsequently redesignated as section 28(f)(2)); In re Lance W. (1985) 37 Cal.3rd 873, 886-887; People v. Tillery (1989) 211 Cal.App.3rd 1569, 1579; People v. Lepeibet (1992) 4 Cal.App.4th 1208, 1212-1213.)

E.g., see P.C. § 632, which makes it a felony for a person to eavesdrop on, and/or record, a "confidential communication," and that the result of any such eavesdropping will not be admissible in court. (Subds. (a) & (d))

> However, see People v. Guzman (2019) 8 Cal.5th 673, where in a child sexual abuse case, the California Supreme Court held that the state constitutional right to truth in evidence under Cal. Const., art. I, § 28, subd. (f)(2), abrogated the prohibition in Pen. Code, § 632(d), against the admission of secretly recorded conversations in criminal proceedings. The statute did not fit within any express exception and the right to privacy under Cal. Const., art. I, § 1, was not affected. The exclusionary remedy was not revived just because of reenactments and amendments to § 632(d). Such changes did not address the exclusionary remedy. Also, Gov't. Code § 9605 (Effect of Amendment on Time of Enactment; Presumption that Statute Enacted Last Prevails) provides that reenactment under Cal. Const., art. IV, § 9, has no effect on the unchanged portions of an amended statute. Because the exclusionary provision remained abrogated in criminal proceedings, a surreptitious recording was properly admitted into evidence in defendant's trial for committing a lewd and lascivious act upon a child.
>
> In a disciplinary proceeding of two police officers, the admission of a recording from the digital in-car video system (DICVS) that captured the officers' act of failing to assist a commanding officer's response to a robbery in progress and playing a mobile phone game, "the Pokémon Go video game" was not precluded by Pen. Code § 632, as there was no evidence to show who activated the system and thus that a person intentionally recorded a confidential communication. (Lozano v. City of Los Angeles (2022) 73 Cal.App.5th 711.)

E.g., see Pen. Code § 1546.4(a), providing for the suppression of any evidence obtained in violation of the Electronic Communications Privacy Act, Pen. Code §§ 1546 et seq.

Note: Not all courts are in agreement that such a remedy is reserved exclusively for constitutional violations. (See discussion in United States v. Lombera-Camorlinga (9th Cir. 2000) 206 F.3rd 882, 886-887, and in the dissenting opinion, p. 893.)

Examples:

It is not unconstitutional to make a custodial arrest (i.e., transporting to jail or court) of a person arrested for a minor misdemeanor (Atwater v. City of Lago Vista (2001) 532 U.S. 318 [121 S.Ct. 1536; 149 L.Ed.2nd 549].), or even for a fine-only, infraction. (People v. McKay (2002) 27 Cal.4th 601, 607; see also United States v. McFadden (2nd Cir. 2001) 238 F.3rd 198, 204.)

California's statutory provisions require the release of misdemeanor arrestees in most circumstances. (E.g., see Pen. Code §§ 853.5, 853.6, Veh. Code §§ 40303, 40500) However, violation of these statutory requirements is not a constitutional violation and, therefore, should not result in suppression of any evidence recovered as a result of such an arrest. (People v. McKay, supra, at pp. 607-619, a violation of Veh. Code § 21650.1 (riding a bicycle in the wrong direction); People v. Gomez (2004) 117 Cal.App.4th 531, 539, seat belt violation (Veh. Code § 27315(d)(1)), citing Atwater v. City of Lago Vista, supra; People v. Bennett (2011) 197 Cal.App.4th 907, 918.)

See also Virginia v. Moore (2008) 553 U.S. 164 [128 S.Ct. 1598; 170 L.Ed.2nd 559], driving on a suspended license.

Custodial arrest for a misdemeanor that did not occur in the officer's presence, in violation of Pen. Code § 836(a)(1). (People v. Donaldson (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 532, 539; People v. Trapane (1991) 1 Cal.App.4th Supp. 10, 12-14.)

A "knock and notice" violation:

Violating the terms of Pen. Code §§ 844 and/or 1531 (California's statutory "knock and notice" requirements) does not necessarily also violate the Fourth Amendment. (Wilson v. Arkansas (1995) 513 U.S. 927 [115 S.Ct. 1914; 131 L.Ed.2nd 976]; People v. Zabelle (1996) 50 Cal.App.4th 1282.) Whether or not it does depends upon the circumstances. (See "Knock and Notice," below.)

But even when such a violation is determined to have been done contrary to the dictates of the Fourth Amendment, the Exclusionary Rule has recently been held to be an inappropriate remedy, at least in most cases. (Hudson v. Michigan (2006) 547 U.S. 586 [126 S.Ct. 2159; 165 L.Ed.2nd 56].)

> Per Hudson, the suppression of evidence is only necessary where the interests protected by the constitutional guarantee that has been violated would be served by suppressing the evidence thus obtained. The interests protected by the knock and notice rules include human life, because "an unannounced entry may provoke violence in supposed self-defense by the surprised resident." Property rights are also protected by providing residents an opportunity to prevent a forcible entry. And, "privacy and dignity" are protected by giving the occupants an opportunity to collect themselves before answering the door. (Ibid.)
>
> The Court also ruled in Hudson that because civil suits are more readily available than in 1914 when the exclusionary rule was first announced, and because law enforcement officers, being better educated, trained and supervised, can be subjected to departmental discipline, suppressing the product of a knock and notice violation is no longer a necessary remedy. (Ibid.)

The rule as dictated by Hudson (a search warrant case) is applicable as well as in a warrantless, yet lawful, arrest case, pursuant to P.C. § 844. (In re Frank S. (2006) 142 Cal.App.4th 145.)

However, Hudson is not to be interpreted to mean that the Exclusionary Rule is to be scraped. Intentionally unlawful law enforcement actions will still be subject to the Exclusionary Rule where necessary to discourage future illegal police activities. (People v. Rodriguez (2006) 143 Cal.App.4th 1137; case remanded for a determination whether police fabricated probable cause for a traffic stop, which led to the discovery of an outstanding arrest warrant, the search incident thereto resulting in recovery of controlled substances.)

But see United States v. Weaver (D.C. Cir. 2015) 808 F.3rd 26, where the D.C. Court of Appeal rejected the applicability of Hudson v. Michigan, supra, in an arrest warrant service situation, and held that federal agents violated the knock-and-announce rule by failing to announce their purpose before entering defendant's apartment. By knocking but failing to announce their purpose, the agents gave defendant no opportunity to protect the privacy of his home. The exclusionary rule was the appropriate remedy for knock-and-announce violations in the execution of arrest warrants at a person's home.

See "Knock and Notice," under "Searches with a Search Warrant" (Chapter 10), below.

Violation of a government agency regulation (i.e., not a statute or a constitutional principle) also does not necessitate suppression of the resulting evidence. (United States v. Ani (9th Cir. 1998) 138 F.3rd 390.)

Possible violation of an Indian Reservation statute or rule, not involving a constitutional principle, will not result in the suppression of any evidence. (United States v. Becerra-Garcia (9th Cir. 2005) 397 F.3rd 1167, 1173.)

Mistakenly collecting blood samples for inclusion into California's DNA data base (See P.C. § 296), when the defendant did not actually have a qualifying prior conviction, is not a Fourth Amendment violation, but even if it were, it does not require the suppression of the mistakenly collected blood samples, nor is it grounds to suppress the resulting match of the defendant's DNA with that left at a crime scene. (People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1116-1129.)

Doctrine of Inevitable Discovery:

Rule: Evidence seized unlawfully will be held to be admissible in those instances where, but for the illegal search, there is a "reasonable possibility" that the evidence would have been lawfully found by other means. (Murray v. United States (1988) 487 U.S. 533, 539 [108 S.Ct. 2529; 101 L.Ed.2nd 472]; Nix v. Williams (1984) 467 U.S. 432 [104 S.Ct. 2501; 81 L.Ed.2nd 377], violation of defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel; People v. Superior Court* [Walker] (2006) 143 Cal.App.4th 1183, 1214-1217; People v. Redd (2010) 48 Cal.4th 691, 721.)

> "The inevitable discovery doctrine, recognized by the Supreme Court in Nix, supra, 467 U.S. 431, is 'closely related' to the independent source doctrine. (Id., at p. 443.) It is 'in reality an extrapolation from the independent source doctrine: Since the tainted evidence would be admissible if in fact discovered through an independent source, it should be admissible if it inevitably would have been discovered.'" (People v. Superior Court* [Corbett] (2017) 8 Cal.App.5th 670, 682; quoting Murray v. United States, supra.)
>
> The First Federal Circuit in United States v. Clark (1st Cir. ME 2018) 879 F.3rd 1, lists the requirements for the inevitable discovery doctrine to apply:
>
> > (1) The legal means by which the evidence would have been discovered was truly independent,
> >
> > (2) The use of the legal means would have inevitably led to the discovery of the evidence, and
> >
> > (3) Applying the inevitable discovery rule would not provide an incentive for police misconduct or significantly weaken constitutional protections.
>
> "The inevitable discovery doctrine acts as an exception to the exclusionary rule, and permits the admission of otherwise excluded evidence 'if the government can prove that the evidence would have been obtained inevitably and, therefore, would have been admitted regardless of any overreaching by the police.' (Nix v. Williams (1984) 467 U.S. 431, 447 [81 L.Ed.2nd 377, 104 S.Ct. 2501], . . .) The purpose of the exception is 'to prevent the setting aside of convictions that would have been obtained without police misconduct.' (People v. Robles (2000) 23 Cal.4th 789, 800 . . . .) It is the prosecution's burden to 'establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the information ultimately or inevitably would have been discovered by lawful means.' (Nix, at p. 444; see People v. Coffman and Marlow (2004) 34 Cal.4th 1, 62 . . . .) (People v. Hughston (2008) 168 Cal.App.4th 1062, 1071–1072 . . . .)" (People v. Shumake (2019) 45 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1.)

The prosecution has the burden of proving facts and circumstances justifying the inevitable discovery doctrine by a preponderance of the evidence. Failing to do so, the rule will not be used by a court to allow the admission of evidence otherwise discovered illegally. (People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, 755-756; People v. Superior Court* [Chapman] (2012) 204 Cal.App.4th 1004, 1021-1022; United States v. Camou, supra.; People v. Cervantes (2017) 11 Cal.App.5th 860, 872; (United States v. Ngumezi (9th Cir. 2020) 980 F.3rd 1285, 1291.)

Case Law:

"'The purpose of the inevitable discovery rule is to prevent the setting aside of convictions that would have been obtained without police misconduct.' (Citation.) 'Fairness can be assured by placing the State and the accused in the same positions they would have been in had the impermissible conduct not taken place. However, if the government can prove that the evidence would have been obtained inevitably and, therefore, would have been admitted regardless of any overreaching by the police, there is no rational basis to keep that evidence from the jury in order to ensure the fairness of the trial proceedings. In that situation, the State has gained no advantage at trial and the defendant has suffered no prejudice. Indeed, suppression of the evidence would operate to undermine the adversary system by putting the State in a worse position than it would have occupied without any police misconduct." (People v. Cervantes (2017) 11 Cal.App.5th 860, 872; quoting Nix v. Williams, supra, at p. 447.)

Stopped and physically arrested for driving on a suspended license (with a prior conviction for the same), defendant was secured in the back seat of a patrol car. The subsequent search of his vehicle, resulting in the recovery of cocaine and an illegal firearm (defendant being a convicted felon) was found to be in violation of the rule of Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], where it was held that once defendant is arrested and secured, a "search incident to arrest" of the subject's vehicle is not lawful unless there is some reason to believe that evidence relevant to the cause of arrest may be found. (See "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.) However, the evidence was held to be admissible anyway under the "inevitable discovery rule" in that the vehicle was to be impounded and subjected to an inventory search. (United States v. Ruckes (9th Cir. 2009) 586 F.3rd 713, 716-719.)

Evidence lying under the deceased would have inevitably been found and given to the police when the Coroner's investigator took charge of the body and moved it. (People v. Superior Court* [Chapman] (2012) 204 Cal.App.4th 1004, 1021-1022; The Coroner may deliver any property or evidence related to the investigation or prosecution of a crime to the law enforcement agency or district attorney. (Gov't. Code § 27491.3(b))

Upon discovering that defendant's passenger was on probation with Fourth waiver search and seizure conditions, the Court declined to rule on whether a police officer could legally search two bags on the back seat under the theory of People v. Schmitz (2012) 55 Cal.4th 909, holding instead that methamphetamine later found in the center console of defendant's car was clearly lawful under Schmitz, and had the officer searched there first, the drugs in the backseat bags would have inevitably been found anyway. (People v. Cervantes (2017) 11 Cal.App.5th 860, 871-874.)

> See "Containers in the Vehicle," under "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.

The 2006 collection of defendant's DNA sample was unlawful under the Fourth Amendment because the prosecution failed to prove that defendant was validly arrested or that his DNA was collected as part of a routine booking procedure. However, the trial court properly admitted the DNA evidence lawfully collected from defendant in 2008 because it was sufficiently attenuated from the unlawful 2006 collection of defendant's DNA sample, given that there was a substantial time break, as well as intervening circumstances and a lack of evidence concerning flagrant official misconduct. (People v. Marquez (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 402, 408-414.)

Conceding that a warrantless search of defendant's cellphone incident to his arrest, recovering only his cellphone number, was illegal under Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 403 [134 S.Ct. 2473 189 L.Ed.2nd 430, 452], but where the same number had also been lawfully recovered from his wife's (the murder victim) phone and from several other sources, it was held that the "inevitable discovery" rule applied. (People v. Fayed (2020) 9 Cal.5th 147, 182-184.)

Officers lawfully found a firearm in the defendant's vehicle during a lawful detention for possible DUI. The Court held that even if it was not discovered that defendant was a felon during a criminal history check until they would have released him (and thus in illegal possession of the firearm), the officers discovered this fact within two minutes of having had to release him and could have easily stopped him again and arrested him. (United States v. Hylton (9th Cir. Apr. 5, 2022) 30 F.4th 842, 848.)

Exceptions:

The inevitable discovery doctrine does not apply, however, where the officers had probable cause and could have gotten a search or arrest warrant. (Hudson v. Michigan (2006) 547 U.S. 586 [126 S.Ct. 2159; 165 L.Ed.2nd 56]; People v. Robles (2000) 23 Cal.4th 789; People v. Superior Court* [Walker], supra, at p. 1215; United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 943-944; United States v. Lundin (9th Cir. 2016) 817 F.3rd 1151; United States v. Mejia (9th Cir. 1995) 69 F.3rd 309, 320; United States v. Echegoyen (9th Cir. 1986) 799 F.2nd 1271, 1280, fn. 7; People v. Superior Court* [Corbett] (2017) 8 Cal.App.5th 670, 681-688.)

This is because "[i]f evidence were admitted notwithstanding the officers' unexcused failure to obtain a warrant, simply because probable cause existed, then there would never be any reason for officers to seek a warrant." (United States v. Lundin (9th Cir. 2016) 817 F.3rd 1151, 1161-1162; quoting United States v. Mejia (9th Cir. 1995) 69 F.3rd 309, 320.)

A court cannot base an "inevitable discovery" conclusion on a speculative inference. Where an inventory search of a vehicle was the issue, and where there was no evidence that the arresting officers actually intended to impound the defendant's vehicle or that it was actually impounded (i.e., speculative inference on top of a speculative inference), it was held that discovery of an illegal baton in the defendant's car could not be based upon an inevitable discovery theory; i.e., that had the vehicle been impounded, the baton would have been lawfully discovered. (People v. Wallace (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 82, 93-94.)

The inevitable discovery doctrine was held to be inapplicable where there was no evidence that the defendant's vehicle was going to be subjected to an inventory search beyond that which was already done, and where the tow yard employees testified to inventorying items in plain sight only. (People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, 755-756; cocaine hidden in the vehicle's air vents.)

The fact that a search warrant could have been obtained before illegally searching defendant's home, and was in fact obtained prior to a second search, does not excuse the earlier illegal warrantless search of his residence. (People v. Superior Court* [Corbett] (2017) 8 Cal.App.5th 670, 681-685.)

Law enforcement searched defendant-appellant Tyrell Braxton's backpack after arresting him and found a gun. Braxton moved to suppress the gun. The government conceded that the warrantless search was not a valid search incident to arrest, but invoked the inevitable-discovery doctrine to avoid suppression of the illegally obtained evidence. The district court agreed with the government and denied the motion to suppress. Reversing the district court, the Tenth Circuit determined the government's stated community-caretaking interest in safeguarding Braxton's personal property by impounding it was significantly undercut by the presence of an individual who arrived on the scene at Braxton's request and repeatedly asked to take possession of the backpack throughout the arrest process. "The government's explanation for why the officers could have properly refused this individual's requests is not persuasive. Nor is it dispositive, on these facts, that Braxton himself did not ask the officers to turn the backpack over." Thus, the Court ruled the government failed to meet its burden to show that law enforcement would have validly retained the backpack, and the inevitable-discovery doctrine did not apply to excuse application of the exclusionary rule to suppress evidence discovered during the illegal search. Accordingly, the district court's order refusing to suppress the gun was reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings. (United States v. Braxton (10th Cir. 2023) 61 F.4th 830.)

Searches Based Upon Existing Precedent; The "Faith In Case Law" or "Statute" Exception:

Searches conducted in objectively reasonable reliance on binding appellate precedent in effect at the time of the search, despite a later decision changing the rules, are not subject to the Exclusionary Rule. (*Davis v. United States (2011) 564 U.S. 229, 236-239 [131 S.Ct. 2419; 180 L.Ed.2nd 285.)

See United States v. Sparks (1st Cir. 2013) 711 F.3rd 58; holding that the use of a GPS prior to the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S.Ct. 945; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911], even if done in violation of the Fourth Amendment, does not require the suppression of the resulting evidence due to the officer's good faith reliance in earlier binding precedence.

Also, whether or not the theory of Florida v. Jardines (2013) 569 U.S. 1 [133 S.Ct. 1409; 185 L.Ed.2nd 495], involving the illegality of using drug-sniffing dogs within the curtilage of a person's home, is applicable to a drug-sniffing dog used around the outside, and leaning up against, the open bed and tool box in a suspect's truck (which would overrule prior case law), was left open by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, holding that the pursuant to the "faith-in-case law" rule of Davis v. United States (2011) 564 U.S. 229, 236-239 [131 S.Ct. 2419; 180 L.Ed.2nd 285], it was unnecessary to decide the issue. (United States v. Thomas (9th Cir. 2013) 726 F.3rd 1086, 1092-1095.)

As a result, a search of a defendant's vehicle following his custodial arrest, done in violation of Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], did not require the suppression of two firearms found in the car in that this search

occurred prior to the Gant decision. (United States v. Tschacher (9th Cir. 2012) 687 F.3rd 923, 932-933.)

When reconsidered in light of United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S.Ct. 945; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911] (the GPS case), the 9th Circuit reversed itself in United States v. Pineda-Moreno (9th Cir. 2012) 688 F.3rd 1087, finding it to be a Fourth Amendment violation to attach a GPS tracking device, without a warrant, to the undercarriage of defendant's car while located in his own driveway. The Court, however, affirmed defendant's conviction. While noting that under Jones, the attaching of a GPS onto defendant's vehicle while in parked within the curtilage of his residence was indeed illegal, the officers, in good faith, were merely following existing precedent. As such, defendant was not entitled to the suppression of the resulting evidence per the U.S. Supreme Court's rule that the Exclusionary Rule does not apply under such circumstances. (Citing Davis v. United States, supra. See also United States *v. Brooks (9th Cir. 2014) 772 F.3rd 1161, 1173.)

Because California case law allowed for the warrantless placement of a GPS device by law enforcement at the time such a device was placed on the co-defendant's car in this case (i.e., 2007), the fact that the United States Supreme Court has since held that such conduct required a warrant did not dictate exclusion of the tracking device evidence. (People v. Mackey (2015) 233 Cal.App.4th 32, 93-97.)

Good faith reliance upon the validity of the implied consent provisions of Veh Code § 23612(a)(5), for an unconscious or deceased DUI suspect to provide a blood sample, makes admissible defendant's blood/alcohol test results in this case although a search warrant should have been obtained under the Fourth Amendment. (People v. Arredondo (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 186, 206-210.)

> Note: Petition for Review was dismissed and the case remanded in light of the decision in Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) __ U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040], where the U.S. Supreme Court held that when a DUI arrestee is unconscious, this fact alone will "almost always" constitute an exigency, allowing for a warrantless blood draw.

The legality of obtaining of defendant's resulting "CSLI" (cell site location information) via a court order, pursuant to the "Stored

Communications Act" (18 U.S.C. § 2703(d)), instead of a search warrant (now required pursuant to Carpenter v. United States (June 22, 2018) 585 U.S. __, __ [138 S.Ct. 2206; 201 L.Ed.2nd 507], was not decided, upholding the use of the court order instead of a search warrant under the good faith exception, relying on prior authority for using a federal court order only. (United States v. Korte (9th Cir. 2019) 918 F.3rd 750. 757-759.)

An injured person may be searched without a warrant or probable cause. It is reasonable for a police officer to attempt to identify an injured person. In fact, he has a duty to do so. Anything the officer sees in the process is admissible in court. (People v. Gonzales (1960) 182 Cal.App.2nd 276.)

Evidence of identity, such as defendant's person itself, is not subject to suppression, "regardless of the nature of the violation leading to his identity." (United States v. Gudino (9th Cir. 2004) 376 F.3rd 997.)

For purposes of this rule, it makes no difference that the illegal arrest, search or interrogation was "egregious" in nature; e.g., the result of "racial profiling." (United States v. Gudino, supra.)

See also United States v. Garcia-Beltran (9th Cir. 2004) 389 F.3rd 864; fingerprints used for identity purposes only are not subject to suppression for a Fourth Amendment violation (i.e., illegal arrest here). Case remanded, however, for a determination whether defendant's fingerprints were seized for "investigatory purposes" as opposed to establish identity, in which case they are subject to suppression.

It is a rule of law that neither a person's body nor his or her identity is subject to suppression, "even if it is conceded that an unlawful arrest, search, or interrogation occurred." (Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Lopez-Mendoza (1984) 468 U.S. 1032, 1039-1040 [104 S.Ct. 3479; 82 L.Ed.2nd 778].)

Impeachment Evidence:

Evidence illegally seized may be introduced for the purpose of impeaching the defendant's testimony given in both direct examination (Walder v. United States (1954) 347 U.S 62 [74 S.Ct. 354; 98 L.Ed. 503].) and cross-examination, so long as the cross-examination questions are otherwise proper. (United States v. Havens (1980) 446 U.S. 620 [100 S.Ct. 1912; 64 L.Ed.2nd 559].)

California authority prior to passage of Proposition 8 (The "Truth in Evidence Initiative"), to the effect that evidence suppressed pursuant to a motion brought under authority of P.C. § 1538.5 is suppressed for all purposes (i.e., People v. Belleci (1979) 24 Cal.3rd 879, 887-888.), was abrogated by Proposition 8. Now, it is clear that suppressed evidence may be used for purposes of impeachment should the defendant testify and lie. (People v. Moore (1988) 201 Cal.App.3rd 877, 883-886.)

Also, suppressed evidence pursuant to P.C. § 1538.5(d) is admissible at the defendant's probation revocation hearing unless the officer's actions were egregious. "(T)he exclusionary rule does not apply in probation revocation hearings, unless the police conduct at issue shocks the conscience." (Citations omitted; People v. Lazlo (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 1063, 1068-1072.)

Asset Forfeiture Proceedings:

Evidence seized illegally may still be subject to asset forfeiture proceedings so long as there is admissible probable cause supporting the conclusion that the evidence is the product of the defendant's illegal activity. (United States v. $186,416.00 in U.S. Currency (9th Cir. 2010) 590 F.3rd 942, 948-949.)

But see United States v. Gorman (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 706, 714; as amended at 2017 U.S. App. LEXIS 18610, where the Court, without discussing the issue, assumed that cash discovered in violation of the Fourth Amendment was not subject to asset forfeiture.

Parole and Probation Revocation Hearings:

Parole Hearings: Evidence recovered in an illegal parole search is admissible in a parole revocation proceeding, held pursuant to the relatively informal procedures used pursuant to Morrissey v. Brewer (1972) 408 U.S. 471 [92 S.Ct. 2593; 33 L.Ed.2nd 484]. (Pennsylvania Board of Probation and Parole v. Scott (1998) 524 U.S. 357 [118 S.Ct. 2014; 141 L.Ed.2nd 344].)

The need to use illegally seized evidence, from both Fourth and Fifth Amendment violations, in parole revocation hearings, outweighs the policy considerations underlying the Exclusionary Rule (i.e., deterring illegal police conduct.), and therefore is admissible in such circumstances. (In re Martinez (1970) 1 Cal.3rd 641, 648-650.)

Also, while "(Gov't. Code § 71622.5) authorizes (court) commissioners to conduct parole revocation hearings as a necessary part of the implementation of the Criminal Justice Realignment Act of 2011. However, article VI, sections 21 and 22 of the California Constitution limit commissioners to the performance of 'subordinate judicial duties' in the absence of a stipulation by the parties," but "revoking parole and committing a defendant to jail for violation of parole are not subordinate judicial duties that may be performed by a commissioner in the absence of a stipulation by the parties." (People v. Berch (2018) 29 Cal.App.5th 966.)

Probation Hearings:

The same theory used in Martinez has been used to allow the admission of illegally seized evidence in probation revocation hearings. (People v. Hayko (1970) 7 Cal.App.3rd 604.)

In People v. Vickers (1972) 8 Cal.3rd 451, 461, the Morrissey due process protections were extended to probation revocations.

Defendant, under PRCS ("Post-Release Community Supervision Act of 2011") supervision, claimed that her due process rights were violated because she was not arraigned within 10 days of her arrest and provided a Morrissey-compliant probable cause hearing. The court of appeal disagreed and affirmed: "The trial court correctly ruled that the procedural differences between parole revocation and revocation of PRCS do not violate [defendant's] due process rights" and "[t]he requirement for a formal arraignment in the superior court within 10 days of arrest, as discussed in Williams (v. Superior Court (2014) 230 Cal.App.4th 636), does not apply to PRCS revocations." (People v. Byron (2016) 246 Cal.App.4th 1009, 1013-1018.)

Incarcerated parolees facing revocation under P.C. § 1203.2 are entitled to a timely preliminary hearing. (People v. DeLeon (2017) 2017 Cal. LEXIS 5853; appeal ordered dismissed as moot in that defendant had completed his parole.)

Per Williams v. Superior Court (2014) 230 Cal.App.4th 636, a parolee is entitled to arraignment within 10 days of an arrest for a parole violation, a probable cause hearing within 15 days of the arrest, and a final hearing within 45 days of the arrest. A parolee must be brought before the court for arraignment no later than the Board of Parole Hearings is currently authorized by statute to hold the parolee without court intervention.

Defendant on PRCS supervision cannot be held responsible for not reporting his residence when he was homeless both before and after being paroled in that the PRCS statutes don't defined what constitutes a residence. (People v. Gonzalez (2017) 7 Cal.App.5th 370, 381-383.)

The Court rejected defendant's argument that excess custody credits reduce or shorten his PRCS supervision period. Defendant's argument was that the PRCS statute collectively shortens the PRCS supervision period with each flash incarceration or jail sanction. The Court held that such an argument subverts the entire concept of PRCS supervision. In defendant's case. he was in need of supervision, guidance, and help in that he had a long history of mental illness, substance abuse, and criminal behavior. (People v. Shelp (2020) 57 Cal.App.5th 644.)

The Appellate Court exercised its discretion to resolve defendant's appeal even though it was moot because conduct credits and how they affect the three-year post release community supervision (PRCS) supervision period is an issue that is likely to recur and is of continuing public interest.

Undercover Operations*:

Rule: "'The (F)ourth (A)mendment does not afford protection to wrongdoers' misplaced confidences' in undercover agents." (United States v. Ramirez (9th Cir. 2020) 976 F.3rd 946, 953, quoting United States v. Little (9th Cir. 1984) 753 F.2nd 1420, 1435.)

The Court in Ramirez also cited Sorrells v. United States (1932) 287 U.S. 435, 441 [53 S.Ct. 210; 77 L.Ed. 413], where no Fourth Amendment violation was found by an undercover agent posing as a tourist to ferret out a violation of the prohibition laws; Lewis v. United States (1966) 385 U.S. 206, 209 [87 S.Ct. 424; 17 L.Ed.2nd 312], finding no Fourth Amendment violation where defendant invited an undercover agent into his home to buy narcotics; and United States v. Garcia (9th Cir. 1993) 997 F.2nd 1273, 1280, finding no Fourth Amendment violation when police officers posed as apartment hunters and, while speaking with occupants of an apartment, saw defendant in plain sight, holding cocaine through screen door.

The Fourth Amendment's protections do not extend to information that a person voluntarily exposes to a government agent, including an undercover agent. A defendant generally has no privacy interest in that which he voluntarily reveals to a government agent. Therefore, a government agent may make a secret audio-video recording of a suspect's statements even in the suspect's own home, and those audio-video recordings, made with the consent of the government agent, do not require a warrant. (United States v. Wahchumwah (9th Cir. 2013) 710 F.3rd 862, 866-868; an investigation involving the illegal sale of eagle feathers under the Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act (16 U.S.C § 668(a) and the Lacey Act (16 U.S.C. §§ 2271(a)(1) & 3373(d)(1)(B).)

> The Court further noted in Wahchumwah that the fact that the technology used is not generally available to the public, and is more intrusive than mere audio surveillance, is irrelevant to the Fourth Amendment analysis. (Id., at p. 868.)

Undercover Residential Entries: Consent obtained by officers working undercover, for the purpose of continuing an investigation, is valid. It is the "intrusion into," not the arrest while inside, which offends the constitutional standards under Ramey. Arresting the defendant after having gained lawful entry is not a Ramey violation. (People v. Evans (1980) 108 Cal.App.3rd 193, 196.)

> "The Fourth Amendment does not protect 'a wrongdoer's misplaced belief that a person whom he voluntarily confides his wrongdoing will not reveal it.'" (Toubus v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal.App.3rd 378, 383.)
>
> And just because the undercover officer has momentarily left the residence, such action followed immediately by the reentry of the arresting officers, does not violate Ramey or Payton. (People v. Cespedes (1987) 191 Cal.App.3rd 768.)
>
> But the reentry must be simultaneous with, or immediately after, the undercover officer's exit. (People v. Ellers (1980) 108 Cal.App.3rd 943; arrest unlawful when after the "buy," during an undercover narcotics investigation, the police drove to a parking lot one mile away, spent ten to twenty minutes formulating a plan to arrest the defendant, and then returned and reentered the house to make the arrest.)

It is not illegal to use an undercover agent during a criminal investigation who makes entry upon the occupant's invitation, despite the lack of probable cause. Such a situation does not involve a need to avoid a violent confrontation. (Hoffa v. United States (1966) 385 U.S. 293 [87 S.Ct. 408; 17 L.Ed.2nd 374].)

In the situation where an undercover police officer, or even a paid informant, has already been invited into a criminal suspect's home where, through observations while there, probable cause is established resulting in the undercover officer or informant signaling other officers, the backup officers may then lawfully make a warrantless entry. (United States v Bramble (9th Cir. 1966) 103 F.3rd 1475, 1478-1479; United States v. Yoon (6th Cir. 2005) 398 F.3rd 802.)

> "Once consent has been obtained from one with authority to give it, any expectation of privacy has been lost. We seriously doubt that the entry of additional officers would further diminish the consenter's expectation of privacy, and, in the instant case, any remaining expectation of privacy was outweighed by the legitimate concern for the safety of [the officers inside]. (Citations omitted.)" (United States v Bramble, supra, at p. 1478.)

Additional Case Law:

"The use of undercover officers is essential to the enforcement of vice laws. (Citation) An undercover officer does not violate the Fourth Amendment merely by accepting an offer to do business that is freely made to the public. A government agent, in the same manner as a private person, may accept an invitation to do business and may enter upon the premises for the very purposes contemplated by the occupant." (Maryland v. Macon (1985) 472 U.S. 463, 470-471 [105 S.Ct. 2778; l86 L.Ed.2nd 370].)

> However, the warrantless installation of a hidden video camera in a suspect's home, leaving it operating after the informant leaves the premises, is a Fourth Amendment violation. (United States v. Nerber (9th Cir. 2000) 222 F.3rd 597, 604, fn. 5; United States v. Wahchumwah (9th Cir. 2013) 710 F.3rd 862, 867.)

An undercover narcotics agent, misrepresenting his identity by claiming to be a potential buyer of narcotics, acts lawfully when invited into the defendant's home for the purpose of purchasing narcotics despite the lack of a warrant. (Lewis v. United States (1966) 385 U.S. 206, 208-209 [87 S.Ct. 424; 17 L.Ed.2nd 312].)

No Fourth Amendment violation was found where FBI agents persuaded the subject of a valid arrest warrant to open her hotel door by claiming to be the hotel's assistant manager and falsely stating that her boyfriend was sick and in need of assistance. The FBI had full authority to arrest the defendant pursuant to their valid arrest warrant before they implemented their ruse even though the agents' ruse concealed their identities as law enforcement. (United States v. Michaud (9th Cir. 2001) 268 F.3rd 728, 733.)

The Supreme Court found no Fourth Amendment violation where law enforcement entered property covertly and installed electronic bugging devices to effect a valid search warrant. The Supreme Court reasoned that the electronic surveillance itself was authorized by the search warrant, and there was a need for covert entry' i.e., it was the "safest and most successful method" of conducting the authorized surveillance. (Dalia v. United States (1979) 441 U.S. 238, 248, & fn. 8 [99 S.Ct. 1682; 60 L.Ed.2nd 177].)

A suspect who posts information on social media does not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the contents of what is posted, even when the defendant limits access to the posting to his "friends," and where one such "friend" who monitors the defendant's account is an undercover police officer, and thus a "false friend." Defendant risks the possibility that one such "friend" may relay such information to law enforcement or be an undercover police officer. (People v. Pride (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 133, 141; noting also that P.C. § 1546.1(c)(4) of The California Electronic Communications Privacy Act states that a government entity may access electronic device information by communicating with the device with "the specific consent of the authorized possessor of the device.")

Standing:

Defined: The legal right of an individual to contest the illegality of a search and seizure. Only the person whose rights are being violated has "standing" to challenge an alleged governmental constitutional violation. (Rakas v. Illinois (1978) 439 U.S. 128, 138-139 [99 S.Ct. 421; 58 L.Ed.2nd 387, 397-398]; Minnesota v. Carter (1998) 525 U.S. 83 [119 S.Ct. 469; 142 L.Ed.2nd 373]; People v. Casares (2016) 62 Cal.4th 808, 835.)

"Fourth Amendment rights are personal rights that 'may not be vicariously asserted.' Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. 165, 174, 89 S. Ct. 961, 22 L. Ed. 2nd 176 (1969). To establish standing to challenge governmental intrusions under the Fourth Amendment, an individual must demonstrate their reasonable expectation of privacy in a place searched, or meaningful interference with their possessory interest in property seized." (United States v. Baker (9th Cir. 2023) 58 F.4th 1109, 1116.)

"'[A] criminal defendant may invoke the protections of the Fourth Amendment only if he can show that he had a legitimate expectation of privacy in the place searched or the item seized.' United States v. Ziegler, 474 F.3rd 1184, 1189 (9th Cir. 2007). 'This expectation is established where the claimant can show: (1) a subjective expectation of privacy; and (2) an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy.' Id. 'An expectation of privacy is legitimate if it is one which society accepts as objectively reasonable.' United States v. Thomas, 447 F.3rd 1191, 1196 (9th Cir. 2006)." (United States v. Motley (9th Cir. 2023) 89 F.4th 777, 784; the court holding that the defendant did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy (or at least that such an expectation of privacy was not "objectively reasonable) in opioid prescription records in the PMP database ("PMP" refers to Nevada's electronic database that tracks filled prescriptions for controlled substances. Nev. Rev. Stat. § 453.162 (2023).), and that law enforcement could use this database in its warrant affidavit for a tracking warrant. See below.)

> Whether or not a person has "standing" to challenge the legality of a search or seizure is a mixed question of fact (i.e., determining the circumstances) and law (i.e., determining whether the facts justify a finding that the defendant has a legitimate expectation of privacy under the law). (United States v. Singleton (9th Cir. 1993) 987 F.2nd 1444, 1447; United States v. $40,955 in United States Currency (9th Cir. 2009) 554 F.3rd 752, 755-756.)
>
> One must have a legitimate possessory interest in the property seized, or a legitimate privacy interest in the area searched, or a personal liberty interest that was infringed. (See People v. Roybal (1998) 19 Cal.4th 481, 507-508.)
>
> Claiming ownership of the property being seized does not establish that the defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in that property. The "possessory interest" must be a "legitimate" one; i.e., excluding contraband and other items not lawfully in the subject's possession. (See Rawlings v. Kentucky (1980) 448 U.S. 98, 105-106 [100 S.Ct. 2556; 65 L.Ed.2nd 633]; United States v. Pulliam (9th Cir. 2005) 405 F.3rd 782, 786; see also United States v. $40,955 in United States Currency, supra., at p. 756.)
>
> See also People v. Warren (1990) 219 Cal.App.3d 619, 624: "(N)o privacy right guaranteed by the Fourth Amendment is infringed by the search and seizure of a known illicit substance." E.g.: While the search of a thing or place over which a defendant has a legitimate expectation of privacy is subject to being tested, the searching of an illegal item (e.g., contraband) itself does not provide the defendant with the right to raise the search issue.

Defendant must show that he personally had a "property interest" that is protected by the Fourth Amendment and that was interfered with, and a "reasonable expectation of privacy" that was invaded by the search. (United States v. Lopez-Cruz (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 803, 807.)

Standing in Civil Cases: Showing "standing" in a civil case (i.e., showing that the plaintiff has the right to bring a civil suit in the first place) is a different concept altogether.

"'To establish (U.S. Constitution) Article III (prospective) standing, an injury must be concrete, particularized, and actual or imminent; fairly traceable to the challenged action; and redressable by a favorable ruling.' Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 133 S.Ct. 1138, 1147, 185 L.Ed.2nd 264 (2013) (citation omitted). 'Although imminence is concededly a somewhat elastic concept, it cannot be stretched beyond its purpose, which is to ensure that the alleged injury is not too speculative for Article III purposes — that the injury is certainly impending.' Id. (citation omitted). A plaintiff need not, however, await an arrest or prosecution to have standing to challenge the constitutionality of a criminal statute. 'When the plaintiff has alleged an intention to engage in a course of conduct arguably affected with a constitutional interest, but proscribed by a statute, and there exists a credible threat of prosecution thereunder, he should not be required to await and undergo a criminal prosecution as the sole means of seeking relief.' Babbitt v. United Farm Workers Nat'l Union, 442 U.S. 289, 298, 99 S.Ct. 2301, 60 L.Ed.2nd 895 (1979) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). To defeat a motion for summary judgment premised on an alleged lack of standing, plaintiffs 'need not establish that they in fact have standing, but only that there is a genuine question of material fact as to the standing elements.' Cent. Delta Water Agency v. United States, 306 F.3rd 938, 947 (9th Cir. 2002)." (Martin v. City of Boise (9th Cir. 2019) 920 F.3rd 584, 609.)

Reasonable Expectation of Privacy: The question really is whether the defendant, as opposed to someone else, had a "reasonable (or 'legitimate') expectation of privacy" in the place being searched or the items being seized. (Byrd v. United States (2018) 584 U.S. 395 [138 S.Ct. 1518; 200 L.Ed.2nd 805].)

The federal cases have gotten away from using the term "standing" while moving towards a discussion of one's "reasonable" or "legitimate expectation of privacy." (Rakas v. Illinois (1978) 439 U.S. 128, 143 [99 S.Ct. 421; 58 L.Ed.2nd 387]; United States v. Davis (9th Cir. 2003) 332 F.3rd 1163, 1167; United States v. Caymen (9th Cir. 2005) 404 F.3rd 1196, 1199-1200.) California courts have been encouraged to do the same. (See People v. Ayala (2000) 23 Cal.4th 225, 254, fn. 3; People v. Magee (2011) 194 Cal.App.4th 178, 183, fn. 4.)

"The touchstone of Fourth Amendment analysis is whether a person has a 'constitutionally protected reasonable expectation of privacy.'" (California v. Ciraolo (1986) 476 U.S. 207, 211 [106 S.Ct. 1809; 90 L.Ed.2nd 210, 215].)

"(T)o say that a party lacks (F)ourth (A)mendment standing is to say that his reasonable expectation of privacy has not been infringed." (Italics in original; United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 695; citing United States v. Taketa (9th Cir. 1991) 923 F.2nd 665, 669.)

See also article I, section 1 of the California Constitution: "All people are by nature free and independent and have inalienable rights. Among these are enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety, happiness, and privacy." (Italics added)

See In re M.H. (2016) 1 Cal.App.5th 699; right to privacy in a high school bathroom toilet stall.

Test: Whether or not a person has "standing" to challenge the constitutionality of a search has been described by the United States Supreme Court in Rakas v. Illinois (1978) 439 U.S. 128 [99 S.Ct. 421; 58 L.Ed.2nd 387], as follows: "(W)hether the challenged search and seizure violated the Fourth Amendment rights of a criminal defendant who seeks to exclude the evidence obtained during it" (Id., at p. 140.), "whether the disputed search and seizure has infringed an interest of the defendant which the Fourth Amendment was designed to protect" (Ibid.), or "whether the person who claims the protection of the (Fourth) Amendment has a legitimate expectation of privacy in the invaded place" (Id. at p. 143.). (People v. Stewart (2003) 113 Cal.App.4th 242, 249.)

Burden of Proof: The defendant bears the burden of showing he or she had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the place searched or the thing seized. (Rakas v. Illinois (1978) 439 U.S. 128, 141, fn. 9 [99 S.Ct. 421; 58 L.Ed.2nd 387, 399-400]; People v. McPeters (1992) 2 Cal.4th 1148, 1171; People v. Shepherd (1994) 23 Cal.App.4th 825, 828; People v. Cowan (1994) 31 Cal.App.4th 795, 798; United States v. Caymen (9th Cir. 2005) 404 F.3rd 1196, 1199-1200; United States v. $40,955 in United States Currency (9th Cir. 2009) 554 F.3rd 752, 756; People v. Magee (2011) 194 Cal.App.4th 178, 183; People v. Diaz (2013) 213 Cal.App.4th 743, 753.)

However, the court has the discretion to order the prosecution to present its evidence before the defendant proves his standing. (People v. Contreras (1989) 210 Cal.App.3rd 450.)

Although the prosecution may not take "contradictory positions in order to defeat an asserted expectation of privacy," the defendant is "not 'entitled to rely on the government's allegations in the pleadings, or positions the government has taken in the case, to establish standing.'" (United States v. Long (9th Cir. 2002) 301 F.3rd 1095, at p. 1100, citing United States v. Zermeno (9th Cir. 1995) 66 F.3rd 1058, 1062.)

Factors to Consider:

- Whether the defendant had a property or possessory interest in the thing seized or the place searched;

- Whether he had a right to exclude others from that place [or the thing seized];

- Whether he exhibited a subjective expectation of privacy that it would remain free from governmental intrusion;

- Whether he took normal precautions to maintain privacy; and

- Whether he was legitimately on the premises or legitimately in possession of the thing seized.

- Whether the defendant was present at the place searched "for a commercial purpose" (no standing) or was there as an "overnight guest" (standing) with the knowledge and permission of an identifiable host.

(People v. Shepherd (1994) 23 Cal.App.4th 825, 828; United States v. Silva et al. (9th Cir. 2001) 247 F.3rd 1051; People v. Stewart (2003) 113 Cal.App.4th 242, 250; In re Rudy F. (2004) 117 Cal.App.4th 1124, 1132; People v. Bryant, Smith and Wheeler (2014) 60 Cal.4th 335, 364-370; United States v. Lopez-Cruz (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 893, 807-809; citing United States v. Finley (5th Cir. 2007) 477 F.3rd 250, 258–259, recognizing this to be a non-exhaustive list.)

General Principles:

"[S]ubjective expectations of privacy that society is not prepared to recognize as legitimate have no [Fourth Amendment] protection." (People v. Leon (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 966, 974.)

"The absence of a right to exclude others from access to a situs is an important factor militating against a legitimate expectation of privacy." (United States v. Bautista (9th Cir. 2004) 362 F.3rd 584, 589; citing Rawlings v. Kentucky (1980) 448 U.S. 98, 105 [100 S.Ct. 2556; 65 L.Ed.2nd 633, 642].)

See also United States v. King (2010) 693 F.Supp.2nd 1200: A justified eviction from a hotel room ends any expectation of privacy defendant may have had in the room, or in any of the contents of that room, justifying a warrantless entry and search of the room by FBI agents.

The existence of a "reasonable expectation of privacy" must be determined by an analysis of the "totality of the circumstances." (People v. Koury (1989) 214 Cal.App.3rd 676, 686 In re Rudy F. (2004) 117 Cal.App.4th 1124, 1132.)

> The practice by some attorneys to analyze a search and seizure issue by considering each factor individually, ignoring the effect of all such factors in the "totality of the circumstances," is constantly criticized by the courts. (E.g., see People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 815; "The relevant inquiry is whether the totality of the circumstances would lead a person of 'ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously to entertain, a strong suspicion that the object of the search is in the particular place to be searched;'" quoting People v. Dumas (1973) 9 Cal.3rd 871, 885.)

A defendant has the burden of proving that he had standing to contest a warrantless search. In other words, he must first prove that he had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the areas searched. A person seeking to invoke the protection of the Fourth Amendment must demonstrate both that he harbored a subjective (i.e., in his own mind) expectation of privacy and that the expectation was objectively reasonable. An objectively reasonable expectation of privacy is one that society is willing to recognize as reasonable. Among the factors considered in making this determination are whether a defendant has a possessory interest in the thing seized or place searched; whether he has the right to exclude others from that place; whether he has exhibited a subjective expectation that it would remain free from governmental invasion; whether he took normal precautions to maintain his privacy; and whether he was legitimately on the premises. (People v. Nishi (2012) 207 Cal.App.4th 954, 959-963; defendant held to not have an expectation of privacy in his tent on public land without a permit, nor the area around his tent.)

Merely declining ownership of the items searched (e.g., cellphones) by itself, while a factor to consider, is not enough by itself to show that the defendant did not have standing, at least where there is nothing to indicate that he wasn't in permissive possession of the item searched. (United States v. Lopez-Cruz (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 803, 808-809.)

However, even though a person may not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in a vehicle, he may still challenge a search of that vehicle where it is the product of the person's unlawful detention as a passenger in the vehicle. (Brewer *v. Superior Court (2017) 16 Cal.App.5th 1019, 1023-1025.)

"One who owns and possesses a car, like one who owns and possesses a house, almost always has a reasonable expectation of privacy in it." (Byrd v. United States (2018) 584 U.S. 395, 404 [138 S.Ct. 1518; 200 L.Ed.2nd 805]; determining that the possessor of a rented car, even though not listed on the rental agreement, has a reasonable expectation of privacy in that vehicle.)

No violation of the Fourth Amendment resulted when a gang police detective portrayed himself as a friend to gain access to defendant's social media account and viewed and saved a copy of a video that defendant posted and that was later admitted into evidence. In the posted video, defendant wore and discussed a chain resembling one taken in a strong-arm robbery. Although defendant chose a social media platform where posts disappeared after a period of time, he assumed the risk that the account for one of his "friends" could be an undercover profile for a police detective or that any other "friend" could save and share the information with government officials. No expectation of privacy. California's Electronic Communications Privacy Act ("CalECPA") had no application because defendant voluntarily granted access to his social media account to a "friend" and voluntarily then posted a video of himself with incriminating evidence. (People v. Pride (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 133, 137-141.)

Where defendant had arranged to have delivered packages of cocaine to a friend's residence, the packages listing as the recipient the friend's deceased brother, with an address and phone number not otherwise associated with the defendant, defendant lacked the necessary expectation of privacy needed to challenge law enforcement's opening of those packages before they were delivered (in a controlled delivery) to the address listed on the packages. (United States v. Rose (4th Cir. 2021) 3 F.4th 722.)

Commercial Enterprises:

"As we have recognized, determining who may assert a reasonable expectation of privacy with respect to specific commercial spaces

'requires analysis of reasonable expectations "on a case-by-case basis."' (United States v.) SDI Future Health (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3d (684) at 695 (quoting O'Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709, 718, 107 S. Ct. 1492, 94 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1987) (plurality)). The need for such a case-by-case inquiry arises from two considerations. First, because 'the expectation of privacy that the owner of commercial property enjoys in such property differs significantly from the sanctity accorded an individual's home,' Donovan v. Dewey, 452 U.S. 594, 598-99, 101 S. Ct. 2534, 69 L. Ed. 2d 262 (1981), the 'expectation of privacy in commercial premises' is 'less than[] a similar expectation in an individual's home.' New York v. Burger, 482 U.S. 691, 700, 107 S. Ct. 2636, 96 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1987); see also Minnesota v. Carter, 525 U.S. 83, 90, 119 S. Ct. 469, 142 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1998) ('Property used for commercial purposes' is thus 'treated differently for Fourth Amendment purposes from residential property.'). Second, in light of the 'great variety of work environments,' any given company officer, manager, or owner may not have the same personal reasonable expectation of privacy in all of the commercial spaces of the organization. SDI Future Health, 568 F.3d at 695." (United States v. Galecki (9th Cir. Dec. 27, 2023) 89 F.4th 713, __.)

Considerations taken into account in determining whether a person has standing to challenge the legality of a search in commercial places include:

> "First, . . . the joint owners and managers of a 'small business,' particularly one that is 'family-run,' may exercise such complete 'day-to-day' personal control over, and 'full access' to, the company's facilities that those owner/managers would have a reasonable expectation of privacy over the relevant spaces. SDI Future Health, 568 F.3d at 696 (citing (United States v.) Gonzalez, Inc., (9th Cir. 2005) 412 F.3d (1102) at 1116-17); see also Gonzalez, Inc., 412 F.3d at 1117 (noting, by contrast, that 'the hands-off executives of a major corporate conglomerate might lack standing to challenge all intercepted conversations at a commercial property that they owned, but rarely visited').
>
> Second, we stated in SDI Future Health that a further 'crucial' threshold factor is whether the particular place searched in the commercial facility was 'given over to the defendant's exclusive use,' 568 F.3d at 695-96 (emphasis added) (simplified), because a showing of such exclusivity would indicate that, absent countervailing considerations, the person's expectation of privacy was reasonable.
>
> Third, SDI Future Health held that, outside 'the case of a small business over which an individual exercises daily management and control, an individual challenging a search of workplace areas beyond his own internal office must generally show some personal > connection to the places searched and the materials seized.' 568 F.3d at 698 (emphasis added). We further stated that whether the requisite personal connection has been shown should be assessed 'with reference to the following factors,' which we said are not exclusive, id. at 698 & n.8: (1) whether the item seized is personal property or otherwise kept in a private place separate from other work-related material; (2) whether the defendant had custody or immediate control of the item when officers seized it; and (3) whether the defendant took precautions on his own behalf to secure the place searched or things seized from any interference without his authorization. Id. at 698 (footnotes omitted). 'Absent such a personal connection or exclusive use, a defendant cannot establish standing for Fourth Amendment purposes to challenge the search of a workplace beyond his internal office.' Id." (United States v. Galecki, supra, at pp. __-__.)

>
> In Galecki, the defendant's failed to show standing in the search of a warehouse in that it was held that: "First, this case does not fall within the distinctive scenario, typified by Gonzalez, Inc., in which the defendants personally exercise day-to-day physical access to and control over the facilities as part of their daily management of a closely held small business. Indeed, the record does not affirmatively indicate that Galecki and Ritchie had ever actually visited the Nevada warehouse, much less exercised personal day-to-day control over the physical plant. Second, the Nevada warehouse is not the personal office of either Defendant." Lastly, it was not shown that the defendants "had the requisite 'personal connection to the places searched and the materials seized.'" (Id, at p. __; citing SDI Future Health, supra, 568 F.3d at 698.)

Prior California Rule; "Vicarious Standing:" Everyone charged with a criminal offense resulting from a search or seizure could challenge the constitutionality of that search or seizure, without the necessity of showing "standing." (E.g., People v. Martin (1955) 45 Cal.2nd 755, 761.)

> This theory, long since rejected by the United States Supreme Court (see United States v. Salvucci (1980) 448 U.S. 83, 92 [100 S.Ct. 2547; 65 L.Ed.2nd 619].), was abrogated by passage of Proposition 8 (Cal. Const., Art. 1, § 28(d) (subsequently redesignated as section 28(f)(2)), (subsequently redesignated as section 28(f)(2), in June, 1982. California now follows the federal rule. (In re Lance W. (1985) 37 Cal.3rd 873, 886-887; People v. Nelson (1985) 166 Cal.App.3rd 1209, 1213.)

Application of the Standing Rules:

Vehicles:

The owner, or a borrower of vehicle with the owner's permission (i.e., a person in lawful possession), has standing to challenge the search of the vehicle. (People v. Leonard (1987) 197 Cal.App.3rd 235, 238; People v. Nelson (1985) 166 Cal.App.3rd 1209; United States v. Kovac (9th Cir. 1986) 795 F.2nd 1509, 1510-1511, owner; United States v. Portillo (9th Cir. 1980) 633 F.2nd 1313, 1317, borrower; People v. Casares (2016) 62 Cal.4th 808, 835-836; borrower.)

A passenger in a vehicle that neither owns nor leases that vehicle lacks standing to object to a search of areas within the vehicle, such as the glove compartment, the trunk, or underneath the seat. (Rakas v. Illinois (1978) 439 U.S. 128 [99 S.Ct. 421; 58 L.Ed.2nd 387]; United States v. Portillo (9th Cir. 1980) 633 F.2nd 1313, 1317; United States v Pulliam (9th Cir. 2005) 405 F.3rd 782, 785-786.)

But, the passenger as well as the driver has standing to object to the basis for a vehicle's initial stop or detention. (Brendlin v. California (2007) 551 U.S. 249 [127 S.Ct. 2400; 168 L.Ed.2nd 132]; see below.); see also People v. Lionberger (1986) 185 Cal.App.3rd Supp. 1; United States v. Twilley (9th Cir. 2000) 222 F.3rd 1092, 1095; United States v. Colin (9th Cir. 2002) 314 F.3rd 439, 442-443; People v. Lamont (2004) 125 Cal.App.4th 404.)

One who steals a car (People v. Shepherd (1994) 23 Cal.App.4th 825.), or who is simply an occupant of a stolen car (People v. Catuto (1990) 217 Cal.App.3rd 714; People v. Melnyk (1992) 4 Cal.App.4th 1532, 1533.), or is caught driving a stolen vehicle (People v. Carter (2005) 36 Cal.4th 1114, 1139-1142.) that is later searched, has no standing to challenge the later search of that car.

Defendant had no standing to challenge the illegal search of another person's vehicle which resulted in recovery of information used to obtain a search warrant for defendant's home. (People v. Madrid (1992) 7 Cal.App.4th 1888, 1896.)

A person driving a rental vehicle, when the person is neither an authorized driver under the rental contract nor driving the vehicle with the renter's permission, does not have standing to challenge the search of a vehicle. (United States v. Thomas (9th Cir. 2006)

447 F.3rd 1191; noting that merely being an unauthorized driver, per the terms of the rental agreement, will not deprive a person of standing. In this case, it was the defendant's failure to present any evidence that he was driving the car with the permission of the person who rented it that deprived him of standing to contest the search of the car.)

The United States Supreme Court reversed the California Supreme Court on the issue of whether the passenger is detained by virtue of being in the car when it is initially stopped, and held that at least in a private motor vehicle (as opposed to a taxi, bus, or other common carrier), the passenger in a vehicle stopped for a possible traffic infraction is in fact detained, giving him the right (i.e., standing) to challenge the legality of the traffic stop. (Brendlin v. California (2007) 551 U.S. 249 [127 S.Ct. 2400; 168 L.Ed.2nd 132].)

The owner of a vehicle, but who takes steps to disassociate himself from the vehicle by having someone else pay cash for the car and then putting the car and other documentation in the other person's name (done because the defendant knew the car would be used to transport controlled substances), does not have standing to challenge an illegal entry into the car for the purpose of installing a GPS to track the vehicle. (People v. Tolliver et al. (2008) 160 Cal.App.4th 1231, 1236-1241.)

Being "the exclusive driver" of defendant's wife's car gives the defendant standing to challenge the legality of the installation of a GPS (i.e., a search) on that vehicle. (E.g., see United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400, 404, fn. 2 [132 S.Ct. 945, 949; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911].)

However, there is no reasonable expectation of privacy in the conversations between prisoners in the back seat of a patrol car, making it lawful to secretly record such conversations. (People v. Crowson (1983) 33 Cal.3rd 623, 628.)

See also, United States v. Webster (7th Cir 2015) 775 F.3rd 897, where it was held that a prisoner being detained in the backseat of a patrol car has no expectation of privacy as to his conversations. Recording the defendant's conversation with another detainee and cellphone calls he made while seated in the patrol car is not a violation of the Fourth Amendment.

However, even though a person may not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in a vehicle, he may still challenge a search of that vehicle where it is the product of the person's unlawful detention as a passenger in the vehicle. (Brewer v. Superior Court (2017) 16 Cal.App.5th 1019, 1023-1025.)

A person in otherwise lawful possession and control of a rented vehicle has a reasonable expectation of privacy in it even if the rental agreement does not list him or her as an authorized driver, at least as a general rule. (Byrd v. United States (2018) 584 U.S. 395 [138 S.Ct. 1518; 200 L.Ed.2nd 805].)

> Left undecided, and remanded to the lower appellate court for decision, were the issues of (1) whether a person who intentionally uses a third party to procure a rental car by a fraudulent scheme for the purpose of committing a crime is no better situated than a car thief, and (2) the officers had probable cause to search the vehicle in any event.
>
> Taking Byrd one step further, the Second Circuit Court of Appeal held that defendant's motion to suppress methamphetamine and cash found in a rental car was properly denied because he was both an unauthorized driver of the rental car, plus his driver's license was expired, making him an unlicensed driver. This, per the Court, and even though he had the permission of the person to whom the car was rented, was sufficient to negate any reasonable expectation of privacy in that car. But even assuming defendant had a legitimate privacy interest, the search and seizure did not violate the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Lyle (2nd Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 716.)
>
> See, however, United States v. Best (8th Cir. 1998) 135 F.3rd 1233, and United States v. Thomas (9th Cir. 2006) 447 F.3rd 1191, which have held that a defendant may have standing to challenge a search of a rental car despite lacking a valid license and authorization under the rental agreement, provided that he had permission from the authorized driver.
>
> Despite not being on the rental agreement, evidence that the renter of a vehicle gave permission to the driver to be in possession of a rented car provided the driver with the necessary standing to challenge the search of that vehicle. (United States v. Bettis (8th Cir. 2020) 946 F.3rd 1024.)

Residential Occupants and Visitors:

An overnight guest in a residence does have standing to contest an unlawful search. (Minnesota v. Olson (1990) 495 U.S. 91 [109 L.Ed.2nd 85]; People v. Hamilton (1985) 168 Cal.App.3rd 1058; Espinosa v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2010) 598 F.3rd 528, 533-534.)

The fact that the defendant is a parolee, subject to Fourth Amendment search and seizure conditions, does not mean that he doesn't have the right to challenge law enforcement's warrantless entry into a third party's residence. (United States v. Grandberry (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 968, 973-975.)

As an "occasional" guest at his girlfriend's apartment, defendant had standing to challenge the entry of his girlfriend's bedroom where the two of them stayed together, along with the search of his gym bag he kept under the bed. (United States v. Davis (9th Cir. 2003) 332 F.3rd 1163, 1167-1168.)

When an overnight guest in a residence has standing to contest an unlawful search (Minnesota v. Olson, supra.), it is irrelevant that the guest is a drug smuggler. (United States v. Gamez-Orduno (9th Cir. 2000) 235 F.3rd 453.)

However, a visitor who is there for a limited time (e.g., 2½ hours), for an unlawful purpose (e.g., to package contraband), without any prior relationship with the lawful occupant, does not have standing. (Minnesota v. Carter (1998) 525 U.S. 83 [119 S.Ct. 469; 142 L.Ed.2nd 373].)

However, the defendant failed to meet his burden of showing standing in a hotel room where he was not registered as a guest, he did not have a key to the room, and he did not have any possessions in the room besides the sneakers and t-shirt he was trying to put on when the officers entered. Based on these facts, the court could not determine what purpose defendant had in the room, how long he stayed there, how long he slept there, if at all, and how well he knew the other occupants. (United States v. Aiken (1st Cir. ME 2017) 877 F.3rd 451.)

The estranged husband, when he regularly visited overnight with his children, had a key and unrestricted access, kept personal papers and clothing in a bedroom, and was present at the time of the search, has standing. (People v. Koury (1989) 214 Cal.App.3rd 676, 688.)

A Babysitter during the time he or she is engaged in babysitting activities has standing. (People v. Moreno (1992) 2 Cal.App.4th 577, 579, 587.)

Simple, casual visitors in a place being searched do not normally have standing. (People v. Nelson (1985) 166 Cal.App.3rd 1209; People v. Ooley (1985) 169 Cal.App.3rd 197; People v. Cowan (1995) 31 Cal.App.4th 795, 798, 800; People v. Dimitrox (1995) 33 Cal.App.4th 18; People v. Rios (2011) 193 Cal.App.4th 584, 591-592.)

> Being a family member but not living there does not change the result. (People v. Rios, supra, at 592, fn. 4; citing In re Rudy F. (2004) 117 Cal.App.4th 1124, 1135.)

The temporary occupant of a house does not have standing to challenge the search of a bedroom he did not occupy, never entered, and had no permission to enter. (People v. Hernandez (1988) 199 Cal.App.3rd 1182, 1188.)

A person who does not stay overnight, but who has a key and free reign of the house, coming and going as he pleases, doing his laundry, cooking, and watching the T.V. in the house, and taking showers, etc., was held to have standing. (People v. Stewart (2003) 113 Cal.App.4th 242.)

Defendant's parents, where defendant conducted his marijuana dealings from his own room, maintained standing to challenge the search of defendant's bedroom where they maintained the rights of access, possession, and exclusion of others. (United States v. $40,955 in United States Currency (9th Cir. 2009) 554 F.3rd 752, 756-757.)

> However, the daughter (defendant's sister?), who no longer lived in the house, did not have standing despite the fact that she had a key to the house and stored items there. (Id., at pp. 757-758.)

Merely claiming to be an overnight guest, or to otherwise having standing to contest the entry and/or search of a residence, is insufficient. There must be some evidence to the effect that the person did in fact have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the residence. (United States v. Reyes-Bosque (9th Cir. 2010) 596 F.3rd 1017, 1026-1029.)

Whether or not a visitor has standing to challenge law enforcement's warrantless entrance into a residence depends upon that visitor's purpose for being there. For instance, if visiting the legal residents, at least when the visitor does so on a regular basis and is free to come and go as he wishes without knocking, he likely has standing. But when that same person enters the residence for the purpose of destroying evidence while being chased by police, he does not. (People v. Magee (2011) 194 Cal.App.4th 178.)

The Fourth Amendment rights of homeowners are implicated by the use of a surreptitiously planted listening device to monitor third-party conversations that occurred within their home. (Alderman v. United States (1969) 394 U.S. 165 [89 S.Ct. 961; 22 L.Ed.2nd 176].)

Defendant held to not have an expectation of privacy in his tent on public land without a permit, nor the area around his tent. (People v. Nishi (2012) 207 Cal.App.4th 954, 959-963.)

In a capital murder case, the trial court did not err in denying the lead defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized during a warrantless search of a drug house, defendant having failed to provide any competent evidence that he had a legitimate expectation of privacy in the house when it was searched. (People v. Bryant, Smith and Wheeler (2014) 60 Cal.4th 335, 364-370.)

Neither an evicted former tenant, nor her "overnight house guest," have standing to contest the warrantless entry of law enforcement officers who were there checking on a report of trespassers in the vacant apartment. (Woodward v. City of Tucson (9th Cir. 2017) 870 F.3rd 1154, 1159-1161.)

Defendant held to be without standing to challenge the warrantless entry into his girlfriend's home when there was a "no contact" order barring him from entering that house. A person does not have an reasonable expectation of privacy in a home which he himself is barred from entering. (United States v. Schram (9th Cir. 2018) 901 F.3rd 1042, 1044-1046.)

Using a lawfully seized garage door opener, randomly, while looking for an arrestee's residence, was held not to be a search at all, thus not a violation of the Fourth Amendment. In addition, even if the agents had committed a trespass by using the opener, the trespass would have been against the building's owner, not against the defendants, who were individual tenants. Also, the court held that neither defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the shared parking garage. And while pushing the button on the garage door opener was a search of the opener itself under the Fourth Amendment, the court held that the search was reasonable because it only identified the location of the defendants' building and did not disclose any private information about the interior or the contents of the garage. Lastly, while using keys seized from the defendants to enter the locked building lobby and testing the mailbox key were searches under the Fourth Amendment, these searches were reasonable because the defendants had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the lobby as it was a common area and that the defendants had no right to exclude anyone from this area. (United States v. Correa (7th Cir. IL 2018) 908 F.3rd 208.)

Note: Use of the mailbox key was merely held to be "reasonable," although a Fourth Amendment search, without discussing why, except to note that the agents had consent to search the apartment, apparently making the use of the mailbox key irrelevant.

See "Problem: Key in a Lock," above.

Personal Property:

There is no expectation of privacy in a gun given to another person (People v. McPeters (1992) 2 Cal.4th 1148, 1171.), or an opaque bag left, unsealed, in another person's car (People v. Root (1985) 172 Cal.App.3rd 774, 778.), or a purse left in another's vehicle. (People v Shepherd (1994) 23 Cal.App.4th 825, 827, 829.)

There is no expectation of privacy in a stolen computer (United States v. Wong (9th Cir. 2003) 334 F.3rd 831), or one that was obtained by fraud. (United States v. Caymen (9th Cir. 2005) 404 F.3rd 1196, 1200.)

There is no expectation of privacy in a duffle bag left in an apartment laundry room open to anyone, even though placed out of the way on a high shelf. (United States v. Fay (9th Cir. 2005) 410 F.3rd 589.)

> But defendant, as the owner of a gym bag he kept under his girlfriend's bed in her apartment, had standing to challenge the search of that gym bag. (United States v. Davis (9th Cir. 2003) 332 F.3rd 1163, 1167-1168.)

Defendant had standing to challenge a wiretap order on his cellular telephone purchased by the defendant while using a fictitious name in that there is nothing illegal in the attempt to remain anonymous. (People v. Leon (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 966, 974-977.)

A business that owns the company's computers may consent to the search of a computer used by an employee, at least when the employee is on notice that he has no reasonable expectation of privacy in the contents of the computer he is using. (United States v. Ziegler (9th Cir. 2006) 456 F.3rd 1138.)

Denying possession or ownership in a briefcase found in a vehicle defendant was driving will deprive that defendant of the right to later challenge the legality of the warrantless search of that briefcase. (United States v. Decoud (9th Cir. 2006) 456 F.3rd 996.)

> See "Disclaiming Standing," below.

There is no expectation of privacy in the outside of a piece of mail sent to the defendant. "(B)ecause the information is foreseeably visible to countless people in the course of a letter reaching its destination, 'an addressee or addressor generally has no expectation of privacy as to the outside of mail.'" (People v. Reyes (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1183, 1189-1192; quoting United States v. Osunegbu (1987 5th Cir.) 822 F.2nd 472, 380, fn. 3.)

> In Reyes, an employee of a private postbox company spontaneously handed officers defendant's mail when the officers inquired as to whether defendant had rented a box at that facility even though the employees didn't "normally" hand over a client's mail absent a court order. The fact that defendant was never told that his mail would be kept private was also a factor to consider.

A jail inmate talking over a jail telephone, where he is warned that his conversations were subject to monitoring, asking a friend to retrieve what officers understood to be a gun (although defendant only referred to it as "the thing") from a container (also described in vague, generic terms) in the closet of his girlfriend's home, did not waive any expectation of privacy defendant had in the container that was later retrieved by law enforcement and illegally searched without a search warrant. (United States v. Monghur (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 975, 978-981.)

> Monghur differentiated these facts from a similar circumstance where defendant told law enforcement officers, clearly and unequivocally, that a particular container contained contraband. The Court in the case found that such a concession waived any expectation of privacy defendant might have had in the container, thus allowing for a warrantless search of that container. (United States v. Cardona-Rivera (7th Cir. 1990) 904 F.2nd 1149.)

An Internet subscriber has no expectation of privacy in the subscriber information he supplies to his Internet provider. (People v. Stipo (2011) 195 Cal.App.4th 664, 668-669.)

Allowing another person unrestricted access to a mutually owned computer negates any expectation of privacy the first person might have had. A co-owner has actual authority to give consent to the police to search. And if it turns out that the person is not actually a co-owner, the doctrine of apparent authority may justify the search. (United States v. Stanley (9th Cir. 2011) 653 F.3rd 946, 950-952.)

There is no privacy right in the mouthpiece of the PAS device, which was provided by the police and where defendant abandoned any expectation of privacy in the saliva he deposited on the device when he failed to wipe it off. Whether defendant subjectively expected that the genetic material contained in his saliva would become known to the police was irrelevant because he deposited it on a police device and thus made it accessible to the police. The officer who administered the PAS (Preliminary Alcohol Screening) test testified that used mouthpieces were normally discarded in the trash. Thus, any subjective expectation defendant may have had that his right to privacy would be preserved was unreasonable. (People v. Thomas (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 338.)

Merely declining ownership of the items searched (e.g., cellphones) by itself, while a factor to consider, is not enough by itself to show that the defendant did not have standing. (United States v. Lopez-Cruz (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 803, 808-809.)

See "Disclaiming Standing," below.

Pinging a victim's cellphone, using its GPS capabilities to track defendant who had just stolen it in a robbery, was not a Fourth Amendment violation. (People v. Barnes (2013) 216 Cal.App.4th 1508, 1517-1519; the case involved no trespassory placing of the GPS into the defendant's property, and no expectation of privacy violated.

See also People v. Zichwic (2001) 94 Cal.App.4th 944, an earlier case of questionable continued validity, which held that putting a pinging device on defendant's vehicle was lawful, and that monitoring the device was not unlawful whether or not doing so constituted a "search," despite the lack of a search warrant.

> See, however, Pen. Code §§ 1546 et seq., the "Electronic Communications Privacy Act," which, by statute, greatly restricts law enforcement's access to electronic communication information from a service provider in California.
>
> And see "Electronic Tracking Devices (Transmitters) and 'Pinging' a Cellphone," under "New and Developing Law Enforcement Tools and Technology" (Chapter 14), below.

The Fourth Amendment does not require suppression of evidence developed through use of software targeting peer-to-peer file-sharing networks to identify IP addresses associated with known digital files of child pornography. Defendant had no reasonable expectation of privacy in his shared folder, despite his measures to keep contents of computer private. (*People v. Evensen (2016) 4 Cal.App.5th 1020.)

A police officer's use of a software program called "Torrential Downpour," which is a law enforcement proprietary software program configured to search the BitTorrent peer-to-peer file sharing network for Internet Protocol (IP) addresses associated with individuals offering to share or possess files known to law enforcement to contain images or videos of child pornography, and which cannot access non-public areas or unshared portions of an investigated computer, nor can it override settings on a suspect's computer, was upheld where defendant was found to have some 7,365 image files and 460 video files of child pornography on his computer. The Court held that defendant did not have any legitimate expectation of privacy in files made available to the public through peer-to-peer file-sharing networks. The Court also rejected attempt to distinguish BitTorrent software from other peer-to-peer programs due to the fact that he allowed public access to the files on his computer. Consequently, the court held that the district court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress. (United States v. Hoeffener (8th Cir. 2020) 950 F.3rd 1037.)

Officers had probable cause to believe defendant would be transporting drugs from Texas to Louisiana based upon reliable information from a confidential informant. The officers therefore obtained a state-authorized search warrant to obtain the GPS coordinates of defendant's girlfriend's cell phone from Verizon over a sixteen-hour period, thus allowing the officers to track the girlfriend's movements, and, because the two were traveling together, those of defendant as well. After having done so, defendant's vehicle was stopped and searched, resulting in the recovery of methamphetamine. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal held that defendant did not have standing to challenge the use of the Stored Communications Act to trace his girlfriend's cellphone despite defendant's claims that that he had a reasonable expectation of privacy in her cellphone based on the following facts: 1) he purchased the phone and gave it to her; 2) he had permission to use the phone; 3) he has password access to the phone; 4) he accessed his Facebook account from the phone; and, 5) he used the phone to capture intimate videos of him and his girlfriend. The Court ruled that defendant's first fact was irrelevant, as a person does not have standing to challenge a search or seizure of property that was voluntarily abandoned or conveyed to another person. Next, the Court found that the third fact was not supported by any evidence presented in the district court. Finally, the court determined that facts two, four, and five were, in essence, a claim that defendant sometimes used his girlfriend's phone for personal activities. However, there was no proof that defendant ever used or possessed the phone outside of the girlfriend's presence or how often he accessed Facebook or captured intimate videos. Instead, the court noted that: 1) the girlfriend was the primary user of the phone; 2) she had the phone number long before she met defendant; 3) she maintained possession of the phone throughout the day of the arrest; and, 4) her parents paid the phone bill. Based on these facts, the court concluded that while defendant might have subjectively expected privacy in his girlfriend's phone, this expectation of privacy was not reasonable. As a result, the court found that defendant did not have Fourth Amendment standing to challenge the search of his girlfriend's phone. (United States v. Beaudion (5th Cir. 2020) 979 F.3rd1092.)

Abandoned Property:

Rule: Abandoning property will generally forestall any later claim of a reasonable expectation of privacy in the item abandoned. (Below)

"Because warrantless searches or seizures of abandoned property do not violate the (F)ourth (A)mendment, persons who voluntarily abandon property lack standing to complain of its search or seizure." (United States v. Baker (9th Cir. 2023) 58 F.4th 1109, 1116-1117; quoting United States v. Nordling (9th Cir. 1986) 804 F.2nd 1466, 1469.)

Case Law:

Leaving a cellphone at the scene of a crime negates the suspect's expectation of privacy in the contents of that phone, and is therefore abandoned property despite the suspect's subjective wish to retrieve it, which he fails to act on. "Abandonment . . . is not meant in the strict property-right sense, but rests instead on whether the person so relinquished his interest in the property that he no longer retained a reasonable expectation of privacy in it at the time of the search." (People v. Daggs (2005) 133 Cal.App.4th 361.)

Similarly, abandoning one's cellphone (apparently for the purpose of avoiding the possibility that officers might "ping" it and determined his location) during a high speed (and foot) chase negated any need for officers to obtain a search warrant before opening the cellphone and using it to call defendant's wife. (United States v. Small (4th Cir. 2019) 944 F.3rd 490.)

See also People v. Juan (1985) 175 Cal.App.3rd 1064, 1069; defendant had "no reasonable expectation of privacy with regard to his jacket left draped over a chair at an empty table in a restaurant open to the public. . . . Indeed, an individual who leaves behind an article of clothing at a public place most likely hopes that some Good Samaritan will pick up the garment and search for identification in order to return it to the rightful owner. By leaving his jacket unattended in the restaurant, [the defendant] exposed it to the public and he cannot assert that he possessed a reasonable expectation of privacy in the pockets of the jacket."

And see United States v. Nowak (8th Cir. 2016) 825 F.3rd 946; defendant abandoned his backpack when he fled from police and left it in another's vehicle. The firearm found in the backpack was properly admitted into evidence.

Abandoning a cigarette butt onto a public street constitutes a loss of one's right to privacy in that butt, making it available to law enforcement to recover and test for DNA without a search warrant. (People v. Gallego (2010) 190 Cal.App.4th 388, 394-398.)

> However, tricking a suspect out of an item of personal property and then testing it for DNA can raise other issues, such as whether the abandonment was coerced. But, as noted in Gallego, at p. 396, several courts from other jurisdictions have found such a tactic to be lawful. (See Commonwealth v. Perkins (Mass. 2008) 883 N.E.2nd 230; and Commonwealth v. Bly (Mass. 2007) 862 N.E.2nd 341; testing cigarette butts and a soda can left behind after an interview with police. Commonwealth v. Ewing (Mass 2006) 67 Mass.App.Ct. 531 [854 N.E.2nd 993, 1001; offering defendant cigarettes and a straw during an interrogation. People v. LaGuerre (2006) 29 A.D.3rd 822 [815 N.Y.S.2nd 211]; obtaining a DNA sample from a piece of chewing gum defendant voluntarily discarded during a contrived soda tasting test. State v. Athan (Wash. 2007) 158 P.3rd 27; DNA obtained from defendant's saliva from licking an envelope he mailed to detectives in a police ruse.)

See also People v. Thomas (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 338: There is no privacy right in the mouthpiece of the PAS device, which was provided by the police and where defendant abandoned any expectation of privacy in the saliva he deposited on the device when he failed to wipe it off. Whether defendant subjectively expected that the genetic material contained in his saliva would become known to the police was irrelevant because he deposited it on a police device and thus made it accessible to the police. The officer who administered the PAS (Preliminary Alcohol Screening) test testified that used mouthpieces were normally discarded in the trash. Thus, any subjective expectation defendant may have had that his right to privacy would be preserved was unreasonable.

> The Thomas court further held that using defendant's DNA taken from the PAS device mouthpiece to legitimately test defendant's > blood/alcohol level, with his consent, was not a coercive ruse, and therefore lawful. (Id., at p. 344.)

Leaving all his belongings in a motel room, disappearing in the middle of the night and without making arrangements to extend his stay, it was held that defendant abandoned the motel room, his personal belongings in the room, and his vehicle in the parking lot. There being no reasonable expectation of privacy in these items due to this abandonment, defendant lost his standing to challenge the warrantless entry. The defendant's actual intent is irrelevant. (People v. Parson (2008) 44 Cal.4th 332, 342-348.)

> The issue is "whether the person so relinquished his interest in the property that he no longer retained a reasonable expectation of privacy in it at the time of the search." (Id., at p. 346.)

No standing to challenge the search of containers left by defendant at an auto body shop where defendant was a "mere guest or invitee." (People v. Ayala (2000) 23 Cal.4th 225, 253.)

By throwing his backpack onto the roof of a house upon the approach of police officers, defendant abandoned any expectation of privacy in that backpack that he might have previously had. (United States v. Juszczyk (10th Cir. Kan. 2017) 844 F.3rd 1213.)

Leaving one's backpack in a residence in which defendant had been trespassing (i.e., an unoccupied rental), precluded defendant from later claiming any expectation of privacy in that backpack. (United States v. Sawyer (7th Cir. IL. 2019) 929 F.3rd 497.)

Defendant's denial that he had a vehicle did not negate the unlawfulness of officers seizing a key with attached fob from his belt. Considering the "totality of the circumstances," the Government's theory that defendant abandoned the vehicle that the fob helped to locate was not accepted by the Court as sufficient to allow for the warrantless search of the car in which a firearm was found. Per the Court: "'[N]one of our "abandonment" cases has held that mere disavowal of ownership, without more, constitutes abandonment of a person's reasonable expectation of privacy in that property.'". (United States v. Baker (9th Cir. 2023) 58 F.4th 1109, 1118; quoting United States v. Lopez-Cruz (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 803, 809.)

The defendants argued that the district court erred in denying their second motion to suppress evidence derived from a 2018 search. The district court did not reach the merits because it determined that the defendants lacked standing to challenge the search of certain devices recovered from the attic crawlspace of the residence after it was sold to new owners. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal held that the district court did not clearly err by finding that the defendants abandoned the devices. The Court wrote that the defendants' failure to ensure that their brother recovered the devices before the home was sold, and their subsequent failure to take any additional action to recover that property, is sufficient to support a finding of abandonment, even if the defendants ceased their efforts only because they feared detection by law enforcement. The Court concluded that the defendants therefore lost any reasonable expectation of privacy in the devices, and lacked standing to seek suppression of their contents. (United States v. Fisher (9th Cir. 2022) 56 F.4th 673, 685-688.)

See "Abandoned Property," under "Searches of Containers" (Chapter 16), below.

Abandonment Caused by a "Threatened Illegal Detention:" What happens when the property is abandoned as a direct result of a police officer's attempt to illegally stop and detain a suspect?

The United States Supreme Court resolved a previous three-way split of authority: There is no constitutional violation in a "threatened unlawful detention." The Fourth Amendment does not apply to such a situation until the person is actually illegal detained; i.e., when the officer actually catches the defendant or the defendant otherwise submits to the officer's authority (i.e.; he gives up). (California v. Hodari D. (1991) 499 U.S. 621 [111 S.Ct. 1547; 113 L.Ed.2nd 690].)

Result: Any evidence abandoned (e.g., tossed or dropped) during a foot pursuit of a fleeing suspect, even without any reasonable suspicion justifying a detention (i.e., a "threatened unlawful detention"), is admissible as abandoned property (as well as supplying the necessary "reasonable suspicion" to justify the suspect's detention upon being caught).

But, if the suspect does not abandon the contraband until after he has been caught, and thus illegally detained, then it is subject to suppression as "fruit of the poisonous tree;" i.e., the unlawful detention.

Defendant discarding a firearm as officers were attempting to (arguably) illegally arrest him, did not require the suppression of the firearm in that when the gun was discarded, defendant had not yet been "touched," nor had he "submitted" to the officers. Thus, the Fourth Amendment was not yet implicated. (United States v. McClendon (9th Cir. 2013) 713 F.3rd 1211, 1214-1217.)

The Court noted that neither a temporary hesitation, nor the officer's use of a firearm while telling him he was under arrest, alters the rule of Hodari D. (Id., at pp. 1216-1217.)

The definition of a "seizure" was expanded a bit by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Torres v. Madrid (Mar. 25, 2021) __ U.S. __, __ [141 S.Ct. 989; 209 L.Ed.2nd 190], where the Court ruled that a "seizure" occurs when "(t)he application of physical force to the body of a person with intent to restrain is a seizure, even if the force does not succeed in subduing the person."

The Madrid Court overruled a lower court's holding that a suspect's continued flight after being shot by police negates a Fourth Amendment excessive-force claim.

Outside, Common Areas:

Defendant, observed by police officers retrieving contraband from a hole in the ground in the common area behind an apartment complex, did not have any reasonable expectation of privacy in that hole. (People v. Shaw (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 833.)

Observation by police of defendant's growing marijuana plants from a neighbor's property, even without the neighbor's knowledge or permission, by looking into defendant's adjacent backyard, was held to be lawful. Defendant did not have standing to challenge the trespass into the neighbor's yard, and did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in what was growing in his own yard in that his marijuana plants were plainly visible. (People v. Claeys (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 55.)

Indoor, Common Areas:

Bypassing an apartment's security system by entering the locked common hallways and allowing a drug-sniffing dog to locate the source of an odor of burning marijuana was not illegal. The defendant tenant had no expectation of privacy in the hallways that were accessible to other tenants and their guests. (State v. Nguyen (2013) ND 252, 841 N.W.2nd 676; citing, among other cases, United States v. Nohara (9th Cir. 1993) 3 F.3rd 1239, 1241-1242; holding the defendant had no legitimate expectation of privacy in hallway of secured apartment building even though the officers may have been trespassing.)

Note also United States v. Diaz (2nd Cir. 2017) 854 F.3rd 197, holding that an officer's conclusion that a "common-area stairwell" in an apartment building was a "public place" was reasonable.

Businesses: In evaluating a business, the Supreme Court has held that: "Property used for commercial purposes is treated differently for Fourth Amendment purposes from residential property." (Minnesota v. Carter (1998) 525 U.S. 83, 90 [119 S.Ct. 469; 142 L.Ed.2nd 373].)

"In the employment context, we have found a reasonable expectation of privacy to exist in an area 'given over to [an employee's] exclusive use." (Schowengerdt v. General Dynamics (9th Cir. 1987) 823 F.2nd 1328, 1335.) O'Brien's office was given over to O'Brien's exclusive use and contained his personal desk and files; . . ." (United States v. Taketa (9th Cir. 1991) 923 F.2nd 665, 671.)

However; "An expectation of privacy in commercial premises . . . is different from, and indeed less than, a similar expectation in an individual's home." (United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 695; citing New York v. Burger (1987) 482 U.S. 691, 700 [107 S.Ct. 2636; 96 L.Ed.2nd 601].)

The employee of a liquor store had no standing to challenge the search of the counter area where she had no expectation of privacy. (People v. Thompson (1988) 205 Cal.App.3rd 1503.)

No expectation of privacy in documents seized from another's business premises where the defendant had no control over the business and no possessory interest in the documents at the time of seizure. (People v. Workman (1989) 209 Cal.App.3rd 687, 696.)

No standing to challenge the search of containers left by defendant at an auto body shop where defendant was a "mere guest or invitee." (People v. Ayala (2000) 23 Cal.4th 225, 253.)

A hospital employee has no reasonable expectation of privacy in the hospital's mailroom. (United States v. Gonzalez (9th Cir. 2003) 328 F.3rd 543.)

A business that owns the company's computers may consent to the search of a computer used by an employee, at least when the employee is on notice that he has no reasonable expectation of privacy in the contents of the computer he is using. (United States v. Ziegler (9th Cir. 2006) 456 F.3rd 1138.)

Contrary to a small, family-owned business over which an individual exercises daily management and control (E.g., see United States v. Gonzalez (9th Cir. 2005) 412 F.3rd 1102.), challenging the legality of a search in a large business is much more complicated. Being the owner or manager of a business, alone, is not enough. The defendant must generally show some personal connection to the places being searched and the materials seized. Factors to consider in evaluating this personal connection include, but are not necessarily limited to:

- Whether the item seized is personal property or otherwise kept in a private place separate from other work-related material.
- Whether the defendant had custody or immediate control of the item when officers seized it.
- Whether the defendant took precautions on his own behalf to secure the place searched or things seized from any interference without authorization.

(United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 698.)

Social Media Accounts:

No violation of the Fourth Amendment resulted when a gang police detective portrayed himself as a friend to gain access to defendant's social media account and viewed and saved a copy of a video that defendant posted that was later admitted into evidence. In the posted video, defendant wore and discussed a chain resembling one taken in a strong-arm robbery. Although defendant chose a social media platform where posts disappeared after a period of time, he assumed the risk that the account for one of his "friends" could be an undercover profile for a police detective or that any other "friend" could save and share the information with government officials. No expectation of privacy. California's Electronic Communications Privacy Act ("CalECPA") had no application because defendant voluntarily granted access to his social media account to a "friend" and voluntarily then posted a video of himself with incriminating evidence. (People v. Pride (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 133, 137-141.)

See supra, at pp. 139-140, for case law from other jurisdictions uniformly holding that there is no expectation of privacy in what one posts on various forms of social media.

An Internet subscriber has no expectation of privacy in the subscriber information he supplies to his Internet provider. (People v. Stipo (2011) 195 Cal.App.4th 664, 668-669.)

Renting with a Stolen Credit Card: Under California law, one who rents a hotel room with a stolen credit card does not have standing to challenge an otherwise unlawful entry of the room by law enforcement. (People v. Satz (1998) 61 Cal.App.4th 322.)

However, the Ninth Circuit has developed its own rule that use of a stolen credit card alone is insufficient to negate the person's expectation of privacy in his room. There has to be evidence that the management has, or was at least intending to, evict the tenant for that reason before the tenant's expectation of privacy in is room becomes unreasonable. (See United States v. Dorais (9th Cir. 2001) 241 F.3rd 1124, 1127-1128.)

Despite renting a motel room with a stolen credit card, the defendant did not lose his standing to challenge an unlawful entry until the motel's manager took some affirmative steps to repossess the room. (United States v. Bautista (9th Cir. 2004) 362 F.3rd 584.)

Also, a defendant has not lost his expectation of privacy in his hotel room (which was later, after the fact, discovered to have been rented with a stolen credit card) by the hotel locking him out when he was locked out pursuant to a policy to do so after a dangerous weapon (a firearm) was found in the room by hotel employees.

Locking him out, in this case, was not done with the intent to evict him. The fact that he was arrested before his room was searched also does not diminish his expectation of privacy in the room. Lastly, use of the stolen credit card did not negate the defendant's expectation of privacy when its use was not known at the time, and therefore did not cause an intent to evict him because of its use. (United States v. Young (9th Cir. 2009) 573 F.3rd 711, 715-720.)

Another panel of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal reached the opposite result under similar circumstances, finding that a person does not have standing in a hotel room rented with a fraudulent credit card and other fraudulent documents. (United States v. Cunag (9th Cir. 2004) 386 F.3rd 888.)

> Note: This case may perhaps be differentiated from Bautista and Young because in Bautista, the hotel manager was still trying to work out some method of payment. And in Young, there was no attempt by the hotel manager, who at the time was unaware that the credit card used to rent the room was stolen, to evict defendant.

See also United States v. King (2010) 693 F.Supp.2nd 1200: A justified eviction from a hotel room ended any expectation of privacy defendant may have had in the room, or in any of the contents of that room, justifying a warrantless entry and search of the room by FBI agents.

However, using counterfeit money to rent a motel room does not deprive the defendant of standing to challenge the warrantless entry of her motel room unless there is some proof that the defendant knew that the money she used was counterfeit (i.e., no intent to defraud) and that the motel manager has already attempted to evict the defendant or seek the help of law enforcement in such an eviction. (People v. Munoz (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 126.)

Disclaiming Standing:

Rule: Generally, anyone who disclaims ownership of the place or item being searched will normally be held to have disclaimed standing in the process. (People v. Mendoza (1986) 176 Cal.App.3rd 1127; and People v. Dasilva (1989) 207 Cal.App.3rd 43; People v. Scott (1993) 17 Cal.App.4th 405.)

> Denying possession or ownership in a briefcase found in a vehicle defendant was driving deprived that defendant of the right to later challenge the legality of the warrantless search of that briefcase. (United States v. Decoud (9th Cir. 2006) 456 F.3rd 996.)

Exceptions: In cases that almost eat up the rule, disclaiming standing is generally held to be but one factor to consider and not necessarily dispositive.

Disclaimer is but one factor to consider when determining whether defendant had standing. (People v. Allen (1993) 17 Cal.App.3rd 1214.)

United States v. Hawkins (11th Cir. 1982) 681 F.2nd 1343, at p. 1346, has been used in both published and unreported California cases: "[A] disclaimer of ownership, while indeed strong indication that a defendant does not expect the article to be free from government intrusion, is not necessarily the hallmark for deciding the substance of a (F)ourth (A)mendment claim."

After the defendant was stopped by border agents, he told the agents that the car he was driving belonged to a friend. There were two cell phones in the center console. In response to questioning by the agents, the defendant said the phones also belonged to a friend. After being given permission to search the phones, the agents then answered incoming calls and pretended to be the defendant. Defendant filed a motion to suppress the evidence obtained when the agents answered the phone. The Court of Appeal agreed with the trial court that the location of the phones in the car suggested that the defendant was in possession of them and were being used by him at the time of the encounter. The agents apparently thought likewise since they asked defendant for consent before seizing the phone. The Court of Appeal noted that defendant had made no effort to get rid of the phones when he was stopped. Nothing suggested that defendant did not legitimately possess the phones. The Court of Appeal concluded the defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the phones. (United States v. Lopez-Cruz (9th Cir. 2003) 730 F.3rd 803, 807-808.)

And see United States v. Stephens (9th Cir. 2000) 206 F.3rd 914, where the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has held that even denial of standing (i.e.; "That ain't mine.") concerning seized property during an illegal detention will not keep that property from being suppressed as the product of the unlawful detention.

Also, denial by a defendant that he possessed a gun, allegedly recovered by police from his waistband, did not defeat defendant's claim of standing when he later challenged the search of his person. (People v. Dachino (2003) 111 Cal.App.4th 1429.)

Merely declining ownership of the items searched (e.g., cellphones) by itself, while a factor to consider, is not enough by itself to show that the defendant did not have standing, at least where there is nothing to indicate that he wasn't in permissive possession of the item searched. (United States v. Lopez-Cruz (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 803, 808-809.)

Denying owning any vehicles and telling officers that the vehicle in issue did not belong to him did not prevent him from claiming standing to contest the warrantless search of that vehicle. That's because there was no proof that he hadn't borrowed the car, or was otherwise in lawful possession of it. (People v. Casares (2016) 62 Cal.4th 808, 835-836.)

On Appeal: Whether or not an individual's expectation of privacy was objectively reasonable is reviewed by an appellate court "de novo." (United States v. Bautista (9th Cir. 2004) 362 F.3rd 584, 588-589.)

Mandatory Drug Dispensing Records and Prescription Monitoring Programs:

> See "Mandatory Drug Dispensing Records," under "Warrantless Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 9), below.

Reasonableness; Evaluated for Purposes of Search & Seizure*:

Rule: As the U.S. Supreme Court has reiterated many times: "The touchstone of the Fourth Amendment is reasonableness. [Citation] The Fourth Amendment does not proscribe all state-initiated searches and seizures; it merely proscribes those which are unreasonable." (Florida v. Jimeno (1991) 500 U.S. 248, 250 [111 S.Ct. 1801; 114 L.Ed.2nd 297]; see also Brigham City v. Stuart (2006) 547 U.S. 398, 403 [126 S.Ct. 1943; 164 L.Ed.2nd 650]; Michigan v. Fisher (2009) 558 U.S. 45, 47 [130 S.Ct. 546, 548; 175 L.Ed.2nd 410]; County of Los Angeles v. Mendez (2017) 581 U.S. 420, 427 [137 S.Ct. 1539; 198 L.Ed.2nd 52]; see also People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1119-1120; People v. Robinson (2012) 208 Cal.App.4th 232, 246; People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1041;

People v. Cruz (2019) 34 Cal.App.5th 764, 769; People v. Smith (2020) 46 Cal.App.5th 375, 382.)

Determining Reasonableness: The reasonableness of a search is determined by assessing, on the one hand, the degree to which it intrudes upon an individual's privacy and, on the other, the degree to which it is needed for the promotion of legitimate governmental interests. (United States v. Knights (2001) 534 U.S. 112, 118-119 [122 S.Ct. 587; 151 L.Ed.2nd 497]; People v. Robinson (2012) 208 Cal.App.4th 232, 246; Ioane *v. Hodges (9th Cir. 2019) 939 F.3rd 945, 952-953; People v. Cruz, supra.)

> Factors: "'Reasonableness … is measured in objective terms by examining the totality of the circumstances' [citation], and 'whether a particular search meets the reasonableness standard ""'is judged by balancing its intrusion on the individual's Fourth Amendment interests against its promotion of legitimate governmental interests.'"" [Citations.]" (People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1120 [104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 727, 224 P.3d 55]; see Bell v. Wolfish (1979), 441 U.S. 520 at p. 559 ["Courts must consider the scope of the particular intrusion, the manner in which it is conducted, the justification for initiating it, and the place in which it is conducted."]'.)" (People v. Boulter (2011) 199 Cal.App.4th 761; see also Ioane *v. Hodges (9th Cir. 2019) 939 F.3rd 945, 952-953.)

Case Law:

> See People v. Smith (2009) 172 Cal.App.4th 1354, where it was held that a public strip search of a probationer or parolee may in fact be unreasonable. But lowering a parolee's pants and pulling back the elastic ban of his underwear only to the extent necessary to see the crotch area, while shielding the suspect from public view, is neither a strip search nor unreasonable.
>
> Taking blood samples from a convicted person in the mistaken belief that the DNA and Forensic Identification Data Base and Data Bank Act of 1998 authorizes it, when the defendant is in fact a prisoner with a reduced expectation of privacy, is not unreasonable and does not require suppression of the result. (People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1119-1120.)
>
> The standard to be applied when evaluating the legality of the length of time a suspect is deprived of his property pending a search is one of "reasonableness," taking into account the "totality of the circumstances," and not necessarily requiring that the Government pursue the least intrusive course of action. Determining reasonableness requires a "balancing test," balancing "the nature and quality of the intrusion on the individual's Fourth Amendment interests against the importance of the governmental interests alleged to justify the intrusion." (Citations omitted; United States v. Sullivan (9th Cir. 2015) 797 F.3rd 623, 633; finding 21 days to be reasonable during which time the defendant's laptop was in law enforcement custody, in that defendant was in custody at the time so he couldn't use it anyway, was subject to a Fourth waiver, gave consent, and where the computer had to be transferred to a different agency to conduct the necessary forensic search.)

See also United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2017) 875 F.3rd 1265, 1276; finding a 3-day delay to be reasonable, as well as a one-year delay in obtaining a search warrant for a more thorough forensic search of defendant's cellphone.

And see County of Los Angeles v. Mendez (2017) 581 U.S. 420 [137 S.Ct. 1539; 198 L.Ed.2nd 52], where the Supreme Court rejected as "unreasonable" the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals' rule that police officers may be held liable for injuries caused by a seizure on the ground that the officers committed a separate Fourth Amendment violation that contributed to their need to use force; i.e., the so-called "provocation rule." Specifically, the Court held that the Fourth Amendment provides no basis for such a rule. A different Fourth Amendment violation cannot transform a later, reasonable use of force into an unreasonable seizure.

The Officer's Intentions:

Old Rule: Evaluating any Fourth Amendment search and seizure issue involved analyzing the law enforcement officer's actions both from an "objective" (as viewed by a reasonable person) and a "subjective" (i.e., in the officer's own mind) viewpoint. If a contested search or seizure was not both subjectively held and objectively reasonable, the search or seizure would be found to be illegal. (See Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347, 361-362 [88 S.Ct. 507; 19 L.Ed.2nd 576, 588].)

New Rule; Subjective Motivations are Irrelevant: A police officer's subjective motivations (or even his ignorance of the legality of the reasons) for conducting a search or seizure are irrelevant. The only issue is whether the Fourth Amendment was in fact violated. In other words, was a search or arrest lawful according to some statute or constitutional principle, even though the officer was not aware of it, or even thought, in his own mind, he believed he was in violation of the applicable law or principle? If the answer is "yes," then (with limited exceptions, see below), the search or arrest is lawful. (Whren v. United States (1996) 517 U.S. 806 [116 S.Ct. 1769; 135 L.Ed.2nd 89].)

> "'Reasonableness … is measured in objective terms by examining the totality of the circumstances' [citation], and 'whether a particular search meets the reasonableness standard ‘“‘is judged by balancing its intrusion on the individual's Fourth Amendment interests against its promotion of legitimate governmental interests.’”’ [Citations.]” (People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1120 . . . ; see Bell v. Wolfish (1979), 441 U.S. 520 at p. 559 [“Courts must consider the scope of the particular intrusion, the manner in which it is conducted, the justification for initiating it, and the place in which it is conducted.”]’.)” (People v. Boulter (2011) 199 Cal.App.4th 761; see also Ioane v. Hodges (9th Cir. 2019) 939 F.3rd 945, 952-953.)

“(I)n determining whether the officer acted reasonably, due weight must be given not to his unparticularized suspicions or ‘hunches,’ but to the reasonable inferences which he is entitled to draw from the facts in the light of his experience; in other words, he must be able to point to specific and articulable facts from which he concluded that his action was necessary.” (People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1049; noting (at p. 1052) that: “The officers here may well have acted with the very best of intentions. But just as an officer’s venial motives will generally not undermine an otherwise valid search, a benign intent cannot save an invalid one.”

Pretext Stops: Whren v. United States, supra, involved the use of a “pretext” to make a traffic stop (i.e., using a traffic infraction when the officers’ real motivation involved an issue not supported by the necessary reasonable suspicion), the U.S. Supreme Court deciding such a tactic was lawful so long as there was some lawful reason justifying the stop.

See “Pretext Stops,” under “Detentions” (Chapter 4), above.

“Posse Comitatus;” Use of the Military by Civilian Law Enforcement:

The Posse Comitatus Act: The so-called “Posse Comitatus Act” (“PCA”) provides, in part; “[w]hoever, except in cases and under circumstances expressly authorized by the Constitution or Act of Congress, willfully uses any part of the Army or the Air Force as a posse comitatus or otherwise to execute the laws shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.” (18 U.S.C. § 1385; see United States v. Dreyer (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 1266, 1272.)

See also 10 U.S.C. § 375: “The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to ensure that any activity (including the provision of any equipment or facility or the assignment or detail of any personnel) . . . does not include or permit direct participation by a member of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps in a search, seizure, arrest, or other similar activity unless participation in such activity by such member is otherwise authorized by law." (United States v. Dreyer, supra.)

"'Although the PCA does not directly reference the Navy or Marine Corps,' Congress prohibits 'Navy involvement in enforcing civilian laws.'" (United States v. Dreyer, supra, quoting United States v. Chon (9th Cir. 2000) 210 F.3rd 990, at 993; see also United States v. Hitchcock (9th Cir. 2002) 286 F.3rd 1064, 1069-1070; the Navy and Naval Criminal Investigative Service (NCIS) is bound by the PCA-like restrictions mandated by § 375.)

> A civilian special agent of the Naval Criminal Investigative Service (NCIS) is also bound by the PCA-like restrictions. (United States v. Dreyer, supra, at p. 1274.)

"Posse" means "to be able," or "to have power." "Comitatus" means "county." At common law, "Posse Comitatus" referred to the power of the sheriff to summon aid from every male in the county over 15 years of age and not infirm to assist in preserving the peace. (See People v. Bautista (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 229, 233, fn. 2.)

> Note: The federal Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal interprets "Posse Comitatus" as meaning "power of the country," as opposed to "county." (United States v. Dreyer, supra.)

Some states, including California, retained for years one form or another of this power. (See P.C. §§ 150 & 1550; making it an infraction for any able-bodied person over the age of 18 to fail to assist a law enforcement officer requesting such assistance, both sections repealed as of January 1, 2020. (SB 920)

Prohibited Activity:

DoDD 5525.5 § E4.1.3.4: Restrictions on direct assistance by military personnel in local criminal investigations: The use of military personnel for surveillance or pursuit of individuals, or as undercover agents, informants, investigators, or interrogators.

Activities which constitute an active role in direct law enforcement include the investigation of a crime. (United States v. Red Feather (D.S.D. 1975) 932 F.Supp. 916, 925.)

Exceptions:

Four categories of people are exempt from the PCA-like restrictions:

(1) Members of reserve components when not on active duty;

(2) Members of the National Guard when not in the Federal Service;

(3) Civilian employees of Department of Defense (DoD) unless under the direct command and control of a military officer; and

(4) Military service members when off duty and in a private capacity. (United States v. Dreyer (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 1266, 1273-1274; citing United States v. Chon (9th Cir. 2000) 210 F.3rd 990.)

But see 32 C.F.R. §§ 182.3 and 182.6(a)(1)(iii)(A), defining "DoD personnel" as "Federal military officers and enlisted personnel and civilian employees of the Department of Defense." These regulations state that "DoD personnel are prohibited from providing [specified] forms of direct civilian law enforcement assistance," including "search or seizure"; "[e]vidence collection"; "[s]urveillance . . . of individuals [or] items, . . . or acting as undercover agents, informants, [or] investigators"; and "[f]orensic investigations or other testing of evidence obtained from a suspect for use in a civilian law enforcement investigation in the United States unless there is a DoD nexus.". The new regulations expressly "[a]ppl[y] to civilian employees of the DoD Components," and "to all actions of DoD personnel worldwide." (32 C.F.R. §§ 182.2(e), 182.4(c)). The Secretary of Defense instituted these regulations under express congressional delegation (see 10 U.S.C. § 375), and they unambiguously interpret PCA-like restrictions to apply to civilian employees of DoD. (United States v. Dreyer, supra, at p. 1274.)

See statutory exceptions at 10 U.S.C. §§ 372-374, 379-382.

There is no violation where the military merely supplies equipment, logistical support, and backup security. (United States v. Klimavicius-Viloria (9th Cir. 1998) 144 F.3rd 1249, 1259; United States v. Khan (9th Cir. 1994) 35 F.3rd 426, 431-432.)

"PCA-like restrictions prohibit direct military involvement in civilian law enforcement activities, but they permit some indirect assistance, such as involvement that arises 'during the normal course of military operations or other actions that 'do not subject civilians to the use of military power that is regulatory, prescriptive, or compulsory.'" (United States v. Dreyer, supra, at p. 1274; quoting United States v. Hitchcock (9th Cir. 2002) 286 F.3rd 1064, 1069.)

A Marine Corps unit using a scope truck equipped with infrared night vision spotted defendant after he illegally snuck across the U.S.-Mexico border. The Marines alerted nearby Border Patrol agents that an individual was 10-15 feet north of the border fence near an area known as Mercado Rock. When later prosecuted for illegally entering the United States, defendant argued that the Marine Corps surveillance violated the Posse Comitatus Act, which codified the longstanding prohibition against military enforcement of civilian law. The Ninth Circuit ruled that the military may still assist civilian law enforcement agencies if Congress expressly authorizes it. The 2016 National Defense Authorization Act directed the U.S. Secretary of Defense to offer military assistance to Border Patrol in hopes of securing the southern land border. The district court was therefore held to have properly denied defendant's suppression motion based on the alleged violation of the Posse Comitatus Act. (United States v. Hernandez-Garcia (9th Cir. 2022) 32 F.4th 1207, 1213-1215.)

> The Court held that Section 1059 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2016, Pub. L. No. 114-92, 129 Stat. 726 (2015), is in fact more specific than 10 U.S.C.S. § 274 as applied, so § 1059 takes precedence over § 274. As such, § 1059 authorized the Marine Corps' surveillance of defendant at the southern border. The district court, therefore, rightly denied defendant's suppression motion based on an alleged violation of Posse Comitatus Act. (Ibid.)
>
> Notes:
>
> > "Section 1059 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2016, Pub. L. No. 114-92, 129 Stat. 726 (2015)" refers to an Act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2016 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe military personnel strengths for such fiscal year, and for other purposes.
> >
> > 10 U.S.C.S. § 274 refers to the authority of the Secretary of Defense to make Department of Defense personnel available for the maintenance of equipment for Federal, State, and local civilian law enforcement officials.

Purpose: The federal Act was enacted to prevent the use of federal military personnel to help enforce civilian law, thus preventing the U.S. Government from becoming "a government of force," i.e., run by the military. (People v. Bautista (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 229, 233, fn. 2.)

> "The statute 'eliminate[s] the direct active use of Federal troops by civil law authorities,' United States v. Banks, 539 F.2nd 14, 16 (9th Cir. 1976), and 'prohibits Army and Air Force military personnel from participating in civilian law enforcement activities,' (United States v.*) *Chon ((9th Cir. 2000)) 210 F.3rd (990) at 993." (United States v. Dreyer (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 1266, 1272-1281.)
>
> In 1981, Congress amended the Posse Comitatus Act to allow for certain military assistance in fighting the war on drugs. (See 18 U.S.C. §§ 371-378) However, these statutes were specifically "not [to] include or permit direct participation by a member of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps in a search, seizure, arrest, or other similar activity unless participation in such activity by such member is otherwise authorized by law." (18 U.S.C. § 375)
>
> > "[R]egular and systematic assistance by military investigative agents to civilian law enforcement in the investigation of local drug traffic" raises issues as to whether the "Posse Comitatus Act" has been violated. (People v. Blend (1981) 121 Cal.App.3rd 215, 228.)

Case Law:

> In People v. Blend (1981) 121 Cal.App.3rd 215, 225-228, it was held that the Posse Comitatus Act was not violated when an active duty WAVE assisted local law enforcement with arranging the purchase of cocaine from the defendant, despite the cooperation of the Naval Investigative Service (NIS) which permitted the investigation to proceed on the base, provided the investigator with passes, and assisted in appellant's arrest.
>
> > Per the Court, the WAVE acted on her own initiative as a private citizen. Moreover, she was not regularly involved in law enforcement activities with the military, and her usefulness to civil law enforcement was unrelated to the fact that she was a WAVE.
> >
> > The court also found that the cooperation by the NIS in permitting the investigation of appellant to continue on the base did not demonstrate a violation of the act, and there was no evidence that the NIS arranged or participated in a program to detect violation of the civil narcotics laws.

In People v. Bautista (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 229, 232-237, use of an Army sergeant and his drug-sniffing dog that alerted on the defendant's storage locker in which 100 pounds of marijuana was later found, did not constitute a violation of the "Posse Comitatus Act" because the sergeant did not participate in any stage of the investigation and search other than to point out the location of the defendant's hidden drugs by smelling odors in a public place.

An agent of the Naval Criminal Investigative Service (NCIS) launched an investigation for online criminal activity by anyone in the State of Washington, whether connected with the military or not, and found evidence that defendant was trafficking in child pornography but was not a member of the military. The agent passed along the information to local law enforcement which obtained a search warrant for defendant's computer and, when child pornography was found on his computer, indicted him in federal court. The Ninth Circuit ruled that NCIS and its civilian agents are subject to Posse Comitatus Act (PCA)-like restrictions under 10 U.S.C. § 375, proscribing direct assistance to civilian law enforcement. The NCIS agent's investigation in this case violated these PCA-like restrictions in that it was not limited to members of the military, but monitored all computers in a geographical area. Application of the exclusionary rule to suppress child pornography evidence found on defendant's computer, however, was not warranted in that it was not shown that suppression was necessary to prevent future violations. The military was best suited to correct the violation and had initiated steps to do so. (United States v. Dreyer (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 1266, 1272-1281.)

Sanctions for Violations: It is questionable whether the use of the Exclusionary Rule is a proper sanction for a violation of the "Posse Comitatus Act:"

The federal Fourth Circuit in United States v. Walden (4th Cir. 1974) 490 F.2nd 372, 376-377, found no indication of widespread violation of the Act or its policy and declined to adopt an exclusionary rule. The court stated that the statute was previously little known, that there was no evidence that the violation in this case was deliberate or intentional, that the policy expressed in the Posse Comitatus Act is for the benefit of the nation as a whole, and not designed to protect the personal rights of individual defendants. Noting that a rationale for adopting an exclusionary rule for Fourth Amendment violations is that available alternative remedies have proved ineffectual, the court expressed confidence that the military would take steps to ensure enforcement of the Act.

> However, the Court noted at page 377; "Should there be evidence of widespread or repeated violations in any future case, or ineffectiveness of enforcement by the military, we will consider > ourselves free to consider whether adoption of an exclusionary rule is required as a future deterrent." (See also United States v. Wolffs (5th Cir. 1979) 594 F.2nd 77, 84-85.)

Application of the exclusionary rule to suppress child pornography evidence found on the non-military defendant's computer by an NCIS agent was not warranted in that it was not shown that suppression was necessary to prevent future violations of the "Posse Comitatus Act." The military was best suited to correct the violation and had initiated steps to do so. (United States v. Dreyer (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 1266, 1277-1281.)

Chapter 9*:

Warrantless Searches and Seizures*:

General Rule:

> "The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States protects against unreasonable searches and seizures of private property. (U.S. Const., art. IV.) 'In general, a law enforcement officer is required to obtain a warrant before conducting a search.' (People v. Lopez (2019) 8 Cal.5th 353, 359 . . . .) Warrantless searches 'are per se unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment—subject only to a few specifically established and well-delineated exceptions.' (Katz v. U.S. (1967) 389 U.S. 347, 357 [19 L.Ed.2nd 576; 88 S.Ct. 507], fns. omitted.) 'The prosecution bears the burden of establishing an exception applies.' (People v. Hall (2020) 57 Cal.App.5th 946, 951. . . .)" (People v. Castro (2022) 86 Cal.App.5th 314, 319.)
>
> "In general, evidence that the government obtains in violation of a criminal defendant's Fourth Amendment rights must be excluded from that defendant's trial. Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 398, 34 S.Ct. 341, 58 L.Ed. 652, T.D. 1964 (1914). Whether the exclusionary rule applies to a given case is reviewed de novo, and factual findings are reviewed for clear error. United States v. Lundin, 817 F.3d 1151, 1157 (9th Cir. 2016)." (United States v. Esqueda (9th Cir. 2023) 88 F.4th 818, 823.)

Search vs. Seizure:

> There is a difference between a "search" and a "seizure," necessitating somewhat different standards for each. E.g.:
>
> > Differentiating a "search" from a "seizure," the Second Circuit Court of Appeal discussed the difference between conducting a patdown (a search) and positioning him in preparation for doing a patdown (a seizure), noting the traditional conditions that must be present for it to be a search, i.e., whether police: (1) "physically intrud[es] on a constitutionally protected area" under United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S. Ct. 945, 181 L.Ed.2nd 911], or (2) violate a person's "reasonable expectation of privacy" under Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347 [88 S.Ct. 507, 19 L.Ed.2nd 576]. In this case, merely ordering defendant to stand at the rear quarter panel, even when the officers had the subjective intent to position defendant for a frisk, simply was not a search under either Jones or Katz. Consequently, the Court concluded that no Fourth Amendment search occurred until the frisking officer's "hands physically came into contact with Weaver['s]" person. (United States v. Weaver (2nd Cir. NY, 2021) 9 F.4th 129.)

"A seizure conducted without a warrant is per se unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment—subject only to a few specifically established and well delineated exceptions." (United States v. Hawkins (9th Cir. 2001) 249 F.3rd 867, 872; Brewster v. Beck (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 1194, 1196; People v. McGee (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 796, 800-801; People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 812.)

> Also, it is well established that "a seizure lawful at its inception can nevertheless violate the Fourth Amendment because its manner of execution unreasonably infringes possessory interests." (United States v. Jacobsen (1984) 466 U.S. 109, 124 [104 S.Ct.1652; 80 L.Ed.2nd 85, & fn. 25; citing United States v. Place (1983) 462 U.S. 696, 707-710 [103 S.Ct. 2673; 77 L.Ed.2nd 110]; United States v. Dass (9th Cir. 1988) 849 F.2nd 414, 414-415; Lavan v. City of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2012) 693 F.3rd 1030; Brewster v. Beck, supra, at p. 1196.)
>
> Parole and Fourth waiver probation searches are among those "well delineated exceptions." (United States v. Estrella (9th Cir. 2023) 69 F.4th 958, 864.)

Although the use of a search warrant when conducting any search is the general rule (see below, and "Searches With a Search Warrant" (Chapter 10), below), under the terms of the Fourth Amendment, the search of a person, vehicle and (possibly) container without a warrant may often be justified under one or more of three legal theories:

- Incident to Arrest
- With Probable Cause plus Exigent Circumstances
- With Consent

> Note: Each of these theories is separately discussed in the following chapters.

Searches of a house (or residence) pose different problems relating to the necessity of a warrant. (See "Searches of Residences and Other Buildings" (Chapter 13), below.

Note: And note that in addition to the "seizure" of evidence, etc., a person is also subject to being seized; i.e., arrested. (See "Arrests" Chapter 5, above.)

Two Types of Searches*:

"The Supreme Court has held that a Fourth Amendment search can occur in one of two ways. First, under the Katz test, a search occurs when the 'government violates a subjective expectation of privacy that society recognizes as reasonable.' Kyllo v. United States, 533 U.S. 27, 33, 121 S.Ct. 2038, 150 L.Ed.2nd 94 (2001) (citing Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 361, 88 S.Ct. 507, 19 L.Ed.2nd 576 (1967) . . . . Second, under the 'unlicensed physical intrusion' test, a search occurs when the government 'physically occupie[s] private property for the purpose of obtaining information,' Jones, 565 U.S. at 404, 'to engage in conduct not explicitly or implicitly permitted' by the property owner, Jardines, 569 U.S. at 6. (fn. omitted; see below.) Each test is independently sufficient to determine whether government conduct amounts to a Fourth Amendment search: a search occurs if police conduct satisfies either the Katz test or the unlicensed physical intrusion test, even if that conduct does not amount to a search under the other test. See Jones, 565 U.S. at 406 ('Fourth Amendment rights do not rise or fall with the Katz formulation.')." (United States v. Esqueda (9th Cir. 2023) 88 F.4th 818, 823; citing United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S. Ct. 945, 181 L.Ed.2nd 911]; and Florida v. Jardines (2013) 569 U.S. 1 [133 S.Ct. 1409; 185 L.Ed.2nd 495].)

> At page 823, fn. 3, the Esqueda Court also commented: "The Supreme Court has also referred to this test as the 'common-law trespassory test' because the Fourth Amendment 'embod[ies] a particular concern for government trespass; on constitutionally protected areas. Jones, 565 U.S. at 406."

Exceptions to the Search Warrant Requirement*:

Aside from the three legal theories noted above, there are at least nine other justifications for the search and/or seizure of evidence without the need for a search warrant, as discussed individually below:

- Plain Sight Observations
- Plain Hearing
- Plain Smell
- Exigent Circumstances
- Special Needs Searches and Seizures
- Closely Regulated Businesses or Activities
- School Searches
- Airport Searches
- Inventory Searches
- Minimal Intrusion
- Private Search Doctrine
- Prescription Monitoring Programs

Plain Sight Observations: A "plain sight" (or "plain view") observation (or "plain smell" or "plain hearing") is (are) not a search, and thus does (do) not implicate the Fourth Amendment. (See below.)

Rule:

> A plain sight observation of contraband or other evidence made while the officer is in a place or a position he or she has a lawful right to be does not involve any constitutional issues. (People v. Block (1971) 6 Cal.3rd 239, 243; North v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal.3rd 301, 306.)
>
> > This includes when the officer is in one's residence, assuming the officer is lawfully in that residence in the first place. (See People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1042.)
> >
> > It also includes within a person's vehicle. (People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 816.)

No Search: There is no search when an officer "observe(s) criminal activity with the naked eye from a vantage point accessible to the general public." (United States v. Garcia (9th Cir. 1993) 997 F.2nd 1273, 1279; People v. Ortiz (1994) 32 Cal.App.4th 286, 291.)

> "Under the plain view doctrine, an officer may seize an item without a warrant if (1) the officer was lawfully in a place where the object could be viewed; (2) the officer had a lawful right of access to the seized item; and (3) the item's evidentiary value was immediately apparent. (Citations): (People v. Caro (2019) 7 Cal.5th 463, 487-489; upholding the seizure by a police officer of defendant's clothing, observed in plain sight at the hospital, with visible blood stains, after hospital personnel had cut them off of defendant and left them on a backboard used to carry defendant to the hospital.)
>
> See "Plain Sight Observations," under "Searches of Residences" (Chapter 13), below.

Justification for a Seizure: When a peace officer lawfully discovers an item he reasonably believes is potential evidence (i.e., a "reasonable possibility") of a particular crime, observed in "plain sight," and its seizure appears necessary for its preservation, he may seize the item without a warrant. (People v. Curley (1970) 12 Cal.App.3rd 732.) Five requirements are listed by the court (at p. 747) for this rule to apply:

- The officer must have "reasonable cause" (i.e., "probable cause") to believe a particular crime has been committed. This requirement is compelled by the Constitution in order to avoid the danger of exploratory searches and seizures.

- The evidence must not have been discovered as the result of any invasion, intrusion, or illegal entry other than purely formal trespass.

- The evidence must be in plain sight or readily accessible to routine inspection without rummage or pry. If the evidence is discoverable only as a result of inquisitive or exploratory action then what is involved is a search, and the rules for search apply.

- The officer must have reasonable cause to believe the evidence tends to show the commission of the crime or tends to show that a particular person committed the crime.

- The seizure must be necessary to preserve potential evidence, and the degree of invasion of other interests affected by the seizure must be in proportion to the seriousness of the crime.

No Expectation of Privacy: There is no expectation of privacy in anything voluntarily exposed to public view. (See People v. Benedict (1969) 2 Cal.App.4th 400, 403-404; defendant's physical characteristics observed in plain sight by a police officer, leading to his arrest for being under the influence of a controlled substance.)

> "What a person knowingly exposes to the public, even in his own home or office, is not a subject of Fourth Amendment protection." (Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347, 351 [88 S.Ct. 507; 19 L.Ed.2nd 576, 582.)
>
> > "Thus a man's home is, for most purposes, a place where he expects privacy, but objects, activities, or statements that he exposes to the 'plain view' of outsiders are not 'protected' because no intention to keep them to himself has been exhibited. . . . (C)onversations in the open would not be protected against being overheard, for the expectation of privacy under the circumstances would be unreasonable." (Id., at p. 361 [19 L.Ed.2nd at p. 588]; concurring opinion.)

Examples:

> An officer standing in the common areas of an apartment complex, observing contraband though a person's uncovered windows, is not illegal. (People v. Superior Court* [Reilly] (1975) 53 Cal.App.3rd 40, 50.)

But, trespassing at the side of a house where the public is not impliedly invited, at least when investigating a minor offense (i.e., loud music) and no attempt is first made to contact the resident by knocking at the front door, makes the officers' observations into the defendant's uncovered windows illegal. (People v. Camacho (2000) 23 Cal.4th 824.)

> But see the dissent in Camacho, at pp. 843-844, listing a considerable number of federal circuit court decisions [not binding upon the state courts] which have ruled to the contrary in similar circumstances.

Walking around to the back of the defendant's house to knock, while looking for an armed parolee-at-large, was held to be lawful, differentiating the rule of Camacho on the facts and the relative seriousness of the crimes involved. The fact that the officer was "trespassing" held not to be significant when considering the "reasonableness" of the officer's actions. (People v. Manderscheid (2002) 99 Cal.App.4th 355.)

Walking all the way around a house in an attempt to locate an occupant was lawful, and the plain sight observations made while doing so were therefore admissible. (United States v. Hammett (9th Cir. 2001) 236 F.3rd 1054.)

Use of night vision goggles to observe areas within the curtilage of defendants' residence was irrelevant. (People v. Lieng (2010) 190 Cal.App.4th 1213, 1227-1228.)

The use of a flashlight to look into a structure, when the officers are in a place they have a lawful right to be, is not a search. (United States v. Dunn (1987) 480 U.S. 294, 298, 304 [107 S.Ct. 1134; 94 L.Ed.2nd 326, 333]; (People v. Chavez (2008) 161 Cal.App.4th 1493, 1501; United States v. Barajas-Avalos (9th Cir. 2004) 359 F.3rd 1204, 1214, but see dissenting opinion, at pp. 1220-1221.)

Observing defendant retrieving contraband from a hole in the ground behind an apartment complex, this observation being made from another person's private property with that person's permission, is a lawful plain sight observation. (People v. Shaw (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 833.)

The use of binoculars to enhance what the officer can already see, depending upon the degree of expectation of privacy involved under the circumstances, is normally lawful. (People v. Arno (1979) 90 Cal.App.3rd 505.)

Similarly, observation of a marijuana patch while flying at an altitude of some 1,500 to 2,000 feet, visible to the naked eye (and then enhanced through the use of binoculars), did not violate the defendant's privacy rights. (Burkholder v. Superior Court (1979) 96 Cal.App.3rd 421; see also People v. St Amour (1980) 104 Cal.App.3rd 886, observations made from 1,000 to 1,500 feet, again enhanced through the use of binoculars, held to be lawful.)

Ordering a person to lift his sunglasses exposing his eyes is not a search. (People v. Weekly (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 1264; dilated pupils observed.)

The surveillance and photographing of defendant in public was not a Fourth Amendment violation despite the fact that defendant's identity and location where he was expected to appear were determined through the use of a witness telephone hotline program which guaranteed anonymity to its callers. (People v. Maury (2003) 30 Cal.4th 342, 382-403.)

Observation of child pornography on the defendant's computer, being lawfully searched as authorized by a homicide warrant, was in "plain sight," and admissible in a later pornography prosecution. (United States v. Wong (9th Cir. 2003) 334 F.3rd 831.)

A person who exposes his facial features, and/or body in general, to the public, in a public place, has no reasonable expectation of privacy in his appearance. (See People v. Benedict (1969) 2 Cal.App.3rd 400, 403-404; "The latter phenomenon (defendant's physical characteristics) was in plain sight of the officer and observed by him without any semblance of a search or seizure; his use of a flashlight to observe the pupillary reaction was not improper. The utilization of the light from a flashlight directed to that which is in plain sight ordinarily does not render observation thereof a search;" citing People v. Cacioppo (1968) 264 Cal.App.2nd 392, 397.)

18 U.S.C.S. § 1030(e)(6) of the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1986 covers those who obtain information from particular areas in the computer, such as files, folders, or databases, to which their computer access does not extend. It does not cover those who have improper motives for obtaining information that was otherwise available to them. Since the parties agreed that a police officer was allowed to use a computerized system at issue here to retrieve license-plate information, he did not exceed authorized access to the database, as the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1986 defined that phrase, even though he had obtained information from the database for an improper purpose. (Van Buren v. United States (June 3, 2021) __ U.S. __ [141 S.Ct. 1648; 210 L.Ed.2nd 26].)

A city's use of cameras on its streetlights, recording and temporarily preserving the movements of persons and vehicles in public places, is lawful, with the resulting pictures not subject to suppression in that a person caught on such a camera has no reasonable expectation of privacy in what he exposes to public view. (People v. Cartwright (2024) 99 Cal.App.5th 98, 102.)

Hospital Emergency Room Cases:

"Under the plain view doctrine, an officer may seize an item without a warrant if (1) the officer was lawfully in a place where the object could be viewed; (2) the officer had a lawful right of access to the seized item; and (3) the item's evidentiary value was immediately apparent. (Citations)" (People v. Caro (2019) 7 Cal.5th 463, 487-489; upholding the seizure by a police officer of defendant's clothing, observed in plain sight at the hospital, with visible blood stains, after hospital personnel had cut them off of defendant and left them on a backboard used to carry defendant to the hospital.)

Officers responding to a 911 call about gunfire at an apartment complex, and finding a blood trail leading to a bloody pistol on the ground, they then went to a local hospital where it was reported a gunshot victim had been taken. In the emergency room, they found defendant being treated and his bloody clothes on the floor. At the officer's request, a nurse retrieved defendant's identification from his clothes. A search warrant for a DNA swab was executed on defendant the next day, resulting in a match to the blood at the scene and on the abandoned pistol. Video surveillance footage showed defendant meeting two people in the apartment complex parking lot, drawing a gun on them, but getting shot himself. Charged with being a felon in possession of a firearm, defendant's motion to suppress the blood evidence was denied. On appeal, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed. Defendant's sole argument was that the officer violated his Fourth Amendment rights by entering his hospital room which allowed the officer to see his clothes on the floor, violating his "reasonable expectation of privacy," such as that enjoyed by overnight guests in homes and hotel rooms. The Court rejected this argument, ruling that being admitted to the hospital for a gunshot wound does not serve the same valuable societal function. Second, the court recognized that police in Minnesota (as in most states) are expected to show up to hospitals to investigate a gunshot-wound victim such as defendant because Minnesota law requires hospitals to report gunshot wounds to the police, and that an officer is fulfilling his "lawful duty" in interviewing victims in gunshot cases. Finally, the court found that, unlike in a hotel room and residential guest rooms, in a hospital room people are constantly coming and going from the room to provide medical services. Although there is a significant privacy interest in medical care, the court commented that this interest is diminished in Minnesota for patients with gunshot wounds because the law requires the reporting of gunshot wounds. As a result, the court held that defendant did not have an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in his hospital room, negating any argument that the officer violated his Fourth Amendment rights by entering the room and seizing his clothes. (United States v. Mattox (8th Cir. 2022) 27 F.4th 668.)

Exceptions:

The Eight Circuit Court of Appeal has held that seizing a firearm observed in plain sight under circumstances where there was no reason to believe anyone was in any danger, or other probable cause to believe that the firearm was associated with any crime, was held to be a Fourth Amendment violation. (United States v. Lewis (8th Cir. 2017) 864 F.3rd 937.)

See also United States v. Arredondo (8th Cir. 2021) 996 F.3rd 903, where officers observed vials on a couch in plain sight, but were unsure of what the substance in it might be, the Court noting that while a deputy sheriff believed that the vials laying on the couch "seem[ed] a little odd," something seeming "a little odd" is usually no more than a hunch and not probable cause.

Where an unlawful order to exit a car leads to the observation of contraband on the driver's person, the police may not rely on the plain view doctrine to justify a warrantless seizure. (United States v. Davis (10th Cir. 1996) 94 F.3rd 1465, 1470: The "first and most fundamental prerequisite to reliance upon plain view as a basis for a warrantless seizure . . . is that 'the initial intrusion which brings the police within plain view of such an article' is itself lawful." "The [plain view] doctrine serves to supplement the prior justification—whether it be a warrant for another object, hot pursuit, search incident to lawful arrest, or some other legitimate reason for being present unconnected with a search directed against the accused."

The "Plain Sight Observation" vs. the Right to Enter a Residence: When observing contraband within a residence from the outside, even when the observation would be lawful, a warrantless entry into those premises to seize the contraband would not be justified absent exigent circumstances. (Horton v. California (1990 496 U.S. 128, 137 [110 S.Ct. 2301; 110 L.Ed.2nd 112, 123]; United States v. Murphy (9th Cir. 2008) 516 F.3rd 1117, 1121.) A search warrant authorizing the entry of the residence must first be obtained.

"The (plain view) doctrine does not amount to a full exception to the warrant requirement, but merely allows a warrantless seizure where an officer lawfully views, and can lawfully access, contraband or incriminating evidence. (Citations)" (People v. Caro (2019) 7 Cal.5th 463, 495-489.)

However, exigent circumstances would be present if the officer reasonably believes that the occupants of the residence have discovered that the police are aware of contraband in the residence. (Horton v. California, supra.)

"The (Horton) opinion 'described the two limitations on the [plain view] doctrine . . . implicit in its rationale: First, that "plain view alone is never enough to justify the warrantless seizure of evidence," [citation]; and second, that "the discovery of evidence in plain view must be inadvertent." [Citation.]'" (People v. Rorabaugh (2022) 74 Cal.App.5th 296 309; quoting Horton v. California, supra, at p. 136, and ruling that the warrantless seizure of defendant's vehicle from the yard of a third party was illegal.)

"'It is, of course, an essential predicate to any valid warrantless seizure of incriminating evidence that the officer did not violate the Fourth Amendment in arriving at the place from which the evidence could be plainly viewed. There are, moreover, two additional conditions that must be satisfied to justify the warrantless seizure. First, not only must the item be in plain view; its incriminating character must also be "immediately apparent." [Citations.] Thus, in Coolidge (v. New Hampshire *(*1971) 403 U.S. 443 [29 L.Ed.2nd 564; 91 S.Ct. 2022].), the cars were obviously in plain view, but their probative value remained uncertain until after the interiors were swept and examined microscopically. Second, not only must the officer be lawfully located in a place from which the object can be plainly seen, but he or she must also have a lawful right of access to the object itself.'" (People v. Rorabaugh, supra, at pp. 309-310; quoting Horton v. California, supra, at pp. 136–137, fn. omitted, italics added.)

(E)ven though 'no invasion of personal privacy has occurred' if police 'lawfully enter a house,' and 'come across some item in plain view and seize it,' further 'scrupulous[] … inquiry' is necessary to vindicate the Fourth Amendment. (Citation.) '[I]n the absence of consent or a warrant permitting the seizure of the items in question, such seizures can be justified only if they meet the probable-cause standard, [citation], and if they are unaccompanied by unlawful trespass, Horton, 496 U.S., at [pp.] 136–137. That is because, the absence of a privacy interest notwithstanding, "[a] seizure of the article . . . would obviously invade the owner's possessory interest."' (People v. Rorabaugh, supra, at p. 310; quoting Soldal v. Cook County (1992) 506 U.S. 56, 65-66 [121 L.Ed. 2nd 450; 113 S.Ct. 538].

"Plain Hearing:" It has also been held that an offense occurring within a police officer's sense of hearing is within his presence, and can supply probable cause. (People v. Bradley (1957) 152 Cal.App.2nd 527.)

> The crime of making annoying or harassing telephone calls, per Pen. Code § 653x, is done in the listener's presence. (People v. Bloom (2010) 185 Cal.App.4th 1496; harassing phone calls to a police dispatcher.)
>
> Evidence obtained in "plain hearing," when overhearing speakers unrelated to the target conspiracy while listening pursuant to a valid wiretap, is admissible. (United States v. Carey (9th Cir. 2016) 836 F.3rd 1092.)
>
> See "Applicability of the 'plain view' (or 'plain hearing' doctrine to wiretaps," under "Searches With a Search Warrant" (Chapter 10), below.

"Plain Smell:" It has been argued that there should be no logical distinction between something apparent to the senses of sight and hearing and the same thing apparent to the sense of smell. (People v. Bock Leung Chew (1956) 142 Cal.App.2nd 400.)

> General Rule: "If the presence of odors is testified to before a magistrate and he finds the affiant qualified to know the odor, and it is one sufficiently distinctive to identify a forbidden substance, this Court has never held such a basis insufficient to justify issuance of a search warrant. Indeed, it might very well be found to be evidence of most persuasive character." (Johnson v. United States (1948) 333 U.S. 10, 13 [68 S.Ct. 367; 92 L.Ed. 436, 440]; see also District of Columbia v. Wesby et al. (2018) 583 U.S. 48, 58, fn. 5 [138 S.Ct. 577; 199 L.Ed.2nd 453], noting that "a reasonable officer could infer, based on the smell, that marijuana had been used in the house (occupied by trespassers.)"
>
> > This, however, does not relieve the officer of the legal duty to obtain a search warrant before opening an already seized package which is the source of the odor, absent exigent circumstances excusing the lack of a warrant. (Johnson v. United States, supra, at p. 14.)
> >
> > While the odor of marijuana coming from a mailed package will justify the seizure of such package, it does not excuse the lack of a search warrant when law enforcement opens the package without exigent circumstances. (Robey v. Superior Court (2013) 56 Cal.4th 1218, 1223-1243; overruling People v. McKinnon (1972) 7 Cal.3rd 899, 909; which had held to the contrary.
> >
> > > See particularly the concurring opinion in Robey v. Superior Court, supra, at pp. 1243-1254.)

Odors in a Residence:

The odor of opium coming from an apartment supplied sufficient probable cause to justify an entry, arrest and search of the apartment. (People v. Bock Leung Chew (1956) 142 Cal.App.2nd 400.)

However, entering a residence with probable cause to believe only that the non-bookable offense of possession of less than an ounce of marijuana is occurring (H&S § 11357(b)), is closer to the Welsh v. Wisconsin (1984) 466 U.S. 740 [104 S.Ct. 2091; 80 L.Ed.2nd 732] situation (a civil offense only), and a violation of the Fourth Amendment when entry is made without consent or a search warrant. (People v. Hua (2008) 158 Cal.App.4th 1027; People v. Torres et al. (2012) 205 Cal.App.4th 989, 993-998.)

> The Torres Court also rejected as "speculation" the People's argument that there being four people in the defendants' hotel room indicted that a "marijuana-smoking party" was occurring, which "probably" involved a bookable amount of marijuana. (People v. Torres et al., supra, at p. 996.)

The odor of burning marijuana coming from a residence, noticed by officers conducting a "knock and talk" at the front door, and the plain sight observation of a burning marijuana cigarette in the kitchen, supplied the necessary probable cause to believe that more marijuana might be located elsewhere in the house. The odor and observation supplied the necessary probable cause justifying the obtaining of a search warrant for the entire house, including "any safes or locked boxes." Discovery of an illegal firearm in a safe (defendant being a felon), along with cocaine, during the execution of the search warrant, was held to be lawful. (United States v. Jones (4th Cir. 2020) 952 F.3rd 153.)

See "Odor of Ether in a Residence," below.

Odors on the Person:

The "strong odor of fresh marijuana" on defendant's person was held to be sufficient probable cause to believe defendant was in possession of the marijuana. (People v. Gale (1973) 9 Cal.3rd 788, 793, fn. 4; a pre-legalization (i.e., January 1, 2018; see H&S §§ 11362.1 et seq.) of marijuana case.

Odors in Vehicles:

Pre-Legalization (i.e., before January 1, 2018):

Odor of marijuana smoke during a traffic stop justified the search of a vehicle. (People v. Lovejoy (1970) 12 Cal.App.3rd 883, 887.)

The odor of marijuana emanating from two trucks at a private airstrip, under circumstances consistent with smuggling operations, was found to constitute probable cause to believe the trucks contained marijuana. (United States v. Johns (1985) 469 U.S. 478 [105 S.Ct. 881; 83 L.Ed.2nd 890].)

The odor of beer noted during a traffic stop supplied probable cause to search the car for alcohol. (People v. Molina (1994) 25 Cal.App.4th 1038.)

The odor of burnt marijuana plus the plain sight observation of a pipe containing what appeared to be marijuana residue in defendant's vehicle was sufficient to justify the warrantless search of the vehicle. (People v. Waxler (2014) 224 Cal. App. 4th 712.)

The combined odor of burnt and fresh marijuana coming from defendant's motor vehicle supplied the necessary probable cause to search defendant's vehicle without a search warrant, under the "automobile exception" to the search warrant requirement. (United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2019) 913 F.3rd 793, 801; citing United States v. Barron (9th Cir. 1972) 472 F.2nd 1215, 1217.)

Other Jurisdictions:

The courts in some jurisdictions feel that the odor alone, without other suspicious circumstances, may not be sufficient to establish probable cause. (See People v. Taylor (Mich. 1997) 564 N.W.2nd 24; odor of marijuana did not justify the warrantless search of a vehicle.)

It has also been held elsewhere that there must be probable cause to believe that there is a criminal amount of marijuana in a vehicle in order to justify a warrantless search. (See Commonwealth v. Cruz (2011) 459 Mass. 459 [945 N.E.2d 899].)

However, it was not error for the federal district court to deny defendant's motion to suppress evidence retrieved from his car because the prolonged stop following a routine traffic stop was justified by the smell of marijuana along with the credible testimony by the police officer. The odor alone was sufficient to establish probable cause to search the automobile and its contents. (United States v. Smith) (8th Cir. 2015) 789 F.3rd 923.)

"(T)he smell of burnt marijuana alone establishes probable cause to search a vehicle for the illegal substance." (United States v. Snyder (10th Cir. 2015) 793 F.3rd 1241; see also United States v. Walker (8th Cir. 2016) 840 F.3rd 477; odor of unburned marijuana alone supplied sufficieint probable cause to search defendant's vehicle.)

The odor of marijuana emanating from defendant's vehicle held to be sufficient, by itself, to establish probable cause for the search of his vehicle (marijuana being illegal in Iowa), the Court noting: "(W)e have repeatedly held that the odor of marijuana provides probable cause for a warrantless search of a vehicle under the automobile exception." (United States v. Williams (8th Cir. 2020) 955 F.3rd 734; 400 grams recovered.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal reversed the federal district (trial) court's order suppressing 135 pounds of cocaine and 114 pounds of methamphetamine discovered during a Nevada Highway Patrol trooper's search of the cab of a tractor-trailer pulled over for speeding. The district court had found that the trooper, who smelled marijuana in the cab as he approached the tractor-trailer, lacked probable cause to search the cab and containers therein. The Ninth Circuit, however, held that the district court's failure to include the driver's contradictory statements about when he had smoked a marijuana cigarette in its totality of the circumstances analysis was error, and that the district court's failure to analyze the totality of the circumstances known to the trooper was part and parcel of its broader error; i.e., its focus on the trooper's subjective motivations for performing the search. The Court explained that because the trooper stopped the tractor-trailer as part of a criminal investigation supported by reasonable suspicion, his subjective motivations were not relevant. The Court concluded that the trooper had probable cause to search the cab and containers for evidence of violations of Nevada state law based on the driver's admission that he had smoked a marijuana cigarette earlier in the day and his shifting story regarding how many hours earlier he had done so. (United States v. Malik (9th Cir. 2020) 963 F.3rd 1014.)

The odor of marijuana, apparently escaping through a vehicle's open sunroof, plus the occupant's furtive movements (reaching down under his seat), provided the necessary probable cause to search the vehicle. (United States v. Freeman (8th Cir. 2020) 964 F.3rd 774.)

The odor of burnt marijuana emanating from defendant's vehicle supplied the necessary probable cause to search the vehicle for marijuana, including the trunk. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals disagreed with defendant's contention that the smell of burnt marijuana suggested personal use only, thus limiting the scope of the officer's search to the passenger compartment. The search of defendant's entire car resulting in the discovery of bulk marijuana (and methamphetamine) in a backpack in the trunk of defendant's car, therefore, was lawful. (United States v. Kizart (7th Cir. 2020) 967 F.3rd 693.)

Post-Legalization (i.e., after January 1, 2018):

Issue: Since California legalized the possession of recreational use of marijuana by adults (January 1, 2018, see H&S §§ 11362.1 et seq., now referred to as "cannabis"), whether or not the odor of marijuana (or burning marijuana) in a vehicle alone, typically observed during a traffic stop, establishes probable cause to believe a crime is being committed in the officer's presence, thus justifying an immediate warrantless search for contraband, is an issue.

Case Law:

In People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, at pp. 561-562, the search of defendant's vehicle was upheld, noting the following:

> "[A] warrantless search of an automobile is permissible so long as the police have probable cause to believe the car contains evidence or contraband." (Robey v. Superior Court (2013) 56 Cal.4th 1218, 1225.) The issue is whether the officers' knowledge that a suspect possesses what, on its face, appears to be a lawful amount of recreational marijuana (i.e., now referred to as "cannabis") justifies a search of the vehicle for possible violations of the statutes regulating such possession. Proposition 64, effective as of November 8, 2016, made lawful the possession of limited amounts of cannabis. It is argued that since passage of Proposition 64, with its enactment of H&S § 113621, marijuana is no longer

"contraband." Subdivision (c) of Section 113621 does in fact provide that "[c]annabis and cannabis products involved in any way with conduct deemed lawful by this section are not contraband nor subject to seizure, and no conduct deemed lawful by this section shall constitute the basis for detention, search, or arrest." (Italics added) However, it remains unlawful to possess, transport, or give away cannabis in excess of the statutorily permitted limits, to cultivate cannabis plants in excess of statutory limits and in violation of local ordinances, to engage in unlicensed "commercial cannabis activity," and to possess, smoke or ingest cannabis in various designated places, including in a motor vehicle while driving. (See B&P Code §§ 26001(k), 26037, and 26038(c); and H&S Code §§ 11362.1(a), 11362.2(a), 11362.3(a), and 11362.45(a).) Driving a motor vehicle on public highways under the influence of any drug (V.C. § 23152(f)) or while in possession of an open container of marijuana (V.C. § 23222(b)(1)), are not acts "deemed lawful" by H&S § 11362.1. On the contrary, Section 11362.1 does not permit any person to possess an open container or open package of cannabis or cannabis products while driving, operating, or riding in the passenger seat or compartment of a motor vehicle or to smoke or ingest cannabis or cannabis products while driving a motor vehicle. (H&S § 11362.3(a)(4)) "[P]robable cause requires only a probability or substantial chance of criminal activity, not an actual showing of such activity." (Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 243, fn. 13 [103 S.Ct. 2317; 76 L.Ed.2nd 527].) The fact that there may also be an innocent explanation does not detract from the finding of probable cause. It has previously been held that a police officer has probable cause to search a vehicle based on the odor of marijuana despite the defendant's presentation of a medical marijuana prescription. (People v. Strasburg (2007) 148 Cal.App.4th 105.) It has also been held that a police officer is entitled to investigate to determine whether a person possesses marijuana for personal medical needs and to determine whether he adhered to the Compassionate Use Act of 1996's limits on possession. "It is well settled that even if a > defendant makes only personal use of marijuana found in the passenger compartment of a car, a police officer may reasonably suspect additional quantities of marijuana might be found in the car." (People v. Waxler (2014) 224 Cal.App.4th 712, 723-724.) Other states where marijuana use has been legalized are in accord, finding that "the odor of marijuana is still suggestive of criminal activity."

>
> The Court in Fews, therefore, held that "(d)ue to the odor of marijuana emanating from the (Saturn) SUV and Mims, as well as Mims's admission that there was marijuana in his half-burnt cigar, there was a fair probability that a search of the SUV might yield additional contraband or evidence." The search of defendant's vehicle, therefore, was held to be lawful. (Id., at p. 563.)
>
> Also cited in Fews (at pp. 563-564) as support for the Court's conclusions was People v. Zuniga (Colo. 2016) 372 P.3rd 1052, 1059 [2016 CO 52], holding that despite Colorado's legalization of marijuana, "a substantial number of other marijuana-related activities remain unlawful under Colorado law. Given that state of affairs, the odor of marijuana is still suggestive of criminal activity." Also cited in support of this theory was Robinson v. State (Md. Ct. App. 2017) 451 Md. 94 [152 A.3rd 661, 664–665].)

However, a driver of a motor vehicle having on his person a small, legal amount of marijuana (i.e., with no odor emanating from the vehicle) was held to be of "fairly minimal significance" in determining whether there is probable cause to believe the vehicle contains an illegal amount. (People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853. 861-867; where it was held that a warrantless search of a motor vehicle requires probable cause to believe it contains contraband or other evidence of a crime. A motor vehicle driver's possession of a lawful amount of marijuana, absent some other evidence that the vehicle contains more marijuana or that the driver is under the influence, is not sufficient to establish the necessary probable cause to search the vehicle.)

Carrying cannabis in the form of what is known as "bud," or "dried flower," in a plastic tube, whether or not the tube is in a sealed condition, is not a violation of V.C. § 23222(b)(1) (See subd. (b)(2)), and is not otherwise illegal, and therefore, pursuant to the search restrictions of H&S Code § 11362.1, nor does it, by itself, provide the necessary probable cause to search a vehicle for more marijuana. (People v. Shumake (2019) 45 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1.)

In People v. Johnson (2020) 50 Cal.App.5th 620, where the Court held to be illegal a search of a vehicle based upon the odor of marijuana and the observation of a small knotted baggie of marijuana in the center console, differentiated both People v. Strasburg (2007) 148 Cal.App.4th 105, and People v. Waxler as being pre-Proposition 64 cases (with its enactment of H&S Code § 11362.1(c)), at a time when nonmedical marijuana was still illegal and the medical marijuana law did not affect probable cause; thus, the odor of marijuana would always provide probable cause to search a car. (Id., at pp. 634-635.)

Odor of Ether in a Residence: The courts have uniformly held that the odor of ether (a byproduct of the manufacturing process for some dangerous drugs), emanating from a particular location (e.g., a house or garage), is not probable cause to search for drugs.

However it is an exigent circumstance, given the potential volatility of ether, to justify an immediate warrantless entry while escorting the fire department to "neutralize" the dangerous situation. (People v. Messina (1985) 165 Cal.App.3rd 931; People v. Osuna (1987) 187 Cal.App.3rd 845.)

So long as (1) the police have reasonable grounds to believe that there is an emergency at hand and an immediate need for their assistance for the protection of life or property, (2) their assistance is not primarily motivated by the intent to arrest a person or seize evidence, and (3) there is some reasonable basis, "approximating probable cause," to associate the emergency with the area or place to be entered, then the "emergency doctrine" will allow for a warrantless entry to neutralize the emergency. (United States v. Cervantes (9th Cir. 2000) 219 F.3rd 882.)

And then, any plain sight observations made while lawfully in the house neutralizing the danger can provide the necessary probable cause to secure the house, arrest the occupants, and obtain a search warrant for the rest of the house. (People v. Hill (1974) 12 Cal.3rd 731.)

The odor of ether plus other circumstances which corroborate the suspected presence of an illicit substance will normally establish probable cause. (People v. Stegman (1985) 164 Cal.App.3rd 936; People v. Patterson (1979) 94 Cal.App.3rd 456; People v. Torres (1981) 121 Cal.App.3rd Supp. 9.)

The California Supreme Court upheld a warrantless search of a residence where a police officer (1) had been specifically informed that an illicit drug laboratory was operating on the premises; (2) upon arrival smelled a chemical (i.e., ether) he knew to be associated with illicit drug manufacture; (3) knew that the volatile nature of the chemicals involved in the production of drugs posed a high danger of explosion; and (4) identified the chemical odor as coming from inside the residence. (People v. Duncan (1986) 42 Cal.3rd 91, 104-105.)

Once the house was secured and the exigency neutralized, officers held back pending the obtaining of a search warrant.

Odor From a Container:

While a distinctive odor may provide probable cause to believe that contraband is contained inside a package or bag, justifying the seizure of that container, a warrantless opening of that bag (i.e., a search), absent exigent circumstances (see Guidi v. Superior Court (1973) 10 Cal.3rd 1.), would not be justified. (People v. Marshall (1968) 69 Cal.2nd 51; see also concurring opinion in Robey v. Superior Court (2013) 56 Cal.4th 1218, 1243-1254.)

The California Supreme Court, in its majority opinion, discussed the theory that a distinctive odor (of marijuana) might fit within the category of "Single Purpose Containers," allowing for warrantless searches of a container, it declined to decide the issue because the record was not sufficiently developed at the trial court level. (Robey v. Superior Court, supra., at pp. 1241-1243, and concurring opinion at 1247-1254; see also "The Single Purpose Container Theory," under "Searches of Containers and Electronic Devices," below.)

Exigent Circumstances: The presence of exigent circumstances (when combined with probable cause) will excuse the lack of a warrant, at least so long as the exigency exists. (People v. Panah (2005) 35 Cal.4th 395, 465; People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1041-1043.)

Defined: "An exigent circumstance is 'an emergency situation requiring swift action to prevent imminent danger to life or serious damage to property, or to forestall the imminent escape of a suspect or destruction of evidence.'" (People v. Superior Court* [Chapman] (2012) 204 Cal.App.4th 1004, 1012; quoting People v. Ramey (1976) 16 Cal.3rd 263, 276.)

> "The term 'exigent circumstances' describes 'an emergency situation requiring swift action to prevent imminent danger to life or serious damage to property, or to forestall the imminent escape of a suspect or destruction of evidence.'" (People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1041; quoting People v. Panah (2005) 35 Cal.4th 395, 465.)
>
> "The exigent circumstances exception allows warrantless searches and seizures when an emergency leaves police insufficient time to seek a warrant." (Recchia v. City of Los Angeles *Department of Animal Services (9th Cir. 2018) 889 F.3rd 553, 558; citing Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438 [136 S.Ct. 2160 2173; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560]; People v. Ovieda, supra.)
>
> > In Recchia, the Court ultimately held: "Whenever government officials have grounds to think that an animal may transmit a dangerous disease in the time it might take to get a warrant, the Fourth Amendment will not block an immediate seizure of that animal. Nor will officers violate an animal or pet owner's constitutional rights where the officers take animals to protect them from some immediate danger in their living situation." (Id., at p. 564.)

Rule: "[E]xigent circumstances are present when a reasonable person [would] believe that entry . . . was necessary to prevent physical harm to the officers or other persons, the destruction of relevant evidence, the escape of the suspect, or some other consequence improperly frustrating legitimate law enforcement efforts." (United States v. Alaimalo (9th Cir, 2002) 313 F.3rd 1188, 1192-1193, quoting Bailey v. Newland (9th Cir. 2001) 263 F.3rd 1022, 1033; United States v. Brooks (9th Cir. 2004) 367 F.3rd 1128, 1133, fn. 5, & 1135; United States v. Camou, supra, at p. 940, quoting United States v. McConney (9th Cir. 1984) 728 F.2nd 1195, 1199.)

> "Exigent Circumstances" are present, as a general rule, whenever there is no reasonable opportunity for the police officers to stop and take the time to get a search warrant. (See United States v. Ventresca (1965) 380 U.S. 102, 107 [85 S.Ct. 741; 13 L.Ed.2nd 684, 688]; United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 940-941.)
>
> Per the California Supreme Court: "We have defined 'exigent circumstances' to include 'an emergency situation requiring swift action to prevent imminent danger to life or serious damage to property . . . .' (People v. Ramey (1976) 16 Cal.3rd 263, 276 . . .) The action must be 'prompted by the motive of preserving life or property and [must] reasonably appear to the actor to be necessary for that purpose.' (People v. Roberts (1956) 47 Cal.2nd 374, 377 . . .)" (People v. Duncan (1986) 42 Cal.3rd 91, 97.)

"'[E]xigent circumstances' means an emergency situation requiring swift action to prevent imminent danger to life or serious damage to property, or to forestall the imminent escape of a suspect or destruction of evidence." (People v. Panah (2005) 35 Cal.4th 395, 465.)

The United States Supreme Court, in Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, at pages 383-385 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430], described "exigent circumstances," excusing the lack of a search warrant when searching a cellphone discovered incident to arrest, to include:

- The need to prevent the imminent destruction of evidence;
- To pursue a fleeing suspect; and
- To assist persons who are seriously injured or are threatened with imminent injury.

Examples:

- To prevent the destruction of evidence. (People v. Huber (1965) 232 Cal.App.2nd 663; People v. Bennett (1998) 17 Cal.4th 373, 384-385; People v. Seaton (2001) 26 Cal.4th 598; United States v. Ojeda (9th Cir. 2002) 276, 486, 488; (People v. Superior Court* [Chapman] (2012) 204 Cal.App.4th 1004, 1011.)

  "A person detained for investigation has no constitutional right to dispose of evidence." (People v. Quick (2016) 5 Cal.App.5th 1006, 1008; citing People v. Bracamonte (1975) 15 Cal.3rd 394, 405, fn. 6; and People v. Maddox (1956) 46 Cal.2nd 301, 306.)

  The warrantless entry and temporary seizure of a home while police obtain a search warrant is reasonable where there exists; (a) probable cause to believe the home contains evidence, (b) good cause to believe the occupants unless restrained will destroy the evidence, (c) the method used is less restrictive to the occupants than detaining them, and (d) a reasonable period of time is used to obtain a warrant. (In re Elizabeth G. (2001) 88 Cal.App.4th 496.)

  With "probable cause" to believe that contraband is contained in a particular residence, and a "reasonable belief" that if the house is not immediately secured the evidence will be destroyed, officers may enter to secure the house pending the obtaining of a search warrant or a consent to do a complete search. (United States v. Alaimalo (9th Cir, 2002) 313 F.3rd 1188; see also Sandoval v. Las Vegas Metro. Police Dep't. (9th Cir. 2014) 756 F.3rd 1154, 1161; Sialoi v. City of San Diego (9th Cir. 2016) 823 F.3rd 1238.)

An intercepted telephone call indicating the occupants' intent to secret or destroy evidence was held to be sufficient to justify a warrantless entry of a residence in order to secure the residence pending the obtaining of a search warrant. The trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress 2.6 ounces of cocaine seized from his apartment based upon the officers' reasonable belief that the entry was necessary to prevent the destruction of contraband. (United States v. Fowlkes (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 954, 969-971.)

> The fact that it took about an hour to coordinate the officers necessary to make the warrantless entry and the securing of defendant's apartment was irrelevant; the exigency still existed. (Id., at p. 971.)
>
> See also United States v. Dent (1st Cir. Me. 2017) 867 F.3rd 37, where the court held that pending the obtaining of a search warrant, the securing of the residence, including doing a protective sweep during which illegal contraband was observed, did not affect the legality of the search warrant where there was no evidence that either the warrant or the decision to seek the warrant was based on anything the officers discovered during their warrantless entry. The court found that the process of applying for the search warrant had already been initiated based on other independent sources of information and that drugs observed under an air mattress were not included in the search warrant affidavit.
>
> Such a "securing" of a house, however, is in fact a Fourth Amendment seizure. (United States v. Shrum (10th Cir. KS 2018) 908 F.3rd 1219.)

Searching an arrestee's cellphone after its seizure and removal from defendant's control was held to be unlawful in that the possibility that he might delete incriminating data had been eliminated. Also, there was nothing to indicate that his phone was vulnerable to "remote wiping." If remote wiping was suspected, the possibility that such a tactic might be employed could have been eliminated by merely disconnecting the phone from the network. Lastly, the agent's search went beyond the scope of any probable cause that might have existed, searching not only the phone's call logs but videos and photographs as well. (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 940-941.)

"A person detained for investigation has no constitutional right to dispose of evidence." (People v. Quick (2016) 5 Cal.App.5th 1006, 1008; citing People v. Bracamonte (1975) 15 Cal.3rd 394, 405, fn. 6; and People v. Maddox (1956) 46 Cal.2nd 301, 306.)

In a drug trafficking case that arose from a controlled delivery of methamphetamine to defendant's residence, where the agents secured a court order authorizing insertion of a tracking device to conduct the controlled delivery, but where their subsequent entry into defendant's condominium to secure the package was warrantless, suppression of the evidence was not warranted under the Fourth Amendment because exigent circumstances existed to justify the agents' entry. In particular, the agents believed that the destruction of incriminating evidence was occurring, justifying their immediate entry, because the beeper thereafter signaled that the package had been opened, the agents knew that drugs are easily destroyed or disposed of, upon knocking on the door an agent saw a shadowy figure approach the door and then retreat, and the agent then heard a suspicious rustling noise. (United States v. Iwai (9th Cir. 2019) 930 F.3rd 1141.)

Note: See "Securing the Premises Pending the Obtaining of a Search Warrant," under "Searches of Residences and Other Buildings" (Chapter 13). Below.

- Officers' Safety. (United States v. Ojeda (9th Cir. 2002) 276, 486, 488; People v. Superior Court* [Chapman] (2012) 204 Cal.App.4th 1004, 1011.)

  See "Protective Sweeps," under "Searches of Residences and Other Buildings" (Chapter 13), below.

- Fresh or Hot Pursuit of a criminal suspect. (Warden, Maryland Penitentiary v. Hayden (1967) 387 U.S. 294 [87 S.Ct. 1642; 18 L.Ed.2nd 782]; United States v. Santana (1976) 427 U.S. 38 [96 S.Ct. 2406; 49 L.Ed.2nd 300]; People v. Escudero (1979) 23 Cal.3rd 800, 808-811; People v. Spain (1984) 154 Cal.App.4th 845.)

  See Stanton v. Sims (2013) 571 U.S. 3 [134 S.Ct. 3; 187 L.Ed.2nd 341], noting that the seriousness of the offense as a factor in justifying a warrantless entry in a hot pursuit situation is an open question.

The issue of the legality of an officer following defendant into his garage, after defendant failed to yield to the officer's use of his emergency lights while attempting to stop defendant after observing him honking his horn excessively (a violation of Veh. Code § 27007), was discussed in Lange v. California (June 23, 2021) __ U.S.__ [141 S.Ct. 2011; 210 L.Ed.2nd 486]. In Lange, the Supreme Court held that whether or not an officer can make a warrantless entry into a fleeing misdemeanant's home depends upon the circumstances, rejecting the argument that an officer may do so as a "categorical" rule. The People must first show that an exigent circumstance allowed for such an entry. Per the Court: "A great many misdemeanor pursuits involve exigencies allowing warrantless entry. But whether a given one does so turns on the particular facts of the case." (Id., at p. __.)

See "Warrantless Entry into the Curtilage," under "Searches of Residences and Other Buildings" (Chapter 13), below.

- Fighting a Fire. (Michigan v. Tyler (1978) 436 U.S. 499, 509 [56 L.Ed.2nd 486; 98 S.Ct. 1942].)

- Search for additional suspects. (People v. Block (1971) 6 Cal.3rd 239.)

- Protection of life and property. (People v. Ammons (1980) 103 Cal.App.3rd 20.)

  A reasonable belief in the existence of an imminent threat to life or the welfare of a person within the home, probable cause to believe a person reported missing is therein, or a reasonable belief a person within is in need of aid, are all well recognized as exigent circumstances which justify an immediate, warrantless entry. (People v. Coddington (2000) 23 Cal.4th 529; Welsh v. Wisconsin (1984) 466 U.S. 740, 750 [104 S.Ct. 2091; 80 L.Ed.2nd 732, 743].)

  The presence of a drug lab, as evidence by the odor of ether, given the explosive nature of the chemicals used, justifies an immediate warrantless entry to neutralize the danger. (People v. Duncan (1986) 42 Ca.3rd 91; People v. Stegman (1985) 164 Cal.App.3rd 936, 943; People v. Messina (1985) 165 Cal.App.3rd 937.)

  See "Plain Smell," above.

> Note: The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal considers the warrantless entry of a residence in such drug lab cases as justified by the so-called "emergency doctrine," which, per the court, is something different than "exigent circumstances." (United States v. Cervantes (9th Cir. 2000) 219 F.3rd 882.)

Based upon probable cause to believe a domestic violence incident had occurred and that the female victim, known to be in a hotel room, might need the officer's assistance; a warrantless entry was upheld. (United States v. Brooks (9th Cir. 2004) 367 F.3rd 1128.)

A warrantless entry into a residence when necessary to "preserve the peace" in the execution of a restraining order, allowing the defendant's daughter to retrieve certain property, was held to be lawful. Reasonable force was also properly used when necessary to effectively preserve the peace. (Henderson v. City of Simi Valley (9th Cir. 2002) 305 F.3rd 1052.)

To check on the welfare of persons reasonably believed to need law enforcement's assistance. (Martin v. City of Oceanside (9th Cir. 2004) 360 F.3rd 1078.)

To check for a missing eight-year-old girl where there was cause to believe that a male resident in the apartment searched had had contact with her earlier in the day and was now hiding, refusing to open the door. (People v. Panah (2005) 35 Cal.4th 395, 464-466. The fact that later evidence indicated that the victim might no longer be alive did not negate the exigency justifying a second warrantless entry upon discovery of evidence implicating defendant and indicating that the victim, who might still be alive despite defendant's statements to the contrary, had been in his apartment. (Id., at pp. 467-468.)

"The exigent circumstances exception is properly invoked when 'an officer reasonably believes an animal on the property is in immediate need of aid due to injury or mistreatment.'" (Italics added; People v. Williams (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 111, 122; quoting People v. Chung (2010) 195 Cal.App.4th 721, 732; and citing Broden v. Marin Humane Society (1999) 70 Cal.App.4th 1212, 1222.)

> "There is no question about whether the emergency exception can be applied to animal workers who seize an animal in a true emergency setting. For example, if animal workers in an urban setting confront an obviously diseased or ill animal living in foul conditions that may be causing or compounding the animal's suffering, whether a bird or a dog or a cat, those workers have the right to seize the animal without getting a warrant." (Recchia v. City of Los Angeles Department of Animal Services (9th Cir. 2018) 889 F.3rd 553, 558; citing United Pet Supply, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga (6th Cir. 2014) 768 F.3rd 464.)

While recognizing that "domestic violence"-related incidents tend to be very volatile, the courts have refused to recognize such incidents as a "per se emergency" justifying a warrantless entry into a residence. (Bonivert v. City of Clarkston (9th Cir. 2018) 883 F.3rd 865, 877.)

An exigency exists allowing for the warrantless entry of a home when an entry or search appears reasonably necessary to render emergency aid, whether or not a crime might be involved. The police have the right to respond to emergency situations. Numerous state and federal cases have recognized that the Fourth Amendment does not bar police officers from making warrantless entries and searches when they reasonably believe that a person within is in need of immediate aid. (People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1041-1043.)

- To prevent the escape of suspects, or when suspects arm themselves. (See People v. Miller (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 190, 200.)

  E.g.: A possible trafficker in narcotics, ducking back into his residence upon the approach of peace officers, while attempting to shut the door and close the blinds, is an exigent circumstance justifying an immediate, warrantless entry. United States v. Arellano-Ochoa (9th Cir. 2006) 461 F.3rd 1142; gun found on the floor next to the front door, after the fact.)

  Officers stopping a vehicle in which defendant was found, and then conducting a warrantless search (resulting in the recovery of a firearm from under the center console), based upon an identified person's 911 call to police reporting that three unidentified persons had reported to him having seen defendant in possession of a firearm, was held to be lawful. Denial of defendant's motion to suppress under Fourth Amendment was affirmed because the 911 call was sufficiently reliable to support reasonable suspicion where the 911 call conveyed information from three witnesses and the tip provided information on potentially then-occurring illegal activity as the 911 call gave the police sufficieint probable cause to believe defendant was carrying a concealed firearm. (United States v. Vandergroen (9th Cir. 2020) 964 F.3rd 876.)

See Lange v. California (June 23, 2021) __ U.S.__ [141 S.Ct. 2011; 210 L.Ed.2nd 486], above.

- To prevent a person from committing suicide. (Rice v. ReliaStar Life Ins. Co. (5th Cir. 2014) 770 F.3rd 1122, 1131; see also Fitzgerald v. Santoro (7th Cir. 2013) 707 F.3rd 725, 732; Roberts v. Spielman (11th Cir. 2011) 643 F.3rd 899, 905–906; Hancock v. Dodson (6th Cir. 1992) 958 F.2nd 1367, 1375–1376.)

  But see People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1041-1043, where it was noted that when the potentially suicidal person has been brought outside and is secured in police custody, the exigency (allowing for a warrantless entry into the home) no longer exists.

Requirement of a Pre-Seizure Hearing:

Procedural Due Process: It is a procedural due process (Fifth or Fourteenth Amendment) requirement that when practical, a pre-seizure court hearing must be provided to the owner of the property. (Mathews v. Eldridge (1979) 424 U.S. 319 [96 S.Ct. 893; 47 L.Ed.2nd 18]; see also Yagman v. Garcetti (9th Cir. 2017) 852 F.3rd 859, 864; and Shinault v. Hawks (9th Cir. 2015) 782 F.3rd 1053, 1057; Recchia v. City of Los Angeles *Department of Animal Services (9th Cir. 2018) 889 F.3rd 553, 561-562.)

However, "where exigent or emergency circumstances justify a warrantless seizure there will be no need to have a hearing before a seizure. See United States v. James Daniel Good Real Prop., 510 U.S. 43, 62, 114 S.Ct. 492, 126 L.Ed.2nd 490 (1993) ('Unless exigent circumstances are present, the Due Process Clause requires the Government to afford notice and a meaningful opportunity to be heard before seizing real property subject to civil forfeiture.')" (Recchia v. City of Los Angeles Department of Animal Services, supra, at p. 561, fn. 6.)

The "Mathews Factors*:" Mathews v. Eldridge (1979) 424 U.S. 319 [96 S.Ct. 893; 47 L.Ed.2nd 18], provides the factors that must be considered in determining the need for such a pre-seizure hearing are:

(1) The private interest affected;

(2) The risk of erroneous deprivation through the procedures used, and the value of additional procedural safeguards; and

(3) The government's interest, including the burdens of additional procedural requirements.

(Mathews v. Eldridge, supra, at p. 335; Recchia v. City of Los Angeles Department of Animal Services, supra, at pp. 561-562.)

In Recchia, which involved the seizure of some twenty birds (18 pigeons, a crow and a seagull) under authority of P.C. § 597.1, most of which were sick and/or injured, from a homeless person who kept the birds in cardboard boxes while living on the street, the Court ruled that (1) a pet owner's interest in keeping his pets is strong, (2) the risk of an erroneous deprivation by animal welfare officers (trained in making such a decision) is low and there is no real value in imposing additional procedural safeguards, and (3) the governmental interest in seizing such birds without a prior court hearing is strong: "(T)here is a strong general governmental interest in being able to seize animals that may be in imminent danger of harm due to their living conditions, may carry pathogens harmful to humans or other animals, or may otherwise threaten public safety without first needing to have a hearing on the subject." (Ibid.)

As to factor #3, see Hodel v. Va. Surface Mining & Reclamation Ass'n (1981) 452 U.S. 264, 300 [101 S.Ct. 2352; 69 L.Ed.2nd 1].): "Protection of the health and safety of the public is a paramount governmental interest which justifies summary administrative action."

Warrantless Seizure of a Child for Protective Custody Purposes:

"(F)amilies have a 'well-elaborated constitutional right to live together without governmental interference.'" (Demaree v. Pederson (9th Cir. 2018) 887 F.3rd 870, 873; citing Wallis v. Spencer (9th Cir. 2000) 202 F.3rd 1126, 1136.)

"(U)nder the Fourth Amendment, government officials are ordinarily required to obtain prior judicial authorization before removing a child from the custody of her parent." (Demaree v. Pederson, supra, at p. 878; citing Kirkpatrick v. County of Washoe (9th Cir. 2016) 843 F.3rd 784, 780.)

Exception: "In an emergency, government officials may take a child out of her home and away from her parents without a court order 'when officials have reasonable cause to believe that the child is likely to experience serious bodily harm in the time that > would be required to obtain a warrant.' Kirkpatrick, 843 F.3rd at 790 (original italics and internal quotation marks omitted). This requirement "balance[s], on the one hand, the need to protect children from abuse and neglect and, on the other, the preservation of the essential privacy and liberty interests that families are guaranteed under both the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments of our Constitution.' Rogers v. Cty. of San Joaquin, 487 F.3rd 1288, 1297 (9th Cir. 2007)." (Demaree v. Pederson, supra, at pp. 878 & 879.)

The state's decision to take custody of a child implicates the constitutional rights of the parent and the child under the Fourteenth (due process) and Fourth Amendments (seizure), respectively. (Mabe v. San Bernardino County, Department of Public Social Services (9th Cir. 2001) 237 F.3rd 1101, 1106.)

Where doctors recommended immediate medical care (spinal tap and infusion of antibiotics) to determine and treat possible meningitis in a 5-week-old infant, a pre-hearing taking of the child from an uncooperative parent, and temporary detention of that irate parent, is lawful as a "special needs" taking. (Mueller v. Auker (9th Cir. 2012) 700 F.3rd 1180, 1185-1190; adopting the factual description as provided at (9th Cir. 2009) 576 F.3rd 979, 982-986; and finding that the officer/civil defendant was entitled to qualified immunity in that the issue is an unsettled one.)

Where social workers took a two-day-old child into protective custody from a hospital without prior judicial authorization due to the mother's addiction to methamphetamine, the father's Fourteenth Amendment claim failed because he did not have a constitutionally recognized liberty interest in his relationship with the child since, at the time, no one was confident about whether he was the biological father. There was evidence, however, to support a finding that the child's Fourth Amendment had in fact been violated. A reasonable juror could have found that the social workers could not have reasonably believed that the child would likely experience bodily harm during the time it would have taken to obtain a warrant since the child would have very likely remained in the hospital. However, because this issue was not well-settled in the law, the social workers were entitled to qualified immunity on that issue. (Kirkpatrick v. County of Washoe (9th Cir. 2016) 843 F.3rd 784, 788-793.)

> While the parents' right to the custody of their children without governmental interference is to be measured under the Fourteenth Amendment due process clause, the child's rights not to be taken from his or her parents is a Fourth Amendment seizure issue. (Id., at pp. 788-789.)

It is a rule that the Fourth Amendment requires government officials to obtain prior judicial authorization before removing a child from the custody of her parent, at least absent exigent circumstances. (Id., at p. 799; citing Rogers v. County of San Joaquin (9th Cir. 2007) 487 F.3rd 1288.)

> The problem is determining what constitutes "exigent circumstances." Rogers notes, at pages 1294-1295, that "(b)ottle rot, malnourishment, and disorderly home conditions do not present an imminent risk of serious bodily harm," while the possibility of renewed beatings or child molestation might be.

There was a "genuine issue of material fact" regarding whether the County maintained a policy of unconstitutionally seizing children in non-exigent circumstances, and summary judgment on that issue was held to be improperly granted. The case was remanded for consideration of that issue. (Id., at pp. 793-797.)

(See "Parent-Child Relationship Cases," under "Arrests" (Chapter 5), above.

Special Needs Searches and Seizures: An exception to the search warrant requirement, as well as the need to even show any "individualized suspicion," is when a search is found to serve "special needs" beyond the need for normal law enforcement. (Mann v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2018) 907 F.3rd 1154, 1164.)

> Test: The legality of a warrantless search under the "special needs" exception is determined by balancing (1) the need to search against (2) the constitutional intrusiveness of the search. (Henderson v. City of Semi Valley (9th Cir. 2002) 305 F.3rd 1052, 1059; citing Ferguson v. City of Charleston (2001) 532 U.S. 67, 78 [121 S.Ct. 1281; 149 L.Ed.2nd 205]; see also Mann v. County of San Diego, supra, at p. 1165.)
>
> > Suspicionless searches may be upheld if they are conducted for important "non-law enforcement purposes" in contexts where adherence to the warrant and probable cause requirement would be impracticable. (Friedman v. Boucher (9th Cir. 2009) 580 F.3rd 847, 853; finding that a forced extraction of a DNA sample from defendant's mouth by means of a buccal swab for inclusion in Nevada's cold case data bank was not justified by the Special Needs exception to the search warrant requirement.)
> >
> > > See also City of Los Angeles v. Patel (2015) 576 U.S. 409 [135 S.Ct. 2443, 192 L.Ed.2nd 435], involving the warrantless inspection of hotel and motel guest registration records.

See People v. Maikhio (2011) 51 Cal.4th 1074, where the California Supreme Court, in reversing the lower court, held that a game warden, under authority of Fish & Game § 1006, who reasonably believes that a person has recently been fishing or hunting, but lacks reasonable suspicion that the person has violated an applicable fish or game statute or regulation, may stop a vehicle in which the person is riding to demand the person display all fish or game the person has caught or taken. As an administrative, special needs search, the standard Fourth Amendment probable cause requirements are irrelevant.

However, the administrative search exception is applicable only to warrantless searches where (1) the search promotes an important governmental interest, (2) is authorized by statute, and (3) the authorizing statute and its regulatory scheme provide specific limitations on the manner and place of the search so as to limit the possibility of abuse. (Tarabochia v. Adkins (9th Cir. 2014) 766 F.3rd 1115, 1121-1125; finding a traffic stop to check the plaintiff's fish to be in violation of the Fourth Amendment in that the applicable Washington State statutes (Wash. Rev. Code §§ 77.15.080(1) & 77.15.096) did not authorize traffic stops and limited such searches to "while fishing."

Examples:

- Random testing of student athletes (Vernonia School District 47J v. Acton (1995) 515 U.S. 646 [115 S.Ct. 2386; 132 L.Ed.2nd 564].) and those involved in extracurricular activities. (Board of Education of Independent School District No. 92 of Pottawatomie County v. Earls (2002) 536 U.S. 822 [122 S.Ct. 2559; 153 L.Ed.2nd 735].)

- Suspicionless drug testing of teachers and administrators because of the unique role that teachers play in the lives of school children, the in loco parentis obligations imposed upon them, and the fact that by statute (in Tennessee), teachers were charged with securing order such that they were "on the 'frontline' of school security, including drug interdiction." (Knox County Educ. Ass'n v. Knox County Bd. Of Educ. (6th Cir. 1998) 158 F.3rd 361, 375.)

- Random metal detector searches of students, without any individualized suspicion, to help in keeping weapons off campuses. (In re Latasha W. (1998) 60 Cal.App.4th 1524.)

- Search of a student's computer based upon information that the graduate student was "hacking into" the school's e-mail server and had the capability of "threaten(ing) the integrity of campus computer or communication systems." (United States v. Heckenkamp (9th Cir. 2007) 482 F.3rd 1142.)

- Drug testing for United States Customs Service employees, in certain positions. (Treasury Employees v. Von Raab (1989) 489 US. 656 [109 S.Ct. 1384; 103 L.Ed.2nd 685].)

- Searches of employees' backpacks to prevent inventory loss. (United States v. Gonzalez (9th Cir. 2002) 300 F.3rd 1048.)

- Pre-departure airport screening procedures, including the use of a magnetometer, at airports, as an "administrative search" to insure that dangerous weapons will not be carried onto an airplane and to deter potential hijackers from attempting to board. (People v. Hyde (1974) 12 Cal.3rd 158; United States v. Aukai (9th Cir. 2007) 497 F.3rd 955.)

- Drug and alcohol testing for railway employees involved in train accidents. (Skinner v. Railway Labor Executives' Assn. (1989) 489 U.S. 602 [103 L.Ed.2nd 639].)

- Administrative inspections of certain "closely regulated" businesses. (New York v. Burger (1987) 482 U.S. 691 [107 S.Ct. 2636; 96 L.Ed.2nd 601].)

- Administrative inspection of fire-damaged premises to determine the cause of a fire. (Michigan v. Tyler (1978) 436 U.S. 499 [98 S.Ct. 1942; 56 L.Ed.2nd 486]; see also Michigan v. Clifford (1984) 464 U.S. 287, 293 [78 L. Ed.2nd 477; 104 S.Ct. 641]; and People v. Avalos (1988) 203 Cal.App.3rd 1517, 1520.)

- Administrative inspections to ensure compliance with city housing code. (Camara v. Municipal Court of City and County of San Francisco (1967) 387 U.S. 523 [87 S.Ct. 1727; 18 L.Ed.2nd 930].)

- Border Patrol Checkpoints. (United States v. Martinez-Fuerte (1976) 428 U.S. 543 [96 S.Ct. 3074; 49 L.Ed.2nd 1116].)

- Sobriety Checkpoints. (Michigan Dept. of State Police v. Sitz (1990) 496 U.S. 444 [110 S.Ct. 2481; 110 L.Ed.2nd 412].)

- Entry into a residence when necessary to enforce a court order, such as a temporary restraining order related to domestic violence. (Henderson v. City of Simi Valley (9th Cir. 2002) 305 F.3rd 1052.)

- Fourth Waiver searches of parolees and some probationers. (In re Tyrell J. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 68, 77, overruled on other grounds; citing Griffin v.

Wisconsin (1987) 483 U.S. 868, 873 [107 S.Ct. 3164; 97 L.Ed.2nd 709, 717.)

> See Smith v. City of Santa Clara (9th Cir. 2017) 876 F.3rd 987, at pages 991-994; differentiating pure "consent" searches (e.g., Georgia v. Randolph (2006) 547 U.S. 103 [126 S.Ct. 1515; 164 L.Ed.2nd 208]. And see "Consent Searches" (Chapter 20), below.

- A search warrant issued pursuant to Pen. Code § 1524.1, for HIV testing in specified circumstances, authorized for purposes of public safety, has been referred to as a "special needs"-type search, and therefore subject to less stringent requirements than normally applicable. (Humphrey v. Appellate Division of the Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal.4th 569, 574-575.)

- The taking of biological samples from prison inmates, parolees and probationers for the purpose of completing a federal DNA database, might qualify as a "special needs" search. (United States v. Kincade (9th Cir. 2004) 379 F.3rd 813, 823-832.)

- Search of luggage in a subway facility: Implemented in response to terrorist attacks on subways in other cities, a program was designed to deter terrorists from carrying concealed explosives onto the New York's subway. The city program established daily inspection checkpoints at selected subway facilities where officers searched bags that met size criteria for containing explosives. Subway riders wishing to avoid a search were required to leave the station. In a bench trial, the district court found that the program comported with the Fourth Amendment under the "special needs doctrine." On appeal, the court affirmed, finding that the program was reasonable and therefore constitutional. In particular, the court found that preventing a terrorist attack on the subway was a special need, which was weighty in light of recent terrorist attacks on subway systems in other cities. In addition, the court found that the disputed program was a reasonably effective deterrent. Although the searches intruded on a full privacy interest, the court further found that such intrusion was minimal, particularly as inspections involved only certain size containers and riders could decline inspection by leaving the station. (MacWade v. Kelly (2nd Cir. 2006) 460 F.3rd 260.)

- The search of a high school student's pockets based upon a standard policy that all students who leave and return to the campus during the school day are subject to search, done to prevent the introduction of drugs and weapons onto the campus., at least where the search is very non-intrusive (i.e., the student is not touched). (In re Sean A. (2010) 191 Cal.App.4th 182.)

- Enforcement of Fish and Game Regulations: A game warden, under authority of Fish & Game § 1006, who reasonably believes that a person has recently been fishing or hunting, but lacks reasonable suspicion that the person has violated an applicable fish or game statute or regulation, may nonetheless stop a vehicle in which the person is riding to demand the person display all fish or game the person has caught or taken. As an administrative, special needs search, the standard Fourth Amendment probable cause requirements are irrelevant. (People v. Maikhio (2011) 51 Cal.4th 1074.)

  However, the administrative search exception is applicable only to warrantless searches where (1) the search promotes an important governmental interest, (2) is authorized by statute, and (3) the authorizing statute and its regulatory scheme provide specific limitations on the manner and place of the search so as to limit the possibility of abuse. (Tarabochia v. Adkins (9th Cir. 2014) 766 F.3rd 1115, 1121-1125; finding a traffic stop to check the plaintiff's fish to be in violation of the Fourth Amendment in that the applicable Washington State statutes (Wash. Rev. Code §§ 77.15.080(1) & 77.15.096) did not authorize traffic stops and limited such searches to "while fishing."

  See "Fish and Game Code," Below.

- Depriving Parents of the Liberty Interest in the Care, Custody and Control of their Child due to Medical Necessity: Where doctors recommended immediate medical care (spinal tap and infusion of antibiotics) to determine and treat possible meningitis in a 5-week-old infant, a pre-hearing taking of the child from an uncooperative parent, and temporary detention of that irate parent, is lawful as a "special needs" taking. (Mueller v. Auker (9th Cir. 2012) 700 F.3rd 1180, 1185-1190; adopting the factual description as provided at (9th Cir. 2009) 576 F.3rd 979, 982-986; and finding that the officer/civil defendant was entitled to qualified immunity in that the issue is an unsettled one.)

- Breathalyzer Tests for Police Officers Involved in Shootings: A mandatory suspicionless Breathalyzer test administered to any police officer involved in an Officer Involved Shooting where someone was either injured or killed held to be lawful as a Special Needs search. (Lynch v. City of New York (2nd Cir. 2013) 737 F.3rd 150.)

- Home "Walk-Throughs" for Purposes of Determining Welfare Eligibility: Home visits by a social worker, made pursuant to the administration of a welfare program, are not searches because they were made for the purpose of verifying eligibility for benefits and not as part of a criminal investigation. (Wyman v. James (1971) 400 U.S. 309, 317-318 [91 S.Ct.

381; 27 L.Ed.2nd 408]; Sanchez v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2006) 464 F.3rd 916, 920-928; noting applicability of the "Special Needs" doctrine.)

- A city obtaining the transcripts of text messages from a police officer's city owned pager, necessary for a non-investigatory work-related purpose; i.e., in order to determine whether the character limit on the city's contract was sufficient to meet the city's needs and to determine whether the employee's overages were the result of work-related messaging or personal use. (Ontario v. Quan (2010) 560 U.S.746 [130 S.Ct. 2619; 177 L.Ed.2nd 216].)

- Searching of school lockers for a firearm reported to have been used in a shooting by a student on a city transit bus the day before. (In re J.D. (2014) 225 Cal. App. 4th 709, 714-720.)

- Searches and seizures of students in the school setting, lessening the standard probable cause requirements for school officials to one of "reasonableness," under the circumstances. (Scott *v. County of San Bernardino (9th Cir. 2018) 903 F.3rd 943, 949, citing Vernonia Sch. Dist. 47J v. Acton (1995) 515 U.S. 646, 653 [115 S.Ct. 2386; 132 L.Ed.2nd 564].)

- Jail Booking Strip Searches: Visual body cavity searches of in-coming inmates as a part of the routine booking process, where the inmate is not touched in any way, upheld despite the lack of probable cause. (Florence v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Burlington (2012) 566 U.S. 318 [132 S.Ct. 1510; 182 L.Ed.2nd 566].)

  An en banc panel of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, in Bull v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2010) 595 F.3rd 964, overruled itself in its prior decision of Giles v. Ackerman (9th Cir 1984) 746 F.2nd 614, Giles having held that a person arrested on minor misdemeanor arrest warrants, with no prior criminal history or any relationship to drugs or weapons, could not be subjected to a strip search even though she was to be put into the general jail population.

- Where it is shown there to be a strong governmental interest (i.e., a "special need") in responding to the sounds of gunfire and preventing violence in a high crime area where recent shootings and homicides (six shooting and two homicides in that past three months) had occurred, thus constituting an "exigent circumstance." (United States v. Curry (4th Cir. 2019) 937 F.3rd 363.)

> The Appellate Court found that the officers acted reasonably in stopping defendant and the other men without individualized suspicion that any of them were involved in the sounds of gunfire in that area, and patting defendant down for firearms when he declined to raise his short and expose his belt line. The Court recognized that the officers were rushing to respond to shots fired seconds earlier in a densely populated residential neighborhood. The court noted the officers were faced with the prospect that an active shooter might continue to threaten the safety of the public. Even though one purpose of the officers' actions that night may have included ordinary law enforcement, the immediate purpose of stopping defendant and the other men and illuminating them with their flashlights was to protect the public and themselves from the threat posed by an active shooter. (Ibid.)

Exceptions to the Exceptions; i.e., where law enforcement is primarily pursuing its general crime control purposes as opposed to serving some "special need," searches or seizures may not be allowed. Examples:

- A highway checkpoint program set up for purposes of drug interdiction. (City of Indianapolis v. Edmond (2000) [121 S.Ct. 447; 148 L.Ed.2nd 333].)

  > See "DUI (and other regulatory "special needs") Checkpoints," under "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above.

- A state hospital program to test pregnant women for drug use when the results are made available to law enforcement. (Ferguson v. City of Charleston (2001) 532 U.S. 67 [121 S.Ct. 1281; 149 L.Ed.2nd 205].)

  > The "special needs" doctrine is inapplicable where the arrest and search at issue in a case were clearly for law enforcement purposes. (Ferguson v. City of Charleston, supra, at p. 83, fn. 20 [121 S.Ct. 1281; 149 L.Ed.2nd 205]; "In none of our previous special needs cases have we upheld the collection of evidence for criminal law enforcement purposes;" and City of Indianapolis v. Edmond, supra, at p. 121 [148 L.Ed.2nd 333]; observing that the "special needs" doctrine has never been applied where the purpose of the search was "to detect evidence of ordinary criminal wrongdoing."].)

Examples where the "Special Need" fails to outweigh a person's right to privacy:

> The preemployment drug and alcohol screening requirement for a part time "page" who would be responsible for putting books back on library shelves and, on occasion, staff the desk in the youth services area. (Lanier v. City of Woodburn (9th Cir. 2008) 518 F.3rd 1147.)

A urinalysis drug test requirement for candidates for public office was held to violate the Fourth Amendment. (Chandler v. Miller (1997) 520 U.S. 305 [117 S.Ct. 1295; 137 L.Ed.2nd 513].)

Drug testing as a condition of placement or employment for Customs employees who were required to handle classified material only was rejected as being too broad (National Treasury Employees Union v. Von Raab (1989) 489 U.S. 656 [109 S.Ct. 1384; 103 L.Ed.2nd 685].)

A state hospital's drug testing policy, developed in conjunction with the police, for testing unwed mothers for drug abuse, found to be unconstitutional, at least without informing the mothers of the purposes for the test. (Ferguson v. City of Charleston (2001) 532 U.S. 67 [121 S.Ct. 1281; 149 L.Ed.2nd 205].)

A forced, warrantless extraction of a DNA sample from defendant's mouth by means of a buccal swab for inclusion in Nevada's cold case data bank was not justified by the "special needs" exception to the search warrant requirement. (Friedman v. Boucher (9th Cir. 2009) 580 F.3rd 847, 853.)

A forced medical examination of minor children without notice to parents:

> Assuming, without deciding, that the "special needs" doctrine applies to medical examinations of children suspected of having been molested, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal concluded that searches of the plaintiffs' children in this case were unconstitutional under the special needs balancing test in that they were performed without the necessary notice to the child's parents and their consent where such notice and consent were found not to be "impractical" under the circumstances. To reach this conclusion, the Court balanced the children's expectation of privacy against the government's interest in conducting the Polinsky Children's Center medical examinations. (Mann v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2018) 907 F.3rd 1154, 1164-1167; Exigent circumstances, i.e., a medical emergency or the fear of evidence dissipating, may necessitate an examination without notice or consent. In this case, however, no such exigencies were found. Id., at p. 1166.)

Undecided Application of the Special Needs Doctrine; Interviewing a Child Victim on a School Campus:

The Camreta v. Greene Issue:

Interviewing a child victim on a school campus without the parents' consent was held by the Ninth Circuit to require a search warrant or other court order, or exigent circumstances, as a Fourth Amendment seizure, and did not meet the requirements of a "special needs" seizure. (Greene v. Camreta (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 1011; certiorari granted.)

This decision, however, was overruled by the United States Supreme Court in Camreta v. Greene (2011) 563 U.S. 692 [179 L.Ed.2nd 1118], and vacated, making it unavailable for citation, but also leaving the issue unresolved.

The Ninth Circuit subsequently ruled that because the theory of Camreta, having been vacated by the U.S Supreme Court, is not clearly established, civil defendants are entitled to qualified immunity where plaintiff's argument was that social workers violated the Constitution by interviewing his children at school without their parent's permission or a court order; a Fourth Amendment issue. (Capp v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2019) 940 F.3rd 1046, 1059-1060.)

Pen. Code § 11174.3*: *Interviews with Suspected Child Victims of Abuse or Neglect:

(a) Whenever a representative of a government agency investigating suspected child abuse or neglect or the State Department of Social Services deems it necessary, a suspected victim of child abuse or neglect may be interviewed during school hours, on school premises, concerning a report of suspected child abuse or neglect that occurred within the child's home or out–of–home care facility. The child shall be afforded the option of being interviewed in private or selecting any adult who is a member of the staff of the school, including any certificated or classified employee or volunteer aide, to be present at the interview. A representative of the agency investigating suspected child abuse or neglect or the State Department of Social Services shall inform the child of that right prior to the interview.

The purpose of the staff person's presence at the interview is to lend support to the child and enable him or her to be as comfortable as possible. However, the member of the staff so elected shall not participate in the interview. The member of the staff so present shall not discuss the facts or circumstances of the case with the child. The member of the staff so present, including, but not limited to, a volunteer aide, is subject to the confidentiality requirements of this article, a violation of which is punishable as specified in Section 11167.5. A representative of the school shall inform a member of the staff so selected by a child of the requirements of this section prior to the interview. A staff member selected by a child may decline the request to be present at the interview. If the staff person selected agrees to be present, the interview shall be held at a time during school hours when it does not involve an expense to the school. Failure to comply with the requirements of this section does not affect the admissibility of evidence in a criminal or civil proceeding.

(b) The Superintendent of Public Instruction shall notify each school district and each agency specified in Section 11165.9 to receive mandated reports, and the State Department of Social Services shall notify each of its employees who participate in the investigation of reports of child abuse or neglect, of the requirements of this section.

Note: Pen. Code § 11167.5(a) provides that "(a)ny violation of the confidentiality provided by this article is a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment in a county jail not to exceed six months, by a fine of five hundred dollars ($500), or by both that imprisonment and fine."

Closely or Pervasively Regulated Businesses or Activities:

Rule: The courts have indicated that a warrant is not necessary in those cases where the place to be searched is commercial property, and the industry involved is one that is so "pervasively regulated" or "closely regulated" that warrantless inspections are necessary to insure proper, or legal, business practices. (Donovan v. Dewey (1981) 452 US. 594, 598-599 [101 S.Ct. 2534; 69 L.Ed.2nd 262, 268-169]; New York v. Burger (1987) 482 U.S. 691, 700 [107 S.Ct. 2636; 96 L.Ed.2nd 601, 612-613]; People v. Paulson (1990) 216 Cal.App.3rd 1480, 1483-1484.)

"Closely regulated" businesses (Colonade Catering Corp. v. United States (1970) 397 U.S. 72, 74, 77 [90 S.Ct. 774; 25 L.Ed.2nd 60, 63-65].); or

"Pervasively regulated" businesses (United States v. Biswell (1972) 406 U.S. 311, 316 [92 S.Ct. 1593; 81 L.Ed.2nd 87]; New York v. Burger, supra, at p. 700 [96 L.Ed.2nd at pp. 612-613].)

Criteria: To qualify as a closely or pervasively regulated business which may be subject to warrantless, administrative searches, three criteria must be met:

- There must be a substantial governmental interest underlying the regulatory scheme authorizing the inspection.

- The warrantless inspections must be necessary to further the regulatory scheme.

- The statute's inspection program, in terms of the certainty and regularity of its application, must provide a constitutionally adequate substitute for a warrant; i.e.:

  It must advise the owner of the commercial premises that the search is being made pursuant to the law and has a properly defined scope; and

  It must limit the discretion of the inspecting officers.

  (New York v. Burger, supra, at pp. 702-702 [96 L.Ed.2nd at pp. 613-615; People v. Paulson, supra, at p. 1485; City of Los Angeles v. Patel (2015) 576 U.S. 409 [135 S.Ct. 2443, 192 L.Ed.2nd 435].)

General Examples:

Commercial Trucking is a pervasively regulated industry, allowing for warrantless searches. (United States v. Delgado (9th Cir. 2008) 545 F.3rd 1195, 1200-1204; based upon Missouri statutes allowing for such searches.)

Also, for a "commercial vehicle officer," who had limited law enforcement powers, to contact a regular state Highway Patrol officer to conduct a search, did not require any reasonable suspicion and did not prevent the regular officer from questioning defendant about issues unrelated to commercial vehicle regulations. (Id., at pp. 1204-1205.)

A County Jail, including lockers located outside the visitor center but maintained by the jail personnel, particularly with signs warning visitors that they were subject to search, is the equivalent to a closely regulated business allowing for a warrantless administrative search of a visitor and the property he deposits in the lockers. (People v. Boulter (2011) 199 Cal.App.4th 761.)

Liquor Sales. (Colonade Catering Corp. v. United States (1970) 397 U.S. 72 [90 S.Ct. 774; 25 L.Ed.2nd 60].)

Firearms Dealers. (United States v. Biswell (1972) 406 U.S. 311, 311-312 [92 S.Ct. 1593; 32 L.Ed.2nd 87].)

Mining. (Donovan v. Dewey (1981) 452 U.S. 594 [101 S.Ct. 2534; 69 L.Ed.2nd 262].)

Automobile Junkyards. (New York v. Burger (1987) 482 U.S. 691 [107 S.Ct. 2636; 96 L.Ed.2nd 601].)

*Massage Parlors, per B&P Code § 4601(f). (Kim v. Dolch (1985) 173 Cal.App.3rd 736; Killgore v. City of South El Monte (9th Cir. 2021) 2021 U.S.App. LEXIS 20257; unpublished.)

Where Licenses Include a Consent to Search:

In some instances, licenses to do business include a consent to search (26 U.S.C. § 7342), and may impose sanctions for refusing to give such consent, but do not, by its terms, permit a forcible entry. (Colonnade Catering Corp. v. United States, supra: Inspections under the federal retail liquor occupational tax stamp act.)

See also United States v. Biswell (1972) 406 U.S. 311 [92 S.Ct. 1593; 32 L.Ed.2nd 87]; warrantless search of a gun dealer's place of business under authority of the Gun Control Act (18 U.S.C. §§ 921 et seq.), upheld.

People v. Lee (1986) 186 Cal.App.3rd 743, 749; finding a warrantless entry into the private areas of a business (for the purpose of an arrest, in this case), does not affect the applicability of a regulatory scheme authorizing warrantless inspections of the private areas of some regulated businesses, unless the search is being conducted for the purpose of seeking contraband or evidence of crime under the guise of an administrative warrant. (Donovan v. Dewey (1981) 452 U.S. 594, 598, fn. 6 [101 S.Ct. 2534; 69 L.Ed.2nd 262, 268].)

Exceptions:

Hotels and Motels: Hotels and motels do not qualify as closely regulated businesses, although an administrative subpoena or warrant is all that is necessary for the inspection of the business' guest registry records. (City of* Los Angeles *v. Patel (2015) 576 U.S. 409 [135 S.Ct. 2443; 192 L.Ed.2nd 435].)

As a Pretext to Perform a Criminal Function:

> Use of an administrative, or "inspection" warrant, issued by a court for the purpose of regulating building, fire, safety, plumbing, electrical, health, labor or zoning codes, does not justify an entry by police to make an arrest given the lesser proof standards needed to obtain an administrative warrant. If an entry is effected for the purpose of arresting the occupant, an arrest warrant must first be obtained. (Alexander v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 1994) 29 F.3rd 1355.)
>
> Pretextual detentions are illegal when the pretext used to conduct an investigation of "ordinary criminal wrongdoing" is an officer's statutory administrative authority to conduct warrantless and suspicionless inspections, but where the detention and search would not have occurred but for the officer's intent to conduct the criminal investigation. (United States v. Orozco (9th Cir. 2017) 858 F.3rd 1204.)
>
> The rule under Whren (see Whren v. United States (1996) 517 U.S. 806 [116 S.Ct. 1769; 135 L.Ed.2nd 89].), allowing for pretextual stops) does not apply to the conducting of an administrative impoundment and inventory search of a vehicle. (United States v. Orozco, supra, at pp. 1210-1212; United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2018) 889 F.3rd 1120, 1125-1126.)
>
> > However, see the concurring opinion in United States v. Johnson, supra, at pp. 1129-1133, where the two concurring justices note that "such decision contradicts earlier Supreme Court precedent and that Orozco therefore ought to be reconsidered by our court," and "that the Supreme Court has explicitly—and unanimously—rejected the approach we adopted in Orozco;" citing Brigham City v. Stuart (2006) 547 U.S. 398 [126 S.Ct. 1943; 164 L.Ed.2nd 650], as authority for this argument.
> >
> > See "Inventory Searches as an Exception to the Rule of Whren v. United States," under "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.
>
> Where law enforcement officers were asked to assist in the execution of an administrative warrant authorizing the inspection of a private residence for city code violations, they violated the Fourth Amendment because their primary purpose in executing the warrant was to gather evidence in support of a criminal investigation, and, accordingly, defendant was entitled to suppression of evidence obtained during the search. Although law enforcement had initiated a criminal investigation of defendant before the administrative search, it had concluded that it did not have probable cause to arrest defendant or obtain a search warrant for his home, but it knew that a city was going to obtain an inspection warrant for defendant's home and to request assistance at the inspection, and while accompanying the city on its inspection, law enforcement officers photographed incriminating evidence. (United States v. Grey (9th Cir. 2020) 959 F.3rd 1166.)

California's Implied Consent Law in Driving Under the Influence* (DUI) Cases:

Veh. Code § 23612: Implied Consent: Advisal Requirements Incident to Arrest for DUI:

(a)

(1)

(A) A person who drives a motor vehicle is deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her blood or breath for the purpose of determining the alcoholic content of his or her blood, if lawfully arrested for an offense allegedly committed in violation of Section 23140 (DUI by persons under the age of 21), 23152 (DUI by all others) or 23153 (DUI with injury). If a blood or breath test, or both, are unavailable, then paragraph (2) of subdivision (d) applies.

(B) A person who drives a motor vehicle is deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her blood for the purpose of determining the drug content of his or her blood, if lawfully arrested for an offense allegedly committed in violation of Section 23140, 23152, or 23153. If a blood test is unavailable, the person shall be deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her urine and shall submit to a urine test.

(C) The testing shall be incidental to a lawful arrest and administered at the direction of a peace officer having reasonable cause to believe the person was driving a motor vehicle in violation of Section 23140, 23152, or 23153.

(D) The person shall be told that his or her failure to submit to, or the failure to complete, the required breath or urine testing will result in a fine and mandatory imprisonment if the person is convicted of a violation of Section 23152 or 23153. The person shall also be told that his or her failure to submit to, or the failure to complete, the required breath, blood, or urine tests will result in (i) the administrative suspension by the department of the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a period of one year, (ii) the administrative revocation by the department of the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a period of two years if the refusal occurs within 10 years of a separate violation of Section 23103 as specified in Section 23103.5, or of Section 23140, 23152, or 23153 of this code, or of Section 191.5 or subdivision (a) of Section 192.5 of the Penal Code that resulted in a conviction, or if the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle has been suspended or revoked pursuant to Section 13353, 13353.1, or 13353.2 for an offense that occurred on a separate occasion, or (iii) the administrative revocation by the department of the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a period of three years if the refusal occurs within 10 years of two or more separate violations of Section 23103 as specified in Section 23103.5, or of Section 23140, 23152, or 23153 of this code, or of Section 191.5 (Gross Vehicular Manslaughter and/or Vehicular Manslaughter While Intoxicated) or subdivision (a) of Section 192.5 of the Penal Code (Vehicular Manslaughter; Operating a Vessel in violation of Harb. & Nav. Code §655(b), (c), (d), (e), or (f)), or any combination thereof, that resulted in convictions, or if the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle has been suspended or revoked two or more times pursuant to Section 13353, 13353.1, or 13353.2 for offenses that occurred on separate occasions, or if there is any combination of those convictions, administrative suspensions, or revocations.

The admonition pursuant to V.C. § 13353 that defendant's refusal to submit to chemical testing would result in a license suspension was not invalidated by the omission of an admonition that refusal would result in a fine or imprisonment. The Department of Motor Vehicles was not seeking a fine or imprisonment. (Elmore v. Gordon (2021) 73 Cal.App.5th 520, 522-523.)

(2)

(A) If the person is lawfully arrested for driving under the influence of an alcoholic beverage, the person has the choice of whether the test shall be of his or her blood or breath and the officer shall advise the person that he or she has that choice. If the person arrested either is incapable, or states that he or she is incapable, of completing the chosen test, the person shall submit to the remaining test. If a blood or breath test, or both, are unavailable, then paragraph (2) of subdivision (d) applies.

(B) If the person is lawfully arrested for driving under the influence of any drug or the combined influence of an alcoholic beverage and any drug, the person has the choice of whether the test shall be of his or her blood or breath, and the officer shall advise the person that he or she has that choice.

(C) A person who chooses to submit to a breath test may also be requested to submit to a blood test if the officer has reasonable cause to believe that the person was driving under the influence of a drug or the combined influence of an alcoholic beverage and a drug and if the officer has reasonable cause to believe that a blood test will reveal evidence of the person being under the influence. The officer shall state in his or her report the facts upon which those beliefs are based. The officer shall advise the person that he or she is required to submit to an additional test. The person shall submit to and complete a blood test. If the person arrested is incapable of completing the blood test, the person shall submit to and complete a urine test.

(3) If the person is lawfully arrested for an offense allegedly committed in violation of Section 23140, 23152, or 23153, and, because of the need for medical treatment, the person is first transported to a medical facility where it is not feasible to administer a particular test of, or to obtain a particular sample of, the person's blood or breath, the person has the choice of those tests, including a urine test, that are available at the facility to which that person has been transported. In that case, the officer shall advise the person of those tests that are available at the medical facility and that the person's choice is limited to those tests that are available.

(4) The officer shall also advise the person that he or she does not have the right to have an attorney present before stating whether he or she will submit to a test or tests, before deciding which test or tests to take, or during administration of the test or tests chosen, and that, in the event of refusal to submit to a test or tests, the refusal may be used against him or her in a court of law.

(5) A person who is unconscious or otherwise in a condition rendering him or her incapable of refusal is deemed not to have withdrawn his or her consent and a test or tests may be administered whether or not the person is told that his or her failure to submit to, or the noncompletion of, the test or tests will result in the suspension or revocation of his or her privilege to operate a motor vehicle. A person who is dead is deemed not to have withdrawn his or her consent and a test or tests may be administered at the direction of a peace officer.

(b) A person who is afflicted with hemophilia is exempt from the blood test required by this section, but shall submit to, and complete, a urine test.

(c) A person who is afflicted with a heart condition and is using an anticoagulant under the direction of a licensed physician and surgeon is exempt from the blood test required by this section, but shall submit to, and complete, a urine test.

(d)

(1) A person lawfully arrested for an offense allegedly committed while the person was driving a motor vehicle in violation of Section 23140, 23152, or 23153 may request the arresting officer to have a chemical test made of the arrested person's blood or breath for the purpose of determining the alcoholic content of that person's blood, and, if so requested, the arresting officer shall have the test performed.

(2) If a blood or breath test is not available under subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) of subdivision (a), or under subparagraph (A) of paragraph (2) of subdivision (a), or under paragraph (1) of this subdivision, the person shall submit to the remaining test in order to determine the percent, by weight, of alcohol in the person's blood. If both the blood and breath tests are unavailable, the person shall be deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her urine and shall submit to a urine test.

(e) If the person, who has been arrested for a violation of Section 23140, 23152, or 23153, refuses or fails to complete a chemical test or tests, or requests that a blood or urine test be taken, the peace officer, acting on behalf of the department, shall serve the notice of the order of suspension or revocation of the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle personally on the arrested person. The notice shall be on a form provided by the department.

(f) If the peace officer serves the notice of the order of suspension or revocation of the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle, the peace officer shall take possession of all driver's licenses issued by this state that are held by the person. The temporary driver's license shall be an endorsement on the notice of the order of suspension and shall be valid for 30 days from the date of arrest.

(g)

(1) The peace officer shall immediately forward a copy of the completed notice of suspension or revocation form and any driver's license taken into possession under subdivision (f), with the report required by Section 13380, to the department. If the person submitted to a blood or urine test, the peace officer shall forward the results immediately to the appropriate forensic laboratory. The forensic laboratory shall forward the results of the chemical tests to the department within 15 calendar days of the date of the arrest.

(2)

(A) Notwithstanding any other law, a document containing data prepared and maintained in the governmental forensic laboratory computerized database system that is electronically transmitted or retrieved through public or private computer networks to or by the department is the best available evidence of the chemical test results in all administrative proceedings conducted by the department. In addition, any other official record that is maintained in the governmental forensic laboratory, relates to a chemical test analysis prepared and maintained in the governmental forensic laboratory computerized database system, and is electronically transmitted and retrieved through a public or private computer network to or by the department is admissible as evidence in the department's administrative proceedings. In order to be admissible as evidence in administrative proceedings, a document described in this subparagraph shall bear a certification by the employee of the department who retrieved the document certifying that the information was received or retrieved directly from the computerized database system of a governmental forensic laboratory and that the document accurately reflects the data received or retrieved.

(B) Notwithstanding any other law, the failure of an employee of the department to certify under subparagraph (A) is not a public offense.

(h) A preliminary alcohol screening ({"PAS") test that indicates the presence or concentration of alcohol based on a breath sample in order to establish reasonable cause to believe the person was driving a vehicle in violation of Section 23140, 23152, or 23153 is a field sobriety test and may be used by an officer as a further investigative tool.

(i) If the officer decides to use a preliminary alcohol screening ("PAS") test, the officer shall advise the person that he or she is requesting that person to take a preliminary alcohol screening test to assist the officer in determining if that person is under the influence of alcohol or drugs, or a combination of alcohol and drugs. The person's obligation to submit to a blood, breath, or urine test, as required by this section, for the purpose of determining the alcohol or drug content of that person's blood, is not satisfied by the person submitting to a preliminary alcohol screening test. The officer shall advise the person of that fact and of the person's right to refuse to take the preliminary alcohol screening test.

Note: See "Veh. Code § 23612; California's "implied consent law," below, for relevant case law.

Veh. Code § 13353*: Blood, Breath or Urine Tests for D.U.I. Arrestees*:

Rule: Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 768 [86 S.Ct. 1826; 16 L.Ed.2nd 908, 918]: The warrantless intrusions into the human body of a person arrested for driving while under the influence of alcohol may, under some circumstances, be upheld assuming the existence of a sufficient exigency; e.g., blood withdrawal.)

> It is recognized by the courts that the "'delay necessary to procure a warrant . . . may result in the destruction of valuable evidence,' 'blood and breath samples taken to measure whether these substances were in the bloodstream when a triggering event occurred must be obtained as soon as possible.'" (People v. Thompson (2006) 38 Cal.4th 811, 825; quoting Skinner v. Railway Labor Executives' Assn. (1989) 489 U.S. 602, 623 [103 L.Ed.2nd 639]; see also People v. Toure (2015) 232 Cal.App.4th 1096, 1103-1104.)

Limitation: Missouri v. McNeely (2013) 569 U.S. 141 [133 S.Ct. 1552; 185 L.Ed.2nd 696]:

> Schmerber v. California, supra, however, was limited to its circumstances in Missouri v. McNeely, supra, where the U.S. Supreme Court held that being arrested for driving while under the influence did not allow for a non-consensual warrantless blood test absent exigent circumstances beyond the fact that the blood was metabolizing at a normal rate.
>
> See People v. Ling (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1, 3-4, for a description of the history from Schmerber through McNeely. "Given the clarification of Schmerber in McNeely, Fourth Amendment challenges to blood draws must now be viewed through a fresh lens that is unencumbered by the past presumption of an existing exception to the warrant requirement." (pg. 4.)

Current Law:

> Schmerber was not overruled by McNeely, but merely differentiated on its facts (Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560].)
>
> In Schmerber, the defendant had been in a traffic collision and had to be transported to the hospital due to his injuries. The Court in McNeely pointed out "that where time had to be taken to bring the accused to a hospital and to investigate the scene of the accident, there was no time to seek out a magistrate and secure a warrant." (Citation) 'Given these special facts,' we found that it was appropriate for the police to act without a warrant. (Citation)" (Missouri v. McNeely, supra, at 151.)
>
> Also, the admonition pursuant to V.C. § 13353 that defendant's refusal to submit to chemical testing would result in a license suspension was not invalidated by the omission of an admonition that refusal would result in a fine or imprisonment. The Department of Motor Vehicles was not seeking a fine or imprisonment. (Elmore v. Gordon (2021) 73 Cal.App.5th 520, 522-523.)

The Unconscious DUI Arrestee:

> The implied consent provisions under Veh. Code § 23612(a)(5), where, by statute, blood may be drawn from an unconscious or dead DUI suspect (see below), was held not to overcome the need for a search warrant without a showing of exigent circumstances.

(People v. Arredondo (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 186, 193-205; no exigency found, pp. 205-206.)

> Note: Petition for Review in People v. Arredondo was dismissed and the case remanded in light of the decision in Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) __ U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040], where the U.S. Supreme Court held that when a DUI arrestee is unconscious, this fact alone will "almost always" constitute an exigency, allowing for a warrantless blood draw. (See below.)

In the State of Wisconsin, the state's implied consent statute (Wis. Stat. § 343.305(2) & (3)(a)), which imposes civil (as opposed to criminal) penalties only, for refusing to provide a blood, breath, or urine sample, has been interpreted to be sufficient to justify a warrantless blood draw absent a specific withdrawal of that consent, pursuant to Wis. Statute § 343.305(4). (State v. Mitchell (2018) 2018 WI 84; defendant, being unconscious, failed to specifically withdraw his statutory implied consent.)

> Other states are in accord. (People v. Hyde (Colo. 2017) 393 P.3rd 962; Helton v. Commonwealth (Ky. 2009) 299 S.W.3rd 555, 559.)

The U.S. Supreme Court finally ruled on the issue: In the case of an unconscious DUI suspect, the subject's unconsciousness is an exigent circumstance in itself, allowing for a warrantless withdrawal of a blood sample, at least as a general rule although subject to possible exceptions. (Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) __ U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040]; "In this respect, the case for allowing a blood draw is stronger here than in Schmerber* v. *California, . . ." fn. 8.)

> Immediate medical treatment administered by the hospital staff could delay (or otherwise distort the results of) a blood draw conducted later, upon receipt of a warrant, thus reducing its evidentiary value. (Id, at p. __.)
>
> The availability of expedited telephonic search warrant procedures is irrelevant. "(W)ith better technology, the time required (to obtain a search warrant) has shrunk, but it has not disappeared." (Id, at p. __.)
>
> But, see dissenting opinion at pp. __-__.

Veh. Code § 23612; California's "Implied Consent Law" Interpreted: Veh. Code § 23612 (see above, under "California's Implied Consent Law In Driving Under the Influence (DUI) Cases") has been held to be a factor, among the "totality of the circumstances," in determining whether or not a DUI arrestee has given "actual consent" to a warrantless blood draw. (People v. Harris (2015) 234 Cal.App.4th 671, 681-692.)

Case Law:

"(A)ctual consent to a blood draw is not 'implied consent,' but rather a possible result of requiring the driver to choose whether to consent under the implied consent law. (Citation.) '[T]he implied consent law is explicitly designed to allow the driver, and not the police officer, to make the choice as to whether the driver will give or decline to give actual consent to a blood draw when put to the choice between consent or automatic sanctions. Framed in the terms of "implied consent," choosing the "yes" option affirms the driver's implied consent and constitutes actual consent for the blood draw. Choosing the "no" option acts to withdraw the driver's implied consent and establishes that the driver does not give actual consent.' (Citation)" (People v. Harris, supra, at p. 686.)

Note: See Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438, 444-450 [136 S.Ct. 2160;195 L.Ed.2nd 560], for a historical review of the development of DUI statutes, the importance of obtaining a reading of the suspect's "BAC" ("Blood Alcohol Concentration"), and the advent of implied consent statutes.

"Voluntary consent to a blood test required under the implied consent law satisfies the Fourth Amendment." (People v. Lopez (2020) 46 Cal.App.5th 317, 324, citing People v. Harris, supra, at p. 685.)

"The implied consent law, section 23612, plays a part in our analysis, but it does not itself establish consent." (People v. Lopez, supra, at p. 325.)

One's "actual consent," however, may itself be implied upon evaluating the "totality of the circumstances." "[N]o words at all need be spoken: in appropriate circumstances, consent to enter may be unmistakably manifested by a gesture alone." (People v. Lopez, supra, at p. 327, quoting (People v. James (1977) 19 Cal.3rd 99, 113.)

> Failure by the officer to read to an arrestee the entire admonition as required by statute is but one factor to consider when determining whether the arrestee did in fact consent to a blood draw. (People v. Lopez, supra.)

Note: To put this rule into a formula: Implied consent per Veh. Code § 23612 + circumstances consistent with consent = actual consent.

Also note Veh. Code § 13384 (effective since 1999) requiring for all new and renewed driver's licenses to include the applicant's written consent to submit to a chemical test or tests of that person's blood, breath, or urine, or to submit to a preliminary alcohol screening test pursuant to Veh. Code § 23136 (persons under 21 years of age with a blood alcohol level of .01% or higher) when requested to do so by a peace officer, and for the applicant to sign a written declaration consenting to the above. The legal effect of this mandated written consent has yet to be tested, but may offer a solution to the inability of section 23612's "implied consent" provisions to avoid the need for a search warrant. (See People v. Arredondo (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 186, 198, & fn. 7; People v. Mason (2016) 8 Cal.App.5th Supp. 11, 26-27.)

> In Mason, at pg. 26, it was noted that, "(p)roof of that consent by (defendant) here would have at least brought the case closer to the probation condition or advance express-consent context." However, the Court still "doubt(ed)" it would "automatically" encompass the "rights and concerns" addressed under the Fourth Amendment. In Mason, no evidence of the defendant's status as a licensed driver was in the record, so the issue was not decided.
>
> Note: Petition for Review was dismissed in Arredondo and the case remanded in light of the decision in Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) __ U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040], where the U.S. Supreme Court held that when a DUI arrestee is unconscious, this fact alone will "almost always" constitute an exigency, allowing for a warrantless blood draw.

Where defendant's blood was taken over his objection and without a warrant, Missouri v. McNeely, supra, did not mandate suppression of the blood result in that McNeely was decided after the arrest in this case. Also, defendant was subject to search and seizure conditions under his "post-release community supervision" (PRCS) terms, eliminating the need for a search warrant. With probable cause to believe that he was driving while under the influence of alcohol when he had a traffic accident, his mandatory PRCS search and seizure conditions, authorizing the blood draw without the necessity of a search warrant, was not in violation of the Fourth Amendment. (People v. Jones (2014) 231 Cal.App.4th 1257, 1262-1269.)

A non-violent and/or non-manipulative refusal to submit to a blood or breath test is not a violation of the "resisting a peace officer" statute; P.C. § 148. "To permit a refusal in and of itself to be independently punished under section 148—wholly outside the implied consent scheme and the Legislature's policy judgments—would be inappropriate." "(A) person has the right to refuse to consent to a search" and "the exercise of a constitutional right cannot be punished under section 148." (People v. Valencia (2015) 240 Cal.App.4th Supp. 11, 16-27.)

In a prosecution for driving under the influence of alcohol, blood draw evidence should have been suppressed under the Fourth Amendment in that under the totality of the circumstances, the People failed to show that defendant actually—freely and voluntarily—consented to a blood draw to which she had physically submitted after an incomplete implied consent admonishment. The admonishment, which stated that defendant was required to submit to a blood test, but did not include the consequences of refusal and was misleading. Defendant had a Fourth Amendment right, notwithstanding implied (or "deemed") consent, to refuse and to bear the consequences of such a refusal. Implied consent does not constitute real or actual consent in fact, for purposes of the Fourth Amendment. Also, the People failed to offer any evidence of any advance express consent by defendant, or even that she was a licensed California driver. (People v. Mason (2016) 8 Cal.App.5th Supp. 11, 18-33.)

> Per the Court, such implied consent "is not real or actual consent in fact for purposes of the Fourth Amendment, though it may be perfectly fine for purposes of administrative proceedings involving forfeiture of driving privileges under the implied consent law upon a refusal to submit to a duly requested chemical test. (Id., at pp. 27-28; see Hughey v. Dept. of Motor Vehicles (1991) 235 Cal.App.3rd 752, 757.)

The Appellate Department of the San Diego Superior Court has held that sending blood results to a drug lab in those "driving while under the influence" cases where testing for alcohol failed to show sufficient alcohol to account for the degree that the suspect appeared to be under the influence, and where the defendant had consented only to have her blood tested for alcohol, as opposed to drugs, was a violation of the Fourth Amendment in that such drug testing is beyond the scope of the consent given; i.e., for alcohol only. (People v. Pickard (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th Supp. 12, 15-17.)

> The Court further noted that to send the blood to a drug lab constituted "a procedural recurring or systematic failure by the law enforcement agency's personnel to abide by the Fourth Amendment." As a result, good faith did not prevent a court from suppressing the test result for drugs as being beyond the scope of the consent given where the defendant is told only that her blood will be tested for alcohol. (Id., at pp. 16-17.)

Subdivision (a) (1)(D) of California's implied consent law (Veh. Code § 23612) requires an arresting officer to at least attempt to provide the required admonition that a suspected drunk driver's refusal to submit to a chemical test to determine the alcohol content of his or her blood will result in the suspension of the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a period of one year. There is a material difference between attempting to admonish an uncooperative suspect and the invited conclusion as occurred here that compliance with a statutorily mandated admonition was altogether unnecessary because of the defendant's disruptive and combative behavior. Because it was undisputed that the arresting officer never admonished defendant, the suspension of his driver's license was subject to reversal even though he was uncooperative and combative towards the officer. (Munro v. Department of Motor Vehicles (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 41.)

An arresting officer's failure to advise defendant under Veh. Code § 23612(a)(2)(B), of his statutory right to choose either a blood or breath test did not violate the Fourth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, and thus Cal. Const., art. I, § 28, subd. (f)(2) required the admission of blood test results into evidence. (People v. Vannesse (2018) 23 Cal.App.5th 440.)

Where defendant was charged with misdemeanor DUI, the appellate court concluded that defendant freely consented to the search of his blood. Although a statement by the arresting officer was incomplete under Veh. Code § 23612(a)(1)(D), there was no evidence the officer intended to deceive defendant about his right to refuse a blood altogether. Nor was the officer's statement about the implied consent law demonstrably false. At no point before or after defendant consented to the test did he indicate any objection. Looking at the totality of the circumstances, including the officer's conduct, the existence of the implied consent law, and defendant's actions before and after he consented to the blood test, the appellate court could not say the trial court's finding that defendant voluntarily consented to the test was error. (People v. Balov (2018) 23 Cal.App.5th 696.)

> "[T]he implied consent law is explicitly designed to allow the driver, and not the police officer, to make the choice as to whether the driver will give or decline to give actual consent to a blood draw when put to the choice between consent or automatic sanctions. Framed in the terms of 'implied consent,' choosing the 'yes' option affirms the driver's implied consent and constitutes actual consent for the blood draw. Choosing the 'no' option acts to withdraw the driver's implied consent and establishes that the driver does not give actual consent." [Citation.]" (Id., at p. 702; People v. Lopez (2020) 46 Cal.App.5th 317, 326.)

The Fourth Amendment did not require a warrant for a blood draw because defendant was lawfully arrested on suspicion of driving under the influence and he freely and voluntarily exercised the choice California law gave him to take a blood test instead of a breath test. These facts brought the blood draw into the category of breath-or-blood searches that require no warrant under the search-incident-to-arrest doctrine. (People v. Gutierrez (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 1155.)

The Fourth Amendment was held not to have prohibited a finding of implied consent to a blood draw under California's former law, even though defendant was advised that the law required a chemical test, because he was given a choice of tests. Just because the state cannot compel a warrantless blood test does not mean that it cannot offer one as an alternative to the breath test that it clearly can compel. The trial court properly found that defendant's consent to a blood draw was voluntary even though he had been advised that a breath or blood test was required by the law. Both arresting officers testified to the circumstances under which defendant gave his consent to the blood test and there was no testimony that he only gave actual consent because of the threat of criminal prosecution. (People v. Nzolameso (2019) 39 Cal.App.5th 1181.)

The Fourth Amendment did not require suppression of evidence from a warrantless blood draw because substantial evidence supported a finding that defendant consented. After the officer instructed her that the implied consent law required her to undergo a blood draw (suspecting that defendant was under the influence of a drug), defendant did not object or refuse to undergo the test, did not resist any of the officers' directions, and voluntarily placed her arm on the table to allow the phlebotomist to draw her blood. The result was not changed by the officer's failure to relate the admonitions regarding the consequences of refusal. (People v. Lopez (2020) 46 Cal.App.5th 317.)

"Despite its common name, the implied consent law implicitly grants a suspect the right not to consent to a test." (Id., at p. 326.)

Failure by the officer to read to an arrestee the entire admonition as required by statute is but one factor to consider when determining whether the arrestee did in fact consent to a blood draw. (People v. Lopez, supra, at pp. 327-328; citing People v. Harris (2015) 234 Cal.App.4th 671, 676-692.)

Burden of Proof in Blood Draw Cases:

Where the circumstances of a blood draw authorized by a valid search warrant are typical and routine, i.e., not peculiarly within the knowledge of the People, the burden of proof is on the defendant as to the Fourth Amendment requirement that the blood be drawn in a reasonable manner. Defendant had the burden to prove that the manner of a warranted blood draw was not reasonable because of the typical and routine circumstances, including that the blood was drawn at the hospital and that defendant was in as good a position as the officer to observe the draw. Defendant failed in this case to carry his burden. He did not, for example, aver that the blood draw procedures were unsanitary, painful, or unsafe. (People v. Fish (2018) 29 Cal.App.5th 462.)

Other California & United States Regulatory/Administrative Searches:

Veh. Code § 2805: Vehicle Inspections in Connection with Theft Investigations:

(a) For the purpose of locating stolen vehicles, (1) any member of the California Highway Patrol, or (2) a member of a city police department, a member of a county sheriff's office, or a district attorney investigator, whose primary responsibility is to conduct vehicle theft investigations, may inspect any vehicle of a type required to be registered under this code, or any identifiable vehicle component thereof, on a highway or in any public garage, repair shop, terminal, parking lot, new or used car lot, automobile dismantler's lot, vehicle shredding facility, vehicle leasing or rental lot, vehicle equipment rental yard, vehicle salvage pool, or other similar establishment, or any agricultural or construction work location where work is being actively performed, and may inspect the title or registration of vehicles, in order to establish the rightful ownership or possession of the vehicle or identifiable vehicle component.

> As used in this subdivision, "identifiable vehicle component" means any component which can be distinguished from other similar components by a serial number or other unique distinguishing number, sign, or symbol.

Veh. Code § 320: An Established Place of Business:

> (b): An automobile dismantler where the books and records pertinent to the type of business being conducted are kept. A place of business of an automobile dismantler which qualified as an "established place of business" before September 17, 1970, is an "established place of business" as defined in this section.
>
> (b) A member of the California Highway Patrol, a member of a city police department or county sheriff's office, or a district attorney investigator whose primary responsibility is to conduct vehicle theft investigations, may also inspect, for the purposes specified in subdivision (a), implements of husbandry, special construction equipment, forklifts, and special mobile equipment in the places described in subdivision (a) or when that vehicle is incidentally operated or transported upon a highway.
>
> (c) Whenever possible, inspections conducted pursuant to subdivision (a) or (b) shall be conducted at a time and in a manner so as to minimize any interference with, or delay of, business operations.
>
> (See People v. Woolsey (1979) 90 Cal.App.3rd 994; People v. Calvert (1993) 18 Cal.App.4th 1820; People v. Potter (2005) 128 Cal.App.4th 611.)
>
> See "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.

Pen. Code § 171e: Inspection of a firearm to determine whether it is loaded for purposes of P.C. §§ 171c & 171d (Firearms in state buildings and governmental residences, respectively), Pen. Code § 25850(b) (formerly P.C. § 12031(a)): Inspection of a firearm in a public place.

Pen. Code § 18250 (formerly P.C. § 12028.5): Seizure of firearms and other deadly weapons at domestic violence scenes.

Fish and Game Code: There is case law that refers to the regulation of hunting and fishing as having relaxed search and seizure standards due to the fact that they are "highly regulated" activities, and that requiring warrants would make it impossible to effectively implement hunting and fishing laws. But the case law is very sparse:

> F&G § 8011: Allowing the warrantless inspection of the records of a wholesale fish dealer licensed under F&G § 8040(a).
>
> Cases:
>
> > People v. Harbor Hut Restaurant (1983) 147 Cal.App.3rd 1151; upholding the warrantless inspection of the fish in a restaurant under the theory that "fishing" is a "highly regulated business."
> >
> > Betchard v. Dept. of Fish and Game (1984) 158 Cal.App.3rd 1104; upheld the routine and warrantless inspections of plaintiff's agricultural rangeland upon which deer hunting was often done. But the court noted that the relaxed standards were due to the fact that the areas entered were "open fields" and the intrusion into the plaintiff's privacy rights was minimal.
> >
> > > The court also noted that a hunter has given up a certain amount of his or her privacy rights: "Hunters are required to be licensed. By choosing to engage in this highly regulated activity, there is a fundamental premise that there is an implied consent to effective supervision and inspection as directed by statute." (Id., at p. 1110.)
> >
> > People v. Perez (1996) 51 Cal.App.4th 1168, upheld a highway checkpoint used to implement hunting regulations.
> >
> > A game warden, under authority of Fish & Game § 1006 (see below), who reasonably believes that a person has recently been fishing or hunting, but lacks reasonable suspicion that the person has violated an applicable fish or game statute or regulation, may nonetheless stop a vehicle in which the person is riding to demand the person display all fish or game the person has caught or taken. As an administrative, special needs search, the standard Fourth Amendment probable cause requirements are irrelevant. (People v. Maikhio (2011) 51 Cal.4th 1074.)

Pursuant to F&G Code § 1006; "The department may inspect the following:

> (a) All boats, markets, stores and other buildings, except dwellings, and all receptacles, except the clothing actually worn by a person at the time of inspection, where birds, mammals, fish, reptiles, or amphibia may be stored, placed, or held for sale or storage.
> (b) All boxes and packages containing birds, mammals, fish, reptiles, or amphibia which are held for transportation by any common carrier."

However, The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has held that the administrative search exception is applicable only to warrantless searches where (1) the search promotes an important governmental interest, (2) is authorized by statute, and (3) the authorizing statute and its regulatory scheme provide specific limitations on the manner and place of the search so as to limit the possibility of abuse. (Tarabochia v. Adkins (9th Cir. 2014) 766 F.3rd 1115, 1121-1125; finding a traffic stop to check the plaintiff's fish to be in violation of the Fourth Amendment in that the applicable Washington State statutes (Wash. Rev. Code §§ 77.15.080(1) & 77.15.096) did not authorize traffic stops and limited such searches to "while fishing."

Financial Code:

Fin. Code § 21206: Inspection of pawned property. (See Sanders v. City of San Diego (9th Cir. 1996) 93 F.3rd 1423, 1427; G&G Jewelry Inc. v. City of Oakland (9th Cir. 1993) 989 F.2nd 1093, 1099-1101, and fn. 4.)

United States Code:

14 U.S.C. § 89(a): The Coast Guard has statutory authority to search vessels, giving them plenary authority to stop vessels for document and safety inspections. (People v. Eng (2002) 94 Cal.App.4th 1184; drugs discovered; see "Border Searches" (Chapter 18), below.)

49 U.S.C. § 44901: Transportation Security Administration (TSA) screening of luggage bound for airline flights. (See United States v. McCarty (9th Cir. 2011) 2011 U.S.App. LEXIS 18874; child pornography observed during a lawful TSA administrative search may lawfully be used to establish probable cause to arrest.

The case was remanded and vacated, where defendant's motion to suppress was denied at United States v. McCarty (U.S. Dist. Hawaii, 2011) 835 F. Supp.2nd 938.)

Arson Investigations:

*Arson Investigations done immediately upon the extinguishing of a fire, before firefighters leave the scene and the building is secured. (Michigan v. Clifford (1984) 464 U.S. 287, 294 [104 S.Ct. 641; 78 L. Ed. 2nd 477].)

School Searches:

Rule: The Fourth Amendment protects students on a public school campus against unreasonable searches and seizures. (In re K.J. (2018) 18 Cal.App.5th 1123, 1128.)

However, Searches and seizures of students in the school setting is recognized as a "special needs" search or seizure, lessening the standard probable cause requirements for school officials to one of "reasonableness," under the circumstances. (Scott v. County of San Bernardino (9th Cir. 2018) 903 F.3rd 943, 949, citing Vernonia Sch. Dist. 47J v. Acton (1995) 515 U.S. 646, 653 [115 S.Ct. 2386; 132 L.Ed.2nd 564].) (See "Special Needs Searches and Seizures," above.)

Although T.L.O. dealt with searches and not seizures, the same standards have specifically been extended its special needs test to seizures conducted by school officials in the school setting. (Scott v. County of San Bernardino, supra.)

Students in General:

Rule: Recognizing that students (K through high school) do retain some Fourth Amendment protections, and that school officials are, in effect, government employees, the Supreme Court struck a balance and found that school administrators may conduct searches of students and their personal belongings on no more than a "reasonable suspicion." (New Jersey v. T.L.O. (1985) 469 U.S. 325 [105 S.Ct. 733; 83 L.Ed.2nd 720].)

Although T.L.O. dealt with searches and not seizures, the same standards have specifically been extended its special needs test to seizures conducted by school officials in the school setting. (Scott v. County of San Bernardino, supra.)

See Horton v. Goose Creek Independent School District (5th Cir. 1982) 690 F.2nd 470, 480 to 482, for a detailed analysis of the "The Fourth Amendment in the Public Schools," and why a relaxed search and seizure standard is applied in analyzing the relationship between students and school administrators.

> Horton deals with the use of canines to "sniff" students, holding that such an act constitutes a "search" for Fourth Amendment purposes, eventually holding that "the type of canine inspection of the student's person involved in this case cannot be justified by the need to prevent abuse of drugs and alcohol when there is no individualized suspicion, and we hold it unconstitutional." (Pgs. 482-483.)

A school search "will be permissible in its scope when the measures adopted are reasonably related to the objectives of the search and not excessively intrusive in light of the age and sex of the student and the nature of the infraction." (New Jersey v. T.L.O., supra, at p. 342.)

"It is well settled that the actions of public school officials are 'subject to the limits placed on state action by the Fourteenth Amendment.'" (In re K.J. (2018) 18 Cal.App.5th 1123, 1128; quoting New Jersey v. T.L.O., supra, at p. 334.)

Although T.L.O. dealt with searches and not seizures, the same standards have specifically been extended its special needs test to seizures conducted by school officials in the school setting. (Scott v. County of San Bernardino (9th Cir. 2018) 903 F.3rd 943, 949.)

Constitutional Protections and Statutory Restrictions:

Cal. Const., article I, section 28(c), provides that students and staff of public schools have "the inalienable right to attend campuses which are safe, secure, and peaceful."

> In a case involving whether, and under what circumstances, a college or university owes a duty of care to protect students from harm, the Supreme Court held that universities do in fact have such a legal duty, under certain circumstances, to protect or warn their students from foreseeable violence in the classroom or during curricular activities. The trial court properly denied a public university's motion for summary judgment on this ground. While the Supreme Court concluded the university did owe a duty to protect plaintiff, who was stabbed during a chemistry lab by a fellow student who was mentally ill, it remanded the case for the court of appeal to decide whether trial issues of material fact existed on the questions of breach of immunity. (The Regents of the University of California v. Superior Court (2018) 4 Cal.5th 607.)

On remand, the Second District Court of Appeal (Div. 7) found that in determining whether a public university had breached its duty to protect students from foreseeable acts of violence with respect to a student who had been attacked and injured by another student in a chemistry laboratory, the ordinary negligence standard of care applied. Triable issues of fact as to whether the university had information showing that the attacker posed a foreseeable threat to other students and, if so, whether the university acted reasonably in response to the threat precluded summary judgment. Because the allegations of negligent conduct did not include failing to confine the attacker, Gov't. Code § 856 (i.e., immunity regarding confinement decisions) was inapplicable. Discretionary act immunity under Gov't. Code, §§ 815.2(b) and 820.2 did not apply because the alleged acts and omissions were ministerial. A treating psychologist was immune from liability under Civ. Code, § 43.92. Writ relief was granted in part and denied in part. (Regents of University of California v. Superior Court (2018) 29 Cal.App.5th 890.)

Edu. Code § 49050: The Education Code provides that "(n)o school employee shall conduct a search that involves:

- Conducting a body cavity search of a pupil manually or with an instrument.

- Removing or arranging any or all of the clothing of a pupil to permit a visual inspection of the underclothing, breast, buttocks, or genitalia of the pupil."

The Use of Restrains and/or Seclusion as a Disciplinary Measure by School Officials:

See A.T. v. Baldo (9th Cir. 2019) 2019 U.S. App. LEXIS 38325; unpublished, where it was held that at the very least, teachers and staff were entitled to qualified immunity from an alleged Fourth Amendment violation for using "restraints and seclusion" (sometimes referred to as 'containment' or 'isolation') to discipline the plaintiff's child over three years, beginning in the second grade.

"The courts that have addressed this issue have concluded that, while students have a clearly established Fourth Amendment right to be free from arbitrary and excessive corporal punishment, the use of physical restraints and seclusion in school settings—particularly in special education classrooms—is not necessarily unlawful. See C.N. v. Willmar Pub. Schs., Indep. Sch. Dist. No. 347, 591 F.3rd 624, 633 (8th Cir. 2010) (teacher's allegedly excessive use of restraints and seclusion that were part of developmentally delayed student's IEP (Individualized Education Plan), 'even if overzealous at times and not recommended . . . was not a substantial departure from accepted judgment, practice or standards and was not unreasonable in the constitutional sense'); Couture (v. Bd. of Educ. of Albuquerque Pub. Schs) 535 F.3rd at 1251-52, 1256 (10th Cir. 2008) (repeated use of timeout rooms over a two-month period to address student's disruptive and dangerous behavior was reasonable, particularly in light of the fact that timeouts were prescribed in the student's IEP as a mechanism to teach him behavioral control); Alex G. ex rel. Dr. Steven G. v. Bd. of Trs. of Davis Joint Unified Sch. Dist., 387 F. Supp. 2d 1119, 1125 (E.D. Cal. 2005) (use of physical restraints against aggressive and violent autistic student not unlawful despite parents' non-consent, where state law allows such restraints when the student poses an immediate danger to himself or others). ⁋ Even where restraints and seclusion are used in a manner that exceeds what is authorized in the student's IEP, courts have generally found their use to be constitutionally permissible.

See Payne v. Peninsula Sch. Dist., 623 F. App'x 846, 847-48 (9th Cir. 2015) (no violation of clearly established rights where teacher repeatedly placed autistic student in prolonged isolation in a small, dark room as a punishment and had student assist in cleaning up after he defecated in the room, both of which violated student's IEP); Miller v. Monroe Sch. Dist., 159 F. Supp. 3d 1238, 1249 (W.D. Wash. 2016) (finding no clearly established right against holds and seclusions that were performed for discriminatory reasons, by a teacher without the proper training, for lengths that exceeded the maximum time limit in student's IEP). (Ibid.)

Case Law:

With information from another student that a minor (Marissa) was supplying other students with prescription and over-the-counter pills at school, that alcohol could be obtained at the plaintiff Savana Safford's home, and information from Marissa that Savana had supplied her with the pills, and with pills and other contraband being found in Savana's day planner that was in Marissa's possession (which Savana admitted was hers), a search of Savana's backpack and outer clothing by school administrators was justified by a reasonable suspicion that Savana might have more pills in her possession. However, this level of suspicion was not sufficient to justify the greater intrusion of having Savana strip down to her underwear and pull her bra and panties out to see what fell out, thus partially exposing herself to school officials. (Safford Unified School District #1 v. Redding (2009) 557 U.S. 364 [129 S.Ct. 2633; 174 L.Ed.2nd 354]; finding that the school officials were entitled to qualified immunity from civil liability under these circumstances.)

Using a drug-sniffing dog to do sniffs of a student, being more intrusive, are considered to be a search and controlled by the Fourth Amendment, but only requires a finding of a "reasonable suspicion" when the person sniffed is a student. (B.C. v. Plumas (9th Cir. 1999) 192 F.3rd 1260; random and suspicionless drug-sniff search of students held to be unreasonable under the circumstances.)

It is the opinion of the California Attorney General that a policy of unannounced, random, neutral dog sniffing of students' personal belongings, such as backpacks, purses, jackets, and outer garments, after ordering students to leave these items in a classroom and remain in another area, would be unconstitutional absent some suspicion or probable cause to support the search. (83 Opn.Cal.Atty. Gen. 257 (2000))

See Burlison v. Springfield Public Schools (8th Cir. 2013) 708 F.3rd 1034, upholding, under the circumstances, the use of dogs to sniff students backpacks, purses and other personal belongings after instructing the students to leave these items in a classroom. The procedures used by the school district and police officers to conduct the sweeps reasonably addressed the concerns over drug usage in school in a manner that was minimally intrusive to the students and their belongings.

Use of metal detectors at the entrances of a school building, despite the lack of individualized suspicion, is lawful as a "special needs" search. (In re Latasha W. (1998) 60 Cal.App.4th 1524.)

Patting a non-student down for possible weapons on a high school campus, where the defendant/minor was to be moved to the security office, need not be justified by an articulable suspicion that he might be armed. (In re Jose Y. (2006) 141 Cal.App.4th 748.)

A school resource officer, although employed as a municipal police officer, while working full time on a high school campus, adopts the relaxed "reasonable suspicion" standard applicable to school officials. (In re William V. (2003) 111 Cal.App.4th 1464; see also In re Alexander B. (1990) 220 Cal.App.3rd 1572, 1577-1578.)

The suspicionless search of a student was upheld where it was conducted pursuant to an established policy applying to all students and was consistent with the type of action on the part of a school administrator that fell well within the definition of "special needs" of a governmental agency. The search was of a limited nature, being told only to empty out his pockets, as he was not subjected to physical touching of his person nor was he exposed to the intimate process required for a urine sample necessary for drug testing. The purpose of the search was to prevent the introduction of harmful items (weapons and drugs) into the school environment. Given the general application of the policy to all students engaged in a form of rule violation that could easily lend itself to the introduction of drugs or weapons into the school environment (i.e., leaving during the school day without permission and returning later), further individualized suspicion was not required. (In re Sean A. (2010) 191 Cal.App.4th 182, 186-190.)

But see the dissent (Id. at pp. 191-198) criticizing the decision as a non-particularized, suspicionless search of a student in violation of the principles of New Jersey v. T.L.O. (1985) 469 U.S. 325 [105 S.Ct. 733; 83 L.Ed.2nd 720], where the Supreme Court held that a reasonable suspicion is required. (See above)

Searching student lockers on less than probable cause, based upon a report that a student had been involved in a shooting on a city transit bus the day before and that he might have a firearm on campus, was justified under a "special needs" theory and upheld. (In re J.D. (2014) 225 Cal. App. 4th 709, 714-720.)

Note: Ironically, J.D.'s sawed-off shotgun was not the firearm being sought, but was found accidentally while lawfully looking for a pistol that was reported to be in the possession of another minor on campus.

Note: The Court in this case, in upholding the search of the students' lockers, provides a summary of some very frightening statistics involving violence in our schools, from high-profile school shootings to individualized acts of violence. (See Id., at p. 714.)

Also, as to whether the fact that local city police became involved in the search for the firearm in this case might have somehow converted it into something other than a school search, the Court noted that; "the secondary role of the police officers does not cancel the fundamental feature of this case—administrators seeking to secure the school premises from potential for violence." (Id., at p. 720.)

The warrantless search of the defendant/minor's cellphone was reasonable at its inception for purposes of the Fourth Amendment because a loaded firearm and its magazine cartridge had been seized from a trashcan earlier, the defendant had lingered outside the principal's office where the student (a known friend of defendant's), suspected of possessing the firearm, was being detained, and where the defendant was questioned after trying to get away. While being questioned, the defendant physically resisted as he was fingering his cellphone in his pocket. A warrant was not necessary before school officials searched the data on the phone because school officials needed only a reasonable suspicion to conduct a warrantless search, and were confronted by a situation in which a loaded firearm had been discovered on school property and they were reasonably concerned that the defendant might be using his phone to communicate with other students who might possess another firearm or weapon that the officials did not know about. (In re* Rafael C. (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 1288.)

No Fourth Amendment violation occurred when defendant, a minor, was detained at school by an officer designated as a school resource officer, and a back-up officer. Prior to the detention at issue, the resource officer received a report from a vice principal that a male student had a gun. Having the principal remove defendant from class, and then the officer grabbing defendant's backpack and putting him in handcuffs as a safety measure, was reasonable under the circumstances. A warrantless search of the defendant's person was justified at its inception by an anonymous tip from another student who sent a text to the vice principal, saying that there was "a guy with a loaded gun" on campus, and in response to questions, that a video showed a student sitting in a classroom, displaying a gun and a magazine clip, and that she knew who the suspect was, even though she did not know his name. The vice principal's physical description of him as one of two students, with the tipster identifying defendant as the one with the gun, was sufficient to justify defendant's detention and search. (In re K.J. (2018) 18 Cal.App.5th 1123, 1133-1135.)

See also "Minors," under "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above.

Athletics and Extracurricular Activities: Given the extent of the drug problem in public schools, and the importance of the governmental interest in preventing the problem from worsening (i.e., a "Special Needs" search), the U.S. Supreme Court has approved (warrantless) mandatory random drug tests for certain categories of students as the price for participating in:

School Athletics: (Vernonia School District 47J v. Acton (1995) 515 U.S. 646 [115 S.Ct. 2386; 132 L.Ed.2nd 564].)

The California Supreme Court approved a similar program for a national college athletic organization (NCAA). (Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal.4th 1.)

Extracurricular Activities: (Board of Education of Independent School District No. 92 of Pottawatomie County v. Earls (2002) 536 U.S. 822 [122 S.Ct. 2559; 153 L.Ed.2nd 735].)

Airport Searches:

Reasonableness:

Warrantless airport screenings must be reasonable to be lawful. (United States v. Marquez (9th Cir. 2005) 410 F.3rd 612.)

"Reasonableness" is determined by balancing the right to be free of intrusion with society's interest in safe air travel. (United States v. Pulido-Baquerizo (9th Cir. 1986) 800 F.2nd 899, 901.)

Airport searches are reasonable when:

- They are no more extensive or intensive than necessary, in light of current technology, to detect weapons or explosives;
- They are confined in good faith to that purpose; and
- Passengers are given the opportunity to avoid the search by electing not to fly.

(United States v. Davis (9th Cir. 1973) 482 F.2nd 893, 913; Torbet v. United Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir. 2002) 298 F.3rd 1087, 1089-1090; United States v. Marquez, supra., at p. 616.)

In an older case, subject to question due to changing times and dangers (although never overruled), a Puerto Rico statute authorizing "police to search the luggage of any person arriving in Puerto Rico from the United States" was held to be unconstitutional because it failed to require either probable cause or a warrant. (Torres v. Puerto Rico (1979) 442 U.S. 465, 466-471 [99 S.Ct. 2425; 61 L.Ed.2nd 1].)

Second, Random Screening:

A second, more intense, yet random screening of passengers as a part of airline boarding security procedures, is constitutional. (United States v. Marquez (9th Cir. 2005) 410 F.3rd 612.)

Once having gone through the initial screening, a person loses his right to revoke his "implied consent" to being searched and must submit his person (United States v. Aukai (9th Cir. 2007) 497 F.3rd 955.) and his carry-on luggage (Torbet v. United Airlines, Inc. (9th Cir. 2002) 298 F.3rd 1087.) to a secondary screening, so long as the selection of those subject to such secondary screenings is done objectively. E.g.:

Carry-on luggage was lawfully searched even though it had already gone through an x-ray examination without incident. (Torbet v. United Airlines, Inc., supra.)

Because defendant had attempted to board a flight without valid identification. Per TSA (Transportation Security Administration) rules, anyone attempting to board a commercial airplane without a government issued, picture identification, will be subject to a secondary screening. (United States v. Aukai, supra; defendant selected for "wanding" of his person even though he had already walked through the magnetometer without setting off an alarm.)

Per Torbet and Aukai, supra, the first, initial screening, whether by x-ray of one's carry-on luggage, or of the defendant's person having walked through a magnetometer, is deemed "inconclusive" even though "it doesn't affirmatively reveal anything suspicious," or when it fails to "rule out every possibility of dangerous contents," thus justifying the need for a secondary screening. So long as such secondary screenings are administered "objectively," they are lawful.

Note: United States v. Aukai, supra, found that "implied consent" is not a proper theory for upholding airport searches. Rather, a warrantless, suspicionless search of a passenger, after the passenger has passed through the magnetometer (or has put his carry-on luggage on the conveyor belt for x-raying) is lawful as an "administrative search."

Baggage Searches:

A search of luggage bound for an airline flight may be searched (i.e., "screened") by Transportation Security Services (TSA) officers without a warrant or probable cause as an administrative search, looking for explosives or other safety hazards. Such a search may not be used as a ruse to conduct an exploratory search for criminal evidence. However, evidence of criminal activity observed in plain sight during such an administrative search may be used as probable cause for a criminal investigation. (United States v. McCarty (9th Cir. 2011) 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18874; child pornography observed during a lawful TSA administrative search may lawfully be used to establish probable cause to arrest; case vacated and remanded, where defendant's motion to suppress was denied at United States v. McCarty (U.S. Dist. Hawaii, 2011) 835 F. Supp.2nd 938.)

Inventory Searches*:

"The inventory search doctrine is an exception to the warrant requirement that allows authorities to search items within their lawful custody. South Dakota v. Opperman, 428 U.S. 364, 369, 96 S. Ct. 3092, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1000 (1976); Illinois v. Lafayette, 462 U.S. 640, 648, 103 S. Ct. 2605, 77 L. Ed. 2d 65 (1983); Florida v. Wells, 495 U.S. 1, 4-5, 110 S. Ct. 1632, 109 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1990). One of the most important features of the doctrine is the existence of standardized instructions. Colorado v. Bertine, 479 U.S. 367, 375-76, 107 S. Ct. 738, 93 L. Ed. 2d 739 (1987). 'Standardized' need not mean 'written.' Rather, our case law indicates that 'standardized' instructions limit the discretion of officers and apply consistently across cases. See Wells, 495 U.S. at 4 (referring to 'standardized criteria' or 'established routine'); see also Standardized, Merriam-Webster Dictionary, available at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/standardized ('brought into conformity with a standard: done or produced in a standard, consistent way')." (Snitko v. United States (9th Cir. 2024) 90 F.4th 1250, 1261.)

Note: See "Inventory Searches of Impounded Vehicles," under "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below, and "Booking Inventory Searches," under "Jail, Prison, and Prisoner Searches," under "Searches of Persons" (Chapter 11), below.

The standardized procedures need not be written. (Ibid., citing United States v. Mancera-Londono (9th Cir. 1990) 912 F.2nd 373, 375-376.)

"The need for a 'standardized' policy is necessarily a feature of the inventory search doctrine because, if an inventory is conducted pursuant to a standardized policy, a court knows that such a search would have been conducted regardless of the degree of suspicion an officer has of a person's (or an automobile's) criminality." (Ibid., citing United States v. Garay (9th Cir. 2019) 938 F.3rd 1108, 1111.)

Also, having "dual motives" (e.g., to inventory and to seek out evidence of criminal wrong-doing), at least in the Ninth Circuit, is permissible in the inventory search context. That is, in the case of inventory searches, 'the mere presence of a criminal investigatory motive or a dual motive—one valid, and one impermissible—does not render an [inventory] search invalid.'" (Id., at 1261-1262; citing United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2018) 889 F.3rd 1120, 1126.)

However: "[A]n inventory search must not be a ruse for a general rummaging in order to discover incriminating evidence." (Id., at p. 1267; quoting Florida v. Wells (1990) 495 U.S. 1, at p. 4 [110 S.Ct. 1632; 109 L.Ed.2nd 1].)

Ultimately, the Court held that the searches conducted in the Snitko case were not standard inventory searches, despite the government's attempt to portray it as such. In so holding, the Court commented as follows: "We note that it is particularly troubling that the government has failed to provide a limiting principle to how far a hypothetical 'inventory search' conducted pursuant to customized instructions can go. At oral argument, for example, the government failed to explain why applying the inventory exception to this case would not open the door to the kinds of 'writs of assistance' the British authorities used prior to the Founding to conduct limitless searches of an individual's personal belongings. It was those very abuses of power, after all, that led to adoption of the Fourth Amendment in the first place." (See pgs. 1262-1263.)

The Minimal Intrusion Exception*:

General Rule: The United States Supreme Court has recognized, at least by inference, that in those instances where there is a "minimal intrusion" into a defendant's privacy rights, suppression of the resulting evidence may not be required. "When faced with special law enforcement needs, diminished expectations of privacy, minimal intrusions, or the like, [it] has found that certain general, or individual, circumstances may render a warrantless search or seizure reasonable." (Italics added; Illinois v. McArthur (2001) 531 U.S. 326, 330 [121 S.Ct. 946; 148 L.Ed.2nd 838].)

Federal Cases:

"(A)lthough a warrant may be an essential ingredient of reasonableness much of the time, for less intrusive searches it is not" (United States v. Concepcion (7th Cir. 1991) 942 F.2nd 1170, 1172; the issue being whether turning a key in a door lock was a search, but such a minimal intrusion that a search warrant was not necessary.)

Without obtaining a warrant, the police searched the defendant's cellphone for its phone number. The police later used the number to the phone's call history from the telephone company. Even though there was no urgent need to search the cellphone for its phone number, the Seventh Circuit pointed out "that bit of information might be so trivial that its seizure would not infringe the Fourth Amendment." (United States v. Flores-Lopez (7th Cir. 2012) 670 F.3rd 803, 806-807.)

California Law:

California's First District Court of Appeal (Div. 5) has found this theory to be a whole separate exception to the search warrant requirement, calling it the "Minimal Intrusion Exception." (People v. Robinson (2012) 208 Cal.App.4th 232, 246-255; "The minimal intrusion exception to the warrant requirement rests on the conclusion that in a very narrow class of 'searches' the privacy interests implicated are 'so small that the officers do not need probable cause; for the search to be reasonable." (Id., at p. 247.)

Noting that searches of the person, at least absent an officer-safety issue, and searches of a residence, may be outside the scope of the minimal intrusion theory. (Id., at p. 249.)

"Although the United States Supreme Court has not clearly articulated the parameters of the exception, federal authorities provide sufficient support for concluding that in appropriate circumstances, the minimal intrusion exception to the warrant requirement may be applied to uphold warrantless searches based on less than probable cause. Moreover, although the high court's decisions in the area have primarily been justified by officer safety concerns (Citations), nothing in the high court's jurisprudence appears to preclude the possibility that a justification less than officer safety could be sufficient to justify an intrusion as minimal as that involved in the present case." (Id., at pp. 249-250.)

Also, the fact that the defendant's front door was within the curtilage of his home, which also enjoys Fourth Amendment protection, did not alter the result. With the front door being an area open to the general public, there was no violation in approaching the door and inserting the key. (Id., at p. 253, fn. 23.)

See "Minimal Intrusion," under "Exceptions," to the "Fruit of the Poisonous Tree," under "Procedural Rules" (Chapter 2), above, and "The Minimal Intrusion Exception," under "Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 8), above.

Private Search Doctrine*:

See "Private Search Doctrine," under "Searches of Containers" (Chapter 16), below.

Prescription Monitoring Programs and Mandatory Drug Dispensing Records:

Federal Program: "(T)the federal government has regulated opioids under the CSA. Pub. L. No. 91-513, Tit. II, 84 Stat. 1236, 1250 (1970) (codified at 21

U.S.C. § 812) (classifying as Schedule II drugs any opiate produced 'by extraction from substances of vegetable origin, or independently by means of chemical synthesis'). As the First Circuit recognized, under the CSA, registered dispensers of controlled substances must maintain records of each substance dispensed and make those records available for inspection and copying by the Attorney General for at least two years. (United States Department of Justice v. Ricco Jonas (1st Cir. 2022) 24 F.4th (718) at 735; see also 21 U.S.C. § 827(a)(3), (b). And since the CSA's inception, the Attorney General has had the authority to obtain these records without a warrant when investigating crimes related to controlled substances. Pub. L. No. 91-513, Tit. II, 84 Stat. 1236, 1272 (1970) (codified at 21 U.S.C. § 876(a)) ('[T]he Attorney General may . . . require the production of any records . . . which the Attorney General finds relevant or material to [an] investigation [related to controlled substances].'); see also Ricco Jonas, 24 F.4th at 735 ('Both federal and New Hampshire laws regulate controlled substances by requiring pharmacies . . . to maintain prescription drug records and keep them open for inspection by law enforcement officers without the need of a warrant.')." (United States v. Motley (9th Cir. 2023) 89 F.4th 777, 784-785; discussing Nevada's similar laws [Nev. Rev. Stat. § 453.162 (establishing the "Prescription Monitoring Program" [i.e., "PMP" database]; Nev. Admin. Code § 453.520(2)(a); classifying 'opium and opiate' as a Schedule II drug), and holding that as such, there is no "expectation of privacy" in such records.)

> Note: "CSA" refers to the federal "Controlled Substances Act." (Pub. L. No. 91-513, Tit. II, 84 Stat. 1236, 1250 (1970) (codified at 21 U.S.C. § 812)
>
> See also fn. 2 in United States v. Motley, at p. 779, noting that: "As of February 2018, 50 states, the District of Columbia, and two territories (Guam and Puerto Rico) had operational [prescription drug monitoring programs (PDMPs)] within their borders."
>
> And since the CSA's inception, the Attorney General has had the authority to obtain these records without a warrant when investigating crimes related to controlled substances. Pub. L. No. 91-513, Tit. II, 84 Stat. 1236, 1272 (1970) (codified at 21 U.S.C. § 876(a)) ("[T]he Attorney General may . . . require the production of any records . . . which the Attorney General finds relevant or material to [an] investigation [related to controlled substances]."); see also Ricco Jonas, 24 F.4th at 735 ("Both federal and New Hampshire laws regulate controlled substances by requiring pharmacies . . . to maintain prescription drug records and keep them open for inspection by law enforcement officers without the need of a warrant.").
>
> A concurring opinion argued that this is an issue the Court did not need to reach, but rather than "good faith" and "harmlessness" would have saved the search in any case. But in so arguing, the concurring opinion offers an argument to the effect that a warrantless search of the defendant's medical prescription records should be illegal. (United States v. Motley, supra, at p. 789-792.)

CURES: California's prescription drug monitoring program" is known as "CURES," for "Controlled Substance Utilization and Review System." (H&S Code §§ 11165 to 11166) It is a database of Schedule II, Schedule III, Schedule IV and Schedule V controlled substance prescriptions dispensed in California serving the public health, regulatory oversight agencies, and law enforcement. CURES, as noted by the Legislature, is committed to the reduction of prescription drug abuse and diversion without affecting legitimate medical practice or patient care.

H&S Code § 11165.1 requires all California licensed health care practitioners authorized to prescribe Schedule II, Schedule III, Schedule IV and Schedule V controlled substances to register for access to CURES upon issuance of a Drug Enforcement Administration Controlled Substance Registration Certificate. California licensed pharmacists must register for access to CURES upon issuance of a Board of Pharmacy Pharmacist License.

H&S Code § 11165(d) requires that for each prescription for a Schedule II, Schedule III, Schedule IV, or Schedule V controlled substance, as defined in the controlled substances schedules in federal law and regulations, the dispensing pharmacy, clinic, or other dispenser shall report specified dispensing information to the Department of Justice or contracted prescription data processing vendor as soon as reasonably possible, but not more than one working day after the date a controlled substance is released to the patient or patient's representative.

H&S Code § 11165(i) states that veterinarians shall report dispensation information as soon as reasonably possible, but not more than seven days after the date a controlled substance is dispensed.

H&S Code § 11190(c) requires that for each Schedule II, Schedule III, and Schedule IV controlled substance, as defined in H&S Code § 11007, dispensed by a prescriber pursuant to B&P § 4170, the dispensing prescriber shall report to the Department of Justice the information required by subdivision (c) on a weekly basis.

H&S Code §11165.6 provides that "(a) prescriber shall be allowed to access the CURES database for a list of patients for whom that prescriber is listed as a prescriber in the CURES database."

Note: There is no case law discussing the "expectation of privacy" issue as it might relate to CURES. But it would seem that the rule of United States v. Motley would apply here as well.

Chapter 10*:

Searches With a Search Warrant:

Search Warrant Defined: A "search warrant" is "an order in writing, in the name of the people, signed by a magistrate, directed to a peace officer, commanding him or her to search for a person or persons, a thing or things, or personal property, and bring it before the magistrate." (Pen. Code § 1523)

Basic Requirements: The "precise and clear" words of the Fourth Amendment "require only three things" for a search warrant to be valid:

First, warrants must be issued by neutral, disinterested magistrates.

See "Requirement of a 'Neutral and Detached' Magistrate," below.

Second, those seeking the warrant must demonstrate to the magistrate that there is probable cause to believe that the evidence sought will aid in a particular apprehension or conviction for a particular offense.

See "Probable Cause," under "The Affidavit to the Search Warrant," below.

Finally, warrants must describe the things to be seized, as well as the place to be searched," with "particularity."

See "The 'Reasonable Particularity' Requirement," below.

(Bill v. Brewer (9th Cir. 2015) 799 F.3rd 1295, 1300; citing Dalia v. United States (1979) 441 U.S. 238, 255 [99 S.Ct. 1682; 60 L.Ed.2nd 177]. See also United States v. Artis (9th Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 1123, 1129.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has since held that there is a fourth requirement; i.e., that the magistrate must be authorized by law to issue warrants in the jurisdiction where the warrant will be executed. (United States v. Henderson (9th Cir. 2018) 906 F.3rd 1109, 1117; United States v. Artis, supra, at p. 1129, fn. 1.)

General Principles*:

The Fourth Amendment protects "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures" and provides, "no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." (Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, 35.)

"When magistrates consider a search warrant application, they must make a practical and commonsense decision about whether the affidavit shows a fair probability police will find contraband or evidence of a crime at a particular place. The reviewing court's duty is simply to ensure the magistrate had a substantial basis for that conclusion. This standard is flexible and easy to apply. (Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 238–239 [76 L. Ed. 2d 527, 103 S. Ct. 2317].) The determination of reasonable suspicion must be based on commonsense judgments and inferences about human behavior. (Illinois v. Wardlow (2000) 528 U.S. 119, 125 [145 L. Ed. 2d 570, 120 S. Ct. 673].) [⁋] These standards are federal. California state law must adhere to them. (People v. Souza (1994) 9 Cal.4th 224, 232–233 . . . .)" (People v. Delgado (2022) 78 Cal.App.5th 425, 429.)

In United States v. King (9th Cir. 2021) 985 F.3rd 702, at pg. 707, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal drew two principles from the Fourth Amendment's wording, at least as relevant to this case:

> "The first is fundamental. A warrant must be supported by probable cause—meaning a 'fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place based on the totality of circumstances.' United States v. Diaz, 491 F.3rd 1074, 1078 (9th Cir. 2007) (simplified). Put simply, it amounts to 'circumstances which warrant suspicion.' Locke v. United States, 11 U.S. 339, 348, 3 L.Ed. 364 (1813). And importantly, it requires 'less . . . evidence [than that] which would justify condemnation, and may rest upon evidence which is not legally competent in a criminal trial.' United States v. Bridges, 344 F.3d 1010, 1014-15 (9th Cir. 2003) (simplified)."
>
> "The second principle is more technical. A warrant must not be overbroad. The scope of a warrant must be limited by its probable cause, United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc., 568 F.3rd 684, 702 (9th Cir. 2009), and must 'never include more than is covered' by that probable cause, United States v. Whitney, 633 F.2nd 902, 907 (9th Cir. 1980)."

Preference for Search Warrants: No doubt because warrants are, at the very least, recommended (if not mandated) by the Fourth Amendment, the courts have long shown a preference for using a search warrant whenever possible:

> "Although '[t]he text of the Fourth Amendment does not specify when a search warrant must be obtained,' courts 'ha[ve] inferred that a warrant must [usually] be secured,' 'subject to a number of exceptions.'" (People v. Maxwell (2020 58 Cal.App.5th 546, 553, quoting Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438, 456 [195 L.Ed.2nd 560; 136 S.Ct. 2160].)
>
> Entry into a residence under the authority of a search warrant is one of the few recognized exceptions to the rule under the Fourth Amendment forbidding governmental intrusions in to one's home or the curtilage of his home. (See Collins v. Virginia (2018) 584 U.S. 586, 602-603 [138 S.Ct. 1663; 201 L.Ed.2nd 9].)
>
> However: "The Fourth Amendment does not require officers to get warrants. Rather, it requires that officers not conduct 'unreasonable searches and seizures.' The role of the Warrant Clause of the Fourth Amendment is simply to specify one set of conditions under which an entry into a residence can be reasonable—that is, where the officers have a warrant that satisfies the conditions articulated in the Warrant Clause. "That is not, however, the only way that an entry can be reasonable. Officers can also enter with consent, or under certain emergency or exigent circumstances. See Michigan v. Clifford, 464 U.S. 287, 293 [104 S.Ct. 641; 78 L.Ed.2nd 477 (1984) ('[A]ny official entry must be made pursuant to a warrant in the absence of consent or exigent circumstances.'). An entry into a residence that is not under a warrant, that lacks consent, and that is not justified by exigent circumstances or an emergency is unreasonable. Id. Under such circumstances, the Fourth Amendment imposes a duty on officers not to enter. And it is entry itself that constitutes the breach of that duty." (Mendez v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F.3rd 1067, 1075.)

"Our cases have determined that '[w]here a search is undertaken by law enforcement officials to discover evidence of criminal wrongdoing, reasonableness generally requires the obtaining of a judicial warrant.' (Citations) 'In the absence of a warrant, a search is reasonable only if it falls within a specific exception to the warrant requirement.' (Citation) The burden is on the People to establish an exception applies. (Citations.)" (People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1213; see also People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1041.)

> "The prosecution bears the burden of establishing an exception applies." (People v. Hall (2020) 57 Cal.App.5th 946, 951; citing People v. Macabeo, supra.)

"'[T]he text of the Fourth Amendment does not specify when a search warrant must be obtained.' Kentucky v. King, 563 U. S. 452, 459, 131 S. Ct. 1849, 179 L.Ed. 2nd 865 (2011); see also California v. Acevedo, 500 U. S. 565, 581, 111 S.Ct. 1982, 114 L.Ed.2nd 619 (1991) (Scalia, J., concurring in judgment) ('What [the text] explicitly states regarding warrants is by way of limitation upon their issuance rather than requirement of their use'). But 'this Court has inferred that a warrant must [usually] be secured.' King, 563 U. S., at 459, 131 S. Ct. 1849, 179 L.Ed. 2nd 865." (Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438, 456 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560]; a DUI, blood test case.)

"The Fourth Amendment demonstrates a 'strong preference for searches conducted pursuant to a warrant . . . .'" (People v. Harris (2015) 234 Cal.App.4th 671, 682; quoting Maryland v. Dyson (1999) 527 U.S. 465, 466 [119 S.Ct. 2013; 144 L.Ed.2nd 442].)

"In Jones v. United States [(1960)] 362 U.S. 257, 270 [80 S.Ct. 725; 4 L.Ed.2nd 697, 708] this Court, strongly supporting the preference to be accorded searches under a warrant, indicated that in a doubtful or marginal case a search under a warrant may be sustainable where without one it would fall." (United States v. Ventresca (1965) 380 U.S. 102, 106 [85 S.Ct. 741; 13 L.Ed.2nd 684, 687].)

Search Warrants Not Always Required*:

> "'Law enforcement officers are under no constitutional duty to call a halt to criminal investigation the moment they have the minimum evidence to establish probable cause' Hoffa* v. *United States, 385 U.S. 293, 310, 87 S.Ct. 408, 17 L.Ed.2nd 374 (1966). Faulting the police for failing to apply for a search warrant at the earliest possible time after obtaining probable cause imposes a duty that is nowhere to be found in the Constitution." (Kentucky v. King (2011) 563 U.S. 452, 467 [131 S.Ct. 1849; 179 L.Ed.2nd 865].)
>
> > First, the police may wish to speak with the occupants of a dwelling before deciding whether it is worthwhile to seek authorization for a search. They may think that a short and simple conversation may obviate the need to apply for and execute a warrant. See Schneckloth* v. *Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 228, 93 S.Ct. 2041, 36 L.Ed.2nd 854 (1973). Second, the police may want to ask an occupant of the premises for consent to search because doing so is simpler, faster, and less burdensome than applying for a warrant. A consensual search also "may result in considerably less inconvenience" and embarrassment to the occupants than a search conducted pursuant to a warrant. Ibid. Third, law enforcement officers may wish to obtain more evidence before submitting what might otherwise be considered a marginal warrant application. Fourth, prosecutors may wish to wait until they acquire evidence that can justify a search that is broader in scope than the search that a judicial officer is likely to authorize based on the evidence then available. And finally, in many cases, law enforcement may not want to execute a search that will disclose the existence of an investigation because doing so may interfere with the acquisition of additional evidence against those already under suspicion or evidence about additional but as yet unknown participants in a criminal scheme." (Id., at pp. 466-467.)
>
> Failing to obtain an "anticipatory search warrant" prior to conducting a controlled delivery of a package containing a tracking device to defendant's residence, causing the officers to have to make a warrantless entry into the residence when the tracking device alarm went off, fearing that the evidence would be destroyed, did not result in a constitutional violation. (United States v. Iwai (9th Cir. 2019) 930 F.3rd 1141, 1144-1145.)

Why Search Warrants are Preferred: There are a number of reasons why use of a search warrant to conduct any search is preferable even in those instances when one might not be legally required. For instance:

> 1. Presumption of Lawfulness (or Reasonableness): Use of a search warrant raises a presumption in a later motion to suppress evidence (per P.C. § 1538.5) that the search was lawful. The defense has the burden of proof in attempting to rebut this presumption. (Theodor v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal.3rd 77, 101;

People v. Kurland (1980) 28 Cal.3rd 376; United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2019) 913 F.3rd 793, 802.)

Burden of Proof: Defendant, as the moving party in attacking a warrant, bears the burden of going forward with the evidence. (People v. Thompson (1990) 221 Cal.App.3rd 923, 936-37.) To do so the defendant must not only demonstrate standing (Ibid.), he must also prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the search was conducted without a warrant. (People v. Williams (1999) 20 Cal.4th 119; Badillo v. Superior Court (1956) 46 C.2nd 269.) If, however, the search was supported by a warrant, the burden stays with the defendant. (Theodor v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal.3rd 77, 101; People v. Gallo (1981) 127 Cal.App.3rd 828, 840.) A presumption of validity attaches to a search warrant because it has already been reviewed by a magistrate. (People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 Cal.4th 948, 969.) A defendant claiming that the warrant or supporting affidavit is inaccurate or incomplete bears the burden of alleging and then proving the errors or omissions. (People v. Amador (2000) 24 Cal.4th 387, 393.)

With the burden of attacking a search warrant upon the defendant, and the necessity of making a "substantial showing," even before being allowed to hold an evidentiary hearing (See "A Franks Hearing," under "Motion to Traverse," below), it is extremely difficult for a defendant to successfully challenge a search conducted pursuant to a search warrant. (See People v. Wilson (1986) 182 Cal.App.3rd 742; United States v. Norris (9th Cir. 2019) 938 F.3rd 1114, 1122.)

"(W)here (the) circumstances are detailed, where reason for crediting the source of the information is given, and when a magistrate has found probable cause, the courts should not invalidate the warrant by interpreting the affidavit in a hypertechnical, rather than a common sense, manner. . . . (R)esolution of doubtful or marginal cases in this area should be largely determined by the preference to be accorded to warrants." (United States v. Ventresca (1965) 380 U.S 102, 109 [85 S.Ct. 741; 13 L.Ed.2nd 684, 689]; see also United States v. King (9th Cir. 2021) 985 F.3rd 702, 707-708.)

This judicially mandated preference for warrants has specifically been adopted by the California Supreme Court. (People v. Superior Court* [Johnson] (1972) 6 Cal.3rd 704, 711; People v. Mesa (1975) 14 Cal.3rd 466, 469.)

Minor, technical errors will not likely result in any sanction. (See People v. Stipo (2011) 195 Cal.App.4th 664, 670; listing the wrong time for an occurrence, missing the actual time by 20 minutes.)

The magistrate's failure to initial that part of a search warrant listing the defendant's residence, where she did initial those parts of the warrant describing defendant's person and his vehicle, held to be a "minor technical error rather than evidence of a constitutional deficiency in the contents of the search warrant." The search of the residence, based upon the search warrant, was upheld where all the circumstances (including the magistrate's testimony at a suppression hearing) indicated that there was probable cause to search the residence and that the magistrate had intended to approve the search of the residence. (United States v. Hurd (9th Cir. 2007) 499 F.3rd 963.)

When illegally obtained information is used as a part of a search warrant's probable cause, that information must be excised from the affidavit. If, after this is done, probable cause justifying the search is still found, the search will be upheld. (People v. Williams (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 111, 124-125; see "Motion to Traverse," below.)

"Doubts as to whether an affidavit supporting a search warrant establishes probable cause are resolved in favor of the validity of the warrant. (People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 816-817, citing People v. Frank (1985) 38 Cal.3d 711, 722.)

> Further noting that "(w)hen determining whether probable cause existed for the issuance of a search warrant, we assess the totality of the circumstances under which the warrant issued." Citing Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213. 230-235 [103 S.Ct. 2317; 76 L.Ed.2nd 527].

Motion to Quash: Motion attacking the sufficiency of the probable cause in the warrant affidavit as it is written. (Pen. Code § 1538.5(a)(1)(B))

Normally, only the warrant and affidavit itself may be considered by the trial court in ruling on a motion to quash. An exception might be when a law enforcement officer's testimony is necessary to interpret some of the language in the affidavit. (See People v. Christian (1972) 27 Cal.App.3rd 554.)

In reviewing the sufficiency of the affidavit on a motion to quash, the reviewing court ordinarily considers only the "four corners" of the affidavit. (See Whiteley v. Warden (1971)

401 U.S. 560, 565, fn. 8 [91 S.Ct. 1031; 28 L.Ed.2nd 306].) In determining the sufficiency of an affidavit in support of a warrant, the test of probable cause is "whether the facts contained in the affidavit are such as would lead a [person] of ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously to entertain, a strong suspicion of the guilt of the accused." (People v. Kraft (2000) 23 Cal.4th 978, 1041.)

See People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 763-766; motion to quash denied where affidavit was held to be supported by probable cause despite 23-year lapse between crime and the issuance of a search warrant for defendant's home, vehicle and computers.

Motion to Traverse: Motion attacking the truth of the information contained in the warrant affidavit. The defendant is entitled to an evidentiary hearing (i.e., referred to as a "Franks Hearing*") under limited circumstances. (Franks v. Delaware (1978) 438 U.S. 154 [98 S.Ct. 2674; 57 L.Ed.2nd 667].)

Purpose: "A motion to traverse a warrant challenges the completeness and truthfulness of the warrant affidavit's probable cause showing." (Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, 48.)

"Generally, in order to traverse a warrant, the defendant must show that '(1) the affidavit included a false statement made "knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth," and (2) "the allegedly false statement is necessary to the finding of probable cause."'" (Id., quoting People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 Cal.4th 948, 974; which in turn quotes Franks v. Delaware, supra, at pp. 155–156.)

In Price, the Court found the lack of any mention in the warrant affidavit that there was nothing about the victim's home (where he was murdered) that indicated that marijuana was being sold out of the home, to be immaterial to the finding of probable cause. (Id., a p. 49.)

A "Franks Hearing*:" Defendant is entitled to an evidentiary "Franks Hearing*" only after making a "substantial showing" that:

- The affidavit contains statements (or makes material omissions) that are deliberately false or were made with a reckless disregard for the truth (People v. Scott (2011) 52

Cal.4th 452, 484; Ewing v. City of Stockton (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 1218, 1223-1228; Bravo v. City of Santa Maria (9th Cir. 2011) 665 F.3rd 1076, 1087-1088; People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 767-768; (United States v. Fisher (9th Cir. 2022) 56 F.4th 673, 679, fn. 7.), (or omitted information which the magistrate would have wanted to know); and

- The affidavit's remaining contents are reevaluated after the false statements are excised (or omitted material information is considered) to see if, as corrected, there is still sufficient evidence to justify a finding of probable cause. (Franks v. Delaware (1978) 438 U.S. 154, 155-156 [98 S.Ct. 2674; 57 L.Ed.2nd 667, 672]; precluding the cross-examination of the affiant until the necessary showing is made. See also People v. Kurland (1980) 28 Cal.3rd 376, 385-388; People v. Wilson (1986) 182 Cal.App.3rd 742, 747; Theodor v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal.3rd 77, 103; People v. Cook (1978) 22 Cal.3rd 67, 78; and People v. Bradford (1997) 15 Cal.4th 1229, 1297; People v. Lewis et al. (2006) 39 Cal.4th 970, 989; United States v. Craighead (9th Cir. 2008) 539 F.3rd 1073, 1080-1082; Ewing v. City of Stockton (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 1218, 1223-1228); United States v. Payton (9th Cir. 2009) 573 F.3rd 859, 861; People v. Scott (2011) 52 Cal.4th 452, 475-476; United States v. Ruiz (9th Cir. 2014) 758 F.3rd 1144, 1148; People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 768; United States v. Ubaldo (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 690, 703; People v. Williams (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 111, 124-125; United States v. Norris (9th Cir. 2019) 938 F.3rd 1114, 1122; United States v. Nault (9th Cir. 2022) 41 F.4th 1073, 1081.)

  If the affidavit is corrected as suggested by the defendant and would still warrant a finding of probable cause, then no Franks hearing is required. (People v. Sandoval (2015) 62 Cal.4th 394, 409.)

  If, however, after omitting misstatements and "reforming the affidavit by altering statements" to conform to what really happened, the Court finds insufficient probable cause to support the issuance of the warrant, then the resulting evidence will be suppressed. (United States v. Roman (1st Cir. 2019) 942 F.3rd 43.)

> A negligent or innocent mistake does not warrant suppression. (United States v. Perkins (9th Cir. 2017) 850 F.3rd 1109, 1116.)

A search warrant affidavit was held to be sufficient to establish probable cause even if the affiant intentionally made a false statement that a Kleenex box was linked to defendant through scientific evidence (where it was not). The affidavit was also not rendered insufficient by the omission of the fact that the victim, before identifying defendant, had identified another individual in a photographic lineup. (People v. Miles (2020) 9 Cal.5th 513, 570-578.)

- Where defendant alleged that he had an expert ready to testify about a different criminal case addressing a sniff by the same canine, Nato, the was used in this case, defendant's motion for a Franks hearing was denied. The expert determined that the search in the prior case was unreliable because Nato was distracted and only alerted the fourth time he was directed to a particular area. The Court here upheld the trial court's ruling that this was insufficient to warrant a Franks hearing. In so ruling, it was noted that the search warrant affidavit in this case only said that Nato had "proven reliable in prior incidents." At most, this expert report established only that Nato's alert was unreliable on a single unrelated occasion. The fact that Nato's sniff had been unreliable on one prior occasion does not mean Nato had not been reliable in most or a large number of prior incidents, which is all the affidavit implies. Nor does it establish that the affidavit described Nato's sniff of a suspect's truck in a false or misleading way. Without more, defendant therefore was not entitled to a Franks hearing. (United States v. Nault (9th Cir. 2022) 41 F.4th 1073, 1081-1082.)

Or:

- The affidavit contains information that is the direct product of a Fourth Amendment violation. (See People v. Weiss (1999) 20 Cal.4th 1073.)

> Where a defendant's motion to traverse is unaccompanied by any of the evidentiary material required of the moving party the court may properly deny the request for the hearing. Conclusory contradictions of the affiant's statements are insufficient to justify a Franks hearing. Even if the defense is able to establish that the statements were inaccurate, the court properly denies the request if the defense fails to demonstrate that the statements were material to the determination of probable cause. (People v. Panah (2005) 35 Cal.4th 395, 456.)

In a "Motion to Traverse" a search warrant affidavit, only intentional or reckless inaccuracies are grounds for sanctions, and in those cases the sanction is limited to striking the inaccurate information, retesting the warrant affidavit for probable cause after striking that information. Unintentional or negligent misstatements are left in the affidavit. (Franks v. Delaware (1978) 438 U.S. 154 [98 S.Ct. 2674; 57 L.Ed.2nd 667]; People v. Wilson (1986) 182 Cal.App.3rd 742; United States v. Ubaldo (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 690, 703.)

Note: But remember, the defendant must have "standing" to challenge the collection of the illegal information in order to contest its inclusion in the warrant affidavit. See "Standing," under "Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 8), above.)

See "Independent Source Doctrine," below

Even if wiretap evidence (which defendant argued was obtained in violation of the "work product" privilege, the recorded conversation being between a suspect and a defense investigator, a fact that was not contained in the affidavit to the later-issued search warrant for the suspect's residence) was excised from the warrant, the warrant was held to still contain sufficient probable cause justifying the issuance of the warrant. (People v. Fayed (2020) 9 Cal.5th 147, 187-189.)

Defendant waived his claim that he was entitled to a Franks hearing on the ground that the agent's trial testimony materially differed from his warrant affidavit because the claim was waived as it was known to defendant and intentionally not pursued. Even so, there was no plain error as any error would have had to be predicated on an expectation that the district court should have remembered what was in a warrant affidavit submitted two years earlier, realized that the testimony was inconsistent with it, and then evaluated that inconsistency under a standard never before applied to a similar context. (United States v. Rusnak (9th Cir. 2020) 981 F.3rd 697.)

Material Omissions: A defendant who challenges a search warrant based upon an affidavit containing omissions bears the burden of showing that the omissions, had they been included, would have been material to the magistrates' determination of probable cause. (People v. Bradford (1997) 15 Cal.4th 1229, 1297; People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 768; People v. Lee (2015) 242 Cal.App.4th 161, 171-172; United States v. Perkins (9th Cir. 2017) 850 F.3rd 1109, 1116; People v. Fayed (2020) 9 Cal.5th 147, 184-187.)

> "To prevail on a Franks challenge, the defendant must establish two things by a preponderance of the evidence: first, that 'the affiant officer intentionally or recklessly made false or misleading statements or omissions in support of the warrant[,]' and second, that the false or misleading statement or omission was material, i.e., 'necessary to finding probable cause.' United States v. Martinez-Garcia, 397 F.3rd 1205, 1214-15 (9th Cir. 2005). If both requirements are met, 'the search warrant must be voided and the fruits of the search excluded . . . .' Franks, 438 U.S. at 156." (United States v. Perkins, supra.)
>
> "Omissions or misstatements resulting from negligence or good faith mistakes will not invalidate an affidavit which on its face establishes probable cause." (Ewing v. City of Stockton (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 1218, 1224.)
>
> Neglecting to include an informant's criminal history could invalidate a warrant, in that the magistrate's decision will usually require a determination of the informant's credibility. (United States v. Reeves (9th Cir. 2000) 210 F.3rd 1041.)
>
> Omitting facts which would have supported a finding of probable cause had it been included is not grounds to traverse a warrant. (People v. Lim (2001) 85 Cal.App.4th 1289.)
>
> "Facts omitted from a search warrant affidavit are 'not material' if 'there is no 'substantial possibility they would have altered a reasonable magistrate's probable cause determination,' and their omission did not 'make the affidavit[s] substantially misleading.'" (People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 768; citing People v. Eubanks (2011) 53 Cal.4th 110, 136.)

Intentional or reckless misstatements and/or omissions in a search warrant affidavit are material errors whenever a magistrate would not have found probable cause absent those errors, and may result in potential civil liability for the affiant. (Chism v. Washington State (9th Cir. 2011) 661 F.3rd 380; where had the information been reported to the magistrate correctly, it would have been apparent that other parties had used the plaintiffs' previously stolen credit card to purchase child pornography.)

> For a plaintiff in a civil lawsuit to survive a summary judgment motion where it is alleged that there were material misstatements or omission in a search warrant, he must make a substantial showing that there were misstatements and/or omissions in the warrant affidavit that were either deliberately or recklessly included (or, for an omission, excluded), and that but for the misstatements or omissions, the warrant not would have been approved by the magistrate. Purely negligent or unintentional mistakes in a search warrant affidavit are irrelevant to the validity of the warrant. In this case, the Court had no difficulty finding that the affiant's misstatements and omissions were at the very least reckless. (Ibid.)

The affiant's failure to disclose that the plaintiff's son was in jail at the time of the issuance of the warrant, and for over six months prior, and therefore not only was not present in the home, but moreover could not have been involved in a described shooting or the storage of weapons used in it. Plaintiffs presented sufficient evidence to establish a genuine issue as to whether a detective's omission of this material fact was intentional or reckless, as opposed to merely negligent. Had the omitted facts of the son's two-year sentence and custody status been included, it was extremely doubtful that an issuing judge would simply have issued the warrant or authorized nighttime service without more information. (Bravo v. City of Santa Maria (9th Cir. 2011) 665 F.3rd 1076, 1083-1088.)

Omitting an informant's entire criminal history from a warrant affidavit may be grounds to invalidate the warrant. However, the warrant is still valid so long as that information wasn't intentionally or recklessly left out, or if it wouldn't have made a difference to the magistrate even if he'd known. (Garcia v. County of Merced (9th Cir. 2011) 639 F.3rd 1206, 1211-1212.)

Failing to include in a warrant affidavit information about one of the witnesses connections to drug trafficking was held to be a material omission that was "recklessly" left out. However, there was found to sufficient probable cause when added to the affidavit in that the witness' information was sufficiently corroborated by other witnesses and the physical evidence. (United States v. Ruiz (9th Cir. 2014) 758 F.3rd 1144, 1148-1152.)

Where there was evidence that a suspect used the victim's credit card without his permission, there was no error in the affiant not including in the affidavit her (the affiant's) working relationship with the victim (a fellow sheriff's deputy), the victim and the suspect's ongoing custody dispute (having had two children together), and the extent of the victim's and the suspect's financial intermingling. None of these facts were the type that, even if known by the magistrate, would have prevented him from finding probable cause. (Cameron v. Craig (9th Cir. 2013) 713 F.3rd 1012, 1019-1020.)

See People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 767-769; finding no material omissions or misrepresentations in two affidavits in search warrants for defendant's residence, vehicles and computers in warrants issued 23 years after defendant's crime.

In a search warrant authorizing law enforcement to seize firearms from defendant, it was not material under the Fourth Amendment that the affiant failed to include information in the affidavit that defendant had purchased the guns almost 17 years before the current prosecution and six years before the conviction that made it illegal for him to possess guns, in that probable cause was sufficiently established by evidence that defendant was prohibited from owning any firearms and that guns were currently registered to him without the necessity of showing when he'd obtained the guns. Also, defendant did not make the necessary substantial showing required for a Franks hearing because the failure to include the timing information in the warrant affidavit did not establish a reckless disregard for the truth in the absence of any evidence that defendant had disposed of the guns, that the registration information was inaccurate, or that the omitted purchase date was relevant. (People v. Lee (2015) 242 Cal.App.4th 161, 169-176.)

"A defendant can challenge a search warrant by showing that the affiant deliberately or recklessly omitted material facts that negate probable cause when added to the affidavit." (People v. Eubanks (2011) 53 Cal.4th 110, 136.) However, while "(e)very falsehood makes an affidavit inaccurate, . . . not all omissions do so." Only material or relevant adverse facts need to be included in a warrant affidavit. "[F]acts are 'material' and hence must be disclosed if their omission would make the affidavit substantially misleading. On review under (P.C.) section 1538.5, facts must be deemed material for this purpose if, because of their inherent probative force, there is a substantial possibility they would have altered a reasonable magistrate's probable cause determination." (People v. Kurland (1980) 28 Cal.3rd 376, 385.) Conclusory allegations that admittedly were based upon assumptions only are insufficient to justify a Franks hearing. The fact that police had obtained a search warrant for someone else's house based upon other evidence that someone other than defendant had committed the murder that defendant was suspected of committing did not detract from the later developed probable cause to believe defendant was the killer. Also, the failure to include a witness' complete criminal history, particularly when the magistrate already had information as to the witness' illegal activities, was not a material omission. (People v. Sandoval (2015) 62 Cal.4th 394, 405-412.)

Plaintiff (defendant in a criminal case) filed a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 lawsuit against several civil defendants, including agents of the Grand Forks Narcotics Task Force ("GFNTF"), alleging two Fourth Amendment violations; i.e., that a search warrant the GFNTF obtained was based upon a deliberate falsehood or reckless disregard for the truth in that they used an informant to develop and generate false evidence incorporated in an affidavit; and that the

> GFNTF deprived Plaintiff of a preliminary hearing at which Plaintiff would have been discharged because the warrant was not supported by probable cause. Plaintiff appealed the grant of summary judgment dismissing these claims. The Eighth Circuit affirmed. The Court agreed with the district court that the affidavit provided probable cause to arrest Plaintiff. Even had it been corrected to include missing information Plaintiff alleged was recklessly omitted, there was no evidence any of the civil defendants knew about an allegedly false "murder-for-hire" allegation when the warrant affidavit was submitted. An agent does not "violate a clearly established constitutional right by omitting information from a warrant application that he does not actually know, even if the reason is his own reckless investigation." As Plaintiff's subsequent, lengthy investigation of the informant makes clear, minimal further investigation into the informant's criminal history would not have exonerated Plaintiff. (Howe v. Gilpin (8th Cir. 2023) 65 F.4th 975.)

2. Presumption of Unlawfulness (or Unreasonableness) Without a Warrant: The absence of a search warrant raises a presumption that the search was unlawful, which the prosecution is required to rebut. (Mincey v. Arizona (1978) 437 U.S. 385, 390 [98 S.Ct. 2408; 57 L.Ed.2nd 290, 298-299]; In re Tyrell J. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 68, 76, overruled on other grounds.)

> The prosecution bears the burden of providing proof of a recognized exception to the warrant requirement, justifying a warrantless search. (Welsh v. Wisconsin (1984) 466 U.S. 740, 749-750 [104 S.Ct. 2091; 80 L.Ed.2nd 732, 742-743]; People v. James (1977) 19 Cal.3rd 99, 106.)
>
> "Warrantless searches and seizures (of persons) are presumed to be unreasonable, 'subject only to a few specifically established and well-delineated exceptions.'" (People v. Thomas (2018) 29 Cal.App.5th 1107, 1113; citing People v. Diaz (2011) 51 Cal.4th 84, 90.)
>
> > "Such 'specifically established and well-delineated exceptions' include exigent circumstances, searches incident to arrest, vehicle searches, and border searches." (United States v. Cano (9th Cir. 2019) 934 F.3rd 1002, 1011.)
> >
> > But there are exceptions to each of these exceptions. "First, any search conducted under an exception must be within the scope of the exception. Second, some searches, even when conducted within the scope of the exception, may be so intrusive that they require > additional justification, up to and including probable cause and a search warrant." (Ibid. Italics added.)

Warrantless entries by police into a residence are presumed illegal unless justified by either consent, or probable cause with exigent circumstances. (Payton v. New York (1980) 445 U.S. 573, 586 [100 S.Ct. 1371; 63 L.Ed.2nd 639]; People v. Coddington (2000) 23 Cal.4th 529, 575.)

3. Good Faith:

Rule: Evidence seized pursuant to a search warrant will not be suppressed even if the warrant was defective so long as the officers acted in reasonable and objective good faith in relying upon the warrant and serving it. (United States v. Leon (1984) 468 U.S. 897 [104 S.Ct. 3405; 82 L.Ed.2nd 677]; Massachusetts v. Sheppard (1984) 468 U.S. 981 [104 S.Ct. 3424; 82 L.Ed.2nd 737]; People v. Rodrigues-Fernandez (1986) 182 Cal.App.3rd 742; United States v. Crews (9th Cir. 2007) 502 F.3rd 1130; Messerschmidt et al. v. Millender (2012) 565 U.S. 535 [132 S.Ct. 1235; 182 L.Ed.2nd 47]; United States v. Schesso (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 1040, 1050-1051; Armstrong v. Asselin (9th Cir. 2013) 734 F.3rd 984, 989-995; United States v. Schesso (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 1040, 1050-1051; United States v. Needham (9th Cir. 2013) 718 F.3rd 1190; 1194; (People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 766-767; United States v. Elmore (9th Cir. 2019) 917 F.3rd 1068, 1075-1079; United States v. King (9th Cir. 2021) 985 F.3rd 702, 709-710; People v. Lepere (2023) 91 Cal.App.5th 727, 732; Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, at pp. 49-51.)

> "Under the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule: 'Evidence obtained by police officers acting in reasonable reliance on a search warrant issued by a detached and neutral magistrate is ordinarily not excluded under the Fourth Amendment, even if a reviewing court ultimately determines the warrant is not supported by probable cause.'" (People v. Lepere (2023) 91 Cal.App.5th 727, 733; quoting (People v. French (2011) 201 Cal.App.4th 1307, 1323)

History: See People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1219-1223, for a history of the Good Faith exception to the exclusionary rule.

Exclusionary Rule Restricted: The Exclusionary Rule is "restricted to those situations in which its remedial purpose is effectively advanced." (Illinois v. Krull (1987) 480 U.S. 340, 347 [107 S.Ct. 1160; 94 L.Ed.2nd 364, 373].)

> "The good faith exception rests on the premise that the purpose of the exclusionary rule is to deter official misconduct by depriving the state of the fruits of unlawful searches." (People v. Arredondo (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 186, 208.)

> Note: Petition for Review was dismissed and the case remanded in light of the decision in Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) __ U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040], where the U.S. Supreme Court held that when a DUI arrestee is unconscious, this fact alone will "almost always" constitute an exigency, allowing for a warrantless blood draw.

The good faith reliance upon a state statute allowing for a warrantless administrative search was justified where the statute was not obviously unconstitutional. (Illinois v. Krull, supra; see also Michigan v. DeFillippo (1979) 443 U.S. 31, 37-38, and fn. 3 [99 S.Ct. 2627; 61 L.Ed.2nd 343, 439-350]; good faith reliance on an ordinance that was later declared to be unconstitutional. See also People v. Arredondo (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 186, 206-210.)

> In evaluating the applicability of "good faith reliance upon a statute, two questions must be answered: (1) Does substantial evidence support a finding that the officer relied on the statute, and (2) was such reliance "reasonable" for purposes of the good faith exception? (Id., at p. 208.)

> Note: Petition for Review was dismissed in Arredondo and the case remanded in light of the decision in Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) __ U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040], where the U.S. Supreme Court held that when a DUI arrestee is unconscious, this fact alone will "almost always" constitute an exigency, allowing for a warrantless blood draw.

Application of the Exclusionary Rule is unwarranted where it would not result in appreciable deterrence to unlawful police conduct. (Arizona v. Evans (1995) 514 U.S. 1 [131 L.Ed.2nd 34]; An arrest based upon erroneous court records.)

The Exclusionary Rule should not be applied to evidence obtained by a police officer whose reliance on a search warrant issued by a neutral magistrate was objectively reasonable, even though the warrant was ultimately found to be defective. (United States v. Leon (1984) 468 U.S. 897 [104 S.Ct. 3405; 82 L.Ed.2nd 677]; see also Massachusetts v. Sheppard (1984) 468 U.S. 981 [104 S.Ct. 3424; 82 L.Ed.2nd 737].)

Similarly, the alleged unconstitutionality of a statute, the violation for which serves as the basis for a search warrant, is irrelevant so long as officers reasonably relied upon the statute's validity at the time of the obtaining of the search warrant. (United States v. Meek (9th Cir. 2004) 366 F.3rd 705, 714.)

An officer's reasonable reliance upon the advice of a prosecutor, although not conclusive, is some evidence of good faith. (Dixon v. Wallowa County (9th Cir, 2003) 336 F.3rd 1013, 1019; see also Stevens v. Rose (9th Cir. 2002) 298 F.3rd 880, 884.)

See also Johnston v. Koppes (9th Cir. 1988) 850 F.2nd 594, 596, listing four relevant factors in evaluating the officer's good faith reliance on advice of a lawyer:

- Whether the attorney was independent;
- Whether the advice addressed the constitutionality of the proposed action;
- Whether the attorney had all the relevant facts; and
- Whether the advice was sought before or after the officer's actions.

A defective search warrant description (i.e., lack of particularity) may be cured where the affidavit supplies the necessary particularity. However, the government has the burden of proving that the officers who executed the warrant read and were guided by the contents of the affidavit. (United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 706; citing United States v. Luk (9th Cir. 1988) 859 F.2nd 667, 677.)

"'(A) warrant issued by a magistrate normally suffices to establish' that a law enforcement officer has 'acted in good faith in conducting the search.'" "(E)vidence seized will not be excluded where officers rely on warrants that are later ruled to be invalid if their reliance was objectively reasonable." (Citations omitted; People v. Stipo (2011) 195 Cal.App.4th 664, 673.)

A search warrant affidavit that was held to be insufficient due to a lack of detail in the affidavit, using information from three informants what was conclusory only, and that corroborated each other only as to "pedestrian facts" that could have been known to anyone, was saved by the "good faith" rule because a reasonable officer could have been let to believe the warrant was good due to prior cases holding that information from unconnected informants may be enough to establish probable cause. (People v. French (2011) 201 Cal.App.4th 1307, 1323-1325.)

The federal Fourth Circuit Court of Appeal, in a split 2-1 decision, found the warrantless, extended, accessing of two of defendants' cell-site data (221 days' worth of cell site location information [CSLI], which itself yielded an impressive 29,659 location data points for defendant Graham and 28,410 for co-defendant Jordan, enough to provide a "reasonably detailed account of their movements" during the intervals covered by the disclosure orders) amounted to an unconstitutional search under the Fourth Amendment. Officers obtained court orders pursuant to the "Stored Communications Act" (18 U.S.C. § 2703(d)), but not search warrants. The resulting information was used against the defendants at trial. The Appellate Court refused, however, to order the suppression of the collected information because of the Fourth Amendment's "good faith" exception, and thus affirmed both the defendants' convictions of various charges associated with a series of armed robberies. (United States v. Graham (4th Cir. 2015) 796 F.3rd 332.)

However, it was held that police lacked a "good faith" basis for the search of defendant's residence that was separate from the residence listed in the search warrant, but from which it as believed that defendant used the same IP address, even assuming there was a wireless signal extending from the identified residence to defendant's residence, because they had no actual evidence to support the belief that defendant had a password to the network or that he had accessed it in any fashion. (People v. Nguyen (2017) 12 Cal.App.5th 574, 586-587.)

Also, "the good-faith exception may not be invoked when "the search warrant was issued in part on the basis of evidence obtained from an illegal search." (United States v. Artis (9th Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 1123, 1133; quoting United States v. Wanless (9th Cir. 1989) 882 F.2nd 1459, 1466-1467, and citing United States v. Vasey (9th Cir. 1987) 834 F.2nd 782, 789.)

> In Artis, a search warrant was obtained in reliance upon plain sight observations made in an earlier search which the prosecution had conceded included illegally observed evidence.

"A prosecutor's independent judgment may break the chain of causation between the unconstitutional actions of other officials and the harm suffered by a constitutional tort plaintiff." (Wilkenson v. Magrann (9th Cir. 2019) 781 F.3rd Appx 669 (unpublished), at p. 670; quoting McSherry v. City of Long Beach (9th Cir. 2009) 584 F.3rd 1129, 1137; and Beck v. City of Upland (9th Cir. 2008) 527 F.3rd 853, 862.)

In a warrant authorizing the search of two residences on the same property, divided by a road through the property, the affidavit to which describing primarily the criminal activities of the one resident with little if anything to indicate that the plaintiff, who lived in the other residence, was also involved, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeal held that the lack of any particularity describing how the plaintiff might have been involved invalidated the warrant as it applied to him. The Court found the affidavit in support of the warrant was "so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable." The Court concluded that the search of defendant's residence was not saved by the "Leon Good Faith" exception as no reasonable officer would believe that there was a fair probability that evidence of another man's burglaries would be found in the defendant's residence; the officers knew the men maintained separate residences on the property and they offered little more than a hunch that defendant's residence was being used to store property stolen by the other man. (United States v. Ralston (8th Cir. 2024) 88 F.4th 776.)

Civil Cases and Qualified Immunity: The standards applicable to the "Good Faith" exception in a criminal case are the same as used in civil cases where it is found that "qualified immunity" protects an officer from civil liability. (United States v. Needham (9th Cir. 2013) 718 F.3rd 1190; 1194-1195.)

Exceptions to the Good Faith Rule:

Rule: "A police officer may not shift all of the responsibility for the protection of an accused's Fourth Amendment rights to the magistrate by executing a warrant no matter how deficient it may be in describing the places to be searched and the items to be seized. An officer applying for a warrant is required to exercise reasonable professional judgment. [Citations]" (People v. Bradford (1997) 15 Cal.4th 1229, 1292; see also United States v. Elmore (9th Cir. 2019) 917 F.3rd 1068, 1077.)

Exceptions: Pursuant to United States v. Leon (1984) 468 U.S. 897, 922-923 [104 S.Ct. 3405; 82 L.Ed.2nd 677], and other cases (see below), the "Good Faith" rule does not apply when:

- The Magistrate was Misled: The magistrate issuing the search warrant was misled by information in the affidavit that the affiant knew was false or would have known was false except for a reckless disregard for the truth. (See United States v. Crews (9th Cir. 2007) 502 F.3rd 1130, 1138-1139.)

> This probably applies to material omissions in the warrant affidavit as well. (United States v. Flores (9th Cir. 1982) 679 F.2nd 173; United States v. Lefkowitz (9th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2nd 1313.)
>
> "(S)uppression of evidence is an appropriate remedy only if 'the magistrate or judge in issuing [the] warrant was misled by information in an affidavit that the affiant knew was false or would have known was false except for his reckless disregard of the truth,' the affidavit is "'so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable,' or the affidavit is so deficient in particularizing the place to be searched or the things to be seized that the executing officer 'cannot reasonably presume it to be valid.' (Leon, supra, at p. 923.) In considering the issue, we apply the objective test of 'whether a reasonably well trained officer would have known that the search was illegal despite the magistrate's authorization.'" (People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 766-767; upholding a search warrant with 23-year-old information constituting the probable cause.)

- Magistrate Abandoned his Judicial Role: The issuing magistrate has "wholly abandoned his judicial role . . ." to the extent that no reasonably well-trained officer would rely upon the warrant. For example:

> Issuing a warrant based upon a "bare bones" affidavit; i.e., one written in "conclusory," as opposed to "factual," language. (See United States v. Harper (5th Cir. 1986) 802 F.2nd 115; and United States v. Maggitt (5th Cir.1985) 778 F.2nd 1029, 1036.)
>
> Where the judge becomes a part of the searching party, personally authorizing seizures during the search. (Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New York (1979) 442 U.S. 319 [99 S.Ct. 2319; 60 L.Ed.2nd 920].)

A judge who merely acts as a "rubber stamp" signer of warrants, approving anything submitted for issuance. (See United States v. Brown (7th Cir. 1987) 832 F.2nd 991; and Rodriguez v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal.App.3rd 1453.)

- Lack of Indicia of Probable Cause: A search warrant affidavit that is so lacking in the indicia of probable cause that official belief in the existence of probable cause is entirely unreasonable. (Malley v. Briggs (1986) 475 U.S. 335, 344-345 [89 L.Ed.2nd 271]; see also United States v. Crews (9th Cir. 2007) 502 F.3rd 1130, 1135-1138; Messerschmidt et al. v. Millender (2012) 565 U.S. 535 [132 S.Ct. 1235; 182 L.Ed.2nd 47]; United States v. Underwood (9th Cir. 2013) 725 F.3rd 1076, 1081-1088; United States v. Needham (9th Cir. 2013) 718 F.3rd 1190; 1194.)

  "Even if an affidavit fails to establish probable cause, "'an officer cannot be expected to question the magistrate's probable-cause determination,' . . . id. at 921, unless the affidavit is 'bare bones,' . . . , 'it fails to provide a colorable argument for probable cause,'" United States v. Jobe (9th Cir. 2019) 933 F.3rd 1074, 1077, quoting United States v. Leon (1984) 468 U.S. 897, 921 [104 S.Ct. 3405; 82 L.Ed.2nd 677] and United States v. Underwood (9th Cir. 2013) 725 F.3rd 1076, 1085.)

  However, "the threshold for establishing this exception is a high one, and it should be." (Messerschmidt et al. v. Millender, supra., at p. 547 [132 S.Ct. at p. 1245].)

  E.g.: The "bare bones" warrant, written in "wholly conclusory statements" as opposed to factual allegations. (United States v. Maggitt, supra.; United States v. Barrington (5th Cir. 1986) 806 F.2nd 529, 542; United States v. Underwood, supra, and below.)

  Delay of 52 days between a controlled buy of almost a pound of marijuana and the execution of a search warrant, despite the officer's expert opinion and good faith belief that the seller would still have contraband in his residence (the sale taking place in a parking lot in another city), was held to be stale. The officer's belief was not objectively reasonable, under the circumstances. (People v. Hulland (2003) 110 Cal.App.4th 1646.)

A warrant that failed to identify a particular suspect as an alleged "chemist" arriving from a foreign country, to provide any basis for the tip that a chemist was coming to the United States, or to describe any activity by the suspect that was indicative of setting up a meth lab, failed to make even a "colorable argument for probable cause." (United States v. Luong (9th Cir. 2006) 470 F.3rd 898.)

Officers obtained a warrant and searched defendant's home for a firearm that was used in a homicide that had occurred nine months earlier. Defendant himself was not a suspect in the homicide. But it was believed that two of his sons had some connection to it. The officers did not find the firearm from the homicide. However, they did find two other firearms and ammunition, which Defendant Grant unlawfully possessed because he was a convicted felon. Disagreeing with the trial court, the Ninth Circuit held that the search warrant affidavit did not establish probable cause that the firearm used in the homicide might be located in defendant's home. Other than a single conversation between defendant and one of his sons, nothing in the affidavit suggested any connection between the sought-for gun and defendant's home. The Court further held that the good-faith exception did not apply because the officers' reliance on the warrant was unreasonable. (United States v. Grant (9th Cir. 2012) 682 F.3rd 827, 832-841.)

> "(A)n association 'through family . . . affiliation' is insufficient to establish probable cause." (United States v. Elmore (9th Cir. 2019) 917 F.3rd 1068, 1075; quoting United States v. Grant, supra, at pp. 836-837.)

The trial court was held to have properly suppressed drug trafficking evidence found in defendant's home because the search warrant was defective under the Fourth Amendment in that the affidavit failed to establish probable cause: The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule was per se not met because the affidavit was a bare bones affidavit that was "so lacking in indicia of probable cause," relying primarily on unsupported conclusions, that it failed to provide a colorable argument for probable cause. Even assuming the affidavit was not a bare bones affidavit, the good faith exception was not met because an analysis of the totality of the circumstances, including extrinsic factors, established that reliance was objectively unreasonable. (United States v. Underwood (9th Cir. 2013) 725 F.3rd 1076, 1081-1088.)

See also People v. Lepere (2023) 91 Cal.App.5th 727, 733; repeating the rule that the good faith exception does not apply when the warrant affidavit is "'so lacking in indicia of probable cause' that an officer's reliance on the warrant is objectively unreasonable." (Quoting People v. French (2011) 201 Cal.App.4th 1307, 1323.)

See also United States v. Jobe (9th Cir. 2019) 933 F.3rd 1074, 1077-1078, where although there was insufficient probable cause in a search warrant affidavit to support the seizure of defendant's laptop, the Court declined to suppress the contents of the laptop in that the "warrant contained sufficient information to render (the investigator's) reliance on the warrant reasonable."

- Warrant Deficient: The warrant is so lacking in those specifics required of warrants that it cannot in good faith be presumed valid. (See Massachusetts v. Shepard (1984) 468 U.S. 981 [82 L.Ed.2nd 737].)

  E.g.: The officer's reliance on the magistrate's probable cause determination is not objectively reasonable. I.e.: Should a reasonably well-trained officer have known that the search warrant was defective despite the magistrate's authorization?

(See People v. Lim (2001) 85 Cal.App.4th 1289, 1296-1297.)

In this regard, it adds to the officer's good faith to have his warrants reviewed and approved by a deputy district attorney prior to taking it to a magistrate. (See People v. Camarella (1991) 54 Cal.3rd 592, 602-607.)

- Affidavit Based on Illegally Collected Information: "Good Faith" is not applicable when the information upon which the warrant is based was gathered in an earlier illegal search. (United States v. Vasey (9th Cir. 1987) 834 F.2nd 782; People v. Baker (1986) 187 Cal.App.3rd 562; People v. Brown (1989) 210 Cal.App.3rd 849.)

  However, it must be the defendant's own Fourth Amendment rights that were violated. (People v. Weiss (1999) 20 Cal.4th 1073, 1081.)

  Information gathered in violation of someone else's Fourth Amendment rights, for which this defendant has no standing to challenge, may be used in a search warrant affidavit. (People v. Madrid (1992) 7 Cal.App.4th 1888, 1896.)

Exigent Circumstances:

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has indicated that it might be appropriate to factor in exigent circumstances, such as necessary time restraints, in determining whether the "good faith" exception applies. (United States v. Weber (9th Cir. 1990) 923 F.2nd 1338, 1346; United States v. Ramos (9th Cir. 1991) 923 F.2nd 1346, 1355, fn. 18, overruled on other grounds.)

But claiming an exigency as an excuse for applying a good faith exception will not be upheld where the officers do not treat the situation accordingly. (United States v. Luong (9th Cir. 2006) 470 F.3rd 898, 904; claiming that the dangerousness of a possible meth lab in a residential area justified application of the good faith exception was rejected when the officers waited seven hours to obtain the warrant and then three more hours before executing it.

See "Exigent Circumstances," under "Warrantless Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 9), above.

Additional Case Law:

"Good Faith" applied to a warrant where the description of the property to be seized was erroneously left out of the warrant affidavit. (People v. Rodriguez-Fernandez (1991) 235 Cal.App.3rd 543; People v. Alvarez (1989) 209 Cal.App.3rd 660.)

Failure to restrict the description of the place to be searched to the defendant's room, making the warrant "over-broad," where that room was all that was in fact searched, was excused under the "good faith" rule. (People v. MacAvoy (1985) 162 Cal.App.3rd 746, 759-763.)

A warrant that failed to identify a particular suspect as an alleged "chemist" arriving from a foreign country, to provide any basis for the tip that a chemist was coming to the United States, or to describe any activity by the suspect that was indicative of setting up a meth lab, failed to make even a "colorable argument for probable cause." (United States v. Luong (9th Cir. 2006) 470 F.3rd 898.)

An officer's "good faith" is not grounds for denying a defendant's motion to suppress based on a violation of the wiretap statutes (see below). (People v. Jackson (2005) 129 Cal.App.4th 129, 153-160.)

Officers executing a search warrant violated the Fourth Amendment because the warrant was facially defective in that it only listed the place to search as the motel. While a judge had orally approved an expansion of the warrant to the search of a home as well, the officers failed to correct the warrant itself. The text of the Fourth Amendment requires the warrant to specify the place to be searched, which the warrant in this case failed to do. However, when the officers were subsequently sued, the district court erred in denying the officers' qualified immunity motion because it was not clearly established at the time that the search based upon the warrant in issue would violate the Fourth Amendment. An officer could have believed—based on the lack of direct case law at the time—that he or she could search the home because the court had orally approved it, even if the officer failed to make that change on the warrant. The district court's denial of qualified immunity for the officers was reversed and remanded. (Manriquez v. Ensley (9th Cir. 2022) 46 F.4th 1124.)

4. Ramey Inapplicable: Arrests within a residence (See People v. Ramey (1976) 16 Cal.3rd 263.) during the execution of a search warrant may be made without an arrest warrant. (People v. McCarter (1981) 117 Cal.App.3rd 894, 908.)

See "People v. Ramey," under "Arrests" (Chapter 5), above.

5. Consensual Searches may always be stopped by the subject withdrawing his or her consent; i.e., the suspect is in control of the extent and duration of the search. (See People v. Martinez (1968) 259 Cal.App.2nd Supp. 943.) Execution of a warrant, obviously, does not require the consent nor even the cooperation of the occupant.

6. Informants, who do no more than provide probable cause in an affidavit for a search warrant, may normally be kept confidential. (E.C. § 1042(b))

See "Keeping Confidential Informants Confidential," below.

7. Acting in the Performance of His (or Her) Duties: An officer serving a search warrant, even if later found to be lacking in probable cause, is "acting in the performance of his (or her) duties" should a criminal offense in which this is an element (e.g., P.C. §§ 148 (Resisting Arrest), 243(b) (Battery on a Peace Officer) occur during the service of the warrant. (People v. Gonzales (1990) 51 Cal.3rd 1179, 1222.)

8. Opportunity to Objectively Evaluate Existing Probable Cause: Requiring law enforcement officers to obtain a search warrant prior to invading the privacy of an individual, noting the necessity of first objectively evaluating any existing probable cause and then locating and convincing a neutral magistrate of the existence of that probable cause, is a "built-in safeguard" against acting without first considering the dangers involved, "serv(ing the) . . . important purpose of encouraging considered reflection before officers take action." (Mendez v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F.3rd 1067, 1079-1081.)

Practice Note: The common practice of having a deputy district attorney review and approve proposed search warrants adds to the validity of this factor.

Mental Patients Detained per Welf. & Insti. Code § 5150*: Seizure of Weapons:

Search Warrant Requirement:

Although Welf. & Insti. Code § 8102(a) authorizes the "confiscation" of firearms or other deadly weapons owned, possessed, or under the control of a detained or apprehended mental patient, a search warrant must be used in order to lawfully enter the house and/or to search for weapons in those cases where there are no exigent circumstances and the defendant has not given consent. (People v. Sweig (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 1145 (petition granted, see below); rejecting the People's argument that a warrantless entry to search for and seize the detainee's firearms was justified under law enforcement's "community caretaking" function.)

Pen. Code § 1524(a)(10): Search Warrants for Firearms and other Deadly Weapons:

The Sweig Court also found, however, that a search warrant, at least at the time, was not provided for under Pen. Code § 1524 (see "Statutory Grounds for Issuance (Pen. Code § 1524(a)(1) through (20))," below) when the defendant was detained pursuant to W&I § 5150 only. The Court suggested that the Legislature should fix the problem with a legislative amendment to Section 1524.

As a result, the Legislature amended Pen. Code § 1524, effective 1/1/2010, to add new subdivision (a)(10), which now lists as a legal ground for the issuance of a search warrant the following: "When the property or things to be seized include a firearm or any other deadly weapon that is owned by, or in possession of, or in the custody or control of, a person described in W&I § 8102(a)."

The petition to the California Supreme Court on People v. Sweig was granted, making this case no longer available for citation, with review being dismissed on 10/11/09 when the above amendment to Pen. Code § 1524 was enacted.

Exigent Circumstances and Community Caretaking Exceptions to the Warrant Requirement:

See Rupf v. Yan (2000) 85 Cal.App.4th 411, at pages 421-422, where a warrantless seizure of a mental patient's firearms from his home was not challenged, the Court perhaps inferring an "exigent circumstance" when it noted that:

"The exercise of the police power to regulate firearms is clearly related to the public health, safety and welfare. (Citations.) Respondent identifies the object of the statute as providing a means whereby authorities can confiscate firearms in an emergency situation and may keep firearms from mentally unstable persons. The legislative history of the statute expressly recognizes the urgency and importance of such an objective . . . ." (Ibid.)

And see Caniglia v. Strom (1st Cir. 2020) 953 F.3rd 112 (Cert granted), where the federal First Circuit Court of Appeal held that (1) the "community caretaking" theory did in fact apply to residences, and (2) that entering the plaintiff's residence to seize his firearms and ammunition while he was being evaluated for mental issues at a local mental facility was lawful as a function of the officers' community caretaking responsibilities where plaintiff was reported to have talked about suicide, he had guns in the house, it was believed that he could be released from the hospital at any time, and the officers searched only where they were told by plaintiff's girlfriend that the guns were located.

The Supreme Court reversed the First Circuit in this case, unequivocally ruling that community caretaking does not apply to residences. (Caniglia v. Strom (May 17, 2021) __ U.S. __ [141 S.Ct. 1596; 209 L.Ed.2nd 604].) (See "Welfare Checks; the 'Community Caretaking Function,' 'Exigencies,' and the 'Emergency Aid Doctrine,'" under "Searches of Residences and Other Buildings (Chapter 13), below.)

"Gun Violence Restraining Orders" per Pen. Code §§ 18100-18500:

Pen. Code §§ 18100-18500 provides for the seizure and retention of a person's firearms and ammunition via a "Gun Violence Restraining Order" (sometimes referred to as "Extreme Risk Protection Orders," or "*ERPO*s"), also known as California's "Red Flag Statutes," whenever "there is reasonable cause to believe that the person poses an immediate and present danger of causing personal injury to themselves or another person by having custody or control of a firearm." (Pen. Code § 18108(c))

Note: Provisions are made in the Penal Code (i.e., see Pen. Code § 1524(a)(14)) for obtaining a search warrant to search for, and seize, firearms and ammunition from a person described under theses statutes and who is uncooperative in voluntarily surrendering such items. Pen. Code § 29810(c)(4) also provides that after making the necessary probable cause finding as noted in subd. (3), the court is required to issue an order for the search and removal of firearms upon a finding that the defendant has failed to relinquish firearms.

The definition of firearms for purposes of "gun violence restraining orders" (GVROs) has been expanded by providing that for the purposes Pen. Code §§ 18100–18205, "firearm" includes the frame or receiver of the weapon and includes a precursor part.

Per this section as amended, a "firearm precursor part" has the same meaning as in Pen. Code § 16531(a); i.e., a component of a firearm that is necessary to build or assemble a firearm and is either an unfinished receiver or an unfinished handgun frame.
Note: As a result, pursuant to enforcing a GVRO, law enforcement is authorized to seize an intact firearm or parts of a firearm (which could be used to assemble a "ghost gun").

Pen. Code § 1524(a)(14): "When the property or things to be seized are firearms or ammunition or both that are owned by, in the possession of, or in the custody or control of a person who is the subject of a gun violence restraining order that has been issued pursuant to Pen. Code §§ 18100 et seq. if a prohibited firearm or ammunition or both is possess, owned, in the custody of, or controlled by a person against whom a gun violence restraining order has been issued, the person has been lawfully serviced with that order, and the person has failed to relinquish the firearm as required by law."

Pen. Code § 1524(a)(15): Beginning January 1, 2018, the property or things to be seized include a firearm that is owned by, or in the possession of, or in the custody or control of, a person who is subject to the prohibitions regarding firearms pursuant to P.C. §§ 29800 or 29805, and the court has made a finding pursuant to P.C. § 29810(c)(3) that the person has failed to relinquish the firearm as required by law.

> Note: Pen. Code § 29800 is the firearms prohibition that applies to convicted felons and narcotic drug addicts. Pen. Code § 29805 is the 10-year firearms prohibition for persons convicted of a specified misdemeanor.

> Note: Pen. Code § 29810(c)(4), after making the necessary finding as noted in subd. (3), requires the court to issue an order for the search and removal of firearms upon a probable cause finding that the defendant has failed to relinquish firearms.

Independent Source Doctrine*:

Rule: Where information later used in a search warrant has been discovered via an illegal search or seizure, the "Independent Source Doctrine" allows for the admission of the evidence recovered during the execution of that warrant that has been discovered by means wholly independent of any constitutional violation. (People v. Weiss (1999) 20 Cal.4th 1073.)

> "[It] teaches us that the interest of society in deterring unlawful police conduct and the public interest in having juries receive all probative evidence of a crime are properly balanced by putting the police in the same, not a worse, position tha[n] they would have been in if no police error or misconduct had occurred. [Citations.] When the challenged evidence has an independent source, exclusion of such evidence would put the police in a worse position than they would have been in absent any error or violation.' [Citation.]" Id., at pp. 1077-1078.)

The Two-Prong Test: Where a search warrant affidavit supporting a search warrant contains both information obtained by unlawful conduct as well as untainted information, a two-prong test applies to justify application of the independent source doctrine. (People v. Weiss, supra., at pp. 1078-1079, 1082.)

- The affidavit, excised of any illegally obtained information, must be sufficient to establish probable cause.

- The evidence must support a finding that "the police subjectively would have sought the warrant even without the illegal conduct."

  See also People v. Superior Court* [Corbett] (2017) 8 Cal.App.5th 670, 693-594; "When the affidavit supporting a search warrant contains information derived from unlawful conduct as well as other, untainted, information, 'the reviewing court must excise all tainted information but then must uphold the warrant if the remaining information establishes probable cause;'" citing People v. Weiss, supra, at p. 1081; and Franks v. Delaware (1978) 438 U.S. 154 [98 S.Ct. 2674; 57 L.Ed.2nd 667].

Case Law:

If the application contains probable cause apart from the improper information, then the warrant is lawful and the independent source doctrine applies, provided that the officers were not prompted to obtain the warrant by what they observed during the initial entry. (See also People v. Robinson (2012) 208 Cal.App.4th 232, 241.)

See also United States v. Merriweather (9th Cir. 1985) 777 F.2nd 503, where the Court inappropriately labeled the admissibility of illegally discovered evidence as an application of the "inevitable discovery" rule instead of the "independent source doctrine." In noting this error, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, in United States v. Lundin (9th Cir. 2016) 817 F.3rd 1151, 1161-1162, describes the differences between the two legal theories for saving evidence that was otherwise discovered illegally: "Unlike the inevitable discovery doctrine, which asks whether evidence 'would have' been discovered by lawful means rather than by means of the illegal search, Nix v. Williams, 467 U.S. 431, 447, 104 S. Ct. 2501, 81 L. Ed. 2d 377 (1984) (emphasis added), the independent source doctrine asks whether the evidence actually was 'obtained independently from activities untainted by the initial illegality.' Murray v. United States, 487 U.S. 533, 537, 108 S. Ct. 2529, 101 L. Ed. 2d 472 (1988)."

Because all tangible and intangible evidence obtained as a result of alleged Fourth Amendment violations was independently rediscovered or re-seized under the independent source doctrine when agents executed a search warrant that was both sought and issued independently of any such violations, the district court correctly denied a motion to suppress. (United States v. Saelee (9th Cir. 2022) 51 F.4th 327, 334-339.)

Non-Standard Types of Warrants and Orders*:

Types of Warrants: There are a number of types of warrants, typically referred to by description terms of art. For instance:

- Telephonic Search Warrants:

  Rule: Telephonic search warrants, with an oral affidavit taken under oath and recorded and later transcribed, is statutorily provided for. (Pen. Code § 1526)

  Procedure:

  Generally used during those hours when the courts are closed and a magistrate is otherwise not personally present, although there is no legal impediment to using this procedure during court hours.

  Pen. Code § 1526:

  (a) Before issuing the search warrant, the magistrate may examine on oath the person seeking the warrant and any witnesses the person may produce, and shall take his or her affidavit or their affidavits in writing, and cause the affidavit or affidavits to be subscribed by the party or parties making them. If the affiant transmits the proposed search warrant and all affidavits and supporting documents to the magistrate using facsimile transmission equipment, email, or computer server, the conditions in subd. (c) apply.

  (b) In lieu of the written affidavit required in subd. (a), the magistrate may take an oral statement under oath if the oath is made under penalty of perjury and recorded and transcribed. The transcribed statement shall be deemed to be an affidavit for the purposes of this chapter. The recording of the sworn oral statement and the transcribed statement shall be certified by the magistrate receiving it and shall be filed with the clerk of the court. In the alternative, the sworn oral statement shall be recorded by a certified court reporter and the transcript of the statement shall be certified by the reporter, after which the magistrate receiving it shall certify the transcript which shall be filed with the clerk of the court.

  (c)

  (1) The affiant shall sign under penalty of perjury his or her affidavit in support of probable cause for issuance of a search warrant. The affiant's signature may be in the form of a digital signature or electronic signature if email or computer server is used for transmission to the magistrate.

(2) The magistrate shall verify that all the pages sent have been received, that all the pages are legible, and that the declarant's signature, digital signature, or electronic signature is genuine.

(3) If the magistrate decides to issue the search warrant, he or she shall do both of the following:

(A) Sign the warrant. The magistrate's signature may be in the form of a digital signature or electronic signature if email or computer server is used for transmission by the magistrate.

(B) Note on the warrant the date and time of the issuance of the warrant.

(4) The magistrate shall transmit via facsimile transmission equipment, email, or computer server the signed search warrant to the affiant. The search warrant signed by the magistrate and received by the affiant shall be deemed to be the original warrant. The original warrant and any affidavits or attachments in support thereof shall be returned as provided in P.C. § 1534.

See Pen. Code § 1528(b), authorizing a peace officers, under a magistrate's direction, to sign the magistrate's name to a "duplicate original" of the search warrant during the telephonic search warrant process.

Case law:

The availability of telephonic search warrant procedures when considering the issue of whether an exigency exists is irrelevant. "(W)ith better technology, the time required (to obtain a search warrant) has shrunk, but it has not disappeared." (Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) __ U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040]; on the issue of seeking a search warrant for one's blood when the suspect is unconscious, in the hospital, and unable to give an express consent.

But, see dissenting opinion at pp. __-__.

> However, while sitting outside defendant's residence, waiting to hear whether an alarm may sound in a package delivered to his home, officers should have considered, at least, obtaining a search warrant. "'(T)the government must also show that a warrant could not have been obtained in time, . . . [and] that a telephonic warrant was unavailable or impractical.'" (United States v. Iwai (9th Cir. 2020) 930 F.3rd 1141, 1154 (dissenting opinion); quoting United States v. Good (9th Cir 1986) 780 F.2nd 773, 775.)

- Anticipatory Search Warrants:

  Rule: Issuance of a warrant, conditioned upon the happening of a particular event (e.g., the delivery of illegal substances or articles to a particular address; i.e., a "triggering condition"), is legal. (United States v. Grubbs (2006) 547 U.S. 90, 93-97 [164 L.Ed.2nd 195]; United States v. Garcia (2nd Cir. 1989) 882 F.2nd 699; United States v. Iwai (9th Cir. 2019) 930 F.3rd 1141, 1149 (dissenting opinion); and see United States v. Loy (3rd Cir. 1999) 191 F.3rd 360, 364; listing cases upholding the concept.)

  > "(T)he fact that the contraband is not 'presently located at the place described in the warrant' is immaterial, so long as 'there is probable cause to believe that it will be there when the search warrant is executed.' United States v. Lowe, 575 F.2d 1193, 1194 (6th Cir. 1978), . . . see United States v. Dornhofer, 859 F.2d 1195, 1198 (4th Cir. 1988), ..." (United States v. Garcia, supra., at p. 702.)

  Prerequisites: To be constitutional under the Fourth Amendment's requirement that there be probable cause, two prerequisites of probability must be satisfied:

  - That there is a "fair probability" that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place; and

  - That there is probable cause to believe the triggering condition will in fact occur.

  (United States v. Grubbs, supra, see also United States v. Ruddell (9th Cir. 1995) 71 F.3rd 331, 333; and United States v. Hendricks (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2nd 653, 654-657; United States v. Goff (9th Cir. 1982) 681 F.2nd 1238, and United States v. Wylie (5th Cir 1990) 919 F.2nd 969, 974-975; ". . . when it is known that contraband is on a sure course to its destination . . . .")

Case Law:

Anticipatory warrants "'require the magistrate to determine (1) that it is now probable that (2) contraband, evidence of a crime, or a fugitive will be on the described premises (3) when the warrant is executed.' (Citation) Thus, the supporting affidavit from police must show 'not only that if the triggering condition occurs there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place, but also that there is probable cause to believe the triggering condition will occur.'" (United States v. Iwai (9th Cir. 2019) 930 F.3rd 1141, at p. 1150 (dissenting opinion), quoting United States v. Grubbs, supra, at pp. 96-97.)

The "Sure Course" requirement: "(P)lacing a package containing a valid mailing address in the mail establishes probable cause—a 'sure course'—to believe that the package will be found at that destination" upon the execution of an anticipatory search warrant." (See United States v. Iwai, supra, at pp. 1150-1153 (dissenting opinion); describing this as a "fair probability" (or "probable cause") standard. See also United States v. Hendricks (9th Cir. 1983 743 F.2nd 653, 655.)

California Rules:

California authority, questionable since the United States Supreme Court's decision in United States v. Grubbs, supra, has held that; "(A)n anticipatory warrant may issue on clear showing that the police's right to search at a certain location for particular evidence of a crime will exist within a reasonable time in the future. (Citations)" People v. Sousa (1993) 18 Cal.App.4th 549, 558.)

> While failure to describe the conditions precedent on the face of the warrant itself, or incorporate them by reference to the affidavit, is not necessarily fatal to the validity of the warrant, it is better practice to do so anyway. (People v. Sousa, supra, at p. 561.)

Practice Note: If only to eliminate the issue, and because California cases may end up in the Ninth Circuit at some point, the better procedure is to describe the anticipatory nature of the warrant on the face of the warrant itself.

Federal Rules:

Failure of the warrant itself to clearly specify on its face the anticipatory nature of the warrant (i.e., that it is not to be served until the happening of a specific event, such as above) may invalidate the warrant. (United States v. Hotal (9th Cir. 1998) 143 F.3rd 1223; United States v. Vesikuru (9th Cir. 2002) 314 F.3rd 1116, 1123-1130; United States v. Grubbs (2006) 547 U.S. 90, 99-102 [164 L.Ed.2nd 195]; concurring opinion.)

Practice Note: Preparation and approval by a magistrate of an anticipatory search warrant has the tactical advantage of making the warrant effective immediately upon the happening of the described "triggering event," thus eliminating the delay between such an event and the eventual obtaining of a warrant.

Tip: State the contingency on the face of the warrant itself: E.g.; "THIS WARRANT IS LEGALLY EFFECTIVE AND CAN BE SERVED ONLY IF A SALE OF NARCOTICS TAKES PLACE AT THE PREMISES TO BE SEARCHED. (Initials of the magistrate)"

The Federal Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has indicated that if the warrant specifically incorporates an attached affidavit which describes the anticipatory nature of the warrant, this might suffice. However, the affidavit must then accompany the warrant to the scene of the search to be valid. (United States v. Hotal, supra.; United States v. McGrew (9th Cir. 1997) 122 F.3rd 847, 849-850.)

Other federal circuits have upheld the validity of an anticipatory warrant without the conditions specified on the warrant itself, if: (1) Clear, explicit, and narrowly drawn conditions for the execution of the warrant are contained in the affidavit; and (2) those conditions are actually satisfied before the warrant is executed. (See United States v. Moetamedi (2nd Cir. 1995) 46 F.3rd 225, 229; United States v. Rey (6th Cir. 1991) 923 F.2nd 1217, 1221; United States v. Dennis (7th Cir. 1997) 115 F.3rd 524, 529; United States

v. Tagbering (8th Cir. 1993) 985 F.2nd 946, 950; United States v. Hogoboom (10th Cir. 1979) 112 F.3rd 1081, 1086-1087.)

According to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, a copy of the document that describes the triggering conditions (i.e., the warrant itself, the affidavit, or any other attachments) must be presented to the lawful occupants (along with a copy of the warrant) upon the execution of the warrant. Failing to do so will invalidate the anticipatory search warrant as a Fourth Amendment violation. (United States v. Grubbs (9th Cir. 2004) 377 F.3rd 1072, as reprinted and amended at 389 F.3rd 1306; certiorari granted; revered and remanded; (2006) 547 U.S. 90, 98-99 [164 L.Ed.2nd 195]; see above.)

See also United States v. Vesikuru (9th Cir. 2002) 314 F.3rd 1116, 1123-1124, holding that an "anticipatory warrant," the conditions precedent for which being contained in the affidavit and incorporated into the warrant by reference, requires the presence of both the warrant and affidavit at the scene.

> In that California interprets the Fourth Amendment differently, the general rule being that it is not required that a copy of the warrant be shown to, or left with, the occupants of the place being searched (see People v. Calabrese (2002) 101 Cal.App.4th 79.), it is likely that there also is no requirement that the conditions triggering an anticipatory search warrant be described in any documents given to the occupants.

While strict compliance with the triggering condition is not always required, where the triggering condition clearly did not occur (e.g., when the undercover agent was to hand-deliver a package containing contraband to defendant, but instead gave it to a woman who answered the door), then the warrant which was subsequently executed was held to be invalid. (United States v. Perkins (6th Cir. TN 2018) 887 F.3rd 272.)

- Sneak and Peek Warrants: A "sneak and peek" warrant is one which authorizes surreptitious entry of a premises, without notice, often during the nighttime, and provides that objects of the search are not to be seized but may only be noted, photographed, copied or otherwise recorded.

Some courts, particularly the Federal Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, are critical of such warrants for failure to require notice to the occupants, but have reluctantly upheld them. (See United States v. Freitas (9th Cir. 1986) 800 F.2nd 1451; United States v. Johns (9th Cir. 1998) 851 F.2nd 1131, 1134-1135.)

The federal courts are concerned that a "sneak and peak" warrant violates Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 41. Rule 41 requires that the officer executing the warrant either give to the owner of the searched premises a copy of the warrant and a receipt for the property taken, or leave the copy and receipt on the premises. It also requires that the inventory be made in the presence of the owner of the premises "or in the presence of at least one credible person other than the applicant for the warrant."

> However, "a violation of Rule 41 . . . does not lead to suppression of evidence unless: (1) it is a 'fundamental' violation—that is, a violation that 'in effect, renders the search unconstitutional under traditional fourth amendment standards' [Citation], (2) 'the search might not have occurred or would not have been so abrasive if the Rule had been followed [Citation]' or (3) 'there is evidence of intentional and deliberate disregard of a provision of the Rule.' [Citation]" (United States v. Johns, supra., at p. 1134.)

Other courts have approved sneak and peak warrants so long as delayed notice is given, after approval by the magistrate that there is good cause for the delay. (United States v. Villegas (2nd Cir. 1990) 899 F.2nd 1324, 1327.)

> Note: No California case has ruled upon the legality of such a procedure.

The Supreme Court, however, although never directly discussing the issue, has intimated that notice may be delayed if to do otherwise might defeat the purpose of the warrant. (Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347, 355, fn. 16 [88 S.Ct. 507; 19 L.Ed.2nd 576, 584]; discussing the lack of need for "prior notice" in a wiretap case.)

- Pen. Code § 1524.1: AIDS Testing: A search warrant requiring a criminal suspect to submit to a blood test for the HIV virus may be issued by the court after a request by a victim and a hearing showing probable cause to believe that the accused committed a charged offense, and probable cause to believe that blood, semen, or any other bodily fluid capable of transmitting HIV has been transferred from the accused to the victim.

This provision is for the benefit of the victim, and, per the requirements of the section, is not intended to serve as an aid in the prosecution of any criminal suspect. (Pen. Code § 1524.1(a))

A judge may approve a search warrant upon finding probable cause to believe the defendant committed a crime and that the AIDS virus has been transferred from the accused to the victim (Subd. (b)(1)), or the defendant is charged with one or more of a specified list of sex offenses and there exists a police report alleging an as of yet uncharged listed sex offense. (Subd. (b)(2))

A declaration by the victim's mother "on information and belief," even though not being based on her personal knowledge, was found to be legally sufficient to support a search warrant pursuant to this section. Hearsay may be used to support the affidavit required by this section. (Humphrey v. Appellate Division of the Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal.4th 569.)

Because such a warrant is concerned with the public safety, such a warrant comes within the less stringent requirement of a "Special Needs" search. (Id., a pp. 574-575.) (See below.)

- Pen. Code § 1524.2(b): Records of Foreign Corporations Providing Electronic Communications or Remote Computing Services: Foreign corporations doing business in California, providing electronic communications or remote computing services to the general public, must respond to a search warrant issued by a California court and properly served, when asked for records revealing the identity of customers using the services, data stored by, or on behalf of, the customer, the customer's usage of those services, the recipient or destination of communications sent to or from those customers, or the content of those communications.

Definitions:

"Electronic communications services" and "remote computing services" is to be construed in accordance with the federal Electronic Communications Privacy Act: 18 U.S.C. §§ 2701 et seq.

18 U.S.C. § 2701 refers to 18 U.S.C. § 2501, subdivision (15) of which defines "electronic communication service" as a "service which provides to users thereof the ability to send or receive wire or electronic communications."

18 U.S.C. § 2501(1), (18): "Wire communication" includes "any aural transfer (i.e., one containing the human voice) made in whole or in part through the use of facilities for the transmission of communications by the aid of wire, cable, or other like connection between the point of origin and the point of reception (including the use of such connection in a switching station) . . . ."

This includes telephone conversations. (Briggs v. American Air Filter Co., Inc. (5th Cir. 1980) 630 F.2nd 414; United States v. Harpel (10th Cir. 1974) 493 F.2nd 346.)

A "foreign corporation" is one that is qualified to do business in California pursuant to Corp. Code § 2105, although based in another state.

Per Corp. Code § 2105, foreign corporations must consent to service of process as a condition of doing business in California.

"Properly served" means that a search warrant has been delivered by hand, or in a manner reasonably allowing for proof of delivery if delivered by United States mail, overnight delivery service, or facsimile to a person or entity listed in Corp. Code § 2110, or any other means specified by the recipient of the search warrant, including email or submission via an Internet web portal that the recipient has designated for the purpose of service of process. (Subd. (a)(6))

Corp. Code § 2110 requires that an agent, in California, identified by the corporation as the person responsible for accepting service of process, including search warrants, be served.

Providing the Requested Information: The foreign corporation is required to provide the information requested within five (5) business days, which may be shortened or extended upon a showing of good cause, and to authenticate such records, thus making them admissible in court per Evid. Code §§ 1561, 1562. (P.C. § 1524.2(b))

Out-of-State Warrants: The section further requires California corporations to honor out-of-state search warrants as if issued within this state. (Pen. Code § 1524.2(c))

- Pen. Code § 1524.3(a): Records of Foreign Corporations Providing Electronic Communications or Remote Computing Services: Foreign corporations providing electronic communications or remote computing services must disclose to a governmental prosecuting or investigating agency, when served with a search warrant issued by a California court pursuant to Pen. Code § 1524(a)(7) (i.e., in misdemeanor cases), records revealing the name, address, local and long distance telephone toll billing records, telephone number or other subscriber number or identity, and length of service of a subscriber to or customer of that service, the types of services the subscriber or customer utilized, and the contents of communication originated by or addressed to the service provider when the governmental entity is granted a search warrant pursuant to Pen. Code § 1524(a)(7).

(b): The search warrant shall be limited to only that information necessary to achieve the objective of the warrant, including by specifying the target individuals or accounts, the applications or services, the types of information, and the time periods covered, as appropriate.

(c) Information obtained through the execution of a search warrant pursuant to this section that is unrelated to the objective of the warrant shall be sealed and not be subject to further review without an order from the court.

(d)

(1) A governmental entity receiving subscriber records or information under this section shall provide notice to a subscriber or customer upon receipt of the requested records. The notification may be delayed by the court, in increments of 90 days, upon a showing that there is reason to believe that notification of the existence of the search warrant may have an "adverse result."

(2) An "adverse result" for purposes of para. (1) means any of the following:

(A) Endangering the life or physical safety of an individual.
(B) Flight from prosecution.
(C) Tampering or destruction of evidence.
(D) Intimidation of a potential witness.
(E) Otherwise seriously jeopardizing an investigation or unduly delaying a trial.

(e) Upon the expiration of the period of delay for the notification, the governmental entity shall, by regular mail or email, provide a copy of the process or request and a notice, to the subscriber or customer. The notice shall accomplish all of the following:

(1) State the nature of the law enforcement inquiry with reasonable specificity.

(2) Inform the subscriber or customer that information maintained for the subscriber or customer by the service provider named in the process or request was supplied to or requested by the governmental entity, and the date upon which the information was supplied, and the request was made.

(3) Inform the subscriber or customer that notification to the subscriber or customer was delayed, and which court issued the order pursuant to which the notification was delayed.

(4) Provide a copy of the written inventory of the property that was taken that was provided to the court pursuant to P.C. § 1537.

(f) A court issuing a search warrant pursuant to P.C. § 1524(a)(7), on a motion made promptly by the service provider, may quash or modify the warrant if the information or records requested are unusually voluminous in nature or compliance with the warrant otherwise would cause an undue burden on the provider.

(g) A provider of wire or electronic communication services or a remote computing service, upon the request of a peace officer, shall take all necessary steps to preserve records and other evidence in its possession pending the issuance of a search warrant or a request in writing and an affidavit declaring an intent to file a warrant to the provider. Records shall be retained for a period of 90 days, which shall be extended for an additional 90-day period upon a renewed request by the peace officer.

(h) No cause of action shall be brought against any provider, its officers, employees, or agents for providing information, facilities, or assistance in good faith compliance with a search warrant.

- Pen. Code §§ 11470-11482: Court Orders Authorizing the Interruption of Communication Services:

  Public Util. Code §§ 7907-7908, dealing with the interruption of communication services, was repealed, effective 1/1/2018 and replaced by more detailed provisions in Pen. Code §§ 11470-11482 (Part 5, Title 1, Chapter 3, Article 7).

  Pen. Code § 11470: Definitions: For the purposes of this article, the following terms have the following meanings:

  (a) "Communication service" means any communication service that interconnects with the public switched telephone network and is required by the Federal Communications Commission to provide customers with 911 access to emergency services.

(b) "Government entity" means every local government, including a city, county, city and county, a transit, joint powers, special, or other district, the state, and every agency, department, commission, board, bureau, or other political subdivision of the state, or any authorized agent thereof.

(c) "Interrupt communication service" means to knowingly or intentionally suspend, disconnect, interrupt, or disrupt a communication service to one or more particular customers or all customers in a geographical area.

(d) "Judicial officer" means a magistrate, judge, commissioner, referee, or any person appointed by a court to serve in one of these capacities, of a superior court.

(e) "Service provider" means a person or entity, including a government entity, that offers a communication service.

Procedures*:

Pen. Code § 11471: Prohibition on the Interruption of Communications Services; Exceptions:

(a) Except as authorized by this article, no government entity, and no service provider acting at the request of a government entity, shall interrupt a communication service for either of the following purposes:

(1) To prevent the communication service from being used for an illegal purpose.

(2) To protect public health, safety, or welfare.

(b) A government entity may interrupt a communication service for a purpose stated in subdivision (a) in any of the following circumstances:

(1) The interruption is authorized by a court order pursuant to P.C. § 11473.

(2) The government entity reasonably determines that (A) the interruption is required to address an extreme emergency situation that involves immediate danger of death or great bodily injury, (B) there is insufficient time, with due diligence, to first obtain a court order under P.C. § 11473, and (C) the interruption meets the grounds for issuance of a court order under P.C. § 11473. A government entity acting pursuant to this paragraph shall comply with P.C. § 11475.

(3) Notwithstanding P.C. §§ 591, 631, or 632, or Pub. Util. Code § 7906, a supervising law enforcement official with jurisdiction may require that a service provider interrupt a communication service that is available to a person if (A) the law enforcement official has probable cause to believe that the person is holding hostages and is committing a crime, or is barricaded and is resisting apprehension through the use or threatened use of force, and (B) the purpose of the interruption is to prevent the person from communicating with anyone other than a peace officer or a person authorized by a peace officer. This paragraph does not authorize the interruption of communication service to a wireless device other than a wireless device used or available for use by the person or persons involved in a hostage or barricade situation.

Pen. Code § 11472: Application for Court Order:

(a) An application by a government entity for a court order authorizing the interruption of a communication service shall be made in writing upon the personal oath or affirmation of the chief executive of the government entity or his or her designee, to the presiding judge of the superior court or a judicial officer designated by the presiding judge for that purpose.

(b) Each application shall include all of the following information:

(1) The identity of the government entity making the application.

(2) A statement attesting to a review of the application and the circumstances in support of the application by the chief executive officer of the government entity making the application, or his or her designee. This statement shall state the name and office of the person who effected this review.

(3) A full and complete statement of the facts and circumstances relied on by the government entity to justify a reasonable belief that the order should be issued, including the facts and circumstances that support the statements made in paragraphs (4) to (7), inclusive.

(4) A statement that probable cause exists to believe that the communication service to be interrupted is being used or will be used for an unlawful purpose or to assist in a violation of the law. The statement shall expressly identify the unlawful purpose or violation of the law.

(5) A statement that immediate and summary action is needed to avoid serious, direct, and immediate danger to public health, safety, or welfare.

(6) A statement that the proposed interruption is narrowly tailored to the specific circumstances under which the order is made and would not interfere with more communication than is necessary to achieve the purposes of the order.

(7) A statement that the proposed interruption would leave open ample alternative means of communication.

(8) A statement that the government entity has considered the practical disadvantages of the proposed interruption, including any disruption of emergency communication service.

(9) A description of the scope and duration of the proposed interruption. The application shall clearly describe the specific communication service to be interrupted with sufficient detail as to customer, cell sector, central office, or geographical area affected.

(c) The judicial officer may require the applicant to furnish additional testimony or documentary evidence in support of an application for an order under this section.

(d) The judicial officer shall accept a facsimile copy of the signature of any person required to give a personal oath or affirmation pursuant to subdivision (a) as an original signature to the application.

Pen. Code § 11473: Issuance of a Court Order; Necessary Findings:

Upon application made under P.C. § 11472, the judicial officer may enter an ex parte order, as requested or modified, authorizing interruption of a communication service in the territorial jurisdiction in which the judicial officer is sitting, if the judicial officer determines, on the basis of the facts submitted by the applicant, that all of the following requirements are satisfied:

(a) There is probable cause that the communication service is being or will be used for an unlawful purpose or to assist in a violation of the law.

(b) Absent immediate and summary action to interrupt the communication service, serious, direct, and immediate danger to public health, safety, or welfare will result.

(c) The interruption of communication service is narrowly tailored to prevent unlawful infringement of speech that is protected by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution or Section 2 of Article I of the California Constitution, or a violation of any other rights under federal or state law.

(d) The interruption of a communication service would leave open ample alternative means of communication.

Pen. Code § 11474: Contents of a Court Order:

An order authorizing an interruption of a communication service shall include all of the following:

(a) A statement of the court's findings required by P.C. § 11473.

(b) A clear description of the communication service to be interrupted, with specific detail as to the affected service, service provider, and customer or geographical area.

(c) A statement of the period of time during which the interruption is authorized. The order may provide for a fixed duration or require that the government end the interruption when it determines that the interruption is no longer reasonably necessary because the danger that justified the interruption has abated. If the judicial officer finds that probable cause exists that a particular communication service is being used or will be used as part of a continuing criminal enterprise, the court may order the permanent termination of that service and require that the terminated service not be referred to another communication service.

(d) A requirement that the government entity immediately serve notice on the service provider when the interruption is to cease.

Pen. Code § 11475: Required Actions of a Government Entity Interrupting a Communication Service; Application for a Court Order; Statement of Intent:

A government entity that interrupts a communication service pursuant to P.C. § 11471(b)(2) shall take all of the following steps:

(a) Apply for a court order under P.C. § 11472 without delay. If possible, the application shall be filed within six hours after commencement of the interruption. If that is not possible, the application shall be filed at the first reasonably available opportunity, but in no event later than 24 hours after commencement of an interruption of a communication service. If an application is filed more than six hours after commencement of an interruption of a communication service, the application shall include a declaration, made under penalty of perjury, stating the reason for the delay.

(b) Prepare a signed statement of intent to apply for a court order. The statement of intent shall clearly describe the extreme emergency situation and the specific communication service to be interrupted. If a government entity does not apply for a court order within six hours, the government entity shall submit a copy of the signed statement of intent to the court within six hours.

(c) Provide conspicuous notice of the application for a court order on the government entity's Internet Web site without delay, unless the circumstances that justify an interruption of a communication service without first obtaining a court order also justify not providing the notice.

Pen. Code § 11476: Interruption of Communication Services for a Geographical Area; Notification to the Governor's Office of Emergency Services:

(a) If an order issued pursuant to P.C. § 11473 or a signed statement of intent prepared pursuant to P.C. § 11475 would authorize the interruption of a communication service for all customers of the interrupted communication service within a geographical area, the government entity shall serve the order or statement on the Governor's Office of Emergency Services.

(b) The Governor's Office of Emergency Services shall have policy discretion on whether to request that the federal government authorize and effect the proposed interruption.

Pen. Code § 11477: Notice to the Service Provider and the Customer:

If an order issued pursuant to P.C. § 11473 or a signed statement of intent prepared pursuant to P.C. § 11475 is not governed by P.C. § 11476, the government entity shall serve the order or statement on both of the following persons:

(a) The appropriate service provider's contact for receiving requests from law enforcement, including receipt of state or federal warrants, orders, or subpoenas.

(b) The affected customer, if the identity of the customer is known. When serving an affected customer, the government entity shall provide notice of the opportunity for judicial review under P.C. § 11479.

Pen. Code § 11478: Civil Liability; Designation of a Security Employee; Compliance with PUC or Federal Communication Commission Rules and Notification Requirements:

(a) Good faith reliance by a service provider on a court order issued pursuant to P.C. § 11473, a signed statement of intent prepared pursuant to P.C. § 11475, or the instruction of a supervising law enforcement officer acting pursuant to P.C. §11471(b)(3) shall constitute a complete defense for the service provider against any action brought as a result of the interruption of a communication service authorized by that court order, statement of intent, or instruction.

(b) A communications service provider shall designate a security employee and an alternate security employee, to provide all required assistance to law enforcement officials to carry out the purposes of this article.

(c) A service provider that intentionally interrupts communication service pursuant to this article shall comply with any rule or notification requirement of the Public Utilities Commission (PUC) or Federal Communications Commission, or both, and any other applicable provision or requirement of state or federal law.

Pen. Code § 11479: Customer's Remedies:

(a) A person whose communication service has been interrupted pursuant to this article may petition the superior court to contest the grounds for the interruption and restore the interrupted service.

(b) The remedy provided in this section is not exclusive. Other laws may provide a remedy for a person who is aggrieved by an interruption of a communication service authorized by this chapter.

Pen. Code § 11480: Legislature's Finding and Declaration:

The Legislature finds and declares that ensuring that California users of any communication service not have that service interrupted, and thereby be deprived of 911 access to emergency services or a means to engage in constitutionally protected expression, is a matter of statewide concern and not a municipal affair, as that term is used in Section 5 of Article XI of the California Constitution.

Pen. Code § 11481: Exceptions:

(a) This article does not apply to any of the following actions:

(1) The interruption of a communication service with the consent of the affected customer.

(2) The interruption of a communication service pursuant to a customer service agreement, contract, or tariff.

(3) The interruption of a communication service to protect the security of the communication network or other computing resources of a government entity or service provider.

(4) The interruption of a communication service to prevent unauthorized wireless communication by a prisoner in a state or local correctional facility, including a juvenile facility.

(5) The interruption of a communication service to transmit an emergency notice that includes, but is not limited to, an Amber Alert, a message transmitted through the federal Emergency Alert System, or a message transmitted through the federal Wireless Emergency Alert System.

(6) An interruption of a communication service pursuant to a statute that expressly authorizes an interruption of a communication service, including B&P Code §§ 149 and 7099.10, and Publ. Util. Code §§ 2876, 5322, and 5371.6.

(7) An interruption of communication service that results from the execution of a search warrant.

(b) Nothing in this section provides authority for an action of a type listed in subdivision (a) or limits any remedy that may be available under law if an action of a type listed in subdivision (a) is taken unlawfully.

Pen. Code § 11482: The Public Utilities Commission:

This article does not restrict, expand, or otherwise modify the authority of the Public Utilities Commission.

- *Geofence Warrants (AKA; Reverse Location Warrants):

Definition and History: "'A geofence is a virtual fence or perimeter around a physical location. Like a real fence, a geofence creates a separation between that location and the area around it. … [¶] It can be any size or shape, even a straight line between two points. [¶] Geofences are created using mapping software, which allow the user to draw the geofence over the desired geographic area. It is made up of a collection of coordinates (i.e., latitude and longitude) or in the case of a circular geofence one point that forms the center.'" (fn. 1, omitted) [¶] "'Geofence warrants (sometimes called 'reverse location searches') are official requests by law enforcement authorities to access the device location data gathered by large tech companies like Google. The warrants specify a time and geographic area, and require the companies to turn over information on any devices that were in that area at that time. While this data is typically anonymized, it can be used in conjunction with other investigative techniques to tie devices to specific users—and identify persons of interest in a criminal investigation.'" (fn. 2, omitted) [¶] "'The government filed its first geofence search warrant in 2016, and by the end of 2019, Google was receiving about 180 search warrant requests per week from law enforcement officials across the country. … Between 2018 and 2020, Google received about 20,000 geofence warrant requests for data, including over 11,500 in 2020 alone.'" (fn. 3, omitted) (People v. Meza (2023) 90 Cal.App.5th 520, 526)

The omitted footnotes above provide the following resources:

1. Verizon Connect, What Is A Geofence? <https://www.verizonconnect.com/glossary/what-is-a-geofence/#:~:text=A%20geofence%20is%20a%20virtual,straight%20line%20between%20two%20points> [as of April 13, 2023], archived at < https://perma.cc/A3A6-NPZ9>.

2. SecureMac, What Are Geofence Warrants? (Sept. 8, 2020) <https://www.securemac.com/blog/what-is-geofencing> [as of April 13, 2023], archived at <https://perma.cc/74XS-KWGZ>.

3. Owsley, The Best Offense Is A Good Defense: Fourth Amendment Implications of Geofence Warrants (2022) 50 Hofstra L.Rev. 829, 834; see also Brief of Amicus Curiae Google LLC in Support of Neither Party, filed December 20, 2019 in United States v. Chatrie (E.D.Va. 2019, No. 3:19-cr-00130-MHL) (Google Amicus Brief) ("Google has observed over a 1,500% increase in the number of geofence requests it received in 2018 compared to 2017; and to date, the rate has increased over 500% from 2018 to 2019").

See also Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, at pp. 22, 27, & 30-32, for a detailed description of what a geofence warrant is, and—in excruciating detail—how it works.)

Case Law: People v. Meza (2023) 90 Cal.App.5th 520, was the first California case decision (state or federal) dealing with the writing and execution of a geofence search warrant.

Probable Cause: In the warrant affidavit, the affiant noted in Meza (at p. 528) that "I know most people in today's society possess cellular phones and other items (e.g. tablets, watches, laptops) used to communicate electronically. . . . Most people carry cellular phones on their person and will carry them whenever they leave their place of residence." In addition, the affiant explained: "Suspects involved in criminal activity will typically use cellular phones to communicate when multiple suspects are involved." Therefore, the affiant concluded that identification of individuals in a murder victim's vicinity on the day of the murder would assist investigators in locating the drivers of the vehicles involved in the murder, who investigators believed had been following the victim throughout the morning. The Court, in concluding that this was sufficient to establish probable cause, held (at pp. 536-537): "It was reasonable for the magistrate to conclude the perpetrators were carrying cellphones the morning of the murder and used them in coordinating their movements. Not only did (the affiant) opine, based on his training and experience, that criminal suspects use cell phones to coordinate criminal activity, but also such an inference was reasonable in today's society, especially given the suspected movement of the individuals to various locations in separate vehicles."

Particularity: See also People v. Meza, supra, at pgs. 637-538, discussing the "particularity" requirement as it relates to geofence search warrants, noting at pg. 536, fn. 10, that the United States Supreme Court, in Carpenter v. United States (June 22, 2018) ___ U.S. ___, [201 L.Ed.2nd 507; 138 S.Ct. 2206, 2219], "has suggested in a different context that an individual has a right to privacy regarding his or her current and historical location;" i.e., retrieval of wireless carrier cell tower data to determine suspect's location "invaded [suspect's] reasonable expectation of privacy in the whole of his physical movements."

> "Particularity is the requirement that the warrant must clearly state what is sought." (People v. Meza, supra, at p. 535, quoting In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Dec. 10, 1987 (9th Cir. 1991) 926 F.2nd 847, 856.)
>
> "'(T)he "purpose of the "particularity" requirement of the Fourth Amendment is to avoid general and exploratory searches by requiring a particular description of the items to be seized.' (People v. Bradford (1997) 15 Cal.4th 1229, 1296 . . . .) 'However, a warrant "need only be reasonably specific" [citation], and the "specificity required 'varies depending on the circumstances of the case and the type of items involved.'"' (People v. Robinson . . . ((2010)) 47 Cal.4th (1104,) at p. 1132 ['particularity "is a flexible concept, reflecting the degree of detail available from the facts known to the affiant and presented to the issuing magistrate"'].) "[T]his requirement is held to be satisfied if the warrant imposes a meaningful restriction upon the objects to be seized."' (People v. Frank (1985) 38 Cal.3rd 711, 724 . . . .) In other words, '[t]he description in a search warrant must be sufficiently definite that the officer conducting the search "can, with reasonable effort ascertain and identify the place intended." [Citation.] Nothing should be left to the discretion of the officer.' (People v. Dumas (1973) 9 Cal.3rd 871, 880 . . .]; see also United States v. Blakeney (4th Cir. 2020) 949 F.3rd 851, 863 [warrants met particularity requirement where they 'describe the items to be seized with enough particularity to constrain the > discretion of the executing officers and prevent a general search']; United States v. Collins (9th Cir. 1987) 830 F.2nd 145, 145–146 [warrant not sufficiently particular where it contained an incorrect address and imprecise description, resulting in search of the wrong house].)" (People v. Meza, supra, at p. 537; finding that a geofence warrant had failed to meet the particularity requirement.)

Breath: The Meza court (at pp. 539-543) also found the geofence search warrant to be overbroad: "In determining whether a warrant is overbroad courts consider 'whether probable cause existed to seize all items of a category described in the warrant' and 'whether the government could have described the items more particularly in light of the information available to it at the time the warrant issued.'" (quoting United States v. Shi (9th Cir. 2008) 525 F.3rd 709, 731–732; and referencing People v. Hepner (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 761, 778.)

> Finding the warrant to run afoul of both of these requirements, the Meza Court notes that:
>
> > "First, the warrant authorized the identification of any individual within six large search areas without any particularized probable cause as to each person or their location."
> >
> > "Second, law enforcement officials failed to draw the search boundaries as narrowly as they could have given the information available."
> >
> > "The timeframes designated in the geofence warrant were also not narrowly tailored." (pg. 540.)
> >
> > "The warrant here, authorizing the search of more than 20 acres total over a cumulative period of more than five hours in residential and commercial areas did not meet this fundamental threshold requirement." (pg. 541.)

Good Faith: "(T)he [United States] Supreme Court held that when 'an officer acting with objective good faith has obtained a search warrant from a judge or magistrate and acted within its scope,' the 'marginal or nonexistent benefits' produced by suppressing the evidence obtained 'cannot justify the substantial costs of exclusion.'" (United States v. Leon (1984) 468 U.S. 897, 920-922.) In the Meza case, at the time the warrant at issue here was sought, there was very little case law providing the officers with guidance on the obtaining of a geofence search warrant. For this reason, the defendants' convictions were upheld despite the constitutional violations noted above. (pgs. 543-545.)

The California Electronic Communications Privacy Act (or CalECPA): Pen. Code §§ 1546-1546.4: The Court rejected defendants' arguments to the effect that a geofence warrant violates the CalECPA. Specifically, the Court held that (1) it is not necessary under CalECPA to specifically target specific individuals or accounts. Rather, CalECPA requires only that a warrant must describe with particularity the information to be seized as is "appropriate and reasonable" to the case at issue. (P.C. § 1546.1(d)(1)) The warrant in this case described the target individuals and accounts with the greatest degree of particularity available to investigators; i.e., individuals whose devices were located within the search boundaries at certain times. There is no requirement in the statute that a suspect's name or other identifying information be included in the warrant to ensure its validity. (2) The Court further held that the warrant was not defective merely because it failed to specify the "applications and services covered" by the warrant. (See Pen. Code § 1524.3(b)) In a geofence warrant, the government is not seeking data or content related to a particular application or service. Rather, what is sought is the service provider's (i.e., Google's) record of all electronic contacts with that device, regardless of which applications or services originated the contact. Accordingly, the failure to name a particular application or service in this instance did not result in a violation of CalECPA. (3) Lastly, the Court rejected the defendants' argument to the effect that any constitutional infirmities in the warrant create an independent violation of CalECPA. In so ruling, the Court noted simply that, "(t)here is nothing in the cited language that, without more, converts a Fourth Amendment violation into a statutory violation." (pgs. 545-546.)

Other Cases: Several Seventh Circuit (Illinois) decisions have issued memorandum opinions, two denying applications for such a warrant and one granting the application, each discussing the constitutional issues in their use:

In In re Search of Info. Stored at Premises Controlled by Google (7th Cir. U.S. Dist. Ct., Nor. Dist., East. Div., Of Ill., Aug. 24, 2020) 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152712, a federal magistrate rejected the government's application for such a warrant, ruling in a Fourth Amendment case that the Government's amended application for a search warrant to obtain Goggle's historical information lacked probable cause since the warrant harnessed the technology of the geofence to generate a list of device IDs that the Government may easily use to learn the subscriber identities, noting that such a warrant is unconstitutionally overbroad. Secondly, the items to be seized were not particularly described.

In In re Search of Info. Stored at Premises Controlled by Google (7th Cir. U.S. Dist. Ct., Nor. Dist., East Div., of Ill., 2020) 2020 U.S.Dist. LEXIS 165185, issued by another magistrate, issued a similar ruling, finding the government's application for such a search warrant to violate the constitutional restrictions on overbreadth and particularity.

In In re Search Warrant Application for Geofence Location Data Stored at Google Concerning an Arson Investigation (7th Cir. U.S. Dist. Ct., Nor. Dist., East. Div., of Ill., Oct. 29, 2020) 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 201248.), however, the magistrate granted the agents' application for a search warrant, describing how this warrant (the warrant itself remaining sealed) differs from the two previous denials. In this third search warrant application, the federal went to great lengths in discussing how the agents were able to minimize the constitutional issues by limiting their warrant application in the time span described (from between 15 to 37 minutes, respectively). They also minimized the geographical locations for which Google's data was to be concerned, typically to a specific roadway or commercial parking lot. As described by the magistrate, the agents "narrowly crafted (the time spans and locations) to ensure that location data, with a fair probability, will capture evidence of the crime only." In writing the warrant application in such a manner, the magistrate noted that the agents limited the warrant request in its scope as much as possible, thus minimizing the constitutional issues.

Other District Court decisions:

A magistrate denied a geofence warrant application because search area included two public streets and an uninvolved business with no explanation as to why suspects might be found in those locations and contained no justification for the time period requested. (In re Search of Information That Is Stored at the Premises Controlled by Google, LLC (D.Kan. 2021) 542 F.Supp.3rd 1153.)

A geofence warrant application was denied because the search area included unrelated business, public street, residential units and parking lot during 90 minute period despite no showing all individuals in those locations were involved in the offense. (In re Search of: Info. Stored at Premises Controlled by Google (N.D.Ill. 2020) 481 F.Supp.3rd 730.)

Where police were investigating criminal activity at a business located in an industrial area, they obtained surveillance footage from inside the business showing the suspects engaging in criminal activity. Based on the precise locations of the suspects and the times depicted in the footage, police designated a geofence area of less than a quarter of an acre, including the front-half of the business and the parking lot but excluding another business in the building and the road bordering the building. The time period in the warrant totaled 185 minutes in increments of two to 27 minutes on 8 different days based on when police knew the suspects had been present. The warrant affidavit also explained that, during the designated time periods, the suspects were either alone inside the business or were in the proximity of "'on average' no more than 2 or 3 others." (at p. 73.) The magistrate judge granted the warrant application, finding the government had "appropriately contoured the temporal and geographic windows in which it is seeking location data" and the warrant did not "have the potential of sweeping up the location data of a substantial number of uninvolved persons." (In re Search of Information that Is Stored at the Premises Controlled by Google LLC (D.D.C. 2021) 579 F.Supp.3rd 62.)

A geofence warrant application was granted where the search area excluded residences and commercial buildings, the time periods sought were approximately 15 to 30 minutes per location, and there was evidence that the premises in search areas were unoccupied during relevant time periods. Per the Court: "(T)he government has structured the geofence zones to minimize the potential for capturing location data for uninvolved individuals and maximize the potential for capturing location data for suspects and witnesses." (In re Search Warrant Application for Geofence Location Data Stored at Google Concerning Arson Investigation (N.D.Ill. 2020) 497 F.Supp.3rd 345.)

Defendant's motion to suppress was denied where a geofence warrant had sought identification of individuals in the United States Capitol Building over a four and a half hour period on January 6, 2021. The Court found that the warrant was narrowly tailored to include individuals improperly inside the Capitol given that the building was closed to the public and the search area excluded nearby grounds, did not include any commercial businesses or residences, and there had been substantial road closures during the relevant time period. (United States v. Rhine (D.D.C. 2023, No. 21-0687) 2023 U.S.Dist. Lexis 12308.)

Where a geofence warrant was issued directing Google to search a 17.5-acre area surrounding a bank where a robbery had occurred, with a timeframe for approximately 30 minutes prior to the robbery and 30 minutes after the robbery, a total of one hour, the district court noting that the search area included a church and that the search identified individuals "who may not have been remotely close to the Bank to participate in or witness the robbery," the Federal District Court found the warrant was overbroad because it failed to "include any facts to establish probable cause to collect such broad and intrusive data" from each individual within the search area. (United States v. Chatrie (E.D.Va. 2022) 590 F.Supp.3rd 901.)

Further California Case Law:

Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, followed Meza:

While the Meza decision was still pending, Riverside County Sheriff's detectives were putting together a geofence warrant in a murder case with two suspects. In Price, the Court held that:

The "probable cause" standard was met by the detective noting that cellphones are commonly used by almost everyone, and that co-conspirators will commonly communicate between themselves while using cellphones. (pgs. 38-40.)

The geofence warrant was not overbroad, having limited itself to a minimized geographical area and time span. In so ruling, the Court noted that; "if a geofence warrant is narrowly tailored, in its initial search parameters, or geographic scope and time period, to maximize the probability it will capture only suspects and witnesses, and to minimize searches of location data and identifying information of individuals for whom there is no probable cause to believe were suspects or witnesses (uninvolved individuals), then the discretion afforded to the executing officer by Google's multistep production protocol will be constitutionally immaterial." (pg. 41; citing Arson

Investigation (N.D.Ill. 2020) 497 F.Supp.3rd 345, 360-363.)

> The Court found in Price that the "geofence warrant was a model of particularity in geographic scope and time period," and that "(t)he target location was likewise narrowly tailored to 'minimize the potential for capturing location data for uninvolved individuals.'" (Pg. 43.)

Good Faith: "(E)ven if the geofence warrant is invalid under the Fourth Amendment, the good faith exception applies. No deterrent purpose would be served by suppressing the geofence warrant evidence or its fruits." (Id., at p. 51.)

The California Electronic Communications Privacy Act (or CalECPA): Pen. Code §§ 1546-1546.4: The Court held that the CalECPA did not require the suppression of the evidence obtained as a result of the warrants in this case. Specifically:

> P.C. § 1546.1(d)(1): This statute only requires a warrant for electronic information to describe the information it seeks by "specifying, as appropriate and reasonable, the time periods covered, the target individuals or accounts, the applications or services covered, and the types of information sought . . . ." (Italics added) A geofence warrant seeks to identify target individuals through location data generated from, and accounts and identifying information associated with, devices located in the geofence. The identities of the "target individuals" and their "accounts" with the service provider are unknown to the agency executing a geofence warrant. It is therefore not "appropriate and reasonable" for this type of warrant to identify the individuals or accounts who are the target of the warrant. (pg. 53.)
>
> Also, defendant's argument that pursuant to P.C. § 1546.1(d)(1), the warrant is invalid in that it does not specify the "applications or services covered" by the warrant, was held by the Court to confuse the electronic information the warrant sought (location data emitted from and identifying information associated with devices in the geofence) with applications or services that the devices or the service provider (Google) used to obtain, store, and retrieve the location data and identifying information. These applications and services were merely incidental to the "type of information sought," the location data and identifying information. Quoting People v. Meza (at pg. 546): "With a geofence warrant, . . . the government is not seeking data or content related to a particular application or service. Rather, what is sought is the service provider's record of all electronic contact with that device, regardless of which applications or services originated the contact." Thus, it was not appropriate and reasonable for the geofence warrant to specify the applications or services that the devices or Google used to obtain, store, and retrieve "types of information sought," the location data and identifying information. (Pg. 54.)

The Court also rejected, out of hand, defendant's argument that the warrant failed to include a detailed description of the types of information it sought, as required by P.C. § 1546.1(d)(1). (Pgs. 54-55.)

P.C. § 1546.4(a): This section allows "[a]ny person" to "move to suppress any electronic information obtained or retained in violation of the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution or of [CalECPA]." The Court rejected the defendant's argument that this means that a Fourth Amendment particularity violation also violates CalECPA's particularity requirement. "To the contrary, the remedies provision refers to Fourth

Amendment and CalECPA violations as separate violations, by its use of the disjunctive term "or." The remedies provision does "'nothing more than expressly preserve an individual's existing rights under the federal Constitution.'" (Pg. 55.)

P.C. § 1546.2(a)(1): This section requires a government entity that executes a warrant for electronic information to "serve upon, or deliver to by registered or first-class mail, electronic mail, or other means reasonably calculated to be effective, the identified targets of the warrant … , a notice that informs the recipient that information about the recipient has been compelled or obtained, and states with reasonable specificity the nature of the government investigation under which the information is sought." (Italics added.) The notice must include a copy of the warrant and must be "provided contemporaneously with the execution of [the] warrant." Delayed notice, however, is provided for pursuant to subdivision (b)(1), so long as the court determines that "there is reason to believe that (immediate) notification may have an adverse result, but only for the period of time that the court finds there is reason to believe that the notification may have that adverse result, and not to exceed 90 days." (Italics added.) An "'adverse result'" means "[d]anger to the life or physical safety of an individual," "[f]light from prosecution," "[d]estruction of or tampering with evidence," "[i]ntimidation of potential witnesses," or "[s]erious jeopardy to an investigation or undue delay of a trial." (P.C. § 1546(a).) The court may grant successive extensions of the notice delay period, of up to 90 days for each extension, based on a continued showing of an adverse result. (P.C. § 1546.2(b)(2).) P.C. § 1546.2(b)(3) provides that upon the expiration of the delayed notice period, including extensions, the government entity is required to serve the identified target or targets of the warrant with all of the information described in section 1546.2(a)(1) [notice of the warrant, including the nature of the investigation, and a copy of the warrant], together with copies of or a summary of the information obtained pursuant to the warrant, "including, at a minimum, the number and types of records disclosed, the date and time when the earliest and latest records were created, and a statement of the grounds for the court's determination to grant a delay in notifying the individual." If there is no identified target of a warrant, then within three days of the execution of the warrant, the government entity is required to "submit to the Department of Justice" the information described in P.C.§ 1546.2(a)—notice of the warrant, including the nature of the investigation, and a copy of the warrant (P.C. § 1546.2(c)). If an order delaying notice of the warrant has been issued (P.C. § 1546.2(b)(1)–(2)), then, upon the expiration of the notice delay period, including extensions, the government is required to serve the department with notice of the warrant, including the nature of the investigation, a copy of the warrant, and a copy or summary of all electronic information obtained pursuant to the warrant. (P.C. § 1546.2(c).) The department is required to "publish all those reports on its Internet Web site within 90 days of receipt," but it "may redact names or other personal identifying information from the reports." (Ibid.) Defendant in Price complained of the delay in notification in the instant case.

P.C. §§ § 1546(a), 1546.2(a)(1), (2), & (b)(1) & (2): Notice and Delayed Notice: A government entity that executes a warrant for electronic information to "serve upon, or deliver to by registered or first-class mail, electronic mail, or other means reasonably calculated to be effective, the identified targets of the warrant . . . , a notice that informs the recipient that information about the recipient has been compelled or obtained, and states with reasonable specificity the nature of the government investigation under which the information is sought." However, "[T]he government entity may submit a request supported by a sworn affidavit for an order delaying notification and prohibiting any party providing information from notifying any other party that information has been sought. The court shall issue the order if the court determines that there is reason to believe that notification may have an adverse result, but only for the period of time that the court finds there is reason to believe that the notification may have that adverse result, and not to exceed 90 days." An "'adverse result'" means "[d]anger to the life or physical safety of an individual," "[f]light from prosecution," "[d]estruction of or tampering with evidence," "[i]ntimidation of potential witnesses," or "[s]erious jeopardy to an investigation or undue delay of a trial." The trial court may grant successive extensions of the notice delay period, of up to 90 days for each extension, based on a continued showing of an adverse result. The affiant in Price failed to seek an order for an extension of the already obtained delayed notice. The Court rejected defendant's argument that this required the trial court to suppress the resulting evidence, or that it overcame the prosecution's argument that the officer's "good faith" did not apply. (Pgs. 55-63.)

Business Records*:

Evid. Code § 1560(f): Search Warrants for Business Records; Admissibility in Criminal Proceedings:

> Where a search warrant for business records is served upon the custodian of records or other qualified witness of a business in compliance with P.C.

§ 1524 (listing the various lawful grounds for issuance of a search warrant) regarding a criminal investigation in which the business is neither a party nor the place where any crime is alleged to have occurred, and the search warrant provides that the warrant will be deemed executed if the business causes the delivery of records described in the warrant to the law enforcement agency ordered to execute the warrant, it is sufficient compliance therewith, making such records admissible in evidence if the custodian or other qualified witness delivers by mail or otherwise a true, legible, and durable copy of all of the records described in the search warrant to the law enforcement agency ordered to execute the search warrant, together with the affidavit as described in Evid. Code § 1561 (below) within five days after the receipt of the search warrant or within such other time as is set forth in the warrant.

Evid. Code § 1561: Affidavit of Custodian Of Records for Business Records Obtained via Subpoena Duces Tecum or Search Warrant:

This section allows for the admissibility in a criminal proceeding of business records when obtained via a "subpoena duces tecum" and when accompanied by an affidavit of the custodian or other qualified witness, laying the evidentiary foundation for the admissibility of such records as described in the section, is amended in subd. (a)(2) to include records obtained by a search warrant, as described in Evid. Code § 1560, above.

Pen. Code § 1524.4: Service Providers and Law Enforcement Contact Process:

(a) This section applies to a service provider that is subject to the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (Pen. Code §§ 1546 et seq.) and that operates in California. This section does not apply to a service provider that does not offer services to the general public.

(b)

(1) Every service provider described in subdivision (a) shall maintain a law enforcement contact process that meets the criteria set forth in paragraph (2).

(2) Every service provider described in subdivision (a) shall ensure, at a minimum, that its law enforcement contact process meets all of the following criteria:

(A) Provides a specific contact mechanism for law enforcement personnel.

(B) Provides continual availability of the law enforcement contact process.

(C) Provides a method to provide status updates to a requesting law enforcement agency on a request for assistance.

(3) Every service provider described in subdivision (a) shall, by July 1, 2017, file a statement with the Attorney General describing the law enforcement contact process maintained pursuant to paragraph (1). If a service provider makes a material change to its law enforcement contact process, the service provider shall, as soon as practicable, file a statement with the Attorney General describing its new law enforcement contact process.

(c) The Attorney General shall consolidate the statements received pursuant to this section into one discrete record and regularly make that record available to local law enforcement agencies.

(d) The exclusive remedy for a violation of this section shall be an action brought by the Attorney General for injunctive relief. Nothing in this section shall limit remedies available for a violation of any other state or federal law.

(e) A statement filed or distributed pursuant to this section is confidential and shall not be disclosed pursuant to any state law, including, but not limited to, the California Public Records Act (Gov't. Code §§ 6250 et seq.)

Requirement of a "Neutral and Detached" Magistrate*:

Rule: The lawful issuance of a search warrant requires a "neutral and detached" magistrate, as required by the Fourth Amendment. (Coolidge v. New Hampshire (1971) 403 U.S. 443 [91 S.Ct. 2022; 29 L.Ed.2nd 564].)

"'The task of the issuing magistrate is simply to make a practical, commonsense decision whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit before him, including the "veracity" and "basis of knowledge" of persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place.'" ((People v.) Kraft ((2000)) 23 Cal.4th (978), at pp. 1040-1041.) "The magistrate's determination of probable cause is entitled to deferential review." (Id. at p. 1041.) The search "warrant can be upset only if the affidavit fails as a matter of law to set forth sufficient competent evidence" supporting the finding of probable cause. (People v. Lepere (2023) 91 Cal.App.5th 727, 733; quoting Skelton v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3rd 144, 150.)

Statutory Rules and Case Law:

Pen. Code § 808: Only bench officers who are designated "magistrates" and authorized to issue warrants are judges of the superior courts, justices of the state appellate courts, and justices of the state Supreme Court.

This necessarily excludes court commissioners, judges pro tem, referees, and federal judges.

Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41(b)(1) permits "a magistrate judge with authority in the district . . . to issue a warrant to search for and seize a person or property located within the district."

A "Network Investigative Technique" (i.e., "NIT") warrant issued by a federal magistrate judge in the Eastern District of Virginia exceeded the general territorial scope identified in Fed. Rules of Crim. Proc. 41(b)(1), and was void ab initio, because it authorized a search of an activating computer in California. The NIT mechanism is not a "tracking device," under Rule 41(b)(4), which provides an exception for devices that track the movement of a person or property. However, under the good faith exception, the Fourth Amendment did not require the suppression of the resulting evidence. (United States v. Henderson (9th Cir. 2018) 906 F.3rd 1109, 1113-1120.)

But see United States v. Vortman (9th Cir. 2020) 81 Fed. Appx. 470; unpublished: Defendant's motion for dismissal based on a claim of outrageous government conduct was barred because defendant's actions in using a website to access child pornography were completely voluntary. The government did not threaten, coerce, or prod him to use the website. Upon consideration of the six Black factors (see United States v. Black (9th Cir. 2013) 733 F.3rd 294, 303.), also required a finding that the government's conduct was not outrageous. A network investigative technique (NIT) warrant obtained by the Government (taking over and operating an child porn site) did not violate the Fourth Amendment as it was issued by a neutral magistrate, backed by probable cause, and was sufficiently particular to be constitutional. While the NIT warrant violated Fed. Rules of Crim. Pro. 41(b), suppression was not warranted because the government's violation was technical, the violation did not prejudice defendant, and the government did not deliberately disregard Rule 41(b) (limiting the general territorial scope of a warrant).

Federal Rule 41 is inapplicable to the situation where federal officers are seeking evidence of a violation of state law only, intending to file criminal charges in state court. (United States v. Artis (9th Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 1123, 1130; FBI agents, as members of a federal and state joint task force.)

Also, Rule 41 is inapplicable to "searches conducted by state officers with state warrants issued by state judges, with minimal or no federal involvement," even if federal prosecution results. (United States v. Piver (9th Cir. 1990) 899 F.2nd 881, 882. See also United States v. $186,416.00 in United States Currency (9th Cir. 2010) 590 F.3rd 942, 948.)

Note: The idea behind this theory is to insure that there is an impartial arbitrator between an over-zealous law enforcement officer, seeking to intrude upon a person's privacy rights, and the person whose privacy rights are about to be intruded upon, who may fairly and objectively determine whether probable cause exists sufficient to justify the intended government intrusion.

Violation: Violations of this rule have occurred when:

The state attorney general in charge of the investigation issued the warrant in his capacity as a justice of the peace. (Coolidge v. New Hampshire (1971) 403 U.S. 443 [91 S.Ct. 2022; 29 L.Ed.2nd 564].)

The magistrate personally participated in the search. (Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New York (1979) 442 U.S. 319 [99 S.Ct. 2319; 60 L.Ed.2nd 920].)

The magistrate was paid a fee for each warrant issued, with no compensation for warrants which were not approved. (Connally v. Georgia (1977) 429 U.S. 245 [97 S.Ct. 546; 50 L.Ed.2nd 444].)

The investigating deputy sheriff had the warrant issued by his father, a judge. (O'Connor v. Superior Court (1998) 65 Cal.App.4th 113: However, this warrant was saved by application of the "good faith" rule.)

No Violation:

Choosing to seek a search warrant from a state court magistrate instead of a federal magistrate in order avoid a federally imposed rule (See United States v. Comprehensive Drug Testing, Inc. (9th Cir. 2010) 621 F.3rd 1162, recommending a certain protocol for warrants involving computerized data) does not negate a finding of good faith so long as not done with the "knowledge . . . that the search was unconstitutional under the Fourth Amendment." (United States v. Schesso (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 1040, 1050-1051.)

Additional Case Law:

> Because an application for a search warrant ordinarily would be presented ex parte, allowing no opportunity to contest issuance of the search warrant and no opportunity to peremptorily challenge the magistrate authorizing it, such ex parte determinations are not the result of a hearing upon a contested issue within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6(a)(2), and a peremptory challenge as contemplated by Pen. Code § 1538.5(b), to the magistrate who issued the search warrant therefore could lie. A peremptory challenge in this case was held to be timely made when it was made at least five days before the hearing because the application for a search warrant was not a hearing. The relevant hearing for purposes of determining timeliness was accordingly the hearing on the motion challenging the warrant. The peremptory challenge, therefore, was timely filed prior to that hearing. (Los Angeles County Metropolitan Transportation Authority v. Superior Court (2021) 68 Cal.App.5th 920.)

Composition of a Search Warrant*:

Three Parts: A search warrant comes in three parts:

- The Warrant itself.
- The Affidavit to the Search Warrant.
- The Receipt and Inventory (or "Return").

The Warrant: The Warrant Itself, signed by a magistrate, directing a peace officer to search a "particular" person, place or vehicle, for a "particular" person, thing, or list of property.

> Pen Code §§ 1523, 1529: Contents: The search warrant must include the following:
>
> - The name of every person whose affidavit has been taken.
>
> - The statutory grounds for issuance. (See Pen Code §§ 1524, 1524.2 and/or 1524.3.)
>
> - A description with reasonable particularity of the persons, places and vehicles to be searched.
>
> - A description with reasonable particularity of the persons, things or property to be seized.
>
> > A warrant that fails to include a list of the things to be seized, at least where the list is not in an affidavit or other attachment that is incorporated by reference and which then accompanies the warrant to the scene of the search, is "facially deficient," and in violation of the Fourth Amendment. (Groh v. Ramirez (2004) 540 U.S. 551 [124 S.Ct. 1284; 157 L.Ed.2nd 1068].)

Failure to list the property to be seized, or at the least a reference to, and incorporation of, a list of the property, is a Fourth Amendment violation, and constitutes a defect the officers writing the warrant, and/or supervising the search, should have been aware of. (Ramirez v. Butte-Silver Bow County (9th Cir. 2002) 298 F.3rd 1022; finding that the affiant and supervising ATF agent did not have qualified immunity from civil liability in a civil suit for failing to list the property to be seized on the face of the warrant.)

And see United States v. Celestine (9th Cir. 2003) 324 F.3rd 1095, describing "the policies that underlie the warrant requirement; providing the property owner assurance of the lawful authority of the executing officer, his need to search, and the limits of his power to search."

- Authorization for a nighttime search (if necessary; see Pen. Code § 1533).

- The signature of the magistrate.

- The date issued.

Pen. Code § 1524(a)(1) through (20): Statutory Grounds for Issuance:

(1): When the property to be seized was stolen or embezzled.

Note: Includes misdemeanors.

(2): When the property or things to be seized were used as the means of committing a felony.

(3): When the property or things to be seized are in the possession of any person with the intent to use it as a means of committing a public offense, or in the possession of another to whom he may have delivered it for the purpose of concealing it or preventing them from being discovered.

The term "public offense" includes misdemeanors. (People v. Garcia (1969) 274 Cal.App.2nd 100, 103.)

(4): When the property or things to be seized consist of any item or constitute any evidence that tends to show a felony has been committed, or tends to show that a particular person has committed a felony.

(5): When the property or things to be seized consists of evidence which tends to show that sexual exploitation of a child (per P.C. § 311.3), or possession of matter depicting sexual conduct of a person under the age of 18 years (per P.C. § 311.11), has occurred or is occurring. (See In re Duncan (1987) 189 Cal.App.3rd 1348.)

(6): When there is a warrant to arrest a person.

(7): When a provider of an electronic communication service or remote computing service has records or evidence, as specified in P.C. § 1524.3, showing that property was stolen or embezzled constituting a misdemeanor, or that property or things are in the possession of any person with the intent to use them as a means of committing a misdemeanor public offense, or in the possession of another to whom he or she may have delivered them for the purpose of concealing them or preventing their discovery.

(8): When the property or things to be seized include an item or any evidence that tends to show *a violation of Labor Code § 3700.5, or tends to show that a particular person has violated L.C. § 3700.5.

> Labor Code § 3700.5 deals with the failure to secure the payment of compensation, which is defined as "every benefit or payment conferred by this division upon an injured employee, or in the event of his or her death, upon his or her dependents, without regard to negligence." (L.C. § 3207)

(9): When the property or things to be seized include a firearm or any other deadly weapon at the scene of, or at the premises occupied or under the control of the person arrested in connection with, a domestic violence incident involving a threat to human life or a physical assault as provided in P.C. § 18250. This section does not affect warrantless seizures already authorized under the statute.

> Note: Pen. Code § 18250 gives authority to any of the law enforcement officers listed in the section who is at the scene of a domestic violence incident involving a threat to human life or a physical assault, and who is serving a protective order as defined in Fam. Code § 6218, or is serving a gun violence restraining order issued pursuant to P.C. §§ 18100 et seq., to take temporary custody of any firearm or other deadly weapon in plain sight or discovered pursuant to a consensual or other lawful search as necessary for the protection of the peace officer or other persons present.

(10): When the property or things to be seized include a firearm or any other deadly weapon that is owned by, or in possession of, or in the custody or control of, *a person described in W&I § 8102(a).

Note: W&I § 8102(a) lists any person who:

- Has been detained or apprehended for examination of his or her mental condition (e.g., per W&I § 5150); or

- Is a person described in W&I § 8100 ((a) mental patients receiving inpatient treatment, or (b) mental patients after having communicated a threat to a psychotherapist.)

- Is a person described in W&I § 8103 ((a) persons adjudicated to be a danger to others or as a mentally disordered sex offender, or (b) persons found to be not guilty by reason of insanity in serious cases, or (c) persons found to be not guilty by reason of insanity in other cases, or (d) persons found mentally incompetent to stand trial, or (e) persons placed under conservatorship, or (f) persons taken into custody as a danger to themselves or others, or (g) persons certified for intensive treatment.

(11): When the property or things to be seized include a firearm that is owned by, or in possession of, or in the custody or control of, a person who is subject to the *prohibitions regarding firearms pursuant to Fam. Code § 6389, if a prohibited firearm is possessed, owned, in the custody of, or controlled by a person against whom a protective order has been issued pursuant to Fam. Code § 6218, the person has been lawfully served with that order, and the person has failed to relinquish the firearm as required by law.

Fam. Code § 6389 makes it illegal for a person subject to a protective order to own, possess, purchase, or receive a firearm or ammunition while the protective order is in effect. Accordingly, firearms that are within the possession or control of the restrained person must be relinquished: "Upon issuance of a protective order, as defined in Section 6218, the court shall order the respondent to relinquish any firearm in the respondent's immediate possession or control or subject to the respondent's immediate possession or control." (Subd. (c)(1)) The statute establishes specific procedures for firearms surrender. The relinquishment process "shall occur by immediately surrendering the firearm in a safe manner, upon request of any law enforcement officer, to the control of the officer, after being served with the protective order." (Subd. (c)(2)) "Alternatively," if there is no request for relinquishment, "the relinquishment shall occur within 24 hours of being served with the order, by either surrendering the firearm in a safe manner to the control of local law enforcement officials, or by selling the firearm to a licensed gun dealer . . . ." (Ibid.) Within 48 hours of service of the order, the restrained person must file a receipt with the court that issued the order and the law enforcement agency that served it showing that the firearm was surrendered to law enforcement or sold to a licensed gun dealer. (Ibid.)

Fam. Code § 6218 defines the term "protective order" as including orders enjoining specific acts of abuse (Fam. Code § 6320), excluding a person from a dwelling (Fam. Code § 6321), and, as relevant here, enjoining other specified behavior (Fam. Code § 6322).

Case Law: See People v. Superior Court* [Corbett] (2017) 8 Cal.App.5th 670, 686-693: The fact that a search warrant was eventually obtained to search defendant's home for firearms, after an earlier warrantless search was conducted, but when the warrant affidavit did not specify that the warrant was obtained pursuant to Pen. Code § 1524(a)(11), did not trigger the inevitable discovery doctrine.

(12): A search warrant may be issued for the use of a tracking device when the information to be received from the tracking device constitutes evidence that tends to show that a felony has been committed or is being committed, or a misdemeanor violation of the F&G Code; or a misdemeanor violation of the Pub. Res. Code has been committed or is being committed, or tends to show that a particular person has committed or is committing any of these crimes, or will assist in locating a person who has committed or is committing any of these crimes.

Search Warrant Requirement: A tracking device search warrant shall be executed pursuant to the provisions of Pen. Code § 1534(b).

Pen. Code § 1534(b): Tracking Device Search Warrant Procedures:

(1): A tracking device search warrant issued pursuant to Pen. Code § 1524(a)(12) (see above) shall identify the person or property to be tracked and shall specify a reasonable length of time, not to exceed 30 days from the date the warrant is issued, that the device may be used.

The court may, for good cause, grant one or more extensions for the time that the device may be used, with each extension lasting for a reasonable length of time, not to exceed 30 days.

The search warrant shall command the officer to execute the warrant by installing a tracking device or serving a warrant on a third-party possessor of the tracking data.

The officer shall perform any installation authorized by the warrant during the daytime unless the magistrate, for good cause, expressly authorizes installation at another time.

Execution of the warrant shall be completed no later than 10 days immediately after the date of issuance. A warrant executed within this 10-day period shall be deemed to have been timely executed and no further showing of timeliness need be made. After the expiration of 10 days, the warrant shall be void, unless it has been executed.

(2) An officer executing a tracking device search warrant shall not be required to knock and announce their presence before executing the warrant.

(3) No later than 10 calendar days after the use of the tracking device has ended, the officer executing the warrant shall file a return to the warrant.

(4)

(A) No later than 10 calendar days after the use of the tracking device has ended, the officer who executed the tracking device warrant shall notify the person who was tracked or whose property was tracked pursuant to Pen. Code § 1546.2(a)(1).

Note*: Subd. (a)(2) provides that "(n)otwithstanding paragraph (1), notice is not required if the government entity accesses information concerning the location or the telephone number of an electronic device in order to respond to an emergency 911 call from that device."

(B) Notice under this paragraph may be delayed pursuant to Pen. Code § 1546.2(b).

See "The California Electronic Communications Privacy Act: Pen. Code §§ 1546-1546.4," under "Searches of High Tech Devices" (Chapter 17), below.

(5) An officer installing a device authorized by a tracking device search warrant may install and use the device only within California.

(6)

(A) As used in this section, "tracking device" means any electronic or mechanical device, or software, that permits the tracking of the movement of a person or object.

(B) Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the use of any device or software for the purpose of tracking the movement of a person or object.

(7) As used in this section, "daytime" means the hours between 6 a.m. and 10 p.m. according to local time.

Note: Subdivision (12) of Pen. Code § 1524(a), and Pen. Code § 1534(b), are in response to the U.S. Supreme Court's determination to the effect that the installation and use of a tracking device on a suspect's motor vehicle is a search, under the Fourth Amendment, and requires a search warrant as a general rule. (See United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S.Ct. 945; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911].)

(13) To obtain a blood sample in Veh. Code §§ 23140 (person under age 21 driving with BA of 0.05% or higher), 23152 (DUI), and 23153 (DUI with injury) cases when the person has refused to submit to or has failed to complete a blood test, and the sample will be drawn in a "reasonable, medically approved manner." This new paragraph is not intended to abrogate a court's mandate to determine the propriety of the issuance of a search warrant on a case-by-case basis.

The Supreme Court has held that being arrested for driving while under the influence did not allow for a non-consensual warrantless blood test absent exigent circumstances beyond the fact that the blood was metabolizing at a normal rate. (Missouri v. McNeely (2013) 569 U.S. 141 [133 S.Ct. 1552; 185 L.Ed.2nd 696].)

See "California's Implied Consent Law In Driving Under the Influence (DUI) Cases," under "Warrantless Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 9), above.

(14) The property or things to be seized are firearms or ammunition or both that are owned by, in the possession of, or in the custody or control of a person who is the subject of a gun violence restraining order that has been issued pursuant to Pen. Code §§ 18100 et seq. if a prohibited firearm or ammunition or both is possess, owned, in the custody of, or controlled by a person against whom a gun violence restraining order has been issued, the person has been lawfully serviced with that order, and the person has failed to relinquish the firearm as required by law.

See Pen. Code §§ 18100 et seq., re: Gun Violence Restraining Orders, and Pen. Code § 1542.5: Seizure of a Restrained Person's Firearms During the Execution of a Search Warrant.

(15) The property or things to be seized include a firearm that is owned by, or in the possession of, or in the custody or control of, a person who is subject to the *prohibitions regarding firearms pursuant to Pen. Code §§ 29800 or 29805, and the court has made a finding pursuant to Pen. Code § 29810(c)(3) that the person has failed to relinquish the firearm as required by law.

Note: Pen. Code § 29800 is the firearms prohibition that applies to convicted felons and narcotic drug addicts. Pen. Code § 29805 is the 10-year firearms prohibition for persons convicted of a specified misdemeanor.

Note: Pen. Code § 29810(c)(4), after making the necessary finding as noted in subd. (3), requires the court to issue an order for the search and removal of firearms upon a probable cause finding that the defendant has failed to relinquish firearms.

(16) When the property or things to be seized are controlled substances or a device, contrivance, instrument, or paraphernalia used for unlawfully using or administering a controlled substance pursuant to the authority in H&S § 11472.

Note: H&S § 11472 provides: "Controlled substances and any device, contrivance, instrument, or paraphernalia used for unlawfully using or administering a controlled substance, which are possessed in violation of this division, may be seized by any peace officer and in the aid of such seizure a search warrant may be issued as prescribed by law."

(17) When a sample of the blood of a person constitutes evidence that tends to show a violation of operating a boat or a specified water device under the influence of alcohol or a drug, or with a blood alcohol level of 0.04 percent or more, or while addicted to any drug (Harb. & Nav. Code § 655(b), (c), (d), (e), and (f)), and the person has refused an officer's request to submit to, or has failed to complete, a blood test; and the sample will be drawn in a "reasonable, medically approved manner."

This subdivision also provides that this is not intended to abrogate a court's mandate to determine the propriety of the issuance of a search warrant on a case-by-case basis.

California's implied consent law, for drivers of a motor vehicle arrested for driving while under the influence (Veh. Code § 23612(a)(5)), does not apply to drivers of boats under the same circumstances. Such a person has the right to refuse to submit to a blood or breath test, and must be told this by the arresting officer. Then, any submission to a blood or breath test must be freely and voluntary consented to in order to be admissible in evidence. (People v. Gutierrez (2019) 33 Cal.App.5th Supp. 11.)

(18) When the property or things to be seized consists of evidence that tends to show that a violation of Pen. Code § 647(j)(1), (2), or (3) (Disorderly Conduct) has occurred or is occurring.

Pen. Code § 647(j) is the misdemeanor "disorderly conduct" offense:

> (1) A person who looks through a hole or opening, into, or otherwise views, by means of any instrumentality, including, but not limited to, a periscope, telescope, binoculars, camera, motion picture camera, camcorder, mobile phone, electronic device, or unmanned aircraft system, the interior of a bedroom, bathroom, changing room, fitting room, dressing room, or tanning booth, or the interior of any other area in which the occupant has a reasonable expectation of privacy, with the intent to invade the privacy of a person or persons inside. This subdivision does not apply to those areas of a private business used to count currency or other negotiable instruments.
>
> (2) A person who uses a concealed camcorder, motion picture camera, or photographic camera of any type, to secretly videotape, film, photograph, or record by electronic means, another identifiable person under or through the clothing being worn by that other person, for the purpose of viewing the body of, or the undergarments worn by, that other person, without the consent or knowledge of that other person, with the intent to arouse, appeal to, or gratify the lust, passions, or sexual desires of that person and invade the privacy of that other person, under circumstances in which the other person has a reasonable expectation of privacy. For the purposes of this paragraph, "identifiable" means capable of identification, or capable of being recognized, meaning that someone, including the victim, could identify or recognize the victim. It does not require the victim's identity to actually be established.

(3)

(A) A person who uses a concealed camcorder, motion picture camera, or photographic camera of any type, to secretly videotape, film, photograph, or record by electronic means, another identifiable person who may be in a state of full or partial undress, for the purpose of viewing the body of, or the undergarments worn by, that other person, without the consent or knowledge of that other person, in the interior of a bedroom, bathroom, changing room, fitting room, dressing room, or tanning booth, or the interior of any other area in which that other person has a reasonable expectation of privacy, with the intent to invade the privacy of that other person. For the purposes of this paragraph, "identifiable" means capable of identification, or capable of being recognized, meaning that someone, including the victim, could identify or recognize the victim. It does not require the victim's identity to actually be established.

(B) Neither of the following is a defense to the crime specified in this paragraph:

(i) The defendant was a cohabitant, landlord, tenant, cotenant, employer, employee, or business partner or associate of the victim, or an agent of any of these.

(ii) The victim was not in a state of full or partial undress.

(4)

(A) A person who intentionally distributes the image of the intimate body part or parts of another identifiable person, or an image of the person depicted engaged in an act of sexual intercourse, sodomy, oral copulation, sexual penetration, or an image of masturbation by the person depicted or in which the person depicted participates, under circumstances in which the persons agree or understand that the image shall remain private, the person distributing the image knows or should know that distribution of the image will cause serious emotional distress, and the person depicted suffers that distress.

(B) A person intentionally distributes an image described in subparagraph (A) when that person personally distributes the image, or arranges, specifically requests, or intentionally causes another person to distribute that image.

(C) As used in this paragraph, "intimate body part" means any portion of the genitals, the anus and in the case of a female, also includes any portion of the breasts below the top of the areola, that is either uncovered or clearly visible through clothing.

(D) It shall not be a violation of this paragraph to distribute an image described in subparagraph (A) if any of the following applies:

(i) The distribution is made in the course of reporting an unlawful activity.

(ii) The distribution is made in compliance with a subpoena or other court order for use in a legal proceeding.

(iii) The distribution is made in the course of a lawful public proceeding.

(5) This subdivision does not preclude punishment under any section of law providing for greater punishment.

Note: An "Identifiable person" is defined as a person "capable of identification, or capable of being recognized, meaning that someone could identify or recognize the victim, including the victim herself or himself. It does not require the victim's identity to actually be established."

Case Law:

Defendant minor made a cellphone sex video without the victim's consent or knowledge, then showed the video at school. The defendant tried to overturn a true finding under Pen. Code § 647(j)(3)(A) (intimate recordings by a "concealed" device that violates privacy) arguing that by placing his cellphone in plain view, it couldn't have been "concealed." The Court disagreed. Contrary to defendant's "revisionist view of the record," by capitalizing on the fact that his victim was turned away from him during the sex act, he "concealed" the cellphone until he finally decided to announce that she was being recorded. (In re R.C. (2019) 39 Cal.App.5th 302.)

(19) For a Vehicle's Internal "Recording Device:"

(A) When the property or things to be seized are data, from a recording device installed by the manufacturer of a motor vehicle, that constitutes evidence that tends to show the commission of a felony or misdemeanor offense involving a motor vehicle, resulting in death or serious bodily injury to any person. The data accessed by a warrant pursuant to this paragraph shall not exceed the scope of the data that is directly related to the offense for which the warrant is issued.

(B) For the purposes of this paragraph, "recording device" has the same meaning as defined in subdivision (b) of Section 9951 of the Vehicle Code. The scope of the data accessible by a warrant issued pursuant to this paragraph shall be limited to the information described in subdivision (b) of Section 9951 of the Vehicle Code.

Note: Veh. Code § 9951(b) provides that "recording device" means a device that is installed by the manufacturer of a vehicle and does one or more of the following, for the purpose of retrieving data after an accident:

1. Records how fast and in which direction the motor vehicle is traveling.
2. Records a history of where the motor vehicle travels.
3. Records steering performance.
4. Records brake performance, including whether brakes were applied before an accident.
5. Records the driver's seatbelt status.
6. Has the ability to transmit information concerning an accident in which the motor vehicle has been involved to a central communications system when an accident occurs.

(C) For the purposes of this paragraph, "serious bodily injury" has the same meaning as defined in paragraph (4) of subdivision (f) of Section 243 of the Penal Code.

Note: Pen. Code § 243(f)(4) defines "serious bodily injury" as a serious impairment of physical condition, including, but not limited to, the following: loss of consciousness; concussion; bone fracture; protracted loss or impairment of function of any bodily member or organ; a wound requiring extensive suturing; and serious disfigurement.

Note: This instrument, referred to in the statute as a "recording device," is sometimes labeled as its "black box."

(20) Photographs of Deceased Persons at an Accident or Crime Scene: When the property or things to be seized consists of evidence that tends to show that a violation of Section 647.9 has occurred or is occurring. Evidence to be seized pursuant to this paragraph shall be limited to evidence of a violation of Section

647.9 and shall not include evidence of a violation of a departmental rule or guideline that is not a public offense under California law."

Note: Pen. Code § 647.9, effective 1/1/2021, deals with the misdemeanor crime of "First Responders Photographing Deceased Persons" at the scene of an accident or a crime.

For Grounds Not Listed: There is authority from other jurisdictions for the argument that a search warrant may be issued for purposes not specifically listed in the statutory grounds contained in P.C. § 1524; the authority for a court issuing warrants being derived from the Common Law. See:

"The power to issue a search warrant is a common law power in America. . . ." (United States v. Torres (7th Cir. 1984) 751 F.2nd 875, 879.)

"A court of general jurisdiction has inherent power to issue a search warrant within the limits set forth in the Fourth Amendment." (United States v. Falls (8th Cir. 1994) 34 F.3rd 674, 678.)

Also note that California magistrates have historically exercised an inherent authority to issue, for example, Ramey warrants (See "Ramey Warrant," under "Arrests" (Chapter 5, above), Steagald warrants (See The "Steagald Warrant," under "Arrest" (Chapter 5, above), and Jones warrants (for GPS tracking; see "Electronic Tracking Devices" (Transmitters), under "New Technology" (Chapter 14, below), long before these types of warrants were statutorily authorized. There is a strong argument, therefore, that so long as a search warrant issued by a magistrate complies with the requirements of the Fourth Amendment, evidence obtained within the scope of that warrant will not be inadmissible merely because the warrant does not fit neatly within a specific statutory authorization. See also Bowling v. Rector (10th Cir. 2009) 584 F.3rd 956, 966: This is because "[T[he question ... is not whether the search was authorized by state law. The question is whether the search was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment." (Citing Cooper v. California (1967) 386 US 58, 61 [87 S.Ct. 788; 17 L.Ed.2nd 730].)

See also People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1119; "Pursuant to article I, section 28, of the California Constitution, a trial court may exclude evidence under Penal Code section 1538.5 only if exclusion is mandated by the federal Constitution." (Italics added; People v. Banks (1993) 6 Cal.4th 926, 934 . . . .) Our Constitution thus prohibits employing an exclusionary rule that is more expansive than that articulated by the United States Supreme Court. (People v. Crittenden (1994) 9 Cal.4th 83, 129. . . .) The Court thus concluded that the nonconsensual extraction of defendant's blood, although a state statutory violation, did not violate the Fourth Amendment, thus rendering the results admissible into evidence.

Other Provisions:

Pen. Code § 1534(c): Duplicate Originals: If a duplicate original search warrant has been executed, the peace officer who executed the warrant shall enter the exact time of its execution on its face.

Pen. Code § 1534(d): Returns: A search warrant may be made returnable before the issuing magistrate or his or her court.

See also Pen. Code §§ 1524.2(b) and 1524.3(a), re: "Records of Foreign Corporations Providing Electronic Communications or Remote Computing Services." (above)

Other Case Law:

It is irrelevant that a peace officer lists an incorrect charged offense, justifying the issuance of the warrant, so long as there is some legal grounds for the issuance of the warrant under some statute. (United States v. Meek (9th Cir. 2004) 366 F.3rd 705, 713-714; A "statutory variance in the affidavit is not fatal to the warrant's validity.")

In a federal case, the failure of the warrant to include a copy of the court's official seal, if a violation at all (28 U.S.C. § 1691), is merely a technical violation and will not result in a finding that the warrant is legally insufficient. (United States v. Smith (9th Cir. 2005) 424 F.3rd 992, 1008.)

Restrictions and Other Search Warrant Provisions:

Pen. Code § 1524(b): Authority to Take Property: The property, things, person, or persons described in subdivision (a) may be taken on the warrant from any place, or from any person in whose possession the property or things may be.

Pen. Code § 1524(c): Restrictions on Property Taken: Notwithstanding subdivision (a) or (b), a search warrant shall not be issued for any documentary evidence in the possession or under the control of any person who is a lawyer as defined in Section 950 of the Evidence Code, a physician as defined in Section 990 of the Evidence Code, a psychotherapist as defined in Section 1010 of the Evidence Code, or a member of the clergy as defined in Section 1030 of the Evidence Code, and who is not reasonably suspected of engaging or having engaged in criminal activity related to the documentary evidence for which a warrant is requested unless the following procedure has been complied with:

> (1) At the time of the issuance of the warrant, the court shall appoint a special master in accordance with subdivision (d) to accompany the person who will serve the warrant. Upon service of the warrant, the special master shall inform the party served of the specific items being sought and that the party shall have the opportunity to provide the items requested. If the party, in the judgment of the special master, fails to provide the items requested, the special master shall conduct a search for the items in the areas indicated in the search warrant.
>
> (2)
>
> > (A) If the party who has been served states that an item or items should not be disclosed, they shall be sealed by the special master and taken to court for a hearing.
> >
> > (B) At the hearing, the party searched shall be entitled to raise any issues that may be raised pursuant to Section 1538.5 as well as a claim that the item or items are privileged, as provided by law. The hearing shall be held in the superior court. The court shall provide sufficient time for the parties to obtain counsel and make motions or present evidence. The hearing shall be held within three days of the service of the warrant unless the court makes a finding that the expedited hearing is impracticable. In that case, the matter shall be heard at the earliest possible time.
> >
> > (C) If an item or items are taken to court for a hearing, any limitations of time prescribed in Chapter 2 (commencing with Section 799) of Title

3 of Part 2 shall be tolled from the time of the seizure until the final conclusion of the hearing, including any associated writ or appellate proceedings.

(3) The warrant shall, whenever practicable, be served during normal business hours. In addition, the warrant shall be served upon a party who appears to have possession or control of the items sought. If, after reasonable efforts, the party serving the warrant is unable to locate the person, the special master shall seal and return to the court, for determination by the court, any item that appears to be privileged as provided by law.

Pen. Code § 1524(d): Special Master, Defined:

(1) As used in this section, a "special master" is an attorney who is a member in good standing of the California State Bar and who has been selected from a list of qualified attorneys that is maintained by the State Bar particularly for the purposes of conducting the searches described in this section. These attorneys shall serve without compensation. A special master shall be considered a public employee, and the governmental entity that caused the search warrant to be issued shall be considered the employer of the special master and the applicable public entity, for purposes of Division 3.6 (commencing with Section 810) of Title 1 of the Government Code, relating to claims and actions against public entities and public employees. In selecting the special master, the court shall make every reasonable effort to ensure that the person selected has no relationship with any of the parties involved in the pending matter. Information obtained by the special master shall be confidential and may not be divulged except in direct response to inquiry by the court.

(2) In any case in which the magistrate determines that, after reasonable efforts have been made to obtain a special master, a special master is not available and would not be available within a reasonable period of time, the magistrate may direct the party seeking the order to conduct the search in the manner described in this section in lieu of the special master.

Pen. Code § 1524(e): Accompanying the Special Master: Any search conducted pursuant to this section by a special master may be conducted in a manner that permits the party serving the warrant or that party's designee to accompany the special master as the special master conducts the search. However, that party or that party's designee may not participate in the search nor shall they examine any of the items being searched by the special master except upon agreement of the party upon whom the warrant has been served.

Pen. Code § 1524(f): Documentary Evidence: As used in this section, "documentary evidence" includes, but is not limited to, writings, documents, blueprints, drawings, photographs, computer printouts, microfilms, x-rays, files, diagrams, ledgers, books, tapes, audio and video recordings, films, and papers of any type or description.

Pen. Code § 1524(g): Restriction: No warrant shall issue for any item or items described in Section 1070 of the Evidence Code.

> Note: Evid. Code § 1070 is the "Newsman's Privilege Section:"
>
> > (a) A publisher, editor, reporter, or other person connected with or employed upon a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, or by a press association or wire service, or any person who has been so connected or employed, cannot be adjudged in contempt by a judicial, legislative, administrative body, or any other body having the power to issue subpoenas, for refusing to disclose, in any proceeding as defined in Section 901, the source of any information procured while so connected or employed for publication in a newspaper, magazine or other periodical publication, or for refusing to disclose any unpublished information obtained or prepared in gathering, receiving or processing of information for communication to the public.
> >
> > (b) Nor can a radio or television news reporter or other person connected with or employed by a radio or television station, or any person who has been so connected or employed, be so adjudged in contempt for refusing to disclose the source of any information procured while so connected or employed for news or news commentary purposes on radio or television, or for refusing to disclose any unpublished information obtained or prepared in gathering, receiving or processing of information for communication to the public.

(c) As used in this section, "unpublished information" includes information not disseminated to the public by the person from whom disclosure is sought, whether or not related information has been disseminated and includes, but is not limited to, all notes, outtakes, photographs, tapes or other data of whatever sort not itself disseminated to the public through a medium of communication, whether or not published information based upon or related to such material has been disseminated.

See "Newsroom Searches," under "Limitations on the Use of Search Warrants," below.

Pen. Code § 1524(h): Restriction: No warrant shall issue for any item or items that pertain to an investigation into a prohibited violation, as defined in Section 629.51.

Note: P.C. § 629.51 refers to an item or items that pertain to an investigation into a "prohibited violation," as defined in P.C. § 629.51, as providing, facilitating, obtaining, or intending or attempting to provide, facilitate, or obtain, an abortion that is lawful under California law.

Pen. Code § 1524(i): Attorney Work Product: Notwithstanding any other law, no claim of attorney work product as described in Chapter 4 (commencing with Section 2018.010) of Title 4 of Part 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure shall be sustained where there is probable cause to believe that the lawyer is engaging or has engaged in criminal activity related to the documentary evidence for which a warrant is requested unless it is established at the hearing with respect to the documentary evidence seized under the warrant that the services of the lawyer were not sought or obtained to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit a crime or a fraud.

Pen. Code § 1524(j): In-Camera Hearings: Nothing in this section is intended to limit an attorney's ability to request an in-camera hearing pursuant to the holding of the Supreme Court of California in People v. Superior Court* (Laff) (2001) 25 Cal.4th 703.

Pen. Code § 1524(k): Evidence of Identity Theft: In addition to any other circumstance permitting a magistrate to issue a warrant for a person or property in another county, when the property or things to be seized consist of any item or constitute evidence that tends to show a violation of Section 530.5 (i.e., "Identity Theft"), the magistrate may issue a warrant to search a person or property located in another county if the person whose identifying information was taken or used resides in the same county as the issuing court.

Pen. Code § 1524(l): Cause of Action for Providing Location Information: This section shall not be construed to create a cause of action against any foreign or California corporation, its officers, employees, agents, or other specified persons for providing location information.

Pen. Code § 1546.5: Restrictions on Electronic Communications:

A California corporation or a corporation with principal executive offices located in California and that provides electronic communication services is prohibited from providing records, information, facilities, or assistance pursuant to a warrant, court order, subpoena, wiretap order, pen register order, trap and trace order, or other legal process issued by another state, that relates to an investigation into or enforcement of a prohibited violation, as defined in P.C. § 629.51.

The Attorney General is authorized to bring a civil action to compel compliance with this new section.

Note: P.C. § 629.51 defines "prohibited violation" as providing, facilitating, obtaining, or intending or attempting to provide, facilitate, or obtain, an abortion that is lawful under California law. The goal of the bill is to prohibit cooperating with, or providing information to, a law enforcement agency in another state that has different abortion laws.

The Affidavit to the Search Warrant:

Defined: A sworn statement, sworn to by the affiant, describing the "probable cause" to search a particular person, place, or vehicle for a particular person, thing, or list of property. (Pen. Code §§ 1525, 1527)

Referred to as the "Statement of Probable Cause" in jurisdictions where a combined search warrant and affidavit form is used. (See People v. Hale (2005) 133 Cal.App.4th 942.)

"Probable Cause:"

The probable cause showing must be made in the warrant affidavit. (Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, 35-36; citing People v. Carrington (2009) 47 Cal.4th 145, 161.)

"The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution prohibits 'unreasonable searches and seizures' and requires search warrants to be issued only upon a showing of 'probable cause' describing with particularity 'the place to be searched, and the . . . things to be seized.' United States Supreme Court decisions establish an exclusionary rule that, when applicable, forbids the use of evidence obtained in violation of the Fourth Amendment at trial. (Herring v. United States (2009) 555 U.S. 135, 139 [129 S.Ct. 695; 172 L.Ed.2nd 496, . . .].) '"'Probable cause sufficient for issuance of a warrant requires a showing that makes it '"substantially probable that there is specific property lawfully subject to seizure presently located in the particular place for which the warrant is sought."' [Citation.] That showing must appear in the affidavit offered in support of the warrant. [Citation.]'" (People v. Bryant, Smith and Wheeler (2014) 60 Cal.4th 335, 365) . . . at pp. 369-370, quoting People v. Carrington (2009) 47 Cal.4th 145, 161 . . . .) Probable cause may be shown by evidence that would not be competent at trial, including '"'information and belief.'" (People v. Varghese (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 1084, 1103 . . . , quoting Humphrey v. Appellate Division (2002) 29 Cal.4th 569, 573 . . . .)" (People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 763.)

See also People v. Meza (2023) 90 Cal.App.5th 520, 535-538, discussing the "particularity" requirement as it relates to geofence search warrants, noting at pg. 535, fn. 10, that the United States Supreme Court, in Carpenter v. United States (June 22, 2018) ___ U.S. ___, [201 L.Ed.2nd 507; 138 S.Ct. 2206, 2219] "has suggested in a different context that an individual has a right to privacy regarding his or her current and historical location;" i.e., retrieval of wireless carrier cell tower data to determine suspect's location "invaded [suspect's] reasonable expectation of privacy in the whole of his physical movements."

"Particularity is the requirement that the warrant must clearly state what is sought." (People v. Meza, supra, at p. 535, quoting In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Dec. 10, 1987 (9th Cir. 1991) 926 F.2nd 847, 856.)

> "'(T)he "purpose of the "particularity" requirement of the Fourth Amendment is to avoid general and exploratory searches by requiring a particular description of the items to be seized.' (People v. Bradford (1997) 15 Cal.4th 1229, 1296 . . . .) 'However, a warrant "need only be reasonably specific" [citation], and the "specificity required 'varies depending on the circumstances of the case and the type of items involved.'"' (People v. Robinson . . . ((2010)) 47 Cal.4th (1104,) at p. 1132 ['particularity "is a flexible concept, reflecting the degree of detail available from the facts known to the affiant and presented to the issuing magistrate"'].) "[T]his requirement is held to be satisfied if the warrant imposes a meaningful restriction upon the objects to be seized."' (People v. Frank (1985) 38 Cal.3rd 711, 724 . . . .) In other words, '[t]he description in a search warrant must be sufficiently definite that the officer conducting the search "can, with reasonable effort ascertain and identify the place intended." [Citation.] Nothing should be left to the discretion of the officer.' (People v. Dumas (1973) 9 Cal.3rd 871, 880 . . .]; see also United States v. Blakeney (4th Cir. 2020) 949 F.3rd 851, 863 [warrants met particularity requirement where they 'describe the items to be seized with enough particularity to constrain the discretion of the executing officers and prevent a general search']; United States v. Collins (9th Cir. 1987) 830 F.2nd 145, 145–146 [warrant not sufficiently particular where it contained an incorrect address and imprecise description, resulting in search of the wrong house].)" (People v. Meza, supra, at p. 537; finding that a geofence warrant had failed to meet the particularity requirement.)

"Probable cause does not require conclusive evidence that a search will uncover relevant evidence, only that 'there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place.' (People v. Kraft . . . ((2000)) 23 Cal.4th (978) at p. 1041; accord, (Illinois v.) Gates . . . ((1983)) 462 U.S. (213) at p. 238.) '[S]ufficient probability, not certainty, is the touchstone of reasonableness under the Fourth Amendment.' [People v. Beck and Cruz (2019) 8 Cal.5th 548, 592 . . . ; see also People v. Carrington (2009) 47 Cal.4th 145, 163 . . . .] ['[t]he showing required in order to establish probable cause is less than a preponderance of the evidence or even a prima facie case'].) In making this determination a magistrate may draw reasonable inferences about where evidence is likely to be found based on the nature of the evidence and the type of offense. (See Gates, at p.

240; People v. Sandlin (1991) 230 Cal.App.3d 1310, 1315 [281 Cal. Rptr. 702].)" (People v. Meza (2023) 90 Cal.App.5th 520, 536.)

> "(O)ur Supreme Court has held the probable cause threshold 'is less than a preponderance of the evidence or even a prima facie case.'" (People v. Lepere (2023) 91 Cal.App.5th 727, 733; quoting People v. Bryant, Smith and Wheeler (2014) 60 Cal.4th 335, 370.)

"Probable cause 'is a more demanding standard than mere reasonable suspicion. [Citation.] It exists "where the known facts and circumstances are sufficient to warrant a man of reasonable prudence in the belief that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found . . . ." [Citation.] In determining whether a reasonable officer would have probable cause to search, we consider the totality of the circumstances.'" (People v. Sims (2021) 59 Cal.App.5th 943, 951, quoting People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853, at p. 862.)

"To procure a warrant an officer must have probable cause. The probable cause requirement erects a barrier against police intrusions and the associated risk of harm, except where the intrusions are adequately justified. The requirement thus represents the balance we have struck as a society in defining when it is permissible for an officer to impose a risk of harm on innocent members of the public in service of the competing social need to have effective law enforcement. But where probable cause is lacking, imposing that risk cannot be justified." (Mendez v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F.3rd 1067, 1079.) "The showing required in order to establish probable cause is less than a preponderance of the evidence or even a prima facie case." (People v. Williams (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 111, 124; quoting People v. Carrington (2009) 47 Cal.4th 145, 163.)

In evaluating the sufficiency of a warrant affidavit: "The task of the issuing magistrate is simply to make a practical common-sense decision whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit before him, including the 'veracity' and 'basis of knowledge' of the persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place." (Emphasis added; Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213 [103 S.Ct. 2317; 76 L.Ed.2nd 527] see also United States v. Ventresca (1965) 380 U.S. 102, 108 [85 S.Ct. 741; 13 L.Ed.2nd 684, 689]; United States v. Adjani (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F.3rd 1140, 1145; and see Florida v. Harris (2013) 568 U.S.

237, 243-245 [133 S.Ct. 1050; 185 L.Ed.2nd 61]; a warrantless search of a vehicle based upon a drug-detection dog's sniff.)

> See also United States v. King (9th Cir. 2021) 985 F.3rd 702, 707-709; listing "any firearm" in a search warrant affidavit for the search of a felon's home held not to be overbroad.)

"'In determining whether an affidavit is supported by probable cause, the magistrate must make a "practical, common-sense decision whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit . . . there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place." [Citation] The sufficiency of the affidavit must be evaluated in light of the totality of the circumstances. [Citation].'" (People v. Garcia (2003) 111 Cal.App.4th 715, 721; quoting Fenwick & West v. Superior Court (1996) 43 Cal.App.4th 1272, 1278; People v. Lieng (2010) 190 Cal.App.4th 1213, 1228-1229.)

> "The purpose of the exclusionary rule is . . . to deter illegal police conduct, not deficient police draftsmanship." (People v. Superior Court* [Nasmeh] (2007) 151 Cal.App.4th 85, 97.)
>
> Note that the Supreme Court in Illinois v. Gates, supra, also describes the standard for probable cause in a search warrant affidavit as a "fair probability" (pg. 238) or a "substantial chance" (pg. 244, fn. 13) that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place, which is arguably a lesser standard than as described in older California cases requiring a "substantial probability." (E.g.; see People v. Cook (1978) 22 Cal.3rd 67, 84, fn. 6; and United States v. Talley (Dist. Ct. N.D. 2020) 467 F. Supp.3rd 832, 835.)

"A search warrant must be supported by probable cause. (U.S. Const., Fourth Amendment; § 1525.) In determining whether probable cause exists, the magistrate considers the totality of the circumstances. (Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 238, 103 S.Ct. 2317, 76 L.Ed.2d 527.) 'Probable cause, unlike the fact itself, may be shown by evidence that would not be competent at trial. [Citation.] Accordingly, information and belief alone may support the issuance of search warrants, which require probable cause. [Citations.]' (Humphrey v. Appellate Division (2002) 29 Cal.4th 569, 573, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d 645, 58 P.3d 476.)" (People v. Varghese (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 1084, 1103.)

California follows the Gates "totality of the circumstances" test. (E.g., see People v. Spears (1991) 228 Cal.App.3rd 1, 17.)

In People v. Varghese, at page 1103, the Appellate Court notes that perfection in writing a search warrant is not required: "Because they are often written by non-lawyers in the midst of an investigation, technical requirements for elaborate specificity have no place in the review of search warrant affidavits." (See also People v. Lepere (2023) 91 Cal.App.5th 727, 735.)

Probable cause must be shown for each of the items listed in the warrant as property to be seized, justifying its seizure. (People v. Frank (1985) 38 Cal.3rd 711, 726-728.)

Probable cause showing a sufficient "nexus" between the evidence to be seized and the place to be searched must also be established. (People v. Garcia (2003) 111 Cal.App.4th 715, 721.)

However, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has shown a reluctance to find probable cause when it is based upon "a lengthy chain of inferences." (United States v. Gourde (9th Cir. 2004) 382 F.3rd 1003; no probable cause to support the issuance of a search warrant when based upon the defendant's known subscription to a child pornography website, unlimited access to the child pornography on the website, defendant's failure to unsubscribe after two months, and an expert's opinion that the above necessarily means that defendant would likely be in personal possession of child pornography.)

The fact that the person whose property (i.e., a computer in this case) is seized and searched is not at that time subject to arrest (i.e., no probable cause) does not mean that the seizure and search of that property is not lawful. (United States v. Adjani (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F.3rd 1140, 1146-1147.)

A warrant that establishes probable cause to search a vehicle for items missing from a possible homicide victim's residence will necessarily also allow for the seizure of that vehicle for later examination at a police lab, and to search the vehicle for trace evidence related to the missing items, even if the seizure of the car and the search for trace evidence is not specifically mentioned in the warrant. (People v. Superior Court* [Nasmeh] (2007) 151 Cal.App.4th 85, 94-98.)

A description of the affiant's training and experience, the fact that persons involved in drug trafficking commonly conceal caches of drugs in their residences and businesses, the fact that one of the co-conspirator's telephone was listed as being to that residence, and a description of coconspirators use of the defendant's residence each time a sale of drugs was ordered, was sufficient to establish probable cause for a search warrant for that residence. (United States v. Garcia-Villalba (9th Cir. 2009) 585 F.3rd 1223, 1232-1234.)

A warrant affidavit need not include all of the information available to the police, so long as the omitted facts are not material, nor must a police officer ordinarily continue the investigation seeking further corroboration once the officer has probable cause. (Ewing v. City of Stockton (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 1218, 1226-1227.)

A single photograph of a nude minor (female child who is between 8 and 10 years old), by itself, is insufficient to establish probable cause for a search warrant. But a second such photo, under the "totality of the circumstances," is enough. (United States v. Battershell (9th Cir. 2006) 457 F.3rd 1048.)

However, a single photograph of a nude minor (female of about 15 to 17 years of age), when combined with other suspicious circumstances (e.g., 15 computers in house found in complete disarray, with two minors not belonging to the defendant, where the defendant, a civilian, is staying in military housing), may be enough to justify the issuance of a search warrant. (United States v. Krupa (9th Cir. 2011) 658 F.3rd 1174, 1177-1179; but see dissent, pp. 1180-1185.)

The known fact that defendant uploaded a particular child pornography video to a decentralized peer-to-peer file-sharing network known an "eDonkey," was sufficient by itself to establish a "fair probability" that defendant would have other child pornography on his computer system. (United States v. Schesso (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 1040, 1045-1047; search warrant upheld.)

Evidence of a person's abnormal sexual interest in children, including inappropriate touching, does not, by itself, establish probable cause to believe that the person might also have child pornography at his home (Dougherty v. City of Covina (9th Cir. 2011) 654 F.3rd 892.) or on his computer. (United States v.

Needham (9th Cir. 2013) 718 F.3rd 1190, 1193-1196; search warrant upheld under the Good Faith doctrine.)

> "(A) search warrant issued to search a suspect's home computer and electronic equipment lacks probable cause when (1) no evidence of possession or attempt to possess child pornography was submitted to the issuing magistrate; (2) no evidence was submitted to the magistrate regarding computer or electronics use by the suspect; and (3) the only evidence linking the suspect's attempted child molestation to possession of child pornography is the experience of the requesting police officer, with no further explanation." (Id., at pp. 1194-1195.)

It is irrelevant that a theft victim is not identified by name in a search warrant affidavit so long as the theft of the victim's property is otherwise sufficiently described. (People v. Scott (2011) 52 Cal.4th 452, 485-486.)

Where evidence of illegal guns and ammunition was recovered in the execution of a search warrant, the Court found that the magistrate had a substantial basis for concluding there was a fair probability that evidence of a crime would be found in defendant's home. There was probable cause to believe defendant was the president of a local chapter of a motorcycle gang even though he was apparently the treasurer only. The search warrant sought club documents, not for their indication of membership in the gang, but because those documents detailed illegal activity. The warrant was not an unconstitutional general warrant. Any falsity about his status as the president was immaterial in that he was apparently still an officer. (United States v. Vasquez (9th Cir. 2011) 654 F.3rd 880, 883-885.)

A search warrant affidavit was found to be legally insufficient to establish probable cause when information from three separate informants was found to be conclusory only, corroborating each other only as to "pedestrian facts" that could have been known to anyone (i.e., "pedestrian facts"). Information from an arrestee was based upon hearsay only. Information from two other informants did not describe first-hand information, failing to describe the facts and circumstances underlying the informants' conclusions that defendant and his girlfriend were dealing drugs. Information that the girlfriend had a prior criminal history did not specify the details of that history. Also, the fact that one of the informants had supplied information to law enforcement before was lacking in detail as to the nature of the prior reports and how long ago.

(People v. French (2011) 201 Cal.App.4th 1307; warrant saved by the officer's reasonable good faith.)

The police officer affiant in a search warrant failed to disclose that the plaintiff's son was in jail at the time of the issuance of the warrant, and for over six months prior, and therefore not only was not present in the home, but moreover could not have been involved in a described shooting or the storage of weapons used in it. Plaintiffs presented sufficient evidence to establish a genuine issue as to whether a detective's omission of this material fact was intentional or reckless, as opposed to merely negligent. Had the omitted facts of the son's two-year sentence and custody status been included, it was extremely doubtful that an issuing judge would simply have issued the warrant or authorized nighttime service without more information. (Bravo v. City of Santa Maria (9th Cir. 2011) 665 F.3rd 1076, 1083-1088.)

Upon a motion to suppress evidence recovered pursuant to a search warrant, the issue is whether there was a fair probability that evidence related to the suspected offense(s) might be found in the place to be searched. The fact that that evidence is instead used to prosecute a separate offense is irrelevant. (United States v. Nguyen (9th Cir. 2012) 673 F.3rd 1259; evidence collected in a state investigation of Election Code violations (Elect. Code § 18540; threats to influence voters) but later used to prosecute defendant on federal charges (18 U.S.C. § 1512(b)(3); obstruction of justice for failing to disclose the full extent of his knowledge regarding the creation and mailing of the letter at issue.)

A search warrant for defendant's home was based upon the belief that defendant's two sons had some connection with a homicide and that the firearm used would be found in defendant's home. The Court found that the warrant affidavit failed to establish sufficient probable causes to believe that either son might have taken the firearm to defendant's home, or even that the sons might have possessed the firearm themselves. The court further held that the good-faith exception did not apply in this case because the officers' reliance on the warrant was unreasonable. (United States v. Grant (9th Cir. 2012) 682 F.3rd 827, 832-841.)

A search warrant, supported by probable cause, authorized the police to search defendant's house and seize gang indicia of any sort. Such indicia could logically be found in defendant's cellphone, which had the capacity to store people's names, telephone numbers and other contact information, as well as music, photographs, artwork, and communications in the form of emails and messages. Defendant's phone was the likely container of many items that were the functional equivalent of those specifically listed in the warrant. The text messages seized during the search of defendant's phone were related to a gang-related assault that he was suspected of committing, and their suppression was thus not required under the exclusionary rule. (People v. Rangel (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 1310, 1315-1317.)

There is no duty on the part of the affiant to investigate the suspect's version of the events before obtaining a search warrant. (Cameron v. Craig (9th Cir. 2013) 713 F.3rd 1012, 1019.)

An affiant's subjective intent in seeking a search warrant is irrelevant. "(O)nce probable cause exists, and a valid warrant has been issued, the officer's subjective intent in conducting the search is irrelevant." (People v. Lee (2015) 242 Cal.App.4th 161; quoting People v. Carrington (2009) 47 Cal.4th 145, 168.)

"'The test for probable cause is not reducible to "precise definition or quantification."'" (Florida v. Harris (2013) 568 U.S. 237, 243 [133 S.Ct. 1050, 1055].) But we have stated that it is "'"less than a preponderance of the evidence or even a prima facie case."'" (People v. Bryant, Smith and Wheeler (2014) 60 Cal.4th 335, 370.) "'"The task of the issuing magistrate is simply to make a practical, commonsense decision whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit before him, including the '"veracity"' and '"basis of knowledge"' of persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place."'" ((People v.) Kraft ((2000) 23 Cal.4th 978), at pp. 1040-1041, quoting Illinois v. Gates ((1983) 462 U.S. 213), at p. 238 ([76 L.Ed.2nd 527, 103 S.Ct. 2317].) "'The magistrate's determination of probable cause is entitled to deferential review.'" (Id., at p. 1041; accord People v. Carrington (2009) 47 Cal.4th 145, 161.) We explained in Skelton v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3rd 144, 150, that the warrant "'can be upset only if the affidavit fails as a matter of law to set forth sufficient competent evidence"' supporting the finding of probable cause." (People v. Westerfield (2019) 6 Cal.5th 632, 659-662; upholding five successive warrants.)

"Probable cause exists where the totality of the circumstances indicate a 'fair probability that . . . evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place.' Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 238, 103 S.Ct. 2317, 76 L.Ed.2nd 527 (1983). This standard does not require the affidavit to establish that the evidence is in fact in the place to be searched, or even that it is more likely than not to be there. United States v. Fernandez, 388 F.3rd 1199, 1254 (9th Cir. 2004), modified 425 F.3rd 1248 (9th Cir. 2005). Rather, the issuing judge 'need only conclude that it would be reasonable to seek the evidence in the place indicated in the affidavit.' Id. (quotation omitted)." (United States v. Elmore (9th Cir. 2019) 917 F.3rd 1068, 1074.)

> While a magistrate's determination of probable cause is entitled to "great deference," it is subject to second guessing by the appellate court. (Ibid; citing United States v. Krupa (9th Cir. 2011) 658 F.3rd 1174, 1177.)

Summary judgment for the city and police officers was proper in an elderly mobile home resident's civil action, who claimed that the issuance and execution of a search warrant on her home and her detention incident to the search was unconstitutional under the Fourth Amendment. Under the facts of this cases, the informant's reliability had been established and the probability that probative evidence or contraband would be found gave the officers probable cause to search the entire property, which included the plaintiff's mobile home as well as other structures, to investigate an illegal marijuana operation. The Court further held that the officers acted reasonably when they continued to search the mobile home even after discovering that the named suspect did not live in the home. Also, plaintiff's one-hour detention was not unreasonable based on her age (74). (Blight v. City of Manteca (9th Cir. 2019) 944 F.3rd 1061, 1066-1069.)

Probable cause sufficient to justify the issuance of a search warrant existed when a rape victim's description of being attacked by defendant in his trailer, supported by her visible injuries, made "it substantially probable that there was specific property lawfully subject to seizure presently located in" the trailer. The fact that the information came from other detectives (i.e., hearsay) did "not eviscerate the probable cause." (People v. Suarez (2020) 10 Cal.5th 116, 153-154; "Thus hearsay may be the basis for issuance of the warrant 'so long as there [is] a substantial basis for crediting the hearsay;" quoting People v. Gonzalez (1990) 51 Cal.3rd 1179, 1207, fn. 3.)

> Because the search warrant validly authorized the search of defendant's trailer, it also allowed for a search of the yard around the trailer; i.e., the trailer's curtilage. "Because the warrant authorized a search of this residence, it 'also authorize[d] without so stating the search of the residence's curtilage;" People v. Suarez, supra, quoting United States

v. Gorman (9th Cir. 1996) 104 F.3rd 272, 273; and People v. Smith (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 942, 950; "[A] warrant to search 'premises' located at a particular address is sufficient to support the search of outbuildings and appurtenances in addition to the main building when the various places searched are part of a single integral unit;" LaFave, Search and Seizure (5th ed. 2018) § 4.10(a), pp. 932–934.)

Defendant's motion to suppress firearms was properly denied because the warrant did not violate the Fourth Amendment where the officer's affidavit raised the inference that defendant possessed other firearms. Also, the facts, taken together, provided the magistrate judge with a "substantial basis" to authorize the search for "any firearm." In any case, the good-faith exception applied because reasonably well-trained officers would not have known that the search of defendant's residence for "any firearm" might, arguably, been in legal doubt. (United States v. King (9th Cir. 2021) 985 F.3rd 702, 707-709.)

In a case in which defendant appealed the trial court's denial of his motion to suppress video evidence of his role in the beatings of new gang members, the appellate court concluded that a search warrant affidavit was supported by probable cause. The affidavit presented reasonable support for an inference police had witnessed what probably was a transfer of illegal contraband from a known gang hangout to an SUV. Together with the gang's surge in criminality and the locale's status as a busy gang hangout, there was probable cause to search it for guns, drugs, and other evidence of gang-related crime. Defendant's argument the affidavit omitted material information by failing to date his four felony convictions was incorrect. The affidavit presented information that was current, not stale. Whether defendant's convictions were old or new was immaterial. (People v. Delgado (2022) 78 Cal.App.5th 425.)

In a child pornography case under Pen. Code § 311.11, the search warrant affidavit was not rendered deficient by the fact that an alleged anonymous tipster provided the information linking defendant to two pornographic images. The police and magistrate had reason to believe that the cyber-tips came from a reliable witness employed by an electronic communication service provider who acted in accord with the provider's federal obligation to report apparent child pornography and that a reliable person at National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) forwarded the two images to the police in accord with NCMEC's legal obligation. That the affidavit did not provide the name of either individual did not, under the totality of the circumstances, undermine the determination that the tips came from unbiased citizen informants who could be presumed reliable. (People v. Rowland (2022) 82 Cal.App.5th 1099.)

Where a confidential informant tipped off law enforcement that defendant was dealing drugs out of his residence in Henderson, North Carolina, the officers used the informant to make two controlled purchases of crack cocaine from defendant over the span of a week, at defendant's residence. A search warrant was obtained for defendant's residence, during the execution of which cocaine and other evidence was recovered. A jury convicted defendant of possessing a firearm and ammunition as a felon, possessing cocaine and marijuana with intent to distribute, and maintaining a place for the purpose of distributing, manufacturing, or using cocaine and marijuana. On appeal, defendant challenged his convictions with the argument, among other grounds, that the cocaine was not tested prior to issuance of the search warrant. The Fourth Circuit affirmed. The court explained that contrary to defendant's argument, probable cause did not require the officers to test the crack cocaine after the buys to confirm its illicit nature. In the warrant application, the lead officer stated that he had eight years of law enforcement experience, was assigned to investigate "the possession and sale of illegal controlled substances," and had received training about controlled substances. The magistrate could reasonably conclude the officer visually identified the substance the informant purchased from defendant as crack cocaine, even though the warrant application did not say whether the officer tested it. (United States v. Hicks (4th Cir. 2023) 64 F.4th 546.)

On appeal: "The question facing a reviewing court asked to determine whether probable cause supported the issuance of the warrant is whether the magistrate had a substantial basis for concluding a fair probability existed that a search would uncover wrongdoing." (People v. Lepere (2023) 91 Cal.App.5th 727, 732, citing People v. Kraft (2000) 23 Cal.4th 978, 1040.)

> In Lepere, at p. 735, it was held that an expert officer's opinion, as the affiant where he listed his training and experience, is of value in establishing probable cause. "We find that the opinion simply reinforced the veracity of the affidavit. (See People v. Tuadles (1992) 7 Cal.App.4th 1777, 1784 . . . .][opinions of officers with training and experience are valuable in interpreting the circumstances and conduct described by an affidavit].)"

Cellphones and Probable Cause:

In a geofence warrant case (i.e., Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, at p. 36.), the defendant argued the affiant's opinion that people commonly carry cellphones and that co-conspirators commonly communicate between themselves with cellphones was insufficient to establish the necessary probable cause. The Court rejected this argument, noting the following at pages 39-40:

> "It is also a matter of indisputable common knowledge that most people carry cell phones virtually all the time, and courts may take judicial notice of 'facts and propositions that are of such common knowledge . . . that they cannot reasonably be the subject of dispute.' (Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (g).) In 2018, the United States Supreme Court observed that individuals 'compulsively carry cell phones with them all the time.' (Carpenter v. United States ((June 22, 2018)), supra, 585 U.S. (__) at p. ___ [138 S.Ct. (2473) at p. 2218] ['While individuals regularly leave their vehicles, they compulsively carry cell phones with them all the time.']; see Riley v. California ((2014)), supra, 573 U.S. (373) at p. 385 ['[M]odern cell phones . . . are now such a pervasive and insistent part of daily life that the proverbial visitor from Mars might conclude they were an important feature of human anatomy.'].) Other courts have followed suit in recognizing that nearly everyone regularly carries a cell phone. (United States v. James (8th Cir. 2021) 3 F.4th 1102, 1105 ['Even if nobody knew for sure whether the [suspect] actually possessed a cell phone, the judges were not required to check their common sense at the door and ignore the fact that most people "compulsively carry [36] cell phones with them all the time."']; D.C. Federal Crimes, supra, 579 F.Supp.3d (62) at p. 78 ['The core inquiry here is probability, not certainty, and it is eminently reasonable to assume that criminals, like the rest of society, possess and use cell phones to go about their daily business.'].) The common knowledge that most people carry cell phones gave the issuing magistrate a substantial basis for concluding there was a fair probability that the suspects were carrying cell phones at the time of the shooting." [¶] "Second, the affidavit explained why there was a fair probability that the suspects' cell phones were sending location data to Google, and that Google had location data and identifying information associated with the suspects' cell phones or devices that would reveal the > suspects' identities. The affidavit cited a February 2018 study showing that around 99.9 percent of all smartphones were supported by Google's Android operating system or Apple's iOS operating system. The affidavit explained that all Android-supported devices have a Google account; the use of a Google application also requires a Google account; Apple iPhones, like Google's Android devices, support Google applications; and a Google account cannot be activated without providing Google with a name and phone number for the Google account. Also, Google collects and retains location data from all Android-operated devices and devices using Google applications, as long as the device's location services are enabled. The location data is 'stored forever' unless the user deletes it." [¶] "Although this explanation of how Google obtains and retains location data and identifying information did not show it was certain that Google would have location data and identifying information revealing the suspects' identities, the explanation demonstrated a fair probability this was the case, and this fair probability was sufficient. (Arson Investigation (N.D.Ill. 2020) 497 F.Supp.3d (345) at pp. 355–356.) The affidavit provided a substantial basis for the issuing magistrate to conclude there was a fair probability that the suspects were carrying cell phones and would be identified through location data and identifying information through the geofence search. Thus, the affidavit showed probable cause to believe the geofence search would reveal the suspects' identities."

Excising Illegally Obtained Information:

> When information is contained in the affidavit which is the product of a prior illegal search, that information may be excised and the remainder retested for probable cause. "A search warrant is not 'rendered invalid merely because some of the evidence included in the affidavit is tainted.' (Citation) The warrant remains valid if, after excising the tainted evidence, the affidavit's 'remaining untainted evidence would provide a neutral magistrate with probable cause to issue a warrant.'" (United States v. Job (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 852, 863-864; citing United States v. Nora (9th Cir. 2014) 765 F.3rd 1049, 1058; and quoting United States v. Reed (9th Cir. 1994) 15 F.3rd 928, 933.)
>
> > "For search warrant affidavits containing 'both information obtained by unlawful conduct as well as untainted information, a two-prong test applies to justify application > of the independent source doctrine.' (People v. Robinson (2012) 208 Cal.App.4th 232, 241. . . .) 'First, the affidavit, excised of any illegally obtained information, must be sufficient to establish probable cause.' (Ibid.) 'Second, the evidence must support a finding that "the police subjectively would have sought the warrant even without the illegal conduct."' (Ibid.)" (People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 818-819; citing People v. Weiss (1999) 20 Cal.4th 1073.)

>
> See "Independent Source Doctrine," above.

DNA Swab Search Warrant Taken for the Purpose of Eliminating Others as a Suspect:

> A state court order pursuant to Arizona Revised Statutes § 13-3905 authorizing the collection of DNA samples from officers of the Phoenix Police Department satisfied the Warrant Clause of the Fourth Amendment in that the orders were issued by a state court judge and described a saliva sample to be seized by mouth swab from the person of plaintiff police officers. The state court expressly found probable cause to believe that the crime of homicide had been committed and that excluding public safety personnel as the source of the of DNA left at the scene would have plainly aided in the conviction of an eventual criminal defendant by negating any contention at trial that police had contaminated the relevant evidence. No undue intrusion occurred because it was hardly unreasonable to ask sworn officers to provide saliva samples for the sole purpose of demonstrating that DNA left at a crime scene was not the result of inadvertent contamination by on-duty public safety personnel. (Bill v. Brewer (9th Cir. 2015) 799 F.3rd 1295.)

Minimum Contents of a Warrant Affidavit: At a minimum, a warrant affidavit should include the following:

- The Name or Names of the Affiant(s).

  > It is not necessary that the affiant be a sworn peace officer. "(T)here seems no reason why seeking one (i.e., a search warrant) should be confined to peace officers instead of unsworn members of law enforcement." (People v. Bell (1996) 45 Cal.App.4th 1030, 1054-1055.)

A warrant may also be supported by affidavits from more than one person. (See Skelton v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3rd 144.)

- The Statutory Grounds for Issuance. (See Pen. Code §§ 1524, 1524.2 and/or 1524.3.)

  It is irrelevant that a peace officer lists an incorrect charged offense justifying the issuance of a warrant, so long as there is some legal grounds for the issuance of the warrant under some statute. (United States v. Meek (9th Cir. 2004) 366 F.3rd 705, 713-714; a "statutory variance in the affidavit is not fatal to the warrant's validity.")

  See "Pen. Code § 1524(a)(1) through (20): Statutory Grounds for Issuance," above.

  See also "Pen. Code §§ 1524.2(b) and 1524.3(a), re: 'Records of Foreign Corporations Providing Electronic Communications or Remote Computing Services.'"

- A Physical Description, with "reasonable particularity," of the Persons, Places, Things and Vehicles to be Searched.

  A warrant's description of the property to be searched will be reviewed by the appellate courts in a common sense and realistic fashion. (People v. Minder (1996) 46 Cal.App.4th 1784; United States v. Ventresca (1965) 380 U.S 102, 109 [85 S.Ct. 741; 13 L.Ed.2nd 684, 689].)

  See "The 'Reasonable Particularity' Requirement," below.

- A Physical Description, with "reasonable particularity," of the Persons, Things or Property to be Seized.

  See "The 'Reasonable Particularity' Requirement," below.

- A Detailed Statement of the Expertise (i.e., training and experience) of the Affiant.

- A Chronological Narrative and "Factual (as opposed to conclusory) Description" (see "Description of the Facts; Factual vs. Conclusory Language," below) of the circumstances substantiating the officer's conclusion that Probable Cause for a search exists. This would include:

- Facts showing the commission of a crime (or crimes);

- Facts connecting the listed suspect(s) to the crime(s);

- Facts connecting the suspect(s) to the location(s), vehicle(s), and/or person(s) to be searched;

- Facts connecting the property to be seized to the location(s), vehicle(s), and/or person(s) to be searched;

- Facts describing how the descriptions were obtained.

> The facts as described in the search warrant affidavit making up the "probable cause" for issuance of a warrant must be attested to by the affiant as the truth. Failing to do so may invalidate the warrant.
>
> > See: People v. Hale (2005) 133 Cal.App.4th 942; not a fatal error, being one of "form" over "substance." And: People v. Leonard (1996) 50 Cal.App.4th 878; finding it to be one of "substance" over "form," and fatal to the validity of the warrant.

- Police Reports, Charts, Maps, Etc., may be used as exhibits, attached and "incorporated by reference," but should not be used as a substitute for a statement of probable cause.

> The term "incorporate by reference" is a term of art that is not always necessary to use. So long as the warrant affidavit makes reference to any attachments, it can be assumed that the magistrate considered it. (See People v. Stipo (2011) 195 Cal.App.4th 664, 669-670.)

- The Affiant's Conclusions (i.e., his/her opinion) based upon his or her training and experience, that:

> Probable cause exists for the search; and
>
> The item(s) sought will be found at the location(s) to be searched.
>
> > A qualified officer/affiant can attach special significance to his observations and set forth expert opinion in an affidavit. (People v. Carvajal (1988) 202 Cal.App.3rd 487, 496-498.)

"(L)aw enforcement officers may draw upon their expertise to interpret the facts in a search warrant application, and such expertise may be considered by the magistrate as a factor supporting probable cause." (People v. Nicholls (2008) 159 Cal.App.4th 703, 711, child molest case; see also People v. Williams (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 111, 125, an animal cruelty case.)

"The magistrate issuing the warrant 'is entitled to rely upon the conclusions of experienced law enforcement officers in weighing the evidence supporting a request for a search warrant as to where evidence of crime is likely to be found. [Citation.] It is not essential that there be direct evidence that such evidence will be at a particular location. Rather, the magistrate '"'is entitled to draw reasonable inferences about where evidence is likely to be kept, based on the nature of the evidence and the type of offense."' (Citations)" (People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 764.)

- Justification for a Nighttime Search, if necessary. (See P.C § 1533, and "Nighttime Searches," below.)

The "Reasonable Particularity" Requirement (Pen. Code §§ 1525, 1529); The Persons, Places, Things and Vehicles to be Searched:

Rule: The persons, places, things and vehicles to be searched must be described with sufficient detail so that an officer executing the warrant may, with reasonable effort, ascertain and identify the person, place, thing or vehicle intended. (People v. Grossman (1971) 19 Cal.App.3rd 8, 11.)

Case Law:

"The Warrant Clause of the Fourth Amendment categorically prohibits the issuance of any warrant except one 'particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.'" ((Maryland v.) Garrison ((1987) 480 U.S. 79) at p. 84 ([94 L.Ed.2nd 72, 107 S.Ct. 1013], quoting U.S. Const., 4th Amend.) 'It is axiomatic that a warrant may not authorize a search broader than the facts supporting its issuance.' (Burrows v. Superior Court (1974) 13 Cal.3rd 238, 250 . . .) '[T]he scope of a lawful search is "defined by the object of the search and the places in which there is probable cause to believe that it may be found."' (Garrison, supra, at p. 84, quoting United States v. Ross (1982) 456 U.S. 798, 824 [72 L. Ed. 2d 572, 102 S. Ct. 2157].) 'If the scope of the search exceeds that permitted by the terms of a validly issued warrant or the character of the relevant exception from the warrant requirement, the subsequent seizure is unconstitutional without more.' (Horton v. California (1990) 496 U.S. 128, 140 [110 L.Ed.2nd 112, 110 S.Ct. 2301].)" (People v. Nguyen (2017) 12 Cal.App.5th 574, 581.)

> The Court in Nguyen noted that had the officers not realized that the rear building was actually a separate residence until after they'd discovered defendant's computer, then the result might have been different pursuant to the rule in Maryland v. Garrison, supra. (Id., at pp. 583-584.)

"The Fourth Amendment's particularity requirement is not a mere technicality; it is an express constitutional command. The particularity requirement 'confines an officer executing a search warrant strictly within the bounds set by the warrant.' Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 394 n.7, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2nd 619 (1971). 'To the extent [government] agents want[] to seize relevant information beyond the scope of the warrant, they should [seek] a further warrant.' United States v. Sedaghaty, 728 F.3rd 885, 914 (9th Cir. 2013)." (¶) "The particularity requirement serves foundational constitutional interests and must be zealously protected. 'The requirement that warrants shall particularly describe the things to be seized makes general searches under them impossible and prevents the seizure of one thing under a warrant describing another.' Marron v. United States, 275 U.S. 192, 196, 48 S. Ct. 74, 72 L.Ed. 231, Treas. Dec. 42528 (1927). In addition, the particularity requirement 'assures the individual whose property is searched or seized of the lawful authority of the executing officer, his need to search, and the limits of his power to search,' Groh v. Ramirez, 540 U.S. 551, 561, 124 S. Ct. 1284, 157 L.Ed.2nd 1068 (2004) (citation omitted), and 'greatly reduces the perception of unlawful or intrusive police conduct,' Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 236, 103 S. Ct. 2317, 76 L.Ed.2nd 527 (1983). To serve these ends, the particularity requirement leaves nothing 'to the discretion of the officer executing the warrant.' Marron, 275 U.S. at 196. 'Absent some grave emergency, the Fourth Amendment has interposed a magistrate between the citizen and the police.' McDonald v. United States, 335 U.S. 451, 455, 69 S.Ct. 191, 93 L.Ed. 153 (1948)." (United States v. Ramirez (9th Cir. 2020) 976 F.3rd 946, 951-952.)

See also People v. Meza (2023) 90 Cal.App.5th 520, 537-538, discussing the "particularity" requirement as it relates to geofence search warrants.

In a warrant authorizing the search of two residences on the same property, divided by a road through the property, the affidavit to which describing primarily the criminal activities of the one resident with little if anything to indicate that the plaintiff, who lived in the other residence, was also involved, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeal held that the lack of any particularity describing how the plaintiff might have been involved invalidated the warrant as it applied to him. The Court found the affidavit in support of the warrant was "so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable." The Court concluded that the search of defendant's residence was not saved by the "Leon Good Faith" exception as no reasonable officer would believe that there was a fair probability that evidence of another man's burglaries would be found in the defendant's residence; the officers knew the men maintained separate residences on the property and they offered little more than a hunch that defendant's residence was being used to store property stolen by the other man. (United States v. Ralston (8th Cir. 2024) 88 F.4th 776.)

Factors: The following factors will be considered by the court:

- Whether probable cause exists to seize all items of a particular type described in the warrant;

- Whether the warrant sets out objective standards by which executing officers can differentiate items subject to seizure from those which are not; and

- Whether the government was able to describe the items more particularly in light of the information available to it at the time the warrant was issued.

  (United States v. Adjani (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F.3rd 1140, 1148.)

Suggested Procedures:

The affiant should personally view the place, etc., to be searched, if possible, in order to guarantee the accurateness of the description in the warrant.

Too much detail, so long as it is accurate, is better than not enough.

Use of photographs and/or diagrams, attached as exhibits, may be advisable.

More than one person, place or vehicle may be listed in a single warrant so long as there is probable cause described in the affidavit for each.

A later judicial finding that the search of one of the listed locations is not supported by probable cause will not necessarily affect the search of any of the other locations where the probable cause supporting the search of the other locations is in itself sufficient. (People v. Joubert (1983) 140 Cal.App.3rd 946.)

"Good faith" may save a warrant with a defective description. (See People v. MacAvoy (1984) 162 Cal.App.3rd 746, 763-765.)

See "Good Faith," under "Why Search Warrants are Preferred," above.

Additional Case Law:

"It is enough if the description is such that the officer with a search warrant can, with reasonable effort, ascertain and identify the place intended." (Steele v. United States (1925) 267 U.S. 498, 503 [45 S.Ct. 414; 69 L.Ed. 757].)

"The test for determining the validity of a warrant is [(1)] whether the warrant describes the place to be searched with 'sufficient particularity to enable law enforcement officers to locate and identify the premises with reasonable effort,' and [(2)] whether any reasonable probability exists that the officers may mistakenly search another premises." (United States v. Brobst (9th Cir. 2009) 558 F.3rd 982, 991-994, quoting United States v. Mann (9th Cir. 2004) 389 F.3rd 869, 876.)

> In Brobst, the affiant had the wrong street number and the physical description matched other residences in the area as well. However, the officers took steps to verify that they had the right house (e.g., checking a tax/property map and asking neighbors) before executing the warrant. Also, the residence had defendant's name posted on it. The search was upheld.

A warrant's description of the property to be searched will be reviewed by the appellate courts in a common sense and realistic fashion. (People v. Minder (1996) 46 Cal.App.4th 1784; United States v. Ventresca (1965) 380 U.S 102, 109 [85 S.Ct. 741; 13 L.Ed.2nd 684, 689].)

Defendant's home office being found in a separate residence behind the business itself, with a separate street number (1015½ instead of 1015), was held to be irrelevant in that the warrant itself, reviewed by a prosecutor, sufficiently described defendant's home office as a place to be searched. (United States v. Scully (5th Cir. 2020) 951 F.3rd 656.)

The fact that the affiant himself is personally familiar with the place to be searched, and therefore could reasonably be expected to find it, has been held, at least in one case, to be a factor which will help to overcome errors in the description. (People v. Amador (2000) 24 Cal.4th 387; wrong street number and faulty physical description not fatal when no other houses in the area could likely be mistaken for the place to be searched, and the affiant, who executed the warrant, was familiar with the place.)

An incorrect address was not fatal to the warrant when two agents executing the warrant personally knew which premises was intended to be searched and other circumstances helped to identify the correct house. (United States v. Turner (9th Cir. 1985) 770 F.3rd 1508, 1511.)

The "curtilage" of the home is included as a part of the home, whether or not specifically mentioned in the warrant. (United States v. Gorman (9th Cir. 1996) 104 F.3rd 272.)

Because the search warrant validly authorized the search of defendant's trailer, it also allowed for a search of the yard around the trailer; i.e., the trailer's curtilage. "Because the warrant authorized a search of this residence, it 'also authorize[d] without so stating the search of the residence's curtilage;" People v. Suarez (2020) 10 Cal.5th 116, 153, quoting United States v. Gorman (9th Cir. 1996) 104 F.3rd 272, 273; and People v. Smith (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 942, 950; "[A] warrant to search 'premises' located at a particular address is sufficient to support the search of outbuildings and appurtenances in addition to the main building when the various places searched are part of a single integral unit;" LaFave, Search and Seizure (5th Ed. 2018) § 4.10(a), pp. 932–934.)

> But, what constitutes a part of the curtilage may be an issue. (See United States v. Cannon (9th Cir. 2001) 264 F.3rd 875; the defendant's storage areas attached to a second residence, rented to a third party, to the rear of the main residence, properly searched as within the curtilage of the main residence.)
>
> See "Curtilage of the Home," under "Other Buildings and Places," under "Searches of Residences and Other Buildings (Chapter 13), below.
>
> Note: The better practice is to specifically include in the description of the place to be searched all places around the residence one might expect to find the items being searched for, thus eliminating the issue.

Because "(a) magistrate is entitled to draw reasonable inferences about where evidence is likely to be kept, based on the nature of the evidence and the type of offense (United States v. Angulo-Lopez (9th Cir. 1986) 791 F.2nd 1394, 1399.)," a search of a narcotics suspect's vehicle, based upon no more than the affiant's knowledge, gained through training and experience, that persons who traffic in drugs often secret more narcotics and other evidence in their vehicles, may be authorized. (United States v. Spearman (9th Cir. 1976) 532 F.2nd 132, 133.)

> The same argument can be made for authorizing the search of a narcotics suspect's person, even though away from his home. (United States v. Elliott (9th Cir. 2003) 322 F.3rd 710.)
>
> However, when a vehicle is not specifically listed in the search warrant as something the officers have probable cause to search, its mere proximity to the premises searched does not give officers the right to search the vehicle based upon its apparent connection to that property. (People v. Casares (2016) 62 Cal.4th 808, 836.)

The computer of a roommate, the roommate himself not being targeted, where there is probable cause to believe that the suspect has access to the roommate's computer, was properly listed in the warrant affidavit as an item to be searched. The critical element in a search is not whether the owner of property to be searched is a suspect, but rather whether there is reasonable cause to believe that it contains sizable evidence. (United States v. Adjani (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F.3rd 1140.)

Getting a search warrant for a residence where it is believed that the suspect is at least staying part time, recognizing the a person may have one domicile but several residences, is proper. (United States v. Crews (9th Cir. 2007) 502 F.3rd 1130, 1139; citing Martinez v. Bynum (1983) 461 U.S. 321, 339 [103 S.Ct. 1838; 75 L.Ed.2nd 879].)

The wrong address listed in the warrant, caused by an address change effected by local authorities from one town to another, did not affect the validity of the search warrant when the officers could still reasonably ascertain the correct house to be searched. (United States v. Brobst (9th Cir. 2009) 558 F.3rd 982, 991-994; steps taken by the officers at the scene to verify that they were about to search the right house.)

A general provision in a warrant giving police authorization to search "any vehicles under the control of [the real property] or the occupants of the premises to be searched, at the time the warrant is to be served as established by DMV documents and records, possession of keys or actual use of the vehicles and/or statements of the witnesses," was held to be sufficient to allow for the search of a vehicle found on the front lawn of defendant's residence where a records check revealed that a release of liability was issued to defendant's mother who lived at the residence. (People v. Camel (2017) 8 Cal.App.5th 989, 998-999.)

> Whether or not a warrant description is "overbroad" is a question of law and dependent upon the circumstances. "In analyzing this question, we consider the purpose of the warrant, the nature of the items sought, and the totality of the circumstances surrounding the case. 'A warrant that permits a search broad in scope may be appropriate under some circumstances, and the warrant's language must be read in context and with common sense.'" (Id., at p. 999.)

In a prosecution for possession of child pornography (Pen. Code § 311.11(a)), defendant's motion to quash a search warrant and suppress the resulting evidence seized from his laptop computer was properly granted by the trial court. The evidence in issue was seized from a residence located behind and separate from the address listed in the search warrant affidavit as the location of an Internet account that was sharing child pornography online. The warrant for the listed address permitted the search of the residence, garages, and outbuildings on the property at the listed address. The trial court found that the search of defendant's residence, which was completely separate from that property, was overbroad and thus violated the Fourth Amendment. Defendant's residence, found behind the residence listed in the warrant, was no longer a garage associated with the front residence, because at the time of the search it had a bedroom, a kitchen, a bathroom, and a living space, and there was no evidence it was capable of housing a vehicle. It was also not an outbuilding because there was no evidence it was used in connection with the main house or that it served as anything other than a separate residence for defendant. Even if the language of the warrant could be interpreted to include a search of defendant's residence, the warrant affidavit did not establish probable cause for such a search because the police had no basis to believe the network with the suspect

IP address was accessed from defendant's residence. Finally, the police lacked a "good faith" basis for the search of defendant's residence, even assuming there was a wireless signal extending from the identified residence to defendant's residence, because they had no evidence that defendant had a password to the network or that he had accessed it in any fashion. (People v. Nguyen (2017) 12 Cal.App.5th 574, 581-588.)

The "Reasonable Particularity" Requirement (Pen. Code §§ 1525, 1529); The property to be seized:

Rule: The property to be seized must be described with sufficient particularity so that an officer with no knowledge of the facts underlying the warrant and looking only at the description of the property on the face of the warrant would be able to recognize and select the items described while conducting the search. (See People v. Superior Court* [Williams] (1978) 77 Cal.App.3rd 69, 77; providing a complete discussion of cases approving and disapproving certain descriptions.)

Issues: In determining whether a warrant's description of the items to be seized is sufficiently specific to be constitutional under the Fourth Amendment, a court must consider three issues:

- Whether probable cause exists to seize all items of a particular type described in the warrant;

- Whether the warrants sets out objective standards by which executing officers can differentiate items subject to seizure from those which are not; and

- Whether the government was able to describe the items more particularly in light of the information available to it at the time the warrant was issued.

(Millender v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2010) 620 F.3rd 1016, 1024; certiorari granted; where the Ninth Circuit was reversed on the issue of whether the officers were entitled to qualified immunity, holding in a 6-3 decision that they were. See Messerschmidt v. Millender (2012) 565 U.S. 535 [132 S.Ct. 1235; 182 L.Ed.2nd 47].)

"General Warrants:" Warrants without sufficient particularity (i.e., "general warrants") are legally insufficient and invalid. (Burrows v. Superior Court (1974) 13 Cal.3rd 238, 249-250.)

"The Founding generation crafted the Fourth Amendment as a 'response to the reviled 'general warrants' and "writs of assistance" of the colonial era, which allowed British officers to rummage through homes in an unrestrained search for evidence of criminal activity." (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 403 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430, 452].)

"The purpose of the 'particularity' requirement of the Fourth Amendment is to avoid general and exploratory searches by requiring a particular description of the items to be seized. [Citation]" (People v. Bradford (1997) 15 Cal.4th 1229, 1296; citing Coolidge v. New Hampshire (1971) 403 U.S 443, 467 [91 S.Ct. 2022; 29 L.Ed.2nd 564, 583]; and Stanford v. Texas (1965) 379 U.S. 476, 485 [85 S.Ct. 506; 13 L.Ed.2nd 431, 437].)

"Particularity" is the requirement that the warrant must clearly state what is sought.

> "Breadth" deals with the requirement that the scope of the warrant be limited by the probable cause on which the warrant is based. (United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 702. See also People v. Meza (2023) 90 Cal.App.5th 520, 539-543, citing In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Dec. 10, 1987 (9th Cir. 1991) 926 F.2nd 847, 856-857.)
>
> > "'This is distinct from the particularity requirement because it "prevents the magistrate from making a mistaken authorization to search for particular objects in the first instance, no matter how well the objects are described."'" (People v. Meza, supra, quoting United States v. Weber (9th Cir. 1990) 923 F.2nd 1338, 1342.)

This "particularity" requirement serves two important purposes. It:

- Limits the discretion of the officers executing the warrant; and

- Informs the property owner or resident of the proper scope of the search.

(United States v. Vesikuru (9th Cir. 2002) 314 F.3rd 1116, 1123-1124; (United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc., supra, at pp. 701-705.)

A search warrant and affidavit that fails to "particularly describe" and place "meaningful restrictions" on the property to be seized, violates the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Bridges (9th Cir. 2003) 344 F.3rd 1010.)

Describing in the warrant itself (as opposed to the affidavit) the suspected criminal offense(s) might be enough to overcome an otherwise "overly broad" description of the property to be seized, in that it at least puts the searching officers on some notice as to the limits of their discretion. (Id., at p. 1018.)

An exception to this rule (i.e., "overly broad") might be when the place being searched is a business, and it is alleged and substantiated in the affidavit that the business's "entire operation was permeated with fraud." (Id., at pp. 1018-1019; United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 703, and fn. 13.)

See United States v. Smith (9th Cir. 2005) 424 F.3rd 992, 1004-1006.

In Smith, an "extraordinarily broad" search warrant was held to be justified where it was determined that "the entirety of the businesses operated by (defendants) are criminal in nature." (Id., at p. 1006.)

Overbreadth issues in a search warrant affidavit may be satisfied under the "doctrine of severance," where only legally admissible evidence is actually used at trial. Under this doctrine, a court may sever out information seized from a computer that was the product of an overly broad warrant affidavit, leaving only that which was lawfully seized. (United States v. Flores (9th Cir. 2015) 802 F.3rd1028, 1042-1046.)

> The same issue existed for a federal grand jury subpoena that was held to be overly broad and should have been quashed in that it included e-mail information sought from a former state governor's e-mail account that might include information in which the governor had a reasonable expectation of privacy (including, but not limited to, communications protected by the attorney-client privilege). (Grand Jury Subpoena v. Kitzhaber (9th Cir. 2016) 828 F.3rd 1083, 1087-1094.)

Listing in a warrant all computers in defendant's residence, when the officers had no way of knowing which computers might contain incriminating information for which there was probable cause to believe was in at least one of the computers, was held to be legally sufficient. (People v. Fayed (2020) 9 Cal.5th 147, 185-187.)

"(T)he more specificity the warrant describes the items sought, the more limited the scope of the search. Conversely, the more generic the description, the greater the risk of a prohibited general search. (Citation)" (People v. Balint (2006) 138 Cal.App.4th 200, 206.)

Seizure of "all computer media" is not too broad, given the difficulty in determining what might be on such media prior to a forensic examination by experts, at least so long as there is an explanation in the affidavit explaining why a wholesale seizure is necessary under the circumstances. (United States v. Hill (9th Cir. 2006) 459 F.3rd 966, 973-977.)

Use of language such as; " . . . including, but not limited to . . ." should not be used, in that such a description is too general, and legally insufficient to justify seizure of any property intended to be included under the "not limited to" phrase. (See United States v. Reeves (9th Cir. 2000) 210 F.3rd 1041, 1046-1047; United States v. Bridges (9th Cir. 2003) 344 F.3rd 1010, 1017-1018.)

"Indicia tending to establish the identity of persons in control of the premises," has been held to be specific enough. (Ewing v. City of Stockton (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 1218, 1229.)

Finding a small amount of marijuana on an arrestee's person, and observing him earlier with a single, semi-automatic pistol, were insufficient to support an allegation that "marijuana, heroin, and methamphetamine, or . . . evidence of gang membership," as well as "'[f]irearms, assault rifles, handguns of any caliber and shotguns of any caliber,' as well as ammunition for such firearms," would be found in defendant's home. Even discovery of his criminal history; i.e., that he'd been convicted of the illegal possession of a firearm and for being a felon in possession of a firearm, did not support a belief that multiple firearms might be found in his home. (United States v. Nora (9th Cir. 2014) 765 F.3rd 1049, 1052-1060.)

> See "The Cleland Warrant; Narcotics," below.
>
> See also United States v. King (9th Cir. 2021) 985 F.3rd 702, 707-709, where the Court found that an affidavit for the search of a felon's home, and describing "any firearm," was held not to be overbroad, differentiating this case from the facts in Nora.

Although defendant had met a false imprisonment victim through social media several months before the crime, a probation condition upon conviction that allows law enforcement unrestricted computer searches for material prohibited by law was overbroad under the Fourth Amendment. Such a condition allows for searches of vast amounts of personal information unrelated to defendant's criminal conduct or his potential future criminality. A narrower means might include either requiring defendant to provide his social media account and passwords to his probation officer for monitoring, or restricting his use of, or access to, social media websites and applications without the prior approval of his probation officer. A condition requiring defendant not to delete his browser history was held to be valid, assuming a properly narrowed condition monitoring his use of social media can be fashioned. (People v. Appleton (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 717, 721-728.)

Items listed in a search warrant to be seized that are found to be "overbroad" may be severed without affecting the otherwise valid portions of the warrant. This is true whether the issue arises in a criminal (United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 707.) or a civil case. (Ewing v. City of Stockton (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 1218, 1228-1229.)

Additional Case Law:

The United States Supreme Court reversed the Ninth Circuit's Millender v. County of Los Angeles decision (i.e., Millender v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2010) 620 F.3rd 1016; cert. granted) in Messerschmidt et al. v. Millender (2012) 565 U.S. 535 [132 S.Ct. 1235; 182 L.Ed.2nd 47], holding that officers were entitled to qualified immunity from civil liability when their conduct, even if illegal, did not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known. The Supreme Court held that based upon a suspect's known gang affiliation, his use of firearms, and his tendency towards violence, that it was not unreasonable to assume that more than just the gun used in his crime, and relevant gang paraphernalia, might be found in the defendant's residence where the suspect was known to live.

See also: United States v. Spilotro (9th Cir. 1986) 800 F.2nd 959, 963; United States v. Wong (9th Cir. 2003) 334 F.3rd 831.)

See also United States v. King (9th Cir. 2021) 985 F.3rd 702, 707-709, where the Court found that an affidavit for the search of a felon's home, and describing "any firearm," was held not to be overbroad, differentiating this case from the facts in Millender.

However, "a search warrant need only be reasonably specific, rather than elaborately detailed. . . . (T)he specificity required depends on the circumstances of the case and the type of items involved." (Ewing v. City of Stockton (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 1218, 1228; citing United States v. Brobst (9th Cir. 2009) 558 F.3rd 982, 993.)

"In determining whether seizure of particular items exceeds the scope of the warrant, courts (are to) examine whether the items are similar to, or the 'functional equivalent' of, items enumerated in the warrant, as well as containers in which they are reasonably likely to be found." (People v. Rangel (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 1310, 1316; upholding the seizure and search of defendant's cellphone (i.e.,

"smartphone") although not mentioned in the warrant, but where the officers were authorized to seize "gang indicia."

"Particularity" refers to the requirement that the warrant must clearly state what is sought. "Breadth" deals with the requirement that the scope of the warrant be limited by the probable cause on which the warrant is based. (United States v. Brobst (9th Cir. 2009) 558 F.3rd 982, 994-995; citing United States v. Towne (9th Cir. 1993) 997 F.2nd 537, 554; United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 702; Millender v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2010) 620 F.3rd 1016, 1024; certiorari granted; see Messerschmidt et al. v. Millender (2012) 565 U.S. 535 [132 S.Ct. 1235; 182 L.Ed.2nd 47], above. See also Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, at p.36.)

The description must "place a meaningful restriction on the objects to be seized . . ." (People v. Murray (1978) 89 Cal.App.3rd 809, 832.)

Documents or other evidence showing "dominion and control" (i.e., "D and C papers") over the place being searched should be listed among the items for which the affiant wishes to search. (People v. Williams (1992) 3 Cal.App.4th 1535; People v. Rushing (1989) 209 Cal.App.3rd 618; People v. Nicolaus (1991) 54 Cal.3rd 551, 575.)

> "Indicia tending to establish the identity of persons in control of the premises," has been held to be specific enough to meet the "particularly" requirements for a search warrant. (Ewing v. City of Stockton (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 1218, 1229.)

In an Internet sexual solicitation of a child case, the following items were held to be appropriate in a search warrant for the suspect's house and vehicle: "(S)exually explicit material or paraphernalia used to lower the inhibition of children, sex toys, photography equipment, child pornography, as well as material related to past molestation such as photographs, address ledgers including names of other pedophiles, and journals recording sexual encounters with children," as well as the defendant's computer system, including "computer equipment, information on digital and magnetic storage devices, computer printouts, computer software and manuals, and documentation regarding computer use." (United States v. Meek (9th Cir. 2004) 366 F.3rd 705, 714-716.)

So long as sufficiently described, it is not necessary that a warrant affidavit contain the actual photographs of what is alleged to be child pornography. (United States v. Battershell (9th Cir. 2006) 457 F.3rd 1048.)

But what is, and what is not, "child pornography" might be an issue. As a "starting point" for determining the existence of "lasciviousness" in a photo or photos, a court may use the following non-exclusive six factor test:

- Whether the focal point of the visual depiction is on the child's genitalia or pubic area;
- Whether the setting of the visual depiction is sexually suggestive, i.e., in a place or pose generally associated with sexual activity;
- Whether the child is depicted in an unnatural pose, or in inappropriate attire, considering the age of the child;
- Whether the child is fully or partially clothed, or nude;
- Whether the visual depiction suggests sexual coyness or a willingness to engage in sexual activity;
- Whether the visual depiction is intended or designed to elicit a sexual response in the viewer.

(United States v. Hill (9th Cir. 2006) 459 F.3rd 966, 970-973, citing United States v. Dost (S.D. Cal. 1986) 636 F.Supp. 828, 832.)

Practice Note: It is best to include a sample of the pornography in issue as an attachment to a warrant affidavit, for the magistrate to consider. (See United States v. Perkins (9th Cir. 2017) 850 F.3rd 1109.) However, such an attachment should be sealed per People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 Cal.4th 948 (see Sealing the Warrant Affidavit; i.e., the "Hobbs Warrant," below) to prevent any unnecessary publication of the pornography itself, particularly when dealing with child victims.

Things the affiant "hopes to find," but for which there is no articulable reason to believe will be found, should not be listed. However, property that there is a "fair probability" would be found, given the nature of the offense, may be listed despite the lack of any specific evidence that such an item is in fact in the place to be searched. (See People v. Ulloa (2002) 101 Cal.App.4th 1000; computer containing Internet correspondence in a child molest case.)

"In determining whether a warrant is sufficiently particular in describing the place to be searched or the things to be seized, courts look to 'such factors as the purpose for which the warrant was issued, the nature of the items to which it is directed, and the total circumstances surrounding the case.'" (Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, 35; quoting People v. Rogers (1986) 187 Cal.App.3rd 1001, 1008.) "'Neither "[c]omplete precision' nor 'near certainty' is required." (quoting People v. Amador (2000) 24 Cal.4th 387, 392; People v. Hepner (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 761, 775–776.)

"Telephone calls" (i.e., authorization to intercept them while executing the warrant) should be listed where there is probable cause to believe the telephone is being used for illegal purposes. (People v. Warner (1969) 270 Cal.App.2nd 900, 907, bookmaking case; People v. Nealy (1991) 228 Cal.App.3rd 447, 452, narcotics case.)

> The contents of a telephone call to a narcotics dealer's home asking to buy narcotics, answered by the police executing a search warrant, are admissible into evidence as a judicially created exception to the Hearsay Rule. (People v. Morgan et al. (2005) 125 Cal.App.4th 935.)
>
> > The Morgan Court further determined that the telephone call was "non-testimonial," as described in Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36 [124 S.Ct. 1354; 158 L.Ed.2nd 177], and thus admissible over a Sixth Amendment, "right to confrontation" objection. (People v. Morgan, supra, at pp. 946-947.)
>
> Other courts have held that the contents of a telephone call are admissible as non-hearsay circumstantial evidence of the defendants' dope dealing. (People v. Nealy (1991) 228 Cal.App.3rd 447; and People v. Ventura (1991) 1 Cal.App.4th 1515.)

Practice Note: Asking for authorization to answer the telephone for the purpose of establishing "dominion and control" over the place being searched (E.g.; "Hello, is Doper John home?") is also a good practice.

Computers, including disks, etc., based upon the affiant's knowledge that criminals will often chronicle their criminal activities on their computers, may often be included. With sufficient probable cause connecting a computer to criminal activity, the computer and all its attachments, disks, etc., are subject to seizure and removal to a lab where it may be properly and carefully inspected by experts. (United States v. Hay (9th Cir. 2000) 231 F.3rd 630; see also People v. Ulloa (2002) 101 Cal.App.4th 1000.)

See also Guest v. Leis (6th Cir. 2001) 255 F.3rd 325, 334-337; seizure of the whole computer system was not unreasonable so long as there was probable cause to conclude that evidence of a crime would be found on the computer.

And Mahlberg v. Mentzer (8th Cir. 1992) 968 F.2nd 772; seizure of computer equipment, programs and disks not listed in the warrant upheld.

Seizure of computers in a homicide investigation justified by probable cause to believe that specific documentary evidence would reasonably be found in the defendant's computer. (United States v. Wong (9th Cir. 2003) 334 F.3rd 831.)

A laptop computer, open and running, properly seized as potential evidence of dominion and control over the searched premises, even though not specifically listed in the warrant. (People v. Balint (2006) 138 Cal.App.4th 200; see also People v. Varghese (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 1084, 1100-1103.)

The computer of a roommate, the roommate himself not being targeted, where there is probable cause to believe that the suspect has access to the roommate's computer, was properly listed in the warrant affidavit as an item to be searched. The critical element in a search is not whether the owner of property to be searched is a suspect, but rather whether there is reasonable cause to believe that it contains seizeable evidence. (United States v. Adjani (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F.3rd 1140.)

The seizure of defendant's computer and all computer related items (e.g., compact disks, floppy disks, hard drives, memory cards, DVDs, videotapes, and other portable digital devices), based upon no more than the discovery of one printed-out photo of child pornography, was lawful in that it was reasonable to conclude that the picture had come from his computer and that similar pictures were likely to be stored in it. (United States v. Brobst (9th Cir. 2009) 558 F.3rd 982, 994.)

Failure of the magistrate's order to include an authorization to search defendant's computer, even though in the statement of probable cause the affiant indicated a desire to search any possible computers found in defendant's house, was a fatal omission. Searching defendant's computer, therefore, went beyond the scope of the warrant's authorization. (United States v. Payton (9th Cir. 2009) 573 F.3rd 859, 861-864.)

> The fact that the issuing magistrate testified to an intent to allow for the search of defendant's computers, and that the warrant included authorization to search for certain listed records which might be found in a computer, was held to be irrelevant. (Id. at pp. 862-863.)
>
> But see United States v. Giberson (9th Cir. 2008) 527 F.3rd 882, where it was held that some circumstances might lead searching officers to a reasonable conclusion that documentary evidence they are seeking would be contained in computers found at the location, authorizing the search of those containers despite the failure of the warrant to list computers as things that may be searched. It was recommended, however, that the computer be seized and a second warrant be obtained authorizing its search.

See People v. Rangel (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 1310, 1316, likening defendant's "smartphone" to a computer, given its capability to store photographs, e-mail addresses, and other personal information.

See "Computer Searches," under "Probable Cause Issues," below, and under "Searches of High Tech Devices" (Chapter 17), below.

Inadvertent changes to the language of a warrant and affidavit after it is signed by the judge create issues that could result in suppression of all, or maybe a part of, the evidence seized, depending upon the flagrancy of the violation. (United States v. Sears (9th Cir. 2005) 411 F.3rd 1124; severance and partial suppression held to be sufficient sanction where the officer used the wrong attachment describing the places to be searched and property to be seized which was different in only a few, minor ways.)

Acting upon information that defendant—a convicted felon—probably had a firearm in his home, a warrant affidavit that authorized officers to search for to search for "[a]ny firearm" and various other firearm-related items, was held not to be overbroad, thus complying with the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. King (9th Cir. 2021) 985 F.3rd 702, 707-709.)

Supplementing the Affidavit: To be legally effective, the affidavit may be supplemented by an examination, under oath, of the affiant by the magistrate. (Pen. Code § 1526)

The oral examination, however, will not be considered part of the probable cause unless reduced to writing and signed by the affiant. (Charney v. Superior Court (1972) 27 Cal.App.3rd 888, 891.)

Information not contained "within the four corners of a written affidavit given under oath" will not be considered and cannot be used to help establish probable cause. (United States v. Luong (9th Cir. 2006) 470 F.3rd 898, 904, 905.)

> Note that there is some federal case authority to the contrary, from other circuits, allowing information known to the affiant and orally told to the magistrate to be considered. (See United States v. Frazier (6th Cir. 2005) 423 F.3rd 526, 535-536; United States v. Legg (4th Cir. 1994) 18 F.3rd 240, 243.244; and see dissenting opinion in United States v. Luong, supra., at pp. 905-907.)

Combined Affidavit with Warrant: Some authorities advocate the use of a combined search warrant and affidavit form with an attached declaration of probable cause. (See People v. MacAvoy (1984) 162 Cal.App.3rd 746.)

> However, care must be taken to insure that the attached declaration of probable cause is "incorporated by reference," signed, and sworn to by the officer, for the warrant to be legally sufficient. (People v. Leonard (1996) 50 Cal.App.4th 878; defective warrant saved under "Good Faith" exception. See also (United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 699-700.)
>
> > Incorporation may be made simply by using "suitable words of reference." (Id., at pp. 699-700; citing United States v. Towne (9th Cir. 1993) 997 F.2nd 537, 545.)
>
> While no specific language is necessary, the Ninth Circuit has upheld such wording as; "Upon the sworn complaint made before me there is probable cause to believe that the [given] crime . . . has been committed." (United States v. Vesikuru (9th Cir. 2002) 314 F.3rd 1116, 1120; see also United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc., supra, at pp. 699-700.)
>
> The Ninth Circuit also requires that the incorporated affidavit is either attached physically to the warrant or a least accompanies the warrant while agents execute the search. (United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc., supra, at p. 699.)
>
> Also, such a format potentially raises issues concerning the need to provide a copy of the affidavit to the suspect, along with the warrant. (See United States v. Gantt (9th Cir. 1999) 194 F.3rd 987, 1001, and fn. 7; affidavit needed to cure a deficiency in the description of the property to be seized; and United States v. Smith (9th Cir. 2005) 424 F.3rd 992, 1006-1008.)

Multiple Affiants/Affidavits: There may be more than one affiant and/or more than one affidavit in support of a search warrant. (Skelton v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3rd 144; P.C. § 1527.)

Staleness: The information contained in the warrant affidavit must not be "stale." (People v. Mesa (1975) 14 Cal.3rd 466, 470.) Information that is remote in time (i.e., between the development of the probable cause and the obtaining of a search warrant) may be deemed to be too stale and therefore unreliable. (Alexander v. Superior Court (1973) 9 Cal. 3rd 387, 393.)

Drug Sales Cases: Delays of more than four weeks, at least in a narcotics sales case and absent some new evidence tending to show the continued presence of the controlled substances in question, are generally considered insufficient to demonstrate present probable cause. For instance:

See Hemler v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal.App.3rd 430, 433-434; delay of 34 days between controlled sale of heroin and the officer's affidavit for the search warrant is stale.

Delay of 52 days between a controlled buy of almost a pound of marijuana and the execution of a search warrant, despite the officer's expert opinion that the seller would still have contraband in his residence (the sale taking place in a parking lot in another city), was held to be stale. (People v. Hulland (2003) 110 Cal.App.4th 1646.)

A delay of two months and three weeks (82 days) between the purchase of methamphetamine and the obtaining of a search warrant for defendant's house was too long. With the information being stale, the warrant was invalid as to him. It is irrelevant that defendant's purchase of drugs was part of a nine-month investigation into a drug-trafficking conspiracy involving multiple suspects when there was no showing that defendant himself was involved at all during the two months and three weeks in question. (People v. Hirata (2009) 175 Cal.App.4th 1499.)

The delay of some 24 days between the seizure of defendant's cellphone and the obtaining of a search warrant to search it was not unreasonable under the circumstances. In this case, the Court reasoned that because smartphones "retain data for long periods of time," delay between the time a cellphone is seized and when it is searched is not likely to cause stored personal data to be lost, or data of potential evidentiary relevance to become stale. In addition, the court added that the defendant (from whom the cellphone was seized) was in police custody for the entire twenty-four-day period, and there was no evidence that either he or anyone acting on his behalf made a request or demand for the cellphone's return, or even inquired about it. The Court concluded that when defendants do not seek the return of seized property, they cannot establish that the delay affected legitimate interests protected by the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Bragg (8th Cir. 2022) 44 F.3rd 1067.)

Stale Probable Cause to Arrest or Search:

While staleness may be an issue when obtaining a warrant, it is not generally an issue when it relates to probable cause in making an arrest for an offense that occurred days earlier. (See United States v. Haldorson (7th Cir. 2019) 941 F.3rd 284: There is no requirement that officers arrest a suspect at "the moment probable cause is established.")

Note: Caution, however, must be taken to insure that during the intervening delay, the probable cause has not dissipated as a result of subsequent events or newly acquired information to the point where the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the probable cause no longer exists.

The fact that defendant's four felony convictions were years earlier is irrelevant to the issue of staleness when defendant's documented recent events showed that he was currently an active member of a street gang. (People v. Delgado (2022) 78 Cal.App.5th 425, 431.)

Animal Cruelty Case:

Information concerning prior complaints of animal cruelty spanning a four-year time period properly considered as part of the probable cause in a search warrant affidavit for a search of defendants' property when the prior complaints tended to show that defendants were keeping, and apparently breeding, numerous pit bulls on their property. "It was not unreasonable for that information to be considered relevant to the possible existence of an ongoing dogfighting operation on defendants' property." (People v. Williams (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 111, 125.)

Exception: Historical Warrants:

While "stale information" by itself will not generally support a finding of probable cause, when combined with some evidence of a present criminal violation, an ongoing pattern of criminal activity may add up to sufficient probable cause. (People v. Mikesell (1996) 46 Cal.App.4th 1711; sometimes called an "historical warrant."

See also People v. Medina (1985) 165 Cal.App.3rd 11, 20-21; and United States v. Fries (9th Cir. 2015) 781 F.3rd 1137, 1150- 1151.)

A continuing criminal enterprise, with no reason to believe the defendant has moved from her home where she was known to have lived some six months earlier, negated any staleness issue. (People v. Gibson (2001) 90 Cal.App.4th 371, 380-381.)

Other Exceptions:

Expert opinion that, under the circumstances, the sought-for property is likely still to be found on the premises to be searched will normally overcome an issue of staleness. (See United States v. Lacy (9th Cir. 1997) 119 F.3rd 742; 10-month old information concerning the receiving of child pornography.)

But see People v. Hulland (2003) 110 Cal.App.4th 1646, where the officer's expert opinion was held to be insufficient to overcome a staleness (52 days) issue in a narcotics sales case.

"If circumstances would justify a person of ordinary prudence to conclude that an activity had continued to the present time, then the passage of time will not render the information stale." (People v. Carrington (2009) 47 Cal.4th 145, 164; quoting People v. Hulland, supra, at p. 1652.)

In Carrington, the California Supreme Court held that it there was a "fair probability" that defendant would still have stolen checks in her home even after two months when some of the checks > remained outstanding, as well as a key to the business that she'd burglarized. (People v. Carrington, supra., at pp. 163-164.)

Evidence that the defendant's criminal activities are a continuing offense, with no reason to believe that the defendant know he was being investigated, and every reason to believe that defendant would retain incriminating evidence, a search warrant will not be held to be based upon stale information. (People v. Stipo (2011) 195 Cal.App.4th 664, 672-673; a computer-hacking enterprise.)

With about two months between the last illegal use of the victim's address and Social Security number and the later issuance of a search warrant for defendant's residence, the warrant affidavit was still held to support a finding of probable cause. This finding was based upon a series of similar incidents over several years, all of which could be either directly or circumstantially connected to defendant. (People v. Jones (2013) 217 Cal.App.4th 735.)

In that defendant fit the profile of a collector of child pornography, and the affiant included in the warrant affidavit the fact that individuals who possess, distribute, or trade in child pornography, rarely, if ever, dispose of sexually explicit images of children because they tend to treat such photos as "prized possessions," the fact that a warrant was not obtained and executed until some 20 months after defendant had uploaded a child pornography video did not make the information stale. (United States v. Schesso (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 1040, 1047.)

Despite the passage of 23 years, and despite the fact that defendant had changed residences in that time period, the nature of the items sought (i.e., a firearm [the murder weapon], information stored on a computer, and photographs, journals and diaries), being items people normally hold onto for years, and that this defendant, having been in love with the victim's husband, wouldn't have likely discarded, the information in the affidavit listing these as items or information being sought, was not stale in that it was probable that defendant would not have discarded these items, or removed the information from her computer. (People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 765-776.)

> Obtaining a search warrant for defendant's Facebook account almost 3½ months after information was developed that it might contain incriminating information was held not to be so stale that there was no longer a fair possibility that the evidence might still be there, particularly since the affiant submitted a preservation request 2 months after the probable cause was developed. Even if deleted, the information could likely be recovered. (United States v. Flores (9th Cir. 2015) 802 F.3rd1028, 1046-1047.)
>
> Documentary gun registration information is not considered "stale" even though it shows that the firearms in question were purchased years earlier (17 years in this case), at least absent other information showing that the guns were disposed of in the meantime. (People v. Lee (2015) 242 Cal.App.4th 161, 172-173.)

Fingerprints: Note Hayes v. Florida (1985) 470 U.S. 811 [105 S.Ct. 1643; 84 L.Ed.2nd 705], for the proposition that a search warrant may, without probable cause, authorize the temporary detention of a person for the purpose of taking fingerprints if:

- There is at least a "reasonable suspicion" that the suspect committed a criminal act;
- There is a reasonable basis for believing that fingerprints will establish or negate the suspect's connection with that crime; and
- The procedure used is carried out with dispatch.

> "There is thus support in our cases for the view that the Fourth Amendment would permit seizures for purposes of fingerprinting, if there is reasonable suspicion that the suspect has committed a criminal act, if there is a reasonable basis for believing that fingerprinting will establish or negate the suspect's connection with that crime, and if the procedure is carried out with dispatch." (Hayes v. Florida, supra, at p. 817.)
>
> Note: The Court in Hayes specifically declined to decide whether this would include transporting the subject to the station for fingerprinting. Because a non-consensual transportation is generally considered to be an arrest, requiring full "probable cause" (See "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above), it is strongly suggested that the procedure be conducted in the field.

See also Davis v. Mississippi (1969) 394 U.S. 721, 727-728 [89 S.Ct. 1394; 22 L.Ed.2nd 676]; noting that the taking of fingerprints of a person who is merely subject to a temporary detention is lawful.

And Note Virgle v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal.App.4th 572, 574; where the Court referred to Hayes with approval.

Although the above holding in Hayes is dicta, it is "carefully considered language" that should be accorded weight. (United States v. Dorcely (D.C. Cir. 2006) 454 F.3rd 366, 375.)

Description of the Facts; Factual vs. Conclusory Language: and circumstances that comprise the probable cause: "Conclusory," as opposed to "factual," allegations by the affiant are legally insufficient. (Barnes v. Texas (1965) 380 U.S. 253 [13 L.Ed.2nd 818].)

Note: The affiant must describe the facts and circumstances which comprise the probable cause, so that a magistrate may independently evaluate the existence or nonexistence of sufficient facts to justify issuance of the warrant. Merely listing the affiant's conclusions, without describing the facts and circumstances that lead to the affiant's conclusions, is legally insufficient.

Using terms such as "pornography" and "harmful matter" without describing what it is the affiant believes is pornographic, is a conclusory statement that may invalidate a warrant. (People v. Hale (2005) 133 Cal.App.4th 942; warrant saved by other language in the affidavit from which the magistrate could infer the pornographic nature of the pictures.)

A "purely conclusory" statement by a narcotics officer that the residence from which a box suspected of containing narcotics was a "stash house," with no evidence indicating what facts or circumstances led the officer to reach this conclusion, "was entitled to little if any weight" in the probable cause determination. (United States v. Cervantes (9th Cir. 2012) 703 F.3rd 1135, 1148-1140; discussing the warrantless search of a vehicle, based upon probable cause.)

"Good Faith:" Officers obtaining a search warrant in "good faith" and acting in reasonable reliance on an otherwise facially valid warrant, issued by a neutral and detached magistrate, will not require suppression of evidence even when the warrant is later found to be lacking in probable cause. (United States v. Leon (1984) 468 U.S. 897 [104 S.Ct. 3405; 82 L.Ed.2nd 677].)

> See "Good Faith," under "Why Search Warrants are Preferred," above. See also "The "Good Faith" Exception," under "Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 8), above.

Use of Hearsay: Use of hearsay in an affidavit, or even "double (i.e., multiple level) hearsay," is okay "so long as there [is] a substantial basis for crediting the hearsay." (United States v. Ventresca (1965) 380 U.S 102, 108 [85 S.Ct. 741; 12 L.Ed.2nd 684, 688-689], quoting Jones v. United States (1960) 362 U.S. 257, 272 [80 S.Ct. 725; 4 L.Ed.2nd 697, 708]; People v. Superior Court* [Bingham] (1979) 91 Cal.App.3rd 463, 469.) In fact, it is usually unavoidable. (People v. Magana (1979) 95 Cal.App.3rd 453, 460, 462; People v. Suarez (2020) 10 Cal.5th 116, 153; "Thus hearsay may be the basis for issuance of the warrant 'so long as there [is] a substantial basis for crediting the hearsay;" quoting People v. Gonzalez (1990) 51 Cal.3rd 1179, 1207, fn. 3.)

> See also City of Santa Cruz v. Municipal Court (1989) 49 Cal.3rd 74, 87-88; People v. Smith (1976) 17 Cal.3rd 845, 850.
>
> Each level of hearsay, however, must be shown in the affidavit to be reliable. (See People v. Superior Court* [Bingham], supra; Caligari v. Superior Court (1979) 98 Cal.App.3rd 725; People v. Love (1985) 168 Cal.App.3rd 104.)

Miranda Violation Statements: Statements taken in violation of the defendant's Miranda rights (Miranda v. Arizona (1966) 384 U.S. 436 [86 S.Ct. 1602; 16 L.Ed.2nd 694].), so long as not coerced or involuntary, may be used in an affidavit adding to the probable cause. (United States v. Patterson (9th Cir. 1987) 812 F.2nd 1188, 1193; People v. Brewer (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 442.)

Third Party's Fourth Amendment Violation: Evidence obtained in violation of someone else's (i.e., someone other than the present defendant's) Fourth Amendment (search and seizure) rights may be used as part of the probable cause in a search warrant affidavit, unless the defendant can show that he has "standing" (i.e., it was his reasonable expectation of privacy that was violated) to challenge the use of the evidence. (People v. Madrid (1992) 7 Cal.App.4th 1888, 1896.)

> "Standing" depends upon a showing that it was the defendant's own constitutional rights which were violated. (People v. Shepherd (1994) 23 Cal.App.4th 825, 828.)

See "Standing," under "Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 8), above.

Information in a search warrant affidavit that is the product of a violation of the defendant's own Fourth Amendment rights will be excised from the affidavit. The redacted affidavit will then be retested to determine whether probable cause still exists. (People v. Weiss (1999) 20 Cal.4th 1073, 1081; People v. Williams (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 111, 124-125; see also People v. Suarez (2020) 10 Cal.5th 116, 153.)

Use of Privileged Information:

Passive Recipient: Information that comes into the hands of law enforcement that may be "privileged information," obtained without any "complicity" on the part of law enforcement, may be used as a part of the probable cause justifying the issuance of the search warrant. (People v. Navarro (2006) 138 Cal.App.4th 146; Attorney-Client information supplied by the attorney in violation of E.C. §§ 950 et seq.; see also United States v. White (7th Cir. 1992) 970 F.2nd 328.)

The issue is one of a Fifth (and Fourteenth) Amendment "due process" violation. (People v. Navarro, supra.)

Being a "passive recipient of privileged information" shows a lack of "complicity." (People v. Navarro, supra, at pp. 158-162.)

Deliberate Violation: To show that law enforcement was not just a passive recipient of privileged information, the defendant must prove that:

- The government (i.e., law enforcement) knew a lawyer-client relationship existed between the defendant and his informant;
- The government deliberately intruded into that relationship; and
- The defendant was prejudiced as a result.

(People v. Navarro, supra, citing United States v. Kennedy (10th Cir. 2000) 225 F.3rd 1197, 1194-1195.)

Case Law:

Law enforcement officers gaining access to, and reading, privileged material (defendant's notes to his attorney), a Sixth Amendment violation, did not require dismissal of the case or any other sanctions absent evidence that defendant was somehow "disadvantaged" by the violation. In this case, jail sheriff's deputies looked at notes defendant had written to his attorney. However, there was no evidence that any of the information discovered by this violation was passed onto the prosecutors. None of the deputies were witnesses in the case. There being no prejudice, defendant's motion to dismiss was properly denied. (People v. Ervine (2009) 47 Cal.4th 745, 764-772.)

When a prosecutor instructs her investigator to eavesdrop on an attorney-client conversation in a courtroom holding cell, such an act is so egregious as to warrant dismissal of the case. (Morrow v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal.App.4th 1252.)

However, law enforcement officers intentionally eavesdropping on an attorney-client conversation that takes place at the offices of the law enforcement agency, without the complicity of a prosecutor, is not so egregious as to require dismissal. Exclusion of the discovered information, and any products of that information, is sufficient a remedy under the circumstances. (People v. Shrier et al. (2010) 190 Cal.App.4th 400.)

A prison inmate has a viable lawsuit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 where he has alleged that prison officials have opened and read, as opposed to merely inspected for contraband, his legal mail addressed to his attorney, and, in seeking injunctive relief, he sufficiently alleged the threatened repetition of his Sixth Amendment rights where he remains incarcerated and a corrections director personally informed him that prison officials were permitted to read his legal mail. (Nordstrom v. Ryan (9th Cir. 2014) 762 F.3rd 903,908-912; citing Wolff v. McDonnell (1974) 418 U.S. 539, 576-577 [94 S.Ct. 2963; 41 L.Ed.2nd 935], which upheld the right of jail officials to open and inspect, but not read, mail to an inmates attorney.)

California Rule of Professional Conduct Rule 4.4 (patterned after the American Bar Association's Model Rule 4.4):

> Where it is reasonably apparent to a lawyer (including a prosecutor) who has received a writing that was inadvertently sent or produced and relates to a lawyer's representation of a client, and the recipient lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the writing is privileged or subject to the work product doctrine, the lawyer shall refrain from examining the writing any more than it is necessary to determine that it is privileged or protected work product and shall promptly notify the sender.
>
> Note: While this does not affect law enforcement's receipt of privileged material, nor does it provide for an exclusionary rule, it is an ethics issue for a lawyer, including prosecutors, when he or she receives privileged material, whether directly or from a law enforcement source.

Nighttime Searches: Justification for a nighttime search must be established in the warrant affidavit by establishing "good cause," risking the possible suppression of evidence if it is not. (P.C. § 1533; Tuttle v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal.App.3rd 320, 328.)

> "Nighttime" for purposes of executing a search warrant is between 10:00 p.m. and 7:00 a.m. (P.C. § 1533) The search need only be commenced before 10:00 p.m. It is irrelevant how long after 10:00 p.m. it takes to finish the search. (People v. Zepeda (1980) 102 Cal.App.3rd 1, 7-8.)
>
> See Rodriguez v Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal.App.3rd 1453, 1470; suggesting that because a night search does not violate any constitutional principles, evidence discovered during a nighttime search without judicial authorization should not result in suppression of any evidence. (See also Tidwell v. Superior Court (1971) 17 Cal.App.3rd 780, 787.)
>
> But see Bravo v. City of Santa Maria (9th Cir. 2011) 665 F.3rd 1076, 1085-1086, where the Court found the failure to justify the need for a nighttime search to be the intrusive equivalent of failing to comply with the "knock and notice" requirements.
>
> The test for determining "good cause" (thus allowing for a nighttime search) is as follows: "(T)he affidavit furnished the magistrate must set forth specific facts which show a necessity for service of the warrant at night rather than between the hours of 7 a.m. and 10 p.m. This means that the magistrate must be informed of facts from which it reasonably may be concluded that the contraband to be seized will not be in the place to be searched during the hours of 7 a.m. to 10 p.m." (People v. Watson (1977) 75 Cal.App.3rd 592, 598.)

The need for a nighttime search may be shown by a description of "some factual basis for a prudent conclusion that the greater intrusiveness of a nighttime search is justified by the exigencies of the situation." (People v. Kimble (1988) 44 Cal.3rd 480, 494.)

Note: While typically this is an issue in the searches of residences, the statute (P.C. § 1533) is not so restricted. Therefore, a search warrant authorizing the search of a person, vehicle, or other container may also require a "nighttime endorsement" if executed at night (i.e., 10:00 p.m. to 6:00 a.m.).

Leaving a Copy at the Scene: It is not legally required that a copy of the affidavit be left at the scene (United States v. Celestine (9th Cir. 2003) 324 F.3rd 1095, 1107.), at least when the place to be searched and the property to be seized is sufficiently described in the search warrant itself. (United States v. McGrew (9th Cir. 1997) 122 F.3rd 847.)

See "Leaving a Copy of the Warrant, Affidavit and/or Receipt and Inventory," below.

See also People v. Calabrese (2002) 101 Cal.App.4th 79, below, under "The 'Receipt and Inventory'": P.C. § 1535 is not to be interpreted as a requirement to show to the suspect, or to leave a copy of at the scene, the search warrant itself.

Pen. Code § 964*: *Victim and Witness Confidential Information: Pen. Code § 964 requires the establishment of procedures to protect the confidentiality of "confidential personal information" of victims and witnesses. The section is directed primarily at prosecutors and the courts, but also contains a provision for documents filed by law enforcement with a court in support of search and arrest warrants; i.e., an affidavit.

"Confidential personal information" includes, but is not limited to, addresses, telephone numbers, driver's license and California identification card numbers, social security numbers, date of birth, place of employment, employee identification numbers, mother's maiden name, demand deposit account numbers, savings or checking account numbers, and credit card numbers. (Subd. (b))

The "Receipt and Inventory" (or "Return"): This document is self-descriptive. It is used to list the property seized as a result of the execution of the search warrant, serving as an inventory of such property. (Pen. Code § 1535)

The original is returned to the Court with the original warrant and affidavit.

A copy is left with the person from whom property is taken, or left at the place searched, as a receipt of for those items taken by the searching officers.

See "Leaving a Copy of the Warrant, Affidavit and/or Receipt and Inventory," below.

Pen. Code § 1535 is not to be interpreted as a requirement to show to the suspect, or to leave a copy of at the scene, the search warrant itself. (People v. Calabrese (2002) 101 Cal.App.4th 79.)

Medical Records*: Aside from using a search warrant, there are statutory provisions for obtaining a Court Order to obtain medical records; i.e., Pen. Code §§ 1543 et seq.

Pen. Code § 1533: Disclosure Provisions:

(a) Records of the identity, diagnosis, prognosis, or treatment of any patient maintained by a health care facility which are not privileged records required to be secured by the special master procedure in Section 1524, or records required by law to be confidential, shall only be disclosed to law enforcement agencies pursuant to this section:

(1) In accordance with the prior written consent of the patient; or

(2) If authorized by an appropriate order of a court of competent jurisdiction in the county where the records are located, granted after application showing good cause therefor. In assessing good cause, the court:

(A) Shall weigh the public interest and the need for disclosure against the injury to the patient, to the physician-patient relationship, and to the treatment services;

(B) Shall determine that there is a reasonable likelihood that the records in question will disclose material information or evidence of substantial value in connection with the investigation or prosecution; or

(3) By a search warrant obtained pursuant to Section 1524.

(b) The prohibitions of this section continue to apply to records concerning any individual who has been a patient, irrespective of whether or when he or she ceases to be a patient.

(c) Except where an extraordinary order under Section 1544 is granted or a search warrant is obtained pursuant to Section 1524, any health care facility whose records are sought under this chapter shall be notified of the application and afforded an opportunity to appear and be heard thereon.

(d) Both disclosure and dissemination of any information from the records shall be limited under the terms of the order to assure that no information will be unnecessarily disclosed and that dissemination will be no wider than necessary.

> This chapter shall not apply to investigations of fraud in the provision or receipt of Medi-Cal benefits, investigations of insurance fraud performed by the Department of Insurance or the California Highway Patrol, investigations of workers' compensation insurance fraud performed by the Department of Corrections and conducted by peace officers specified in paragraph (2) of subdivision (d) of Section 830.2, and investigations and research regarding occupational health and safety performed by or under agreement with the Department of Industrial Relations. Access to medical records in these investigations shall be governed by all laws in effect at the time access is sought.

(e) Nothing in this chapter shall prohibit disclosure by a medical facility or medical provider of information contained in medical records where disclosure to specific agencies is mandated by statutes or regulations.

(f) This chapter shall not be construed to authorize disclosure of privileged records to law enforcement agencies by the procedure set forth in this chapter, where the privileged records are required to be secured by the special master procedure set forth in subdivision (c) of Section 1524 or required by law to be confidential.

Pen Code § 1544: Disclosure Without Notice:

A law enforcement agency applying for disclosure of patient records under Section 1543 may petition the court for an extraordinary order delaying the notice of the application to the health care facility required by subdivision (f) of Section 1543 for a period of 30 days, upon a showing of good cause to believe that notice would seriously impede the investigation.

Pen Code § 1545: Definitions:

For the purposes of this chapter:

(a) "Health care facility" means any clinic, health dispensary, or health facility, licensed pursuant to Division 2 (commencing with Section 1200) of the Health and Safety Code, or any mental hospital, drug abuse clinic, or detoxification center.

(b) "Law enforcement agency" means the Attorney General of the State of California, every district attorney, and every agency of the State of California expressly authorized by statute to investigate or prosecute law violators.

Sources of Information Establishing Probable Cause*:

Other Police Officers: Suspect information or other criminal activity information received from other peace officers, either verbally, at pre-shift briefings, from department-originated notices, etc., or when communicated via radio through a police dispatcher, is considered reliable and generally establishes probable cause to arrest or search by itself. (People v. Hill (1974) 12 Cal.3rd 731, 761; People v. Ramirez (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 1548.)

This is sometimes referred to as having received information through "official channels," which refers to when it comes from any law enforcement source. (People v. Lara (1967) 67 Cal.2nd 365, 371.) Examples:

- Police radio broadcasts.
- Pre-shift briefings.
- "A.P.B.s" (i.e., an "All-Points Bulletin") and "B.O.L.s" ("Be On the Lookout"), and similar law enforcement generated memos.

"An officer may arrest or detain a suspect 'based on information received through "official channels."' (Citations) If a 911 call 'has sufficient indicia of reliability . . . a dispatcher may alert other officers by radio, who may then rely on the report, [citation], even though they cannot vouch for it.'" (People v. Brown (2015) 61 Cal.4th 968, 982-983.)

However: Eventually, law enforcement may be required in court to trace the information back to its source in order to disprove an accusation that the information establishing probable cause was "manufactured in the police station;" i.e., that it was the result of speculation or other unreliable source. (People v. Orozco (1981) 114 Cal.App.3rd 435; People v. Brown, supra.)

> This is sometimes referred to as the "Harvey/Madden rule*," based upon authority in People v. Harvey (1958) 156 Cal.App.2nd 516, and People v. Madden (1970) 2 Cal.3rd 1017, or an "Ojeda motion*," based upon Ojeda v. Superior Court (1970) 12 Cal.App.3rd 909.)

"An officer may arrest or detain a suspect 'based on information received through "official channels."'" (Citation) Upon proper objection, however, """"the People must prove that the source of the information is something other than the imagination of the officer who does not become a witness""" by offering evidence that the source has "'sufficient indicia of reliability.'" (People v. Romeo (2015) 240 Cal.App.4th 931, 943; quoting People v. Brown, supra,* at p. 983.)

> However, an exception to the "Harvey/Madden rule*" is generally found when the responding officers find the situation at the scene to be consistent with the substance of the radio call. When the source of the information is corroborated by what is found at the scene, there is no longer any purpose in further corroboration by calling as a witness the source of that information. (In re Richard G. (2009) 173 Cal.App.4th 1252, 1258-1260; disagreeing with In re Eskiel S. (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 1638, which required strict compliance with Harvey/Madden.)
>
> > "When the reason for a rule ceases, so should the rule itself." (Civ. Code § 3510)
>
> "The Harvey/Madden rule, however, merely precludes the prosecution from relying on hearsay information communicated to the arresting officer that is not sufficiently specific and fact based to be considered reliable." (Quoting People v. Gomez (2004) 117 Cal..App.4th 531, 541.) The Appellate Court held that the hearsay exception that makes the officer's testimony concerned his prior knowledge of the residents of a house Fourth waiver status to be admissible is Evidence Code § 1250(a)(1); the "state-of-mind" exception. The officer's testimony that he obtained information from the database was admissible to prove his receipt of information from an independent source. Evidence Code § 1250(a)(1) made admissible his testimony to prove his state of mind; i.e., his knowledge about the two residents' Fourth waiver status. So long as the officer's testimony had sufficient indicia of reliability, as can be inferred by the fact that the preliminary hearing magistrate overruled defendant's objections on this issue, it was admissible. (People v. Romeo (2015) 240 Cal.App.4th 931, 944-949.)

Citizen Informants: Private persons motivated to provide law enforcement with information of criminal wrongdoing purely through a sense of good citizenship, without expecting any benefit or reward in return.

> "(I)f an unquestionably honest citizen comes forward with a report of criminal activity—which if fabricated would subject him to criminal liability—we have found rigorous scrutiny of the basis of his knowledge unnecessary." (Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 233-234 [76 L.Ed.2nd 527; 103 S.Ct. 2317].)
>
> > See also People v. Hogan (1969) 71 Cal.2nd 888, 890–891; and Humphrey v. Appellate Division (2002) 29 Cal.4th 569, 575–576.
>
> Information from a "citizen informant" establishes probable cause by itself, at least as to facts within the informant's personal knowledge, absent known or suspected facts or circumstances that cast doubt upon the reliability of the information provided. (People v. Ramey (1976) 16 Cal.3rd 263, 269.)
>
> > Note: This assumes that the witness has the expertise necessary to interpret what it is he sees. E.g., a witness telling law enforcement that he has observed a person using a controlled substances would have to be able to establish that he has the training or experience to recognize what the controlled substance looks like.
>
> "It may . . . be stated as a general proposition that private citizens who are witnesses to or victims of a criminal act, absent some circumstances that would cast doubt upon their information, should be considered reliable." (People v. Ramey, supra, at pp. 268-269; see also People v. Duncan (1973) 9 Cal.3rd 218; and People v. Hogan (1969) 71 Cal.2nd 888, 890.)
>
> A justification for this presumption (of reliability) is that a private citizen who furnishes information exposes himself to possible action for malicious prosecution if his accusations are proved groundless. (People v. Reed (1981) 121 Cal.App.3rd Supp. 26, 33.)
>
> "We have distinguished between those informants who 'are often criminally disposed or implicated, and supply their "tips" . . . in secret, and for pecuniary or other personal gain' and victims or chance witnesses of crime who 'volunteer their information fortuitously, openly, and through motives of good citizenship.' [Citation.] O. and J. (juvenile victims in this case) neither concealed their identity to shield themselves from liability for false statements nor offered information for any ulterior or pecuniary motive. . . . The trial court correctly deemed the children presumptively reliable." (Humphrey v. Appellate Division of the Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal.4th 569, 576.)

The victim of a crime will usually qualify. (People v. Griffin (1967) 250 Cal.App.2nd 545, 550.)

> However; the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal disagrees: "In establishing probable cause, officers may not solely rely on the claim of a citizen witness that [s]he was a victim of a crime, but must independently investigate the basis of the witness's knowledge or interview other witnesses." (Citations omitted; Hopkins v. Bonvicino (9th Cir. 2009) 573 F.3rd 752, 767; a questionable decision In light of all the overwhelming case law to the contrary.)
>
> See Gillan vs. City of San Marino (2007) 147 Cal.App.4th 1033, 1045; where the alleged victim of a crime was held to be not credible under the circumstances of this case, but then cites the general rule: "Typically, information from a victim or a witness to a crime, "absent some circumstance that would cast doubt upon their information," is enough to establish probable cause. Such a victim or witness is generally considered to be reliable. "Information provided by a crime victim or chance witness alone can establish probable cause if the information is sufficiently specific to cause a reasonable person to believe that a crime was committed and that the named suspect was the perpetrator. [Citation.] 'Neither a previous demonstration of reliability nor subsequent corroboration is ordinarily necessary when witnesses to or victims of criminal activities report their observations in detail to the authorities.' [Citation]"

The identity of the citizen informant need not always be disclosed, but sufficient facts for the magistrate to conclude that the informant does so qualify as a citizen informant must be made available. (People v. Lombera (1989) 210 Cal.App.3rd 29, 32.)

Some involvement with criminal activity does not preclude one from being classified as a "citizen informant." (People v. Schulle (1975) 51 Cal.App.3rd 809.) But the informant's motivation for providing the information must be examined.

Information that initially came to police from an anonymous informant was deemed to be reliable when the informant was contacted and readily admitted being the source of the anonymous information. Once contacted by law enforcement, he provided information without hesitation, expecting nothing in return. As such, he was a "citizen informant" even after changing his story about how he came to know some of the information. Information from a citizen informant, as opposed to an informant who is looking for some reward of benefit for himself, and which is provided out of apparent good citizenship, is presumed to be reliable. (People v. Scott (2011) 52 Cal.4th 452, 475-476.)

Also, other negative information known to a police officer which puts into question a victim's veracity may be enough to negate probable cause. (See Wesley v. Campbell (6th Cir. 2015) 779 F.3rd 421.)

Information obtained from the suspects themselves (e.g., through a lawful wiretap), absent some reason to believe the subjects were not telling the truth, is entitled to the same level of belief as that from a citizen informant, and will supply the probable cause necessary to justify a traffic stop and seizure of the vehicle. (United States v. Magallon-Lopez (9th Cir. 2016) 817 F.3rd 671, 675-676.)

Although not using the label "citizen informant," the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has recognized the value of information coming from a "telephone tipster" who fully identifies himself by name, telephone number and address. (United States v. Williams (9th Cir. 2017) 846 F.3rd 303, 308-310.)

The daughter of a murder victim, given her relationship with both the victim and the suspect (her step-father), which was "clearly set out in the affidavit," put her in a position where she "would naturally be knowledgeable about . . . (their) contentious divorce," thus justifying the conclusory allegation that her mother would have incriminating information on her laptop computer. This set of circumstances qualified the daughter as a "citizen informant," whose allegation were presumptively true. (People v. Fayed (2020) 9 Cal.5th 147, 186.)

However, the information from a private citizen must be sufficieint to constitute at least a "reasonable suspicion" of criminal activity in order to justify a detention. Where the citizen, who readily identified herself, told officers that she had observed three black males in a motor vehicle parked on her block, who were engaged in "shady" activity, without any further explanation concerning what what that meant, the Court held that the responding officers did not have sufficient information upon which to base a detention of the occupants of that vehicle. (In re Edgerrin J. (2020) 57 Cal.App.5th 752, 763-765.)

> The Court noted (at pg. 766), however, that there was nothing to prevent the officers from "consensually encountering" the defendants before elevating the contact into a detention, or from holding back and observing (or conducting other further investigation) before making contact. The officers in this case, however, chose not to take it a little slower and further investigate the informant's vague accusation.

Reliable ("Tested") Informants: Informants who provide information with the expectation of some favor or personal gain from law enforcement in return, when he/she is known to have provided law enforcement with truthful information concerning criminal activity in the past.

The presumption is, absent some reason to disbelieve him, that such an informant is reliable. (See People v. Prewitt (1959) 52 Cal.2nd 330, 334-337; People v. Metzger (1971) 22 Cal.App.3rd 338, 345; People v. Dumas (1973) 9 Cal.3rd 871; People v. McFadin (1982) 127 Cal.App.3rd 751.)

Such an informant commonly has a criminal record, pending criminal case, and/or some present involvement in criminal activity.

The expected favor or personal gain is sometimes referred to as a "benefit." A "benefit" is defined as "any consideration or advantage the informant was offered, promised, or received in exchange for the information provided." Such a benefit includes, but is not necessarily limited to:

- Monetary payments of any kind, including, but not limited to, money, room and board, or use of an automobile.
- Leniency shown in arrest or booking, requesting appropriate bail, or contesting the source of the bail per Pen. Code § 1275.
- Leniency shown in filing appropriate charges or enhancements.
- Delay in arraignment or other court dates.
- Reduction of charges, period of custody or other condition of probation or sentence, including favorable input by a prosecutor or law enforcement officer.
- Relocation of the informant or the informant's family.
- Use immunity or transactional immunity, formal or informal.
- Favorable action with other governmental agencies, civil courts, or private interests (such as employers).

(Source: San Diego District Attorney "Cooperating Individual and Immunity" Manual, 1997, Chapter 1, p. 3.)

Such a person has a proven track record of giving reliable information in the past. A single prior incident may establish reliability (See People v. Gray (1976) 63 Cal.App.3rd 282, 288.), although in such a case, some corroboration of the informant's information may be necessary.

Having given some bad information in the past does not necessarily disqualify an informant from being labeled "reliable." (People v. Barger (1974) 40 Cal.App.3rd 662; People v. Murphy (1974) 42 Cal.App.3rd 81.) However, facts showing why in this case the informant is to be believed may be necessary, or other corroboration of his/her information.

Practice Note: In practice, despite the favorable case law, police officers most often seek to corroborate even a reliable informant's information just because, being motivated by personal gain, common sense tells us that such a person's credibility is almost always something that should be substantiated before acting upon his or her information.

Unreliable ("Untested") Informants: A person who provides information with the expectation of receiving some favor or personal gain in return (i.e., a "benefit"), but either without the prior track record of having given truthful information, has provided untruthful information in the past, or as of yet, has not been used before as an informant.

Information from an untested or unreliable informant is not presumed to be credible in the absence of corroborating information. The information from such an individual must be corroborated before he/she can be used to establish probable cause. (People v. Superior Court* [Johnson] (1972) 6 Cal.3rd 704, 712; People v. Love (1985) 168 Cal.App.3rd 104.)

However, it has been held that two untested informants providing the same information, acting independently, may be sufficient to corroborate each other. (People v. Balassy (1973) 30 Cal.App.3rd 614, 621.)

However, a search warrant affidavit was held to be insufficient to establish probable cause even though the affiant depended on three informants. Information from each of the informants was found to be conclusory only, and corroborated each other only as to "pedestrian facts" regarding defendant's residence and vehicle. (People v. French (2011) 201 Cal.App.4th 1307, 1321-1323.)

See "Corroboration," below, under "Anonymous Informants."

Use in trial of an informant as a prosecution witness who knowingly provided perjured testimony may, if material, be a Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment "due process" violation and result in a reversal of a defendant's conviction. (Maxwell v. Roe (9th Cir. 2010) 628 F.3rd 486.)

The fact that the government informant had engaged in past crimes did not raise due process concerns about the government's use of him as a confidential informant in its investigation, and the nature of his past crimes did not render the government's conduct outrageous. It is also not shocking that the informant was cooperating out of self-interest. (United States v. Hullaby (9th Cir. 2013) 736 F.3rd 1260, 1262-1263.)

Anonymous Informants: One who provides information to law enforcement (often via a telephone call) while refusing to identify him or herself.

Rule:

Because it is impossible to determine the motivations or credibility of an anonymous informant, such information is not considered reliable by itself. (Wilson v. Superior Court (1956) 46 Cal.2nd 291, 294.)

Anonymous information does not even establish a "reasonable suspicion" of criminal activity (Alabama v. White (1990) 496 U.S. 325, 331 [110 S.Ct. 2412; 110 L.Ed.2nd 301, 309]; Florida v. J.L. (2000) 529 U.S. 266 [120 S.Ct. 1375; 146 L.Ed.2nd 254]; United States v. Morales (9th Cir. 2001) 252 F.3rd 1070.) unless corroborated by the circumstances. (People v. Ramirez (1996) 41 Cal.App.4th 1608.)

"Information provided by an anonymous informant can constitute a sufficient basis for finding probable cause—but only when 'the informant's statement is reasonably corroborated.'" (People v. Spencer (2018) 5 Cal.5th 642, 664, quoting (Jones v. United States (1960) 362 U.S. 257, 269 [4 L.Ed.2nd 697, 80 S.Ct. 725].)

Anonymous information from at least two separate sources might, depending upon the circumstances, establish probable cause. (People v. Coulombe (2001) 86 Cal.App.4th 52.)

Corroboration:

Rule: "Because unverified information from an untested or unreliable informant is ordinarily unreliable, it does not establish probable cause unless it is 'corroborated in essential respects by other facts, sources or circumstances.' [Citations.] For corroboration to be adequate, it must pertain to the alleged criminal activity; accuracy of information regarding the suspect generally is insufficient. [Citation.] Courts take a dim view of the significance of 'pedestrian facts' such as a suspect's physical description, his residence and his vehicles. [Citation.] However, the corroboration is sufficient if police investigation has uncovered probative indications of criminal activity along the lines suggested by the informant. [Citation.] Even observations of seemingly innocent activity provide sufficient corroboration if the anonymous tip casts the activity in a suspicious light. [Citations.]" (People v. Johnson (1990) 220 Cal.App.3rd 742, 749; People v. Gotfried (2003) 107 Cal.App.4th 254.)

> "In examining whether police obtained such reasonable corroboration of an informant's tip, we apply a totality of the circumstances determination in which an informant's "'veracity,'" "'reliability,'" and "'basis of knowledge'" are "'relevant considerations.'" (Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 230, 233 [76 L.Ed.2nd 527, 103 S.Ct. 2317] . . . An informant's veracity or reliability may be established by her having provided tips that proved true. (See, e.g., Draper v. United States (1959) 358 U.S. 307, 309 [3 L.Ed.2nd 327; 79 S.Ct. 329] . . . [noting that the informant Hereford "'from time to time gave information to [agent] Marsh regarding violations of the narcotic laws . . . [and] Marsh had always found the information given by Hereford to be accurate and reliable'"].) An informant's basis of knowledge—the grounds upon which the informant believes or knows something to be true—is also important, since the tip supplied is more trustworthy if the informant has first-hand knowledge of the criminal activity. (See, e.g., Gates, supra, 462 U.S. at pp. 277–280 [discussing various cases where the court focused on whether the informant spoke with personal knowledge].) What the court in Gates clarified, however, is that "'veracity,'" "'reliability,'" and "'basis of knowledge'" are not rigid, "'independent requirements'" which must all be present. (Id. at p. 230.) The focus instead is on the "'overall reliability'" of the informant's tip. (Id. at p. 233.)" (People v. Spencer (2018) 5 Cal.5th 642, 664-665.)

Examples: Corroboration comes in many forms. For example:

> Statements from an informant which are "against the informant's own 'penal interest'" (i.e., potentially subjecting the informant to criminal liability) may be sufficient corroboration. (People v. Mardian (1975) 47 Cal.App.3rd 16, 33; Ming v. Superior Court (1970) 13 Cal.App.3rd 206, 214; United States v. Todhunter (9th Cir. 2002) 297 F.3rd 886, 890.)

Anonymous information corroborated by accurately predicting a suspect's future behavior may itself also establish probable cause. (See Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213 [76 L.Ed.2nd 527; 103 S.Ct. 2317]; Alabama v. White (1990) 496 U.S. 325, 332 [110 S.Ct. 2412; 110 L.Ed.2nd 301].)

A suspect's innocent acts may provide corroboration: "As 'innocent behavior frequently will provide the basis for a showing of probable cause,' the pertinent question is not whether the activities corroborated by the police are criminal in nature but rather, 'the degree of suspicion that attaches to particular types of noncriminal acts.'" (People v. Spencer (2018) 5 Cal.5th 642, 665; quoting Illinois v. Gates supra, 462 U.S. at p. 244, fn. 13.)

A student who was considered an "anonymous tipster" by the trial court, was determined to be a student who had seen social media depicting defendant showing a gun in a school classroom, described defendant by gender, race, and hairstyle, and was able to identify him from one of two possible students. Per the Court, "(t)hese circumstances evince far more than the 'moderate indicia of reliability' found lacking in J.L." (In re K.J. (2018) 18 Cal.App.5th 1123, 1133-1135.)

See also; "Anonymous Information," under "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above.

Practice Notes:

> In a narcotics case, using the informant, a different informant, or an undercover law enforcement officer, to attempt to make a purchase of narcotics while under strict surveillance (i.e., a "controlled buy"), is a common method of corroborating the informant's information.
>
> Surveillance, records checks, and other forms of more traditional investigative work help to corroborate an informant's information.

Keeping Confidential Informants Confidential:

Problem: Whether classified as a "Citizen Informant," a "Tested Informant," or an "Untested Informant," law enforcement may seek to keep the informant's identity confidential. This is typically necessitated by the danger to the informant inherent in the practice of informing on criminal suspects.

Rule: An informant's identity, if the informant is used properly and when the case is charged appropriately (i.e., charging offenses to which the informant is not a percipient witness, only supplying information that helps establish probable cause), may often be kept confidential. (See E.C. §§ 1041, 1042(b), (c) and (d))

> "It is well settled that California does not require disclosure of the identity of an informant who has supplied probable cause for the issuance of a search warrant where disclosure is sought merely to aid in attacking probable cause." (Theodore v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal.3rd 77, 88.)

Restrictions: It is only when the court determines that there is a "reasonable possibility" that the informant can give evidence on the issue of guilt which might result in defendant's exoneration, that the informant's identity will have to be revealed. (Honore v. Superior Court (1969) 70 Cal.2nd 162, 168.)

Revealing the Informant's Identity: In practice, an informant's identity will have to be revealed only:

- When he or she was an eyewitness to (i.e., a "percipient witness"), or an actual participant in, the crime or crimes charged; or

- When he or she might otherwise be able to provide evidence favorable to the defendant. (People v. Goliday (1963) 8 Cal.3rd 771, 778-779; see also People v. Bradley (2017) 7 Cal.App.5th 607, 618-627.)

> Merely because an informant was a percipient witness does not mean that his identity must always be revealed. But an in camera hearing must be held in order to determine whether the informant's information, as a percipient witness, could be material to defendant's innocence. (Davis v. Superior Court* [People] (2010) 186 Cal.App.4th 1272, 1276-1278.)

Practice Note: In order to avoid having to reveal an informant's identity, we use his or her information only to establish probable cause. A search warrant is issued based upon that probable cause. Then, the suspect is charged only with the offenses revealed upon the search and/or arrest of the suspect; matters to which the informant is not a percipient witness.

Motions to Reveal the Identity of an Informant:

> "(Evidence Code) Section 1041 grants a public entity a privilege not to disclose, and to prevent from being disclosed, the identity of a person who furnished information to a law enforcement officer 'purporting to disclose a violation of a law of the United States or of this state.' (§ 1041, subd. (a).) The public entity may claim this privilege when disclosure is forbidden by federal or state statute, or, as the prosecution claimed here, when disclosure of the identity 'is against the public interest because the necessity for preserving the confidentiality of [the informer's] identity outweighs the necessity for disclosure in the interest of justice.' (§ 1041, subd. (a)(2).)" (People v. Bradley (2017) 7 Cal.App.5th 607, 618-619.)
>
> It is the burden on the defendant to make a sufficient showing that the unnamed informer does in fact have information which would be material to the defendant's innocence. (Price v. Superior Court (1970) 1 Cal.3rd 836, 843; Davis v. Superior Court* [People] (2010) 186 Cal.App.4th 1272, 1276.)
>
> > In order to discharge his burden of proving the informant is a material witness, the defendant need not necessarily show what the informant would testify to, nor even that the informer could give testimony favorable to him. (Price v. Superior Court, supra.)
> >
> > However, bare speculation or unsupported conclusions that the informant is a "material witness" are insufficient to discharge a defendant's burden. The defendant must produce evidence or a declaration articulating the theory of his defense or demonstrating in what manner he would be benefited by disclosure of the informant's name. (People v. McCoy (1970) 13 Cal.App.3rd 6, 12-13; People v. Thomas (1970) 12 Cal.App.3rd 1102, 1112-1113.)
> >
> > > A defense attorney's affidavit "on information and belief" is, as a matter of law, an insufficient factual showing, and is therefore not sufficient justification for divulging an informant's identity. (People v. Oppel (1990) 222 Cal.App.3rd 1146, 1153.)

When the informant "merely pointed the finger of suspicion at the defendant," disclosure of the informant's identity is generally not required. (People v. Wilks (1978) 21 Cal.3rd 460, 469; People v. McCoy, supra, at p. 13.)

"Luttenberger" Motions; Discovery re: An Informant's Background History:

Upon a "substantial preliminary showing" of the need for discovery made by the defense, the court may order that the prosecution provide records and other background information concerning a confidential informant. (People v. Luttenberger (1990) 50 Cal.3rd 1.)

However, in order to justify an in camera hearing on this issue, at which the court must review the informant's history and other relevant information related to credibility, the defendant need only raise a "reasonable doubt" concerning the informant's veracity. (People v. Estrada (2003) 105 Cal.App.4th 783.)

If, after such an in camera review, the court finds the necessary "substantial preliminary showing" of information that tends to contradict material representations made in the affidavit, or constitutes material omissions from it, the court should then order the disclosure of the documents to the defendant. Based upon this information, a "Franks hearing, per Franks v. Delaware (1978) 438 U.S. 154 [98 S.Ct. 2674; 57 L.Ed.2nd 667], may be appropriate. (See above.)

Note: The purpose is to challenge the reliability of the information obtained from a confidential informant, without necessarily revealing the informant's identity. The danger is in insuring that the court does not inadvertently give away too much information, affording the defense the opportunity to figure out who the informant is.

If the defense can meet its burden of showing some need for the information and some proof that there is something of some substance in existence (beyond merely speculating that some adverse information exists), the court should inspect the documents in camera, deleting any reference to the informant's identity before providing the information to the defense. (People v. Luttenberger, supra.)

An Informant Sworn Before a Magistrate; a "Skelton Warrant:"

If an informant can give a "factual" (as opposed to a "conclusory") description of some on-going criminal activity, but does not fit within any of the preceding categories of reliable informants, and his information cannot be corroborated, he may nevertheless be deemed reliable if he personally testifies and swears to the truth of his information before the issuing magistrate. (Skelton v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3rd 144.)

> Sometimes referred to as a "Skelton warrant," where the magistrate is allowed to observe the informant's demeanor and appearance, the magistrate can evaluate his credibility just as with any other witness.
>
> The informant's transcribed testimony (and the tape of that testimony) before the magistrate becomes the search warrant affidavit.

Pen. Code § 1111; Accomplice Corroboration:

> Per Pen. Code § 1111: "A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof. . . ."
>
> "To corroborate the testimony of an accomplice, the prosecution must produce independent evidence which, without aid or assistance from the testimony of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the crime charged. (People* v. Luker (1965) 63 Cal.2nd 464, 469) . . . 'The evidence need not corroborate the accomplice as to every fact to which he testifies but is sufficient if it does not require interpretation and direction from the testimony of the accomplice yet tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense in such a way as reasonably may satisfy a jury that the accomplice is telling the truth; it must tend to implicate the defendant and therefore must relate to some act or fact which is an element of the crime but it is not necessary that the corroborative evidence be sufficient in itself to establish every element of the offense charged.' (People v. Lyons (1958) 50 Cal.2nd 245, 257; see also People v. *Luker, supra, 63 Cal.2d 464, 469; People* v. Holford (1965) 63 Cal.2nd 74, 82.) 'Although the corroborating evidence must do more than raise a conjecture or suspicion of guilt, it is sufficient if it tends in some degree to implicate the defendant.' (People v. Santo (1954) 43 Cal.2nd 319, 327 '[The] corroborative evidence may be slight and entitled to little consideration when standing alone.' (People v. *Wade (1959) 53 Cal.2nd 322, 329.)" (People v. Perry (1972) 7 Cal.3rd 756, 769.)

Pen. Code § 1111.5; In-Custody Informants: Neither a jury nor or a judge may convict a defendant, find a special circumstance true, nor use a fact in aggravation, based on the uncorroborated testimony of an in-custody informant.

However, an accomplice's testimony, which must also be corroborated in order to sustain a conviction (Pen. Code § 1111), may be used to corroborate the testimony of an in-custody informant, and vice versa. I.e., the two individuals may legally corroborate each other. (People v. Huggins (2015) 235 Cal.App.4th 715, 718-720; "An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given."

Probable Cause Issues*:

Anonymous Information, where sufficiently corroborated by accurately predicting a suspect's future behavior, may establish probable cause sufficient to obtain a search warrant. (Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213 [103 S.Ct. 2317; 76 L.Ed.2nd 527].)

See "Anonymous Information," under "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above, and "Anonymous Informants," above.

Searches of Residences:

Stolen Property: When property has been stolen by a defendant and has not yet been recovered, a fair probability exists that the property will be found at the defendant's home. A magistrate can reasonably conclude that a suspect's residence is a logical place to look for specific incriminating items where there exists probable cause to believe that the defendant stole them. (People v. Carrington (2009) 47 Cal.4th 145, 161-164.)

See also People v. Lee (2015) 242 Cal.App.4th 161, 173, holding that upon proof that there are firearms registered to defendant, it is logical to assume that he possesses them in his home, even though he is only temporarily residing in that residence. "(I)t is no great leap to infer that the most likely place to keep a firearm is in one's home." But see People v. Superior Court* [Corbett] (2017) 8 Cal.App.5th 670, 683, ignoring the rule of Lee to the effect that it is logical to assume that an owner of firearms would keep them in his home.

The Cleland Warrant; Narcotics:

Rule: The arrest of a person for selling narcotics, or for being in the possession of narcotics for purposes of sale, plus an experienced narcotics officer's expert opinion, has been held to be probable cause to believe he has evidence of this illegal activity in his home, justifying a search warrant for the home. (People v.

Cleland (1990) 225 Cal.App.3rd 388, 392-393; People v. Aho (1985) 166 Cal.App.3rd 984, 991-993; People v. Johnson (1971) 21 Cal.App.3rd 235, 242-246; United States v. Pitts (9th Cir. 1993) 6 F.3rd 1366, 1369; United States v. Terry (9th Cir. 1990) 911 F.2nd 272; United States v. Job (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 852, 863-865; United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2019) 913 F.3rd 793, 802.)

Probable cause to believe defendant was a narcotics seller's source of supply and that he would have evidence of his crimes in his apartment was found where the defendant was at the scene during, or shortly before, three separate narcotics transactions and he was followed to his apartment as he used "counter-surveillance (driving) techniques" on one occasion. (United States v. Chavez-Miranda (9th Cir. 2002) 306 F.3rd 973.)

See also United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2019) 913 F.3rd 793, 802, where it was noted that an officer observed defendant distribute cocaine twice in the 20 days preceding the warrant, including once within 10 days. The officer also averred that, after the buys, he observed defendant return to the address listed on the warrant application, which defendant entered and which he later told police was "his house." These facts—combined with the officer's expert description of how drug traffickers buy cocaine in bulk, sell in small amounts, and use their homes as store caches for the remainder—provided a substantial basis for issuance of a search warrant for defendant's home.

Exceptions:

While such circumstances provide the necessary probable cause to satisfy the Fourth Amendment search purposes, they do not provide an exigent circumstance excusing the lack of a search warrant. (People v. Koch (1989) 209 Cal.App.3rd 770, 778-781.)

Also, simple possession of a controlled substance, without indications that the defendant is a drug dealer, will not likely be sufficient to justify a search warrant for the defendant's home, despite an expert officer's opinion to the contrary. (People v. Pressey (2002) 102 Cal.App.4th 1178.)

And, knowing that a person is selling contraband from a business, when the seller is not an employee or owner of the business, does not, by itself, establish probable cause to believe that more contraband will be found in the business. (People v. Garcia (2003) 111 Cal.App.4th 715.)

Finding a small amount of marijuana on an arrestee's person, and observing him earlier with a single, semi-automatic pistol, were insufficient to support an allegation that "marijuana, heroin, and methamphetamine, or . . . evidence of gang membership," as well as "'[f]irearms, assault rifles, handguns of any caliber and shotguns of any caliber,' as well as ammunition for such firearms," would be found in defendant's home. Even discovery of his criminal history; i.e., that he'd been convicted of the illegal possession of a firearm and for being a felon in possession of a firearm, did not support a belief that multiple firearms might be found in his home. (United States v. Nora (9th Cir. 2014) 765 F.3rd 1049, 1052-1060.)

Searches Authorized by Statute:

A Puerto Rico statute authorizing "police to search the luggage of any person arriving in Puerto Rico from the United States" was held to be unconstitutional because it failed to require either probable cause or a warrant. (Torres v. Puerto Rico (1979) 442 U.S.465, 466-471 [99 S.Ct. 2425; 61 L.Ed.2nd 1].)

Trashcan Searches: Fresh marijuana stem and leaf cuttings found in a trashcan in front of a residence establishes probable cause justifying the issuance of a search warrant for the residence. (People v. Thuss (2003) 107 Cal.App.4th 221.)

Having the trash collection company collect defendant's trash on his regular pickup day (i.e., a "trash pull"), segregating it from other trash, was constitutional and did not violate defendant's reasonable expectation of privacy. (United States v. Thompson (8th Cir. S.D., 2018) 881 F.3rd 629.)

There is no reasonable expectation of privacy in the trash one places in trashcans out at the curb for pick up. (California v. Greenwood (1988) 486 U.S. 35 [108 S.Ct. 1625; 100 L.Ed.2nd 30].)

Computer Searches:

Probable cause supporting the issuance of a search warrant may be based entirely upon circumstantial evidence together with reasonable inferences there from. Receipt of child pornography in numerous (e.g., nine) e-mails from various sources (e.g., two) to various screen names (e.g., two) supports an inference of knowing possession of that pornography. (United States v. Kelley (9th Cir. 2007) 482 F.3rd 1047.)

A properly qualified expert officer's opinion, connecting common characteristics of a child molester with known facts related to a child molest and the molester's act of hiding his computer, establishes probable cause supporting a search warrant for that computer. (People v. Nicholls (2008) 159 Cal.App.4th 703.)

Where a search warrant specifies certain documents to be seized, and a computer is found under circumstances where it is reasonable to believe that the computer has been used to generate those documents or otherwise contain the information from which the documents came, then the computer may be seized (and probably searched) even though not mentioned in the search warrant. (United States v. Giberson (9th Cir. 2008) 527 F.3rd 882, 886-889.)

A signal photograph of a nude minor (female child who is between 8 and 10 years old), by itself, is insufficient to establish probable cause for a search warrant. But a second such photo, under the "totality of the circumstances," is enough. (United States v. Battershell (9th Cir. 2006) 457 F.3rd 1048.)

However, a single photograph of a nude minor (female of about 15 to 17 years of age), when combined with other suspicious circumstances (e.g., 15 computers in house found in complete disarray, with two minors not belonging to the defendant, where the defendant a civilian, is staying in military housing), may enough to justify the issuance of a search warrant. (United States v. Krupa (9th Cir. 2011) 658 F.3rd 1174, 1177-1179; but see dissent, pp. 1180-1185.)

An Internet subscriber has no expectation of privacy in the subscriber information he supplies to his Internet provider. (People v. Stipo (2011) 195 Cal.App.4th 664, 668-669.)

See People v. Rangel (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 1310, 1316, likening defendant's "smartphone" to a computer, given its capability to store photographs, e-mail addresses, and other personal information.

A warrant authorizing an electronic search of all of defendant's computer equipment and digital storage devices was not overbroad, did not raise the risks inherent in over-seizing, and did not violate the Fourth Amendment because evidence showing that defendant possessed and distributed a child pornography video on a peer-to-peer file-sharing network provided probable cause to search defendant's entire computer system and his digital storage devices for any evidence of possession of or dealing in child pornography. The government had no way of knowing which or how many illicit files there might be or where they might be stored, or of describing the items to be seized in a more precise manner. Because there was probable cause to believe that defendant was a child pornography collector, his entire computer system and his digital storage devices were suspect. (United States v. Schesso (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 1040, 1045-1047.)

Downloading video files with sexually suggestive titles after viewing non-pornographic files that had been found by the owner of a computer store on defendant's computer, and then viewing the downloaded videos without a warrant, held to be beyond the scope of the private search and illegal. (People v. Michael E. (2014) 230 Cal.App.4th 261, 268-279.)

> The Court included a whole segment criticizing the current trend of referring to computers and cellphones as "containers of information." "'Since electronic storage is likely to contain a greater quantity and variety of information than any previous storage method, . . . '[r]elying on analogies to closed containers or file cabinets may lead courts to "oversimplify a complex area of Fourth Amendment doctrines and ignore the realities of massive modern computer storage."' [Citation.]" (Citing United States v. Carey (10th Cir. 1999) 172 F.3rd 1268, 1275.) Interestingly enough, however, most of the authority the Court cites here are container-search cases. (Id., at pp. 276-277.)
>
> The United States Supreme Court agrees, at least as to cellphones, ruling that given the amount of personal information contained on the modern-day "smart phone," they are indeed entitled to greater protection from warrantless searches. (See Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 386 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430].)
>
> See also United States v. Lara (9th Cir. 2016) 815 F.3rd 605, 610-611; declining to include defendant's cellphone under the category of a "container," in defendant's Fourth waiver search conditions.

The fact that the defendant may not have owned the computers that the affiant was asking to search at the time of the crime did not preclude the possibility that she had also transferred information or records—particularly photographs—to computers owned at the time of the search. (People v. Lazarus (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 734, 776; noting that personal computers often hold "diaries, calendars, files, and correspondence.")

Although defendant had met a false imprisonment victim through social media several months before the crime, a probation condition upon conviction that allows law enforcement unrestricted computer searches for material prohibited by law was overbroad under the Fourth Amendment. Such a condition allows for searches of vast amounts of personal information unrelated to defendant's criminal conduct or his potential future criminality. A narrower means might include either requiring defendant o provide his social media account and passwords to his probation officer for monitoring, or restricting his use of, or access to, social media websites and applications without the prior approval of his probation officer. A condition requiring defendant not to delete his browser history was held to be valid, assuming a properly narrowed condition monitoring his use of social media can be fashioned. (People v. Appleton (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 717, 721-728.)

An "administrative subpoena" is all that is necessary in order to obtain the internet protocol (IP) address associated with the computer that accessed a particular website. (United States v. Caira (7th Cir. Ill. 2016) 833 F.3rd 803.)

> Note: Administrative subpoenas are discouraged under California law due to the lack of any pre-execution judicial review. See "Inspection (or Administrative) Warrants," under "Other Warrants," below.)

The Fourth Amendment does not require suppression of evidence developed through use of software targeting peer-to-peer file-sharing networks to identify IP addresses associated with known digital files of child pornography. Defendant had no reasonable expectation of privacy in his shared folder, despite his measures to keep contents of computer private. (*People v. Evensen (2016) 4 Cal.App.5th 1020.)

See "Searches of High Tech Devices" (Chapter 17), below.

Conspiracy:

A civil plaintiff's argument that the victim and a law enforcement officer conspired together to obtain an invalid search warrant and to execute it at a time when the plaintiff and victim's children were present, and to use excessive force in the execution of the warrant, with a goal of giving the victim an unfair advantage in the couple's custody proceedings, if supported by some evidence, must be evaluated by a civil jury. "'Conspiracy to violate a citizen's rights under the Fourth Amendment . . . is evidently as much a violation of an established constitutional right as the [underlying constitutional violation] itself." (Cameron v. Craig (9th Cir. 2013) 713 F.3rd 1012, 1023-1024; citing Baldwin v. Placer County (9th Cir. 2005) 418 F.3rd 966, 971.)

Use of a Search Warrant*:

Rule: The use of a search warrant as a prerequisite to a lawful search is a constitutional requirement, pursuant to the Fourth Amendment.

> The Fourth Amendment prohibits all unreasonable searches and seizures, and it is a cardinal principle that "searches conducted outside the judicial process, without prior approval by judge or magistrate, are per se unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment—subject only to a few specifically established and well-delineated exceptions." (Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347, 357 [88 S.Ct. 507; 19 L.Ed.2nd 576, 585]; Mincey v. Arizona (1978) 437 U.S. 385, 390 [57 L.Ed.2nd 290; 98 S.Ct. 2408]; People v. Ovieda (2019) 7 Cal.5th 1034, 1041; People v. Wilson (2020) 56 Cal.App.5th 128, 141, discussing the "Private Search Doctrine," and quoting Robey v. Superior Court (2013) 56 Cal.4th 1218, at p. 1224.)
>
> > "Such 'specifically established and well-delineated exceptions' include exigent circumstances, searches incident to arrest, vehicle searches, and border searches." (United States v. Cano (9th Cir. 2019) 934 F.3rd 1002, 1011.)
> >
> > > And then there are exceptions to each of these exceptions. "First, any search conducted under an exception must be within the scope of the exception. Second, some searches, even when conducted within the scope of the exception, may be so intrusive that they require additional justification, up to and including probable cause and a search warrant." (Ibid.; Italics added.)
>
> "Evidence which is obtained as a direct result of an illegal search and seizure may not be used to establish probable cause for a subsequent search." (United States v. Wanless (9th Cir. 1989) 882 F.2nd 1259, 1465.)
>
> > This includes "verbal evidence," (i.e., a suspect's admissions or confession), as well as physical evidence, when obtained as a direct product of an illegal detention, arrest or search. (See United States v. Crews (9th Cir. 2007) 502 F.3rd 1130, 1135.)

Exceptions: There are a limited number of such "well-delineated exceptions" to the general rule, however. For instance:

- "Exigent Circumstances" excuse the absence of a search warrant, at least up until when the "exigency" no longer exists. (People v. Bacigalupo (1991) 1 Cal.4th 103, 122-123.)

"Exigent Circumstances:" Any instance where the officers have no opportunity to obtain a warrant without risking the loss or destruction of evidence, the fleeing of suspects, or the arming of a suspect. (See People v. Seaton (2001) 26 Cal.4th 598.)

See "Exigent Circumstances," under "Warrantless Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 9), below.

- "Consent:" A "consent" to search excuses the absence of a search warrant, or even probable cause. (Florida v. Bostick (1991) 501 U.S. 429 [111 S.Ct. 2382; 115 L.Ed.2nd 389].)

  Such consent, however, must be "freely and voluntarily" obtained. (Bumper v. North Carolina (1968) 391 U.S. 543, 548 [88 S.Ct. 1788; 20 L.Ed.2nd 797, 802]; People v. Ling (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1, 7.)

  See "Consent Searches" (Chapter 20), below.

- "Probationary or Parole Fourth Waiver Searches:"

  All parolees, and some probationers, are subject to what is commonly referred to as a "Fourth Waiver*;" i.e., where the subject has agreed, prior to the fact, to waive any objections to being subjected to searches and seizures without the necessity of the law enforcement officer meeting the standard Fourth Amendment requirements of probable cause and a search warrant. (See Vandenberg v. Superior Court (1970) 8 Cal.App.3rd 1048, 1053.)

  The same rules apply to probation searches under the "Post-Release Community Supervision Act of 2011," P.C. §§ 3450 et seq. (People v. Douglas (2015) 240 Cal.App.4th 855, 863-873.)

  See "Fourth Waiver Searches*" (Chapter 19), below.

- "Inevitable Discovery:"

  The effects of an otherwise illegal warrantless search (i.e., suppression of the resulting evidence) may be offset in those instances where the evidence would have "inevitably" been found anyway through some source independent of the illegal search. (Nix v. Williams (1984) 467 U.S. 431, 443 [104 S.Ct. 2501; 81 L.Ed.2nd 377, 387]; People v. Boyer (2006) 38 Cal.4th 412, 447-454.)

However, the "inevitable discovery" doctrine does not apply just because a search warrant could have been obtained had the searching officers asked for one. This argument would negate the need to ever seek a warrant, effectively repealing the Fourth Amendment. (People v. Robles (1998) 64 Cal.App.4th 1286.)

The fact that the evidence would have inevitably been discovered anyway must be established by the People by "a preponderance of the evidence." (United States v. Young (9th Cir. 2009) 573 F.3rd 711, 721-723; where it was not shown that the hotel where its employees discovered the defendant's firearm would not have merely stored the weapon and return it to defendant, as according to its policy. [See also the dissent, pp. 723-729, arguing that the inevitable discovery rule applied].)

Evidence lying under the deceased would have inevitably been found and given to the police when the Coroner's investigator took charge of the body and moved it. (People v. Superior Court* [Chapman] (2012) 204 Cal.App.4th 1004, 1021-1022; The Coroner may deliver any property or evidence related to the investigation or prosecution of a crime to the law enforcement agency or district attorney. (Govt. Code § 27491.3(b))

See "Doctrine of Inevitable Discovery," under "Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 8), above.

- "Searches of Vehicles:"

  Probable cause to believe that a lawfully stopped vehicle contains contraband justifies a warrantless search of the vehicle, including the trunk, despite the absence of additional exigent circumstances. (People v. Chavers (1983) 33 Cal.3rd 462; People v. Superior Court* [Valdez] (1983) 35 Cal.3rd 11; People v. Varela (1985) 172 Cal.App.3rd 757.)

  The search may be as broad as could have been authorized by a search warrant, including any closed containers within the vehicle. (United States v. Ross (1982) 456 U.S. 798 [102 S.Ct. 2157; 72 L.Ed.2nd 572]; California v. Acevedo (1991) 500 U.S. 565 [111 S.Ct. 1982; 114 L.Ed.2nd 619]; People v. Chavers, supra.)

  See "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.

- "Searches of Persons with Probable Cause:"

  A person may be searched without a warrant any time the officer has "probable cause" to believe the person may have contraband or other sizable property on him. (People v. Coleman (1991) 229 Cal.App.3rd 321.)

  See "Searches of Persons" (Chapter 11), below.

- "Searches Incident to Arrest:"

  An arrestee, and the area within his immediate reach when arrested (i.e., the "lunging area"), is subject to a warrantless search, so long as done contemporaneously in time and place with the arrest. (Chimel v. California (1969) 395 U.S. 752 [89 S.Ct. 2034; 23 L.Ed.2nd 685]; United States v. Robinson (1973) 414 U.S. 218 [94 S.Ct. 467; 38 L.Ed.2nd 427]; People v. Sanchez (1985) 174 Cal.App.3rd 343; People v. Dennis (1985) 172 Cal.App.3rd 287; People v. Summers (1999) 73 Cal.App.4th 288.)

  This includes "'a relatively extensive exploration' of the areas within the arrestee's immediate control," including the arrestee's clothing and inside his pockets. (United States v. Williams (9th Cir. 2017) 846 F.3rd 303, 312; citing United States v. Robinson, supra, at p. 227, and United States v. Maddox (9th Cir. 2010) 614 F.3rd 1046, 1048.)

  When arrested in or at a vehicle (New York v. Belton (1981) 453 U.S. 454 [101 S.Ct. 2860; 69 L.Ed.2nd 768]; People v. Stoffle (1992) 1 Cal.App.4th 1671.), or as a "recent occupant" of a vehicle (Thornton v. United States (2004) 541 U.S. 615 [124 S.Ct. 2127; 158 L.Ed.2nd 905]; United States v. Osife (9th Cir. 2005) 398 F.3rd 1143), the entire passenger area of the vehicle may normally be searched without a warrant.

  However, see Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], severely limiting the ability to conduct a search incident to arrest in a vehicle, finding Belton to be inapplicable in the situation where the arrestee has already been removed from the vehicle and secured, thus negating any reasonable possibility that the arrestee could reach for a weapon or destroy evidence in the vehicle.

See "Searches Incident to Arrest," under "Searches of Persons" (Chapter 11), and under "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.

- "Administrative/Regulatory Searches:"

"Pervasively" or "Closely Regulated Businesses:" The courts have indicated that a warrant is not necessary in those cases where the place to be searched is commercial property, and the industry involved is one that is so "pervasively regulated" or "closely regulated" that warrantless inspections are necessary to insure proper, or legal, business practices. (Donovan v. Dewey (1981) 452 US. 594, 598-599 [101 S.Ct. 2534; 69 L.Ed.2nd 262, 268-169]; New York v. Burger (1987) 482 U.S. 691, 700 [107 S.Ct. 2636; 96 L.Ed.2nd 601, 612-613]; People v. Paulson (1990) 216 Cal.App.3rd 1480, 1483-1484.)

See "Administrative/Regulatory Searches," below.

Crime Scene Searches: Generally, once any exigencies no longer justify an immediate entry, entering or re-entering a building to investigate a criminal offense, or even to continue a search already begun due to exigent circumstances, requires a search warrant. For example:

Murder Scene: Mincey v. Arizona (1978) 437 U.S. 385 [98 S.Ct. 2408; 57 L.Ed.2nd 290]; Flippo v. West Virginia (1999) 528 U.S. 11 [145 L.Ed.2nd 16].)

Arson Scene: Michigan v. Tyler (1978) 436 U.S. 499 [98 S.Ct. 1942; 56 L.Ed.2nd 486].)

However, arson investigations done immediately upon the extinguishing of a fire, before firefighters leave the scene and the home is secured, as an "administrative search," may be conducted without a warrant. Any later belated search, however, requires a search warrant. (Michigan v. Clifford (1984) 464 U.S. 287, 294 [104 S.Ct. 641; 78 L. Ed. 2nd 477].)

Bank Records: Otherwise private papers (i.e., records) turned over to a bank deprives the owner of the papers of any claim of privacy as to the contents of those records. (United States v. Miller (1976) 425 U.S. 435, 440 [96 S.Ct. 1619; 48 L.Ed.2nd 71].)

Pursuant to California's Right to Privacy Act (Gov't. Code §§ 7460-7493), there are six (6) lawful methods of obtaining a criminal suspect's bank records:

- Customer Authorization: (Gov't. Code § 7473):

  The authorization must be in writing. Records sought must be very specifically identified and must include a phrase informing the customer that he/she has a right to withdraw consent.

- Administrative Subpoena or Summons (Gov't. Code § 7474):

  Requires notice to the customer and the bank. Customer has ten days to move to quash the subpoena.

- Search Warrant (Gov't. Code § 7475):

  The customer will be notified by the bank unless the search warrant contains an order that notice be delayed.

  The request to defer notice to the customer must be justified in the affidavit on the grounds that notification would impede the investigation, and the court finds this to be "good cause."

  The normal ten-day period for service and return of the warrant may be extended if the bank cannot reasonably make the records available within ten days.

  A search warrant for bank records was held to be valid in People v. Meyer (1986) 183 Cal.App.3rd 1150.

- Judicial Subpoena or Subpoena Duces Tecum (Gov't. Code § 7476):

  Notice must be given to the customer in most situations.

  May be used in NSF (i.e., "non-sufficient funds" cases). (See Gov't. Code § 7476(c))

- Police Request (Gov't. Code § 7480):

  A police officer, sheriff's deputy, district attorney, or special agent with the Department of Justice, may obtain certain types of financial information (e.g., dishonored checks and overdrafts), from a bank, credit union, or savings association, upon certification to the financial institution, in writing, that the checks were used fraudulently and that a crime report has been filed. (Gov't. Code § 7480(b): The section provides for a statement of account and other records for 30 days before and after the alleged illegal act.)

Such information may also be provided by the bank to a county adult protective services office or to a long-term care ombudsman.

May also receive, upon request, information as to whether a person has an account and the account number. (Gov't. Code § 7480(c))

- Victimized Financial Institution turns over Records (Gov't. Code § 7470(d)):

  When the bank is the victim of a crime committed by a customer, it may lawfully turn over the customer's bank records without the need of a court order. (People v. Nosler (1984) 151 Cal.App.3rd 125; People v. Nece (1984) 160 Cal.App.3rd 285.)

  Note: The above listed requirements and provisions are not exclusive. The referenced Government Code sections must be consulted. (See also Burrows v. Superior Court (1974) 13 Cal.3rd 238; and People v. Blair (1979) 25 Cal.3rd 640, regarding constitutional limitations upon the seizure of financial records.)

Case Law:

"While investigating Miller for tax evasion, the Government subpoenaed his banks, seeking several months of canceled checks, deposit slips, and monthly statements. The Court rejected a Fourth Amendment challenge to the records collection. For one, Miller could 'assert neither ownership nor possession" of the documents; they were "business records of the banks.' . . . For another, the nature of those records confirmed Miller's limited expectation of privacy, because the checks were 'not confidential communications but negotiable instruments to be used in commercial transactions,' and the bank statements contained information 'exposed to [bank] employees in the ordinary course of business.' . . . The Court thus concluded that Miller had 'take[n] the risk, in revealing his affairs to another, that the information [would] be conveyed by that person to the Government.' . . ."

(Carpenter v. United States (June 22, 2018) 585 U.S. __, __ [138 S.Ct. 2206, 2216; 201 L.Ed.2nd 507].)

The same principles apply in the context of information conveyed to a telephone company, per Smith v. Maryland (1979) 442 U.S. 735 [99 S.Ct. 2577; 61 L.Ed.2nd 220].

Mortgage Fraud Records:

Pen. Code § 532f(a): Mortgage Fraud: Intentionally using a misrepresentation, misstatement, or omission, in the mortgage lending process, or facilitating it's use, with the intent that it be relied upon by the lender, or receiving the funds as a result of the above, or filing with the county recorder any document in connection with a mortgage loan transaction knowing it contains a misrepresentation, misstatement, or omission, with a loss of over $400, is a felony (wobbler).

Subd. (c) contains provisions for a peace officer investigating mortgage fraud to obtain relevant real estate records via a court order, obtained upon the officer submitting an ex parte court application made under penalty of perjury, alleging that there is reasonable cause to believe that the records sought are material to an on-going investigation. Provisions are made for the sealing of such application and other procedures for obtaining the necessary records.

Subd. (g) provides for an affidavit from the custodian of records authenticating the records, laying the foundation to meet any hearsay objections to admission of the records into evidence.

Commercial Mail Receiving Agency Records:

Bus. & Prof. Code § 22780: Postal Service Form 1583:

(a) A commercial mail receiving agency shall not accept a Postal Service Form 1583 until positive identification has been established for the person filing the form. For purposes of this section, positive identification means any one of the following:

(1) Driver's license.
(2) State identification card.
(3) Armed forces identification card.
(4) Employment identification card which contains the bearer's signature and photograph.
(5) Any similar documentation which provides the agency with reasonable assurance of the identity of the filer.

(b) A commercial mail receiving agency shall maintain a copy of any Postal Service Form 1583 filed with the United States Postal Service. Upon the request of any law enforcement agency conducting an investigation, the commercial mail receiving agency shall make available to that law enforcement agency for purposes of that investigation and copying, its copy of the Postal Service Form 1583.

(c) A violation of this chapter is an infraction punishable by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars ($100) for the first offense, and a fine of not less than five hundred dollars ($500) for each subsequent offense.

Credit Card Information: Charges made by a credit card holder cannot be obtained except by search warrant or other judicial order. (People v. Blair (1979) 25 Cal.3rd 640, 652.)

Exception: When the credit card company is the victim. (People v. Nosler (1984) 151 Cal.App.3rd 125; People v. Nece (1984) 160 Cal.App.3rd 285.)

Telephone Records:

Unlisted Numbers: A search warrant is necessary in order to obtain the name and address of the holder of an unlisted telephone number from the telephone company. (People v. Chapman (1984) 36 Cal.3rd 98.)

Note: Under federal constitutional standards, obtaining phone records without a warrant is not illegal. (Smith v. Maryland (1979) 442 U.S. 735 [99 S.Ct. 2577; 61 L.Ed.2nd 220].) Therefore, although seizing such records without a warrant is in violation of California law, doing so will not result in the suppression of the records. (People v. Bencomo (1985) 171 Cal.App.3rd 1005, 1015; People v. Martino (1985) 166 Cal.App.3rd 777, 786, fn. 3.)

The rule of Smith remains true "even if the information is revealed on the assumption that it will be used only for a limited purpose." (United States v. Miller (1976) 425 U.S. 435, 443 [96 S.Ct. 1619; 48 L.Ed.2nd 71].)

Note: The continuing validity of Smith v. Maryland is assumed in Carpenter v. United States (June 22, 2018) 585 U.S. __ [138 S.Ct. 2206; 201 L.Ed.2nd 507], but differentiated on it facts. (See "New and Developing Law Enforcement Tools and Technology" (Chapter 14), below.

Telephone Calls Made: Telephone company records relating to telephone calls made are also protected and require a warrant. (People v. McKunes (1975) 51 Cal.App.3rd 487.)

Note: Telephone toll records are maintained in "billing rounds," covering approximately 30 days, but not necessarily corresponding with a calendar month.

An affidavit should contain facts, information, and opinion justifying the time period for which toll call records are sought.

Certification for Non-Disclosure: Pursuant to California Public Utilities Commission decision number 93361, dated July 21, 1981, the telephone company must notify the customer of a search warrant issued for his telephone records unless there is a "certification for non-disclosure" contained on the face of the search warrant.

Provides for a 90-day delay in notice, which can be extended another 90 days.

The "certification of non-disclosure" is a statement that notification will impede the investigation of the offense being investigated.

Justification for the delayed notice must be included in the warrant affidavit.

Pen Registers and Trap and Trace Devices: Installation of a "pen register" and/or a "trap and trace device" may be accomplished by use of a search warrant or other court order, at least under state rules. (See People v. Larkin (1987) 194 Cal.App.3rd 650, 654, and newly enacted (effective 1/1/2016) statutory rules, below.)

Pen. Code § 638.50: Definitions: For purposes of this chapter, the following terms have the following meanings:

(a) "Wire communication" and "electronic communication" have the meanings set forth in subdivision (a) of Section 629.51.

(b) "Pen register" means a device or process that records or decodes dialing, routing, addressing, or signaling information transmitted by an instrument or facility from which a wire or electronic communication is transmitted, but not the contents of a communication. "Pen register" does not include a device or process used by a provider or customer of a wire or electronic communication service for billing, or recording as an incident to billing, for communications services provided by such provider, or a device or process used by a provider or customer of a wire communication service for cost accounting or other similar purposes in the ordinary course of its business.

(c) "Trap and trace device" means a device or process that captures the incoming electronic or other impulses that identify the originating number or other dialing, routing, addressing, or signaling information reasonably likely to identify the source of a wire or electronic communication, but not the contents of a communication.

(d) "Prohibited violation" has the same meaning as that term is defined in Section 629.51.

Pen. Code § 638.51: Prohibitions on Installation of Pen Registers and Trap & Trace Devices; Exceptions:

(a) Except as provided in subd. (b), a person may not install or use a pen register or a trap and trace device without first obtaining a court order pursuant to P.C. §§ 638.52 or 638.53.

(b) A provider of electronic or wire communication service may use a pen register or a trap and trace device for any of the following purposes:

(1) To operate, maintain, and test a wire or electronic communication service.
(2) To protect the rights or property of the provider.
(3) To protect users of the service from abuse of service or unlawful use of service.
(4) To record the fact that a wire or electronic communication was initiated or completed to protect the provider, another provider furnishing service toward the completion of the wire communication, or a user of that service, from fraudulent, unlawful, or abusive use of service.
(5) If the consent of the user of that service has been obtained.

(c) A violation of this section is punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,500, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by imprisonment pursuant to P.C. § 1170(h) (i.e., 16 months, 2 or 3 years in state prison or county jail), or by both that fine and imprisonment.

(d) A good faith reliance on an order issued pursuant to P.C. § 1546.1, or an authorization made pursuant to P.C. § 638.53, is a complete defense to a civil or criminal action brought under this section or under this chapter.

Pen. Code § 638.52*: Court Orders:

(a) A peace officer may make an application to a magistrate for an order or an extension of an order authorizing or approving the installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device. The application shall be in writing under oath or equivalent affirmation, and shall include the identity of the peace officer making the application and the identity of the law enforcement agency conducting the investigation. The applicant shall certify that the information likely to be obtained is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation and shall include a statement of the offense to which the information likely to be obtained by the pen register or trap and trace device relates.

(b) The magistrate shall enter an ex parte order authorizing the installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device if the magistrate finds that the information likely to be obtained by the installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device is relevant to an ongoing investigation and that there is probable cause to believe that the pen register or trap and trace device will lead to any of the following:

(1) Recovery of stolen or embezzled property.

(2) Property or things used as the means of committing a felony.

(3) Property or things in the possession of a person with the intent to use them as a means of committing a public offense, or in the possession of another to whom they may have delivered them for the purpose of concealing them or preventing them from being discovered.

(4) Evidence that tends to show a felony has been committed, or tends to show that a particular person has committed or is committing a felony.

(5) Evidence that tends to show that sexual exploitation of a child, in violation of Section 311.3, or possession of matter depicting sexual conduct of a person under 18 years of age, in violation of Section 311.11, has occurred or is occurring.

(6) The location of a person who is unlawfully restrained or reasonably believed to be a witness in a criminal investigation or for whose arrest there is probable cause.

(7) Evidence that tends to show a violation of Section 3700.5 of the Labor Code, or tends to show that a particular person has violated Section 3700.5 of the Labor Code.

(8) Evidence that does any of the following:

(A) Tends to show that a felony, a misdemeanor violation of the Fish and Game Code, or a misdemeanor violation of the Public Resources Code, has been committed or is being committed.

(B) Tends to show that a particular person has committed or is committing a felony, a misdemeanor violation of the Fish and Game Code, or a misdemeanor violation of the Public Resources Code.

(C) Will assist in locating an individual who has committed or is committing a felony, a misdemeanor violation of the Fish and Game Code, or a misdemeanor violation of the Public Resources Code.

(c) Information acquired solely pursuant to the authority for a pen register or a trap and trace device shall not include any information that may disclose the physical location of the subscriber, except to the extent that the location may be determined from the telephone number. Upon the request of the person seeking the pen register or trap and trace device, the magistrate may seal portions of the application pursuant to People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 Cal.4th 948, and Sections 1040, 1041, and 1042 of the Evidence Code.

(d) An order issued pursuant to subdivision (b) shall specify all of the following:

(1) The identity, if known, of the person to whom is leased or in whose name is listed the telephone line to which the pen register or trap and trace device is to be attached.

(2) The identity, if known, of the person who is the subject of the criminal investigation.

(3) The number and, if known, physical location of the telephone line to which the pen register or trap and trace device is to be attached and, in the case of a trap and trace device, the geographic limits of the trap and trace order.

(4) A statement of the offense to which the information likely to be obtained by the pen register or trap and trace device relates.

(5) The order shall direct, if the applicant has requested, the furnishing of information, facilities, and technical assistance necessary to accomplish the installation of the pen register or trap and trace device.

(e) An order issued under this section shall authorize the installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device for a period not to exceed 60 days.

(f) Extensions of the original order may be granted upon a new application for an order under subdivisions (a) and (b) if the officer shows that there is a continued probable cause that the information or items sought under this subdivision are likely to be obtained under the extension. The period of an extension shall not exceed 60 days.

(g) An order or extension order authorizing or approving the installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device shall direct that the order be sealed until the order, including any extensions, expires, and that the person owning or leasing the line to which the pen register or trap and trace device is attached not disclose the existence of the pen register or trap and trace device or the existence of the investigation to the listed subscriber or to any other person.

(h) Upon the presentation of an order, entered under subdivisions (b) or (f), by a peace officer authorized to install and use a pen register, a provider of wire or electronic communication service, landlord, custodian, or other person shall immediately provide the peace officer all information, facilities, and technical assistance necessary to accomplish the installation of the pen register unobtrusively and with a minimum of interference with the services provided to the party with respect to whom the installation and use is to take place, if the assistance is directed by the order.

(i) Upon the request of a peace officer authorized to receive the results of a trap and trace device, a provider of a wire or electronic communication service, landlord, custodian, or other person shall immediately install the device on the appropriate line and provide the peace officer all information, facilities, and technical assistance, including installation and operation of the device unobtrusively and with a minimum of interference with the services provided to the party with respect to whom the installation and use is to take place, if the installation and assistance is directed by the order.

(j) A provider of a wire or electronic communication service, landlord, custodian, or other person who provides facilities or technical assistance pursuant to this section shall be reasonably compensated by the requesting peace officer's law enforcement agency for the reasonable expenses incurred in providing the facilities and assistance.

(k) Unless otherwise ordered by the magistrate, the results of the pen register or trap and trace device shall be provided to the peace officer at reasonable intervals during regular business hours for the duration of the order.

(l) The magistrate, before issuing the order pursuant to subdivision (b), may examine on oath the person seeking the pen register or the trap and trace device, and any witnesses the person may produce, and shall take their affidavit or their affidavits in writing, and cause the affidavit or affidavits to be subscribed by the parties making them.

(m) Notwithstanding any other provision in this section, no magistrate shall enter an ex parte order authorizing the installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device for the purpose of investigating or recovering evidence of a prohibited violation, as defined in Section 629.51.

Pen. Code § 638.53: Emergency Court Orders:

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, upon an oral application by a peace officer, a magistrate may grant oral approval for the installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device, without an order, if he or she determines all of the following:

(1) There are grounds upon which an order could be issued under P.C. § 638.52.

(2) There is probable cause to believe that an emergency situation exists with respect to the investigation of a crime.

(3) There is probable cause to believe that a substantial danger to life or limb exists justifying the authorization for immediate installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device before an order authorizing the installation and use can, with due diligence, be submitted and acted upon.

(b)

(1) By midnight of the second full court day after the pen register or trap and trace device is installed, a written application pursuant to P.C. § 638.52 shall be submitted by the peace officer who made the oral application to the magistrate who orally approved the installation and use of a pen register or trap and trace device. If an order is issued pursuant to P.C. § 638.52, the order shall also recite the time of the oral approval under subdivision (a) and shall be retroactive to the time of the original oral approval.

(2) In the absence of an authorizing order pursuant to para. (1), the use shall immediately terminate when the information sought is obtained, when the application for the order is denied, or by midnight of the second full court day after the pen register or trap and trace device is installed, whichever is earlier.

(c) A provider of a wire or electronic communication service, landlord, custodian, or other person who provides facilities or technical assistance pursuant to this section shall be reasonably compensated by the requesting peace officer's law enforcement agency for the reasonable expenses incurred in providing the facilities and assistance.

Pen. Code § 638.54: Notice to Identified Targets; Order Delaying Unsealing of Order and Notification:

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, a government entity that obtains information pursuant to P.C. § 638.52, or obtains information pursuant to oral authorization pursuant to P.C.

§ 638.53, shall serve upon, or deliver to by registered or first-class mail, electronic mail, or other means reasonably calculated to be effective, the identified targets of the order a notice that informs the recipient that information about the recipient has been compelled or requested and states with reasonable specificity the nature of the government investigation under which the information is sought. The notice shall include a copy of the order or a written statement setting forth facts giving rise to the emergency. The notice shall be provided no later than 30 days after the termination of the period of the order, any extensions, or an emergency request.

(b)

(1) Prior to the expiration of the 30-day period specified in subdivision (a), the government entity may submit a request, supported by a sworn affidavit, for an order delaying unsealing of the order and notification and prohibiting the person owning or leasing the line to which the pen register or trap and trace device is attached from disclosing the existence of the pen register or trap and trace device or the existence of the investigation to the listed subscriber or any other person. The court shall issue the order if the court determines that there is reason to believe that notification may have an adverse result, but only for the period of time that the court finds there is reason to believe that the notification may have that adverse result, and not to exceed 90 days.

(2) The court may grant extensions of the delay of up to 90 days each on the same grounds as provided in paragraph (1).

(3) Upon expiration of the period of delay of the notification, the government entity shall serve upon, or deliver to by registered or first-class mail, electronic mail, or other means reasonably calculated to be effective as specified by the court issuing the order authorizing delayed notification, the identified targets of the order or emergency authorization a document that includes the information described in subdivision (a) and a copy of all electronic information obtained or a summary of that information, including, at a minimum, the number and types of records disclosed, the date and time when the earliest and latest records were created, and a statement of the grounds for the court's determination to grant a delay in notifying the individual. The notice shall be provided no later than three days after the expiration of the period of delay of the notification.

(c) If there is no identified target of an order or emergency request at the time of its issuance, the government entity shall submit to the Department of Justice, no later than three days after the termination of the period of the order, any extensions, or an emergency request, all of the information required in subdivision (a). If an order delaying notice is obtained pursuant to subdivision (b), the government entity shall submit to the department, no later than three days after the expiration of the period of delay of the notification, all of the information required in paragraph (3) of subdivision (b). The department shall publish all those reports on its Internet Web site within 90 days of receipt. The department may redact names or other personal identifying information from the reports.

(d) For the purposes of this section, "adverse result" has the meaning set forth in P.C. § 1546(a).

Pen. Code § 638.55: Motion to Suppress; Civil Action by Attorney General to Compel Compliance; Petition to Void or Modify Warrant, Order, or Process, or for Destruction of Information:

(a) Any person in a trial, hearing, or proceeding may move to suppress wire or electronic information obtained or retained in violation of the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution or of this chapter. The motion shall be made, determined, and be subject to review in accordance with the procedures set forth in P.C. § 1538.5(b) to (q), inclusive.

(b) The Attorney General may commence a civil action to compel any government entity to comply with the provisions of this chapter.

(c) An individual whose information is targeted by a warrant, order, or other legal process that is not in compliance with this chapter, the California Constitution, or the United States Constitution, or a service provider or any other recipient of the warrant, order, or other legal process may petition the issuing court to void or modify the warrant, order, or process, or to order the destruction of any information obtained in violation of this chapter, the California Constitution, or the United States Constitution.

Pen. Code § 1546.1: Search Warrants and Pen Registers and Trap and Trace Devices:

> Pen register and trap and trace court orders (P.C. §§ 638.50–638.55) are added as subdivisions (b)(5) and (c)(12) to the list of warrants and orders authorized by the CalECPA for the obtaining of electronic communication information, so that it is clear that P.C. §§ 638.50–638.55 are effective provisions and may be used by law enforcement without running afoul of the CalECPA.
>
> Note: Recent amendments to P.C. § 1546.1(b) and (c) permit a government entity to compel production of communication information from a service provider, to compel the production of or access to electronic device information from a person or entity other than the authorized possessor of the device, and to access electronic device information by means of physical interaction or electronic communication with the device, pursuant to an order for a pen register or trap and trace device, or both.

Federal Rules: Federally, use of a pen register is not considered to be a search, and therefore does not require a search warrant. (Smith v. Maryland (1979) 442 U.S. 735, 745-746 [99 S.Ct. 2577; 61 L.Ed.2nd 220, 229-230].)

> A "Mirror Port:" The same rule is applicable to a "mirror port," which is similar to a pen register, but which allows the government to collect the "to" and "from" addresses of a person's e-mail messages, the IP addresses of the websites the person visits, and notes the total volume of information sent to or from the person's account. (United States v. Forrester (9th Cir. 2008) 512 F.3rd 500.)
>
> 18 U.S.C. § 3121; Expanded Definitions: Amendment as a part of the "Patriot Act," Pub. L. No. 107-56, expanded the definitions to include processes that capture routing, addressing, or signaling information transmitted by an electronic communication facility, thus permitting the interception of information from computers and cells phones, as well as from land-line telephones.
>
> The Federal Electronic Communication Privacy Act (18 U.S.C. §§ 3121-3127) expressly authorizes a state investigative or law enforcement officer to apply for "an order," as opposed to a search warrant, or an extension of an order, authorizing the installation and use of either a pen register or a "trap-and-trace" device, when a request is made in writing, under oath, to a court of "competent jurisdiction" of the state, and is otherwise not prohibited by state law.

18 U.S.C. § 2123 requires the applicant to state that the information likely to be obtained is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation (as opposed to the probable cause required for a warrant).

An order is good for no more than 60 days. Extensions, for up to 60 days, may be obtained upon making a separate application.

The order shall direct that it be sealed pending further order of the court.

Even if the procedures described in these statutes are violated, suppression of evidence is not an appropriate remedy. (United States v. Forrester (9th Cir. 2007) 495 F.3rd 1041, 1051.)

The federal Second Circuit Court of Appeal joined the other circuits that have considered this issue and held that collecting IP address information, without content, is "constitutionally indistinguishable" from the use of pen registers and trap and trace devices to collect telephone dialing information. As a result, the court held that the pen register and trap and trace orders did not violate the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Ulbricht (2nd Cir. 2017) 858 F.3rd 71.)

Note: These rulings that have held that no search warrant is necessary is an application of the so-called "third party doctrine," where it is recognized that when a person willingly provides private information to a third party, he loses any reasonable expectation in his right to privacy as to that information.

The use of a pen register in an apartment complex's Internet system, showing what Internet connections defendant's computer made (defendant being a resident of the complex), was held not to be a Fourth Amendment violation, and lawful. In upholding the use of the pen register in this case, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals applied the third-party doctrine and held that an IP (Internet Protocol) pen register was analogous in all material respects to a traditional pen register. The court found that an IP address operates much like a phone number and, like telephone companies, internet service providers require that identifying information be disclosed in order to make communication among electronic devices possible. The court added that while a person does not "dial" another's IP address in the ordinary sense, information was routed through a third-party to complete the connection between the computer in defendant's apartment unit and the destination IP address. The court concluded that defendant assumed the risk that, by connecting to his former employer's (W.W. Grainger, an industrial-supply company) servers, this information would be revealed to law enforcement. Consequently, the court held that defendant had no reasonable expectation of privacy in this data. (United States v. Soybel (7th Cir. IL 2021) 13 F.4th 584.)

California's Stricter Rules:

Citing pre-Proposition 8 authority (People v. Blair (1979) 25 Cal.3rd 640.), which rejected the rationale of Smith v. Maryland, supra, the California Attorney General is of the opinion that despite the lack of legal authority to suppress the resulting evidence (due to passage of Proposition 8 in June, 1982), obtaining pen register or trap and trace information based upon an ex parte court order (as opposed to a search warrant), being in violation of the California Constitution (Art. I, § 13, as well as Art. I, § 1), is "prohibited by state law." The federal authorizing statutes, therefore, which allow for a court order obtained by state law enforcement officers "(u)nless prohibited by State law" (18 U.S.C. § 3122(a)(2)), do not apply to California because such a procedure is prohibited by state law. (86 Opinion of Attorney General Bill Lockyer 198 (2003); see also newly enacted (effective 1/1/2016) California statutory rules, P.C. §§ 638.50 et seq., above.)

The California Attorney General, in this same opinion, also noted that Gov't. Code § 11180 similarly does not allow for an "Administrative Subpoena" due to the lack of a prior judicial review as required by the California Constitution.

See also, 69 Ops. Cal. Atty. Gen. 55 (1986): A California magistrate may authorize the installation of a pen register by the issuance of a search warrant.

Because a search warrant, if used, is only good for 10 days (P.C. § 1534), a new warrant or an extension (see P.C. § 638.52(a), (f) & (g), above) must be obtained for each succeeding 10-day period.

Information received from a pen register and/or a trap and trace device, recording "call data content" (i.e., "CDC," data about call origination, length, and time of call), are not protected by the wiretap statutes. There is no expectation of privacy in such information, per Smith v. Maryland (1979) 442 U.S. 735 [99 S.Ct. 2577; 61 L.Ed.2nd 220]. (United States v. Reed (9th Cir. 2009) 575 F.3rd 900, 914-917.)

Use of a pen register and trap and trace device, except maybe when combined with other forms of electronic surveillance, is not enough alone to establish the required "necessity" to justify the issuance of a wiretap warrant. (United States v. (9th Cir. 2009) 585 F.3rd 1223, 1228, citing United States v. Gonzalez, Inc. (9th Cir. 2005) 412 F.3rd 1102, 1113.)

Marijuana Issues:

H&S Code § 11485: Disposition of Personal Property Seized Pursuant to a Search Warrant and Used in Growing and Processing Cannabis Where no Prosecution Results:

Any peace officer of this state who, incident to a search under a search warrant issued for a violation of H&S § 11358 (i.e., Planting, Cultivating, Harvesting, Drying, or Possessing Cannabis Plants) with respect to which no prosecution of a defendant results, seizes personal property suspected of being used in the planting, cultivation, harvesting, drying, processing, or transporting of cannabis, shall, if the seized personal property is not being held for evidence or destroyed as contraband, and if the owner of the property is unknown or has not claimed the property, provide notice regarding the seizure and manner of reclamation of the property to any owner or tenant of real property on which the property was seized. In addition, this notice shall be posted at the location of seizure and shall be published at least once in a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the property was seized. If, after 90 days following the first publication of the notice, no owner appears and proves his or her ownership, the seized personal property shall be deemed to be abandoned and may be disposed of by sale to the public at public auction as set forth in Civ. Code §§ 2080 et seq. (Title 6, Division 3, Part 4, Chapter 4), or may be disposed of by transfer to a government agency or community service organization. Any profit from the sale or transfer of the property shall be expended for investigative services with respect to crimes involving cannabis.

Validity of a Search Warrant:

Although California's Compassionate Use Act (H&S §§ 11362.5 et seq.) provides a defense at trial or a basis to move to set aside the indictment or information prior to trial, it does not shield a person suspected of possessing or cultivating marijuana from an investigation or arrest. Nor does it impose an affirmative duty on law enforcement officers to investigate a suspect's status as a qualified patient or primary caregiver prior to seeking a search warrant. A trial court, therefore, did not err in denying defendant's suppression motion upon determining that the affidavit in support of the search warrant established probable cause to search. (People v. Clark (2014) 230 Cal.App.4th 490, 497-501.)

Where execution of a search warrant results in the recovery of marijuana pursuant to the order of the court, confiscation of the marijuana must be completed despite the suspect's claims that it's for valid medical purposes, pursuant to Proposition 215. (People v. Fisher (2002) 96 Cal.App.4th 1147.)

Changes in the Marijuana Laws:

November 6, 1996: The "Compassionate Use Act of 1996" ("CUA," Proposition 215; H&S § 11362.5)

Summary: Provided protection for doctors recommending medical cannabis (then called "marijuana") as well as decriminalizing possession and cultivation of limited amounts of cannabis, based upon a doctor's recommendation.

January 1, 2004 (Amended June 27, 2017): The "Medical Marijuana Program Act" ("MMPA," Stats. 2003, ch. 875, § 1, SB 420; H&S §§ 11362.7 et seq.)

Summary: Created the voluntary ID card program and expanded immunity for patients and primary caregivers.

January 1, 2016: The "Medical Cannabis Regulation and Safety Act" ("MCRSA") (Originally, the "Medical Marijuana Regulation and Safety Act") (Stats 2015 ch 688 § 3, AB 243; Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 19300-19360).

Summary: Created the state regulatory structure for cultivation, manufacturing, distribution, and retail sales of medical marijuana, but was repealed per SB 94, effective

June 27, 2017, and replaced by the "Medicinal and Adult-Use Cannabis Regulation and Safety Act."

November 8, 2016 (as amended June 27, 2017): The "Control, Regulate and Tax Adult Use of Marijuana Act of 2016" ("AUMA") (Proposition 64).

Summary: Legalized the adult use of marijuana for recreational purposes, but was repealed per SB 94, effective June 27, 2017, and replaced by the "Medicinal and Adult-Use Cannabis Regulation and Safety Act."

June 27, 2017: The "Medicinal and Adult-Use Cannabis Regulation and Safety Act" ("MAUCRSA;"); SB 94: Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 26000 to 26231.2 (Division 10) and other codes.

Summary: Combined the "Medical Cannabis Regulation and Safety Act" and the "Control, Regulate and Tax Adult Use of Marijuana Act, as amended September 16, 2017 (AB 133).

Limitations on the Use of Search Warrants:

Newsroom Searches:

Pen. Code § 1524(g) provides that; "No warrant shall issue for any item described in section 1070 of the Evidence Code."

Evid. Code § 1070 is the so-called "newsman's privilege" section and lists "unpublished information" such as "notes, outtakes, photographs, tapes or other data of whatever sort not itself disseminated to the public" as privileged.

Therefore, such items may not be the subject of a search warrant.

This is not a federal constitutional requirement. Such searches are legal except as prohibited by state law. (Zurcher v. The Stanford Daily (1978) 436 U.S. 547 [98 S.Ct. 1970; 56 L.Ed.2nd 525].)

This does not protect from search warrants other evidentiary items and contraband, as listed in P.C. § 1524(a)(1) through (20), where there is probable cause to believe the item sought is in a newsroom.

Searches of, and on, Indian Tribal Property:

Search Warrants:

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal initially ruled that use of a search warrant to seize "uniquely tribal property on tribal land" is a violation of Indian sovereignty, in a civil suit filed pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, and therefore illegal. (Bishop Paiute Tribe v. County of Inyo (9th Cir. 2002) 291 F.3rd 549; Certiorari granted.)

The Ninth Circuit reasoned that seizure of Indian casino employee records in a welfare fraud case was not authorized by Public Law 280 (18 U.S.C. § 1162(a)), which gave selected states (including California) jurisdiction over criminal offenses committed by or against individual Indians.

However, the United States Supreme Court vacated the decision in this case finding that an Indian tribe is not a "person," as required by 42 U.S.C. § 1983, and thus could not legally file a civil suit alleging a violation of their civil rights under authority of this section. The case was remanded back for a determination whether there is some other legal basis for Indian tribes to challenge the execution of a search warrant on tribal property. (Inyo County v. Paiute-Shone Indians (2003) 538 U.S. 701 [123 S.Ct. 1887; 155 L.Ed.2nd 933].)

*Applicability of the Fourth Amendment:

As for Indian reservations outside of California (i.e., Arizona in this case), it has been held that the Fourth Amendment does not directly govern the conduct of tribal governments. Rather, the "Indian Civil Rights Act" (i.e., "ICRA") applies instead. However, because the ICRA contains a provision regulating tribal law enforcement with language identical to that contained in the Fourth Amendment (see 25 U.S.C. § 1302(2)), the same legal reasoning as used in enforcing the Fourth Amendment applies to Indian tribes as well. (United States v. Becerra-Garcia (9th Cir. 2005) 397 F.3rd 1167.)

California Indian law, however, involves the so-called "Public Law 280," which calls for different standards. Arguably, therefore, Fourth Amendment standards (in principle, if not in the letter of the law) are applicable. But, see below.

This same reasoning was used to find a search by California Indian tribal officers (Amador County) to be illegal and subject to an Exclusionary Rule. Although the Fourth Amendment did not apply to the Indian law enforcement officers, 25 U.S.C. § 1302(2) and the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause mandated the suppression of evidence which was the product of an unlawful search of a vehicle on an Indian reservation. (People v. Ramirez (2007) 148 Cal.App.4th 1464.)

The district court properly granted a motion to suppress evidence by a defendant whose truck was twice searched by a tribal officer because the officer exceeded his jurisdictional authority and violated the Fourth Amendment counterpart to the Indian Civil Rights Act of 1968, 25 U.S.C. § 1302, so the exclusionary rule applied. The officer acted outside of his jurisdiction as a tribal officer because continuing to detain and searching a non-Indian without first attempting to ascertain his status was beyond the authority of a tribal officer on a public, nontribal highway crossing a reservation. Under the law of the founding era, the officer would not have had authority as a private citizen to seize and detain the defendant, as it was not obvious to that point that a crime had been or was being committed. (United States v Cooley (9th Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 1135.)

Jurisdictional Issues:

The states have exclusive criminal jurisdiction over crimes committed on Indian land between non-Indians, as well as victimless crimes committed by non-Indians. (See United States v. McBratney (1882) 104 U.S. 621 [26 L.Ed. 869]; Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe (1978) 435 U.S. 191 [55 L.Ed.2nd 209]; see also People v. Ramirez (2007) 148 Cal.App.4th 1464, 1475, fn. 9.)

California has assumed exclusive jurisdiction over other crimes committed by or against Indians on Indian land. (People v. Ramirez, supra., at p. 1475, fn. 9; 18 U.S.C. § 1162.)

See also United States v Cooley (9th Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 1135, above.

In a five-to-four decision, the U.S. Supreme Court held that the State of Oklahoma lacked jurisdiction to prosecute an enrolled member of the Seminole Nation whose crimes took place on the Creek Reservation. For purposes of the Major Crimes Act, land reserved for the Creek Nation since the 19th century remained Indian country under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1153(a), and only the federal government could prosecute Indians for major crimes committed in Indian country. Once a reservation was established, it retained that status until Congress explicitly indicates otherwise. Congress' actions during the allotment era did not end the Creek reservation. Nor were historical practices and demographics enough by themselves to prove disestablishment. (McGirt v. Oklahoma (July 9, 2020) __ U.S. __ [140 S.Ct. 2452; 207 L.Ed.2nd 985]; see also Sharp v. Murphy (July 9, 2020) __ U.S. __ [140 S.Ct. 2412; 207 L.Ed.2nd 1043].)

Search of Unauthorized Cellphones Recovered at CDCR:

Pen. Code § 4576: CDCR (California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation) is prohibited from accessing data or communications that have been captured using available technology from the *un*authorized use of a wireless communication device except after obtaining a search warrant.

Mechanics of Preparation:

Procedural Steps:

Collect all reports, necessary physical descriptions of the place to be searched and the property to be seized, photographs, exhibits, etc., prior to beginning the preparation.

Make sure all exhibits are labeled and attached to the warrant affidavit, and are "incorporated by reference" in the affidavit.

It is recommended that a law enforcement officer use a Deputy District Attorney, Assistant State Attorney General, or Assistant U.S. Attorney to review and approve a search warrant and affidavit "for legal sufficiency," if not to assist in the actual preparation.

Aside from the benefits of having someone else proofread the warrant and affidavit, this also adds to the "good faith" argument should the warrant later be found to be lacking in probable cause. (See People v. Camarella (1991) 54 Cal.3rd 592, 602-607; and Armstrong v. Asselin (9th Cir. 2013) 734 F.3rd 984, 994.)

The magistrate will ask the affiant(s) to swear to the truth of the affidavit.

The magistrate will sign the affidavit and the warrant.

Keep the warrant and affidavit separate.

The suspect(s) should later be allowed to read the warrant with a copy being left at the place searched, although this is not required by California state law. The affidavit is not shown to the suspect(s) nor left at the scene. (People v. Calabrese (2002) 101 Cal.App.4th 79.)

Federal rules, as interpreted by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, are to the contrary, mandating that a copy of the warrant be shown to, and left with, the subject whose property is being searched in all cases. (See Ramirez v. Butte Silver Bow County (9th Cir. 2002) 298 F.3rd 1022; and Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 41(d)) (See "Leaving a Copy of the Warrant, Affidavit, and/or Receipt and Inventory," below)

Leave a copy of the "Receipt and Inventory" at the scene. (Pen. Code § 1535)

Case Law:

There is no duty on the part of the affiant to investigate the suspect's version of the events before obtaining a search warrant. (Cameron v. Craig (9th Cir. 2013) 713 F.3rd 1012, 1019.)

Choosing to seek a search warrant from a state court magistrate instead of a federal magistrate in order avoid a federally imposed rule (See United States v. Comprehensive Drug Testing, Inc. (9th Cir. 2010) 621 F.3rd 1162, recommending a certain protocol for warrants involving computerized data), does not negate a finding of good faith so long as not done with the "knowledge . . . that the search was unconstitutional under the Fourth Amendment."

(United States v. Schesso (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 1040, 1050-1051.)

See also United States v. Artis (9th Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 1123, 1130, where it is noted that federal officers are not California peace officers, and thus violate the relevant California code sections requiring that state search warrants be executed by a "peace officer" when a federal officer executes a state warrant, it is not also a Fourth Amendment violation, and thus does not require the suppression of any resulting evidence, reversing the prior decision issued by a federal district court, reported at 315 F.Supp.3rd 1142 (U.S. Dist. Ct., ND Cal., 2018).

> The Ninth Circuit's authority for this conclusion is cited as United States v. Green (10th Cir. 1999) 178 F.3rd 1099, 1106; United States v. Gilbert (11th Cir. 1991) 942 F.2nd 1537, 1540-1541); and United States v. Freeman (8th Cir. 1990) 897 F.2nd 346, 348-349.

Because an application for a search warrant ordinarily would be presented ex parte, allowing no opportunity to contest issuance of the search warrant and no opportunity to peremptorily challenge the magistrate authorizing it, such ex parte determinations are not the result of a hearing upon a contested issue within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6(a)(2), and a peremptory challenge as contemplated by Pen. Code § 1538.5(b), to the magistrate who issued the search warrant therefore could lie. A peremptory challenge in this case was held to be timely made when it was made at least five days before the hearing because the application for a search warrant was not a hearing. The relevant hearing for purposes of determining timeliness was accordingly the hearing on the motion challenging the warrant. The peremptory challenge, therefore, was timely filed prior to that hearing. (Los Angeles County Metropolitan Transportation Authority v. Superior Court (2021) 68 Cal.App.5th 920.)

See Snitko v. United States (9th Cir. 2024) 90 F.4th 1250, where FBI agents, in conjunction with the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) and the United States Postal Inspection Service (USPIS), put together a search protocol consisting of an "Operation Order Search Plan" document and separate document entitled "Supplemental Instructions on Box Inventory." This was all in addition to a traditional search warrant allowing for the search of some 700 private safe deposit boxes used by customers of a private company called US Private Vaults (USPV), a company the government was investigating for various criminal activities, including money laundering.

Service and Return:

Who May Serve: A search warrant is directed to "any peace officer" for service. (Pen. Code § 1529)

Only a "peace officer" (with exceptions as noted below), as listed on the face of the warrant (i.e., "any peace officer"), may lawfully serve a search warrant, although the peace officer may be assisted by others. (Pen. Code §§ 1529, 1530)

While the affiant need not necessarily be a sworn peace officer (People v. Bell (1996) 45 Cal.App.4th 1030, 1054-1055.), the person executing the warrant must be.

See Pen. Code § 1528, providing a magistrate with the authority to issue a search warrant, "commanding" a "peace officer in his or her county" to execute the warrant.

See also United States v. Artis (9th Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 1123, 1130, where it is noted that federal officers are not California peace officers, and thus violate the relevant California code sections requiring that state search warrants be executed by a "peace officer" (see Pen. Code §§ 1529, 1530) when a federal officer executes a state warrant, it is not also a Fourth Amendment violation, and thus does not require the suppression of any resulting evidence, reversing the prior decision issued by a federal district court, reported at 315 F.Supp.3rd 1142 (U.S. Dist. Ct., ND Cal., 2018).

The Ninth Circuit's authority for this conclusion is cited as United States v. Green (10th Cir. 1999) 178 F.3rd 1099, 1106; United States v. Gilbert (11th Cir. 1991) 942 F.2nd 1537, 1540-1541); and United States v. Freeman (8th Cir. 1990) 897 F.2nd 346, 348-349.

Exceptions: There are some exceptions to the general rule that the person serving a search warrant must be a peace officer:

Pen. Code § 830.13: Persons listed below who are not "peace officers" may exercise the power to serve warrants as specified in Pen. Code §§ 1523 & 1530, and 830.11 during the course and within the scope of their employment, if they receive a course in the exercise of that power pursuant to Pen. Code § 832.

Subd. (a)(1): Persons employed as investigators of an auditor-controller or director of finance of any county, or persons employed by a city and county who conduct investigations under the supervision of the controller of the city and county, who are regularly employed and paid in that capacity, provided that the primary duty of these persons shall be to engage in investigations related to the theft of funds or the misappropriation of funds or resources, or investigations related to the duties of the auditor-controller or finance director as set forth in Gov't. Code §§ 26880 et seq., 26900 et seq., 26970 et seq., and 26980 et seq.

Subd. (a)(2): Persons employed by the Department of Justice as investigative auditors, provided that the primary duty of these persons shall be to investigate financial crimes. Investigative auditors shall only serve warrants for the production of documentary evidence held by financial institutions, Internet service providers, telecommunications companies, and third parties who are not reasonably suspected of engaging or having engaged in criminal activity related to the documentary evidence for which the warrant is requested.

Veh. Code § 21100.4(a)(1): A "designated local transportation officer," for the purpose of seizing and causing the removal of a vehicle operated as a taxicab or other passenger vehicle for hire upon establishing in an affidavit reasonable cause to believe that said vehicle is being operated in violation of licensing requirements adopted by a local authority under Veh. Code § 21100(b).

A "designated local transportation officer" means any local public officer employed by a local authority to investigate and enforce local taxicab and vehicle for hire laws and regulations.

Rules as to Others Who are Not California Peace Officers:

Federal Criminal Investigators and Federal Law Enforcement Officers are not California peace officers. (United States v. Artis (9th Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 1123, 1130: See also P.C. 830.8(a), and 80 Cal. Att'y Gen. Op. No. 97-505 (Oct. 24, 1997).)

> Although federal officers, as a rule, are not California peace officers, they "may assist a peace officer in executing a search warrant, provided the federal agent is acting "in aid of the officer on his requiring it, he being present and acting in its execution." (United States v. Artis, supra, at p. 1130, citing Pen. Code § 1530.)
>
> Note: The power of a federal agent to make arrests for a state violation, after completing a training course pursuant to Pen. Code § 832, as described in Pen. Code § 830.8, does not give a federal officer the power to execute a state search warrant.
>
> Pen. Code § 830.85: Federal Officers and California Peace Officers: Notwithstanding any other law, United States Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) officers and United States Customs and Border Protection officers are not California peace officers.

Victims: It is permissible for a burglary victim to accompany the searching officers and point out items stolen from him. (People v. Superior Court* [Meyers] (1979) 25 Cal.3rd 67; People v. Superior Court* [Moore] (1980) 104 Cal.App.3rd 1001.)

Police Dogs: It is also lawful to use a police dog trained to detect narcotics. (See People v. Russell (1987) 195 Cal.App.3rd 186.)

News Media, Etc.:

> Members of the news media, or any other third party not necessary to the execution of the warrant, must not be allowed to enter a suspect's private residence. To allow such persons to accompany the searching officers is a Fourth Amendment violation due to the heightened intrusion upon privacy interests caused by their unauthorized presence and non-law-enforcement purpose. (Wilson v. Layne (1999) 526 U.S. 603, 614 [119 S.Ct. 1692; 143 L.Ed.2nd 818, 830]; Hanlon v. Berger (1999) 526 U.S. 808 [143 L.Ed.2nd 978].)
>
> But even though members of the news media are present, suppression is not called for where they do not discover or develop any of the evidence later used at trial. Where, despite being led on tours through the crime scene, the media did not expand the scope of the search beyond a search warrant's dictates nor assist the police, or touch, move, handle or taint the admitted evidence in any way, the Fourth Amendment does not require the suppression of any evidence. (United States v. Duenas (9th Cir. 2012) 691 F.3rd 1070, 1079-1083.)

See "Third Parties Entering with Police," under Searches of Residences and Other Buildings" (Chapter 13), below.

Necessity to Serve: A search warrant is not an invitation that officers can choose to accept or reject. It is an order of the court based on probable cause which must be executed. (People v. Fisher (2002) 96 Cal.App.4th 1147; search warrant for marijuana executed despite defendant's presentation of proof at the scene that he was legally entitled to possess marijuana pursuant to H&S § 11362.5, California's "Compassionate Use Act;" Proposition 215.)

However, it is expected that officers will exercise some discretion in avoiding the taking of excessive, cumulative property, and unnecessary destructive behavior, in executing a search warrant. (San Jose Charter of the Hells Angels Motorcycle Club v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 2005) 402 F.3rd 962.)

Night Service: Search warrants must be served between 7:00 a.m. and 10:00 p.m., absent an endorsement by the magistrate for night service. (Pen. Code § 1533)

"Night service" must be supported by "good cause," i.e., some articulable reason why service cannot wait until morning. (See "Nighttime Searches," above.)

Note: Although typically, night service becomes an issue when executing a search warrant at a residence, the statute does not limit the necessity for a night service endorsement to residences. When a search warrant specifies a person, vehicle or any other container to be searched, execution of such a warrant at night probably also must be justified in the affidavit and approved by the magistrate.

Executing a search warrant "at night" without authorization, at least if no one is home (i.e., no prejudice being shown), will not result in the suppression of any evidence. (Tidwell v. Superior Court (1971) 17 Cal.App.3rd 780, 787.)

> The requirement of "good cause" for nighttime service of a search warrant was essentially a statutory requirement imposed by the Legislature and not a constitutional requirement. (People v. Glass (1976), 56 Cal.App.3rd 368.)
>
> If exclusion of evidence seized in violation of night service is not compelled under federal law, which it appears not to be, then evidence in violation of P.C. § 1533 should not be excluded if the search is otherwise reasonable in a constitutional sense. (Rodriguez v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal.App.3rd 1453.)

Use of a Motorized Battering Ram: The California Supreme Court has determined in a case that has never been overruled that at least where a "motorized battering ram" is used to force entry into a building, prior judicial authorization in the search warrant is necessary. Failure to obtain such authorization is both a violation of the California Constitution and the Fourth Amendment. (Langford v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal.3rd 21.)

> "We conclude therefore that the motorized battering ram may be used in executing searches or arrests only after the LAPD satisfies three preliminary requirements: i.e., it (1) obtains a warrant upon probable cause, (2) receives prior authorization to use the ram from a magistrate, and (3) at the time of entry determines there are exigent circumstances amounting to an immediate threat of injury to officers executing the warrant or reasonable grounds to suspect that evidence is being destroyed." (Id., p. 32.)
>
> "The magistrate should decide only whether the motorized battering ram could be used with relative safety against a particular building, if the need arises during execution of a search or arrest warrant." (Id., p. 31.)
>
> The same rule would apply to the use of a motorized battering ram in the execution of an arrest warrant. (Id., p. 33.)
>
> But such prior judicial authorization is not legally required where the issue is the use of some lesser, less dangerous, force, such as the use of "flashbangs." (Id., p. 28.)

In-County Service: A judge can issue a warrant to be served anywhere in the county in which he or she is sitting. (People v. Smead (1985) 175 Cal.App.3rd 1101.)

Out-of-County Service: Search warrants may be issued for, and served, out-of-county so long as it relates to an offense that can be prosecuted in the issuing magistrate's county. (People v. Ruster (1976) 16 Cal.3rd 690; People v. Fleming (1981) 29 Cal.3rd 698, 707; People v. Easely (1983) 34 Cal.3rd 858, 869-870; People v. Ruiz (1990) 217 Cal.App.3rd 574; see also United States v. Artis (9th Cir. 2019) 919 F.3rd 1123, 1129, fn. 2, noting that the federal courts have yet to analyze this issue.)

> The issuing magistrate must merely have probable cause to believe that the case is triable in his or her county. (People v. Easely, supra.)
>
> Pen. Code § 1524(j) provides statutory authority for a magistrate to issue a search warrant to be executed in a different county where the alleged offense(s) include a violation of Pen. Code § 530.5 (Identify Theft), and the victim resides in the issuing magistrate's county.
>
> Even though the issuing magistrate is later determined to not have jurisdiction over a crime for which he issues a warrant (i.e., it is later discovered that the alleged crime is not triable in the magistrate's county), "good faith" may save the improperly issued out-of-county warrant. (People v. Ruiz, supra; People v. Galvan (1992) 5 Cal.App.4th 866; People v. Dantzler (1988) 206 Cal.App.3rd 289.)

Out-of-State Crimes: A California judge may issue a search warrant for a location within his or her county to search for evidence located within the county relevant to a crime committed in another state. (People v. Kraft (2000) 23 Cal.4th 978.)

> It is not a legal requirement that law enforcement authorities in the foreign state have requested, or even be aware of, the search warrant. (Ibid.)

Knock and Notice:

> General Rule: Any time a police officer makes entry into the residence of another to arrest (Pen. Code § 844), with or without an arrest warrant, or to serve a search warrant (Pen. Code § 1531), he must first:
>
> - Knock.
> - Identify him- or herself as a police officer.
> - State his or her purpose (e.g., "serving a warrant").
> - Demand Entry.

(Richards v. Wisconsin (1997) 520 U.S. 385, 387–388 [137 L. Ed.2nd 615; 117 S. Ct. 1416]; People v. Schad (1971) 21 Cal.App.3rd 201, 207; People v. Murphy (2005) 37 Cal.4th 490, 495.)

Note: Pen. Code § 844 is not limited to law enforcement officers, imposing these requirements on a private person as well, "if the offense is a felony."

Knock and notice requirements apply to entries for "investigative purposes" as well, although not coming within the provisions of P.C. §§ 844 or 1531. (People v. Miller (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 190, 201.)

Knock and notice requirements also apply to entries made for purposes of conducting a Fourth Waiver search. (People v. Constancio (1974) 42 Cal.App.3rd 533, 542; People v. Lilienthal (1978) 22 Cal.3rd 891, 900; People v. Mays (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 969, 973, fn. 4; and see People v. Murphy (2005) 37 Cal.4th 490.)

The federal equivalent, most often referred to as "knock and announce," is contained in 18 U.S.C. § 3109.

Pen. Code § 1531*: "The officer may break open any outer or inner door or window of a house, or any part of a house or anything therein, to execute the warrant, if, after notice of his authority and purpose, he is refused admittance."

Purpose: The primary purpose of the rule is to avoid violent confrontations by giving the occupants the time and opportunity to peaceably open the door and admit the officers. (People v. Peterson (1973) 9 Cal.3rd 717, 723; Duke v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3rd 314, 321.) There are other purposes, as well:

"The purposes and policies underlying section 844 are fourfold: (1) the protection of the privacy of the individual in his home [citations]; (2) the protection of innocent persons who may also be present on the premises where an arrest is made [citation]; (3) the prevention of situations which are conducive to violent confrontations between the occupant and individuals who enter his home without proper notice [citations]; and (4) the protection of police who might be injured by a startled and fearful householder." (People v. King (1971) 5 Cal.3rd 458, 464, fn. 3; People v. Murphy (2005) 37 Cal.4th 490, 496.)

When compliance does not serve to satisfy the purposes behind the knock and notice requirements, failing to comply with those requirements may not be a violation of the Constitution. (Martin v. City of Oceanside (9th Cir. 2004) 360 F.3rd 1078, 1083-1084; noting that: "The prophylactic purpose of the rule is not served where the occupants of the home know that it is the police knocking at the door and simply leave the area and choose not to answer.")

Problem: Does this not also give the occupants an opportunity to destroy evidence, arm themselves, and/or escape? Yes! But, the Legislature and the courts, in balancing the interests, have determined that warning the occupants that it is law enforcement that is making entry, and allowing time for the occupants to open the door peaceably, is the safer alternative in most cases. (Duke v. Superior Court, supra.)

Exceptions:

Businesses: The rule does not apply to the entry of a business that is open to the public. (People v. Lovett (1978) 82 Cal.App.3rd 527, 532.)

Inner doors of a business are also not protected, at least after the owners have been contacted and informed as to what the officers are doing. (People v. Pompa (1989) 212 Cal.App.3rd 1308, 1312.)

An exception might be someone's locked inner office where a higher expectation of privacy is being exhibited. (People v. Lee (1986) 186 Cal.App.3rd 743, 750.)

Inner Doors of a Residence: The majority rule is that the knock and notice rules do not apply to inner doors of a residence, whether or not the inner door is closed. (People v. Livermore (1973) 30 Cal.App.3rd 1073; People v. Howard (1993) 18 Cal.App.4th 1544; People v. Aguilar (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 632; People v. Mays (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 969.)

But see People v. Webb (1973) 36 Cal.App.3rd 460, expressing the minority opinion that, so long as closed, the rule does apply to inner doors.

Refusal: If the occupants do not allow the officers to enter, the police may make a forcible entry.

Implied Refusal: "Refusal" need not necessarily be express. Waiting a reasonable time with no response will justify a forced entry. After a reasonable time, the officers may assume they are being denied entry and make a forcible entry. (People v. Gallo (1981) 127 Cal.App.3rd 828, 838.)

Note that a refused entry is not one of the listed statutory prerequisites under P.C. § 844. Therefore, a refusal is not an element necessary to prove compliance with a warrantless entry done for the purpose of affecting an arrest. (People v. Schmel (1975) 54 Cal.App.3rd 46, 50-51.)

In Schmel, however, the officers and the occupants were staring at each other through a screen door. Waiting for a refusal, per the court, would have been fruitless. The purpose of knock and notice had been met when the occupants knew the officers were there and were demanding entry.

Reasonable Time: How long constitutes a "reasonable time" to wait until an officer can assume he is being denied entry depends upon the circumstances, (People v. Trujillo (1990) 217 Cal.App.3rd 1219, 1226.), taking into consideration the size of the house, the time of day, any perceived exigencies, etc.

"'How many seconds' wait are too few? Our "reasonable wait time" standard [citation], is necessarily vague.' (Citation.) '[W]hat constituted a "reasonable wait time" in a particular case, [citation] (or, for that matter, how many seconds the police in fact waited), or whether there was "reasonable suspicion" of the sort that would invoke the Richards exceptions, is difficult for the trial court to determine and even more difficult for an appellate court to review.'" (People v. Byers (2016) 6 Cal.App.5th 856, 863; referencing Richards v. Wisconsin (1997) 520 U.S. 385, 387–388 [137 L. Ed.2nd 615; 117 S. Ct. 1416].)

> In Byers, it was noted that in a drug possession case, "the proper measure of a reasonable wait time in a drug case is 'how long it would take to dispose of the suspected drugs.'" (People v. Byers, supra, at p. 867; quoting Hudson v. Michigan (2006) 547 U.S. 586, 590 [126 S.Ct. 2159; 165 L.Ed.2nd 56].)

Rule of Thumb: For most homes, most courts are satisfied with approximately 30 seconds.

Five seconds is definitely not long enough. (United States v. Granville (9th Cir. 2000) 222 F.3rd 1214.)

Fifteen to twenty seconds was not enough to satisfy the statute, under the circumstances of People v. Hoag (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 1198, but was not so aggravated as to be a constitutional violation. (See below)

But twenty to thirty seconds was found to be enough when entering a small apartment (800 square feet) in the early evening, knowing three persons were home and having some reason to fear that defendant might be dangerous. (United States v. Chavez-Miranda (9th Cir. 2002) 306 F.3rd 973.)

Most recently, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a 15 to 20 second wait, noting that the more important factor is the nature of the exigency, as opposed to the size of the residence. Where the officers are concerned with the destruction of a controlled substance, which can be accomplished in a matter of seconds, officers need not wait as long as they might have to under circumstances where physical property is the subject of the search, or the time it takes a person to come to the door is of more concern. (United States v. Banks (2003) 540 U.S. 31 [124 S.Ct. 521; 157 L.Ed.2nd 343].)

> The Court also held that the fact that property must be damaged (e.g., the door) to gain entry does not require a corresponding heightened exigency to justify a forced entry. (Id., at p. 37; citing United States v Ramirez (1998) 523 U.S. 65, 70-71 [118 S.Ct. 992; 140 L.Ed.2nd 191].)

Officers were found to have waited long enough when 25 to 35 seconds passed before entering the garage, and another 30 second passed before entering the house, in a narcotics-related case, even though the entry was at 7:00 a.m. (People v. Martinez (2005) 132 Cal.App.4th 233, 243-245.)

Exigent Circumstances:

Rule: If the officers hear noises or see movement from inside indicating that suspects are escaping, evidence is being destroyed, or the occupants are arming themselves, or any other circumstance which reasonably indicates to the officers that waiting for an occupant to open the door would be a futile act, will compromise the collection of evidence, or unnecessarily risk the safety of the officers or others, then an immediate forcible entry may be made. (People v. Maddox (1956) 46 Cal.2nd 301, 306; hearing retreating footsteps inside.)

See also People v. Tribble (1971) 4 Cal.3rd 826, at p. 833: Failing to comply with the "knock and notice" rules is excused, "if the specific facts known to the officer before his entry are sufficient to support his good faith belief that compliance will increase his peril, frustrate the arrest, or permit the destruction of evidence."

Examples:

Exigent circumstances will be found under any one of three types of circumstances: When officers have a "reasonable suspicion" that knocking and announcing their presence, under the particular circumstances, it would:

- Be dangerous;
- Futile; or
- Inhibit the effective investigation of the crime, such as by allowing the destruction of evidence.

(United States v. Peterson (9th Cir. 2003) 353 F.3rd 1045, 1048; citing Richards v. Wisconsin (1997) 520 U.S. 385, 394 [117 S.Ct. 1416; 137 L.Ed.2nd 615].)

Hearing retreating footsteps inside. (People v. Maddox (1956) 46 Cal.2nd 301.)

An occupant is heard screaming. (People v. Hall (1971) 3 Cal.3rd 922.)

An occupant opened the door before the officers were prepared to knock, noted the police uniforms, and slammed the door shut. (United States v. Peterson (9th Cir. 2003) 353 F.3rd 1045.)

Occupants see the officers approaching, after which one of the occupants is seen attempting to jump from a window and sounds of a toilet flushing were heard. (People v. Lopez (1969) 269 Cal.App.2nd 461, 469.)

Officers hear a door slamming and rapid footsteps inside. (People v. Watson (1979) 89 Cal.App.3rd 376, 380.)

An officer smelled ether and observed occupants running. (People v. Stegman (1985) 164 Cal.App.3rd 936, 946.)

Officers see one suspect attempting to dispose of narcotics and defendant slammed the door on the officers. (People v. Newell (1969) 272 Cal.App.2nd 638, 644.)

When immediate entry is necessary to check the welfare of an occupant. (People v. Miller (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 190.)

Case Law:

It need only be shown that the officer had an articulable "reasonable suspicion" justifying such an exigent circumstance to excuse compliance with knock and notice. (Richards v. Wisconsin (1997) 520 U.S. 385, 394 [117 S.Ct. 1416; 137 L.Ed.2nd 615].); Hudson v. Michigan (2006) 547 U.S. 586, 595-596 [126 S.Ct. 2159; 165 L.Ed.2nd 56].)

> However, a "generalized fear" that occupants of a residence may be armed, that suspects may be fleeing, or that evidence is being destroyed, absent articulable reasons for so believing, is probably insufficient to justify a finding of "exigent circumstances." At the very least, it is not sufficient cause to justify the issuance of a "no-knock" warrant. (Richards v. Wisconsin, supra; see "No-Knock Search Warrants," below.)

See also United States v. Banks (2003) 540 U.S. 31, 43 [124 S.Ct. 521; 157 L.Ed.2nd 343, 356]: "But in a case like this, where the officers knocked and announced their presence, and forcibly entered after a reasonable suspicion of exigency had ripened, their entry satisfied (18 U.S.C. § 3109) as well as the Fourth Amendment, even without refusal of admittance." (Italics added)

> California subscribes to the rule in Banks. (People v. Murphy (2005) 37 Cal.4th 490; Officers made entry without complying with knock and notice after "loudly" arresting someone outside, causing the officers to believe that the occupants would likely destroy narcotics known to be inside. See also People v. Flores (1982) 128 Cal.App.3rd 512, 521.)

Although prior knowledge of firearms being in the house, by itself, does not excuse the failure to comply with knock and notice (United States v. Marts (8th Cir. 1993) 986 F.2nd 1216.), "the presence of a firearm coupled with evidence that a suspect is willing and able to use the weapon will often justify non-compliance with the knock and announce requirement." (United States v. Bynum (9th Cir. 2004) 362 F.3rd 574, 581-582; defendant known to answer the door with a pistol in hand, and acted strangely [in the nude] when he did so.)

> Upon seeing an altercation taking place through the kitchen window, and being ignored when announcing their presence at the screen door, the uniformed officers were justified in making an immediate entry where a second announcement was made, quelling the disturbance. Brigham City v. Stuart (2006) 547 U.S. 398 [126 S.Ct. 1943; 164 L.Ed.2nd 650]; it "serv(ing) no purpose to require them to stand dumbly at the door awaiting a response while those within brawled on, oblivious to their presence." (At p. 407.)

Doctrine of Substantial Compliance: The courts do not generally require law enforcement officers to perform an idle act. (Civ. Code § 3532; "Maxims of Jurisprudence")

> "Substantial compliance means 'actual compliance in respect to the substance essential to every reasonable objective of the statute,' as distinguished from 'mere technical imperfections of form. [Citation.] The essential inquiry is whether under the circumstances the policies underlying the knock-notice requirements were served. [Citation.]" (Italics in original; People v. Urziceanu (2005) 132 Cal.App.4th 747, 791; citing People v Hoag (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 1198, 1208.)
>
> Therefore, it is not necessary to knock or identify one's self if the occupant is standing right there staring at the police uniform. (People v. Uhler (1989) 208 Cal.App.3rd 766, 769-771.)
>
> "Where a criminal offense has just taken place within a room, the occupants may reasonably be expected to know the purpose of a police visit and an express statement may not be necessary. (People v. Hall (1971) 3 Cal.3rd 992, 997; People v. Superior Court* [Quinn] (1978) 83 Cal.App.3rd 609; People v. Lawrence (1972) 25 Cal.App.3rd 213; People v. Lee (1971) 20 Cal.App.3rd 982.)
>
> It is not necessary to explain why admittance is sought when the officers' intentions are reasonably apparent. (People v. Hill (1974) 12 Cal.3rd 731, 758.)
>
> Knocking and announcing their presence at a door which was partially open, and then entering without demanding entry or stating their purpose, was found to be "substantial compliance" when entry is made to check the welfare of occupants who might need assistance. (People v. Miller (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 190.)

"Substantial compliance is sometimes found even though officers have failed to state their purpose before entering. . . However, compliance does require, at the very least, that police officers identify themselves prior to entry." (People v. Keogh (1975) 46 Cal. App.3rd 919, 927; identifying themselves while entering found to be insufficient.)

Failing to physically knock at the door was excused where announcement was made at the front of the house over a public address system for 30 seconds to a minute, and then repeated at the rear door, where entry was made, where a methamphetamine lab was suspected and there were indications that the occupants were in the process of cooking the meth at that time. (United States v. Combs (9th Cir. 2005) 412 F.3rd 1020.)

Upon seeing an altercation taking place through the kitchen window, and being ignored when announcing their presence at the screen door, the uniformed officers were justified in making an immediate entry where a second announcement was made, quelling the disturbance. Brigham City v. Stuart (2006) 547 U.S. 398 [126 S.Ct. 1943; 164 L.Ed.2nd 650]; it "serv(ing) no purpose to require them to stand dumbly at the door awaiting a response while those within brawled on, oblivious to their presence." (At p. 407.)

"No-Knock" Search Warrants: Obtaining judicial authorization in the search warrant itself; justification for ignoring the knock and notice requirements being in the warrant affidavit.

California authority has yet to expressly recognize "No-Knock Search Warrants;" i.e., prior judicial authorization in the warrant allowing for an immediate entry without complying with the knock/notice requirements. (See Parsley v. Superior Court (1973) 9 Cal.3rd 934, 939-949; finding them in violation of the Fourth Amendment.)

However, the United States Supreme Court has ruled that no-knock warrants are not unconstitutional, and that they may be authorized by a magistrate on a case-by-case basis. (Richards v. Wisconsin (1997) 520 U.S. 385 [117 S.Ct.

1416; 137 L.Ed.2nd 615]; see also United States v. Banks (2003) 540 U.S. 31, 36 [124 S.Ct. 521; 157 L.Ed.2nd 343].)

> However, a blanket no-knock authorization, just because a search warrant is for a specific type of case (e.g., narcotics cases), is unconstitutional. (Richards v. Wisconsin, supra.)

Because Parsley based its decision on California's interpretation of the Fourth Amendment, and because passage of Proposition 8 in June, 1982, California's "Truth in Evidence" initiative, in effect negated California's stricter search and seizure rules, Richards and Banks should be interpreted as overruling the rule of Parsley, even though neither case expressly refers to Parsley.

"No-knock" warrants are justified when police officers have a "reasonable suspicion" that knocking and announcing their presence before entering would "be dangerous or futile, or . . . inhibit the effective investigation of the crime." (Richards v. Wisconsin, supra, at p. 394.)

The fact that property might be damaged or destroyed during the entry does not require a higher degree of exigency in order to justify the no-knock authorization. (United States v. Ramirez (1998) 523 U.S. 65 [118 S.Ct. 992; 140 L.Ed.2nd 191; United States v. Banks (2003) 540 U.S. 31 [124 S.Ct. 521; 157 L.Ed.2nd 343]; United States v. Bynum (9th Cir. 2004) 362 F.3rd 574, 580.)

Note: The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal talks in terms of a "no-knock warrant" in a case where the officers had the door slammed in their face at the front porch. (United States v. Peterson (9th Cir. 2003) 353 F.3rd 1045.)

> Peterson, however, is more of an "exigent circumstance" situation, which developed at the front door, and did not involve an attempt to get a "no-knock" authorization from the magistrate prior to the actual execution of the warrant.

The First Circuit Court of Appeal has held that a "no-knock" search warrant entry will be considered reasonable if the officers "have a reasonable suspicion that knocking and announcing their presence under the circumstances would be dangerous or futile, or that it would inhibit the effective investigation of the crime by, for example, allowing the destruction of evidence." In United States v. Congo (1st Cir. 2021) 21 F.4th 29, the Court held that the affidavit to the search warrant contained facts that established the agents had reasonable suspicion to believe that knocking and announcing would be dangerous and could lead to the destruction of evidence. First, the affidavit contained information from two sources who claimed that defendant likely had a gun and had behaved violently, or bragged about doing so, in the past. Second, the agent who drafted the affidavit attested to the fact that, based on his training and experience, it was common for drug dealers to keep weapons in order to protect their drugs or the proceeds of drug sales. Third, when the agents executed the warrant, they did not know the identities of all of the apartment's residents. Therefore, they could not know if these individuals had criminal histories or possessed weapons. Finally, the affidavit established that the bedroom where defendant and his partner stayed was in close proximity to the bathroom, making destruction of evidence a concern.

An early morning raid by A team of forty-three Special Emergency Response Team officers, where the officers broke into the plaintiffs' home (which included two persons in their late 70's and their two adult sons, one of whom was alleged to be engaged in the sale of methamphetamine) without complying with the standard knock and notice requirements. Despite the occupants allegedly being cooperative, their forcible arrests resulted in the long-term injury of the four occupants; two of which required surgery. Following the raid, the family filed a suit in federal court alleging that the police violated their Fourth Amendment right to protection from unreasonable search and seizure, specifically with the police use of unnecessary force. Under the Fourth Amendment, while police are permitted to use force as necessary, they are also required to show reasonable restraint. Although the trial court granted the defendant officers qualified immunity, the Third Circuit Court of Appeal reversed, holding that that officers are only eligible for qualified immunity if (1) their actions were objectively reasonable and (2) they did not violate a clearly known law or right. In this case, the court opined that the officers did not meet either of these elements. The plaintiffs were not only plainly unarmed, substantially outnumbered, cooperative, and in their own home, and they (except for the one son) were not suspected of any criminal wrongdoing or facing arrest. Accordingly, any reasonable officer in our case would have known that the officers' force was unlawful under this set of facts. (Anglemeyer v. Ammons (3rd Cir. 2024) 92 F.4th 184.)

Entry by Ruse: One way to avoid the problems inherent in complying with the knock and notice statutes is to use a ruse to gain entry. As long as the officer has probable cause justifying an entry beforehand, the use of a ruse is lawful. (People v. Reeves (1964) 61 Cal.2nd 268, 273.)

However, the entry must be supported by "probable cause" to be legal. Absent probable cause (and, absent exigent circumstances or a search warrant), it is illegal to use a ruse to make entry, or even to trick the suspect into opening his door, such a trick constituting a violation of the defendant's right to privacy. (People v. Hudson (1964) 225 Cal.App.2nd 554; People v. Miller (1967) 248 Cal.App.2nd 731; United States v. Bosse (9th Cir. 1990) 898 F.2nd 113.)

It is equally illegal to trick a suspect out of his home, unless such the ruse is supported by probable cause to believe the suspect is engaged in illegal activity. (People v. Reyes (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 7.)

Also, officers must remember that either a warrant, or probable cause and exigent circumstances, will likely be required under the rule of People v. Ramey (1976) 16 Cal.3rd 263, 276; Payton v. New York (1980) 445 U.S. 573 [100 S.Ct. 1371; 63 L.Ed.2nd 639]. (See above)

When armed with a search warrant, officers may use a ruse to induce the occupants to open the door. This is not a violation of the knock and notice requirements. (People v. Rudin (1978) 77 Cal.App.3rd 139; People v. McCarter (1981) 117 Cal.App.3rd 894, 906.)

Also, it is not illegal to use an undercover agent during a criminal investigation who makes entry upon the occupant's invitation, despite the lack of probable cause. Such a situation does not involve a need to avoid a violent confrontation. (Hoffa v. United States (1966) 385 U.S. 293 [87 S.Ct. 408; 17 L.Ed.2nd 374].)

The Fourth Amendment's protections do not extend to information that a person voluntarily > exposes to a government agent, including an undercover agent. A defendant generally has no privacy interest in that which he voluntarily reveals to a government agent. Therefore, a government agent may make an audio-video recording of a suspect's statements even in the suspect's own home, and those audio-video recordings, made with the consent of the government agent, do not require a warrant. (United States v. Wahchumwah (9th Cir. 2013) 710 F.3rd 862, 866-868; an investigation involving the illegal sale of eagle feathers under the Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act (16 U.S.C § 668(a) and the Lacey Act (16 U.S.C. §§ 2271(a)(1) & 3373(d)(1)(B),)

In a case out of Washington State, a state patrol officer identified himself as a law enforcement officer and requested a social security benefit applicant's assistance in a fictitious investigation, gaining entry into her home using a ruse. Because he lied to the resident about his real purpose of his entry into her residence—to conduct a civil investigation of her possible social security fraud—her consent to the officer's entry into her home was vitiated by his deception. By observing and videotaping the resident inside her home without her consent, the officer conducted a "search" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. However, even though the warrantless ruse-entry into the resident's home was an unreasonable search, it was not clearly established that the officer's conduct, in the context of a civil or administrative investigation related to a determination of benefits eligibility, was a search or was unreasonable. The officer, therefore, was entitled to qualified immunity. (Whalen v. McMullen (9th Cir. 2018) 907 F.3rd 1139.)

Also note that the use of a ruse to trick defendant into coming to his home and bringing his car so that FBI agents could search the car and question defendant under authority of a search warrant for defendant's residence and vehicle was held to be in violation of the Fourth Amendment by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal in United States v. Ramirez (9th Cir. 2020) 976 F.3rd 946, 951-959, in a split, 2-to-1 decision.

> As noted by the majority at pg. 955: "(T)he ruse used here was not a permissible means to effect the > search and seizure of Ramirez. The FBI agents posed as police officers and played on Ramirez's trust and reliance on their story that his home had been burglarized to bring Ramirez and his car within the ambit of the warrant, when they were not otherwise within its ambit. The FBI had no acceptable government interest in using this ruse. Thus, balancing the strong Fourth Amendment interest against the non-existent government interest, the FBI's conduct was plainly unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment."

Standing: An Absent Tenant: If the subject to be arrested, or the owner of a home which is to be searched, is not home at the time of the execution of the entry, whether or not he or she has "standing" to contest a failure to comply with the P.C. §§ 844 or 1531 knock and notice requirements is subject to a split of opinion. (See Hart v. Superior Court (1971) 21 Cal.App.3rd 496, 500-504.)

> In discussing the knock and notice requirements pursuant to Pen. Code § 1531 (serving a search warrant), it has been determined by at least one appellate court that the defendant did not need to be home to assert standing to challenge a knock and notice violation, in that defendant still had a privacy interest in his residence, and an interest in protecting his fiancée who was home at the time. (People v. Hoag (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 1198.)
>
> Hart v. Superior Court, supra, at pp. 500-504, and federal authority (United States v Silva (9th Cir. 2001) 247 F.3rd 1051, 1058-1059.), are all to the contrary.
>
> However, entering the house to arrest a subject without probable cause (or "reasonable grounds," see below) to believe the suspect is even home is a Fourth Amendment violation in itself. (Hart v. Superior Court, supra, at p. 502; "Section 844 by its own terms provides that the entry can only be made if the person to be arrested is actually present or if the arrestor has reasonable grounds to believe he is present." See also People v. Jacobs (1987) 43 Cal.3rd 472, 478-479; and United States v. Gorman (2002) 314 F.3rd 1105; interpreting "reasonable grounds" or "a reason to believe" to be the equivalent of "probable cause." But also see People v. Downey (2011) 198 Cal.App.4th 652, 657-662, finding that less than probable cause is required.

Sanctions for Violations: When executing an otherwise lawfully issued search warrant on a residence, a knock and notice violation, even if a violation of state and federal statutes and the Fourth Amendment (see below), does not necessarily trigger the Exclusionary Rule. (Hudson v. Michigan (2006) 547 U.S. 586 [126 S.Ct. 2159; 165 L.Ed.2nd 56]; People v. Byers (2016) 6 Cal.App.5th 856, 862-864.)

> "In part, this is because the exclusionary rule and the knock-notice requirement serve different purposes. The exclusionary rule protects against unlawful warrantless searches. (Citation.) The knock-notice requirement, in contrast, seeks to prevent violence (due to an inhabitant being taken by surprise), property destruction (e.g., of a door), and loss of an occupant's privacy and dignity (caused by an outsider's sudden entry)." (Id., at pp. 863-864; noting that the failure to comply with California's knock and notice requirements is but "one factor" to consider in determining whether an entry into a residence was reasonable. Pg. 863.)
>
> Per Hudson, the suppression of evidence is only necessary where the interests protected by the constitutional guarantee that has been violated would be served by suppressing the evidence thus obtained. The interests protected by the knock and notice rules include human life, because "an unannounced entry may provoke violence in supposed self-defense by the surprised resident." Property rights are also protected by providing residents an opportunity to prevent a forcible entry. And, "privacy and dignity" are protected by giving the occupants an opportunity to collect themselves before answering the door. (Ibid.)
>
> The Court also ruled in Hudson that because civil suits are more readily available than in 1914 when the exclusionary rule was first announced, and because law enforcement officers, being better educated, trained and supervised, can be subjected to departmental discipline, suppressing the product of a knock and notice violation is no longer a necessary remedy. (Ibid.)
>
> The fact that a "no-knock" warrant could have been obtained does not require a different finding. Also, the use of a battering ram on the door, rubber bullets to knock out windows, and "flash bang" devices (one of which seriously injured defendant) to distract the occupants, even though possibly unreasonable under the circumstances, but where there is no "causal nexus" between the entry and the recovery of evidence in the home, does not require suppression of the evidence. (United States v. Ankeny (9th Cir. 2007) 502 F.3rd 829, 835-838; a one to 1½-second delay between knocking and entering.)

> Note, however, that the use of a motorized battering ram may require a search warrant authorizing such use. (See Langford v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal.3rd 21.)

The rule as dictated by Hudson (a search warrant case) is applicable as well as in a warrantless, yet lawful, arrest case, pursuant to P.C. § 844. (In re Frank S. (2006) 142 Cal.App.4th 145.)

Hudson is not to be interpreted to mean that the Exclusionary Rule is to be scrapped. Intentionally unlawful law enforcement actions will still be subject to the Exclusionary Rule where necessary to discourage future illegal police activities. (People v. Rodriguez (2006) 143 Cal.App.4th 1137; case remanded for a determination whether police fabricated probable cause for a traffic stop, which led to the discovery of an outstanding arrest warrant, the search incident thereto resulting in recovery of controlled substances.)

See United States v. Weaver (D.C. Cir. 2015) 808 F.3rd 26, where the D.C. Court of Appeal rejected the applicability of Hudson v. Michigan, supra, in an arrest warrant service situation, and held that federal agents violated the knock-and-announce rule by failing to announce their purpose before entering defendant's apartment. By knocking but failing to announce their purpose, the agents gave defendant no opportunity to protect the privacy of his home. The exclusionary rule was the appropriate remedy for knock-and-announce violations in the execution of arrest warrants at a person's home.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal invented a so-called "provocation rule," holding that even when it is held that reasonable force is used by law enforcement, the officers using that force may still be civilly liable if they provoked the need to use force by violating some other constitutional principle, at least when that earlier violation was done intentionally or recklessly. (Billington v. Smith (9th Cir. 2001) 292 F.3rd 1177.) "The Ninth Circuit's provocation rule permits an excessive force claim under the Fourth Amendment "where an officer intentionally or recklessly provokes a violent confrontation, if the provocation is an independent Fourth Amendment violation." (County of Los Angeles v. Mendez (2017) 582 U.S. 420, 426-427 [137 S.Ct. 1539; 198 L.Ed.2nd 52]; citing Billington, at p. 1189, and overruling the Ninth Circuit on this issue where the lower court used this rule in Mendez v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2016) 815 F.3rd 1178; a knock and notice violation.)

On remand, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed in part and reversed in part the district court's judgment in an action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and state law because sheriff's deputies violated the Fourth Amendment by entering a home without a warrant, consent, or exigent circumstances while searching for a parole-at-large. The unlawful entry itself was the proximate cause of the homeowners being shot by the officers. The homeowner's action of moving a BB gun so that it was pointed in the officers' direction was held not to be a superseding or intervening cause. The officers were held to be negligent as their conduct in entering the residence on high alert, with guns drawn, and without announcing their presence, was reckless. They were not entitled to qualified immunity for their failure to knock and announce under California law. Lastly, immunity under California Government Code §§ 821.6 and 820.2 did not apply. (Mendez v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F.3rd 1067, 1074-1984.)

> On the issue of "knock and announce," the Court held that "the officers' failure to knock and announce is an especially dangerous omission. Under California (negligence) law, the officers here are not entitled to qualified immunity for that lapse. (Citations omitted) Under California (negligence) law, unlike under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, the failure to knock and announce can be a basis of liability. The officers knew or should have known about the Mendezes' presence. Yet they decided to proceed without taking even simple and available precautions, including announcing their presence, which could have protected the Mendezes from the severe harm that befell them." (Id., at p. 1083.)

However, it has been held that "a person in common ownership or control . . . who is not within the premises cannot give such consent to enter and search the premises as to excuse the police from complying with the (knock and notice) requirements . . . ." (Duke v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3rd 314, 322; see also People v. Byers (2016) 6 Cal.App.5th 856, 862.)

Not Necessarily a Fourth Amendment Violation: And in any case, a knock and notice violation, violating the terms of P.C. § 844 and/or P.C. § 1531, does not necessarily also violate the Fourth Amendment. (Wilson v. Arkansas (1995) 514 U.S. 927 [115 S.Ct. 1914; 131 L.Ed.2nd 976]; People v. Zabelle (1996) 50 Cal.App.4th 1282.)

Note: Where the line is between a constitutional knock and notice violation and a simple statutory knock and notice violation has not yet been specifically determined by either any California or United States Supreme Court decisions, and must await future cases for clarification. However, it has been held that the failure to comply with the statutory knock and notice requirements is one factor to consider when determining whether the entry into a residence was reasonable. (People v. Byers (2016) 6 Cal.App.5th 856, 863; citing United States v. Banks (2003) 540 U.S. 31 [157 L. Ed.2nd 343; 124 S. Ct. 521].)

It is helpful to look for circumstances relevant to the purposes of the knock and notice requirements, such as the lessening of the likelihood of a violent confrontation. For instance: "Here, the potential for violence and peril to the officers would have been increased had the officers announced their presence at the door. The officers could not see defendant's hands and whether he might have a weapon or syringe that could be used against them. Officer Norvall limited the potential for violence by entering to a place where he could put his hands on defendant before waking him." (People v. Zabelle, supra, at p. 1287, where the officer's unannounced entry was made upon seeing the defendant asleep.)

And note People v. Hoag (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 1198, where it was held that a 15-to-20 second wait was not enough to satisfy the statute, but that it was only a "technical violation," not implicating the Constitution or requiring the suppression of any evidence.

However, failure to "knock and announce" an officer's intent to enter has, under more violent circumstances, been held to be a Fourth Amendment violation, although given the circumstances of this case (entering a shack behind the main residence) on which there is no definitive prior authority, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity. (Mendez v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F.3rd 1067, 1077-1079.)

> The federal statutory "knock and announce" requirements, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3109, have been held to be judged by the same standards as is an alleged Fourth Amendment violation for entering without a proper announcement. (United States v Bynum (9th Cir. 2004) 362 F.3rd 574, 579.)

A warrantless entry into defendant's apartment was justified under the Fourth Amendment when officers received the voluntary consent of defendant's housemate. The consent was not coerced even though the housemate was handcuffed and in custody outside the apartment. The officer credibly testified that the housemate admitted to having drugs and a gun in his bedroom and that no threats or promises were made to obtain consent to search his bedroom to retrieve these items. The trial court abused its discretion by excluding evidence on whether the officers waited long enough to comply with the knock-notice requirement when they entered the apartment, but the error was harmless because exclusion of evidence, the only relief requested, was not the proper remedy. (People v. Byers (2016) 6 Cal.App.5th 856, 862-865; noting that "(w)hen the police obtain consent from a co-occupant who is off the premises, they must comply with the knock-and-announce rule." Id., at pp. 862, 866.)

> "However, "when a search is conducted pursuant to an absent co-tenant's consent, the purposes of the knock-notice requirement (Citation.) do not include preventing law enforcement from seeing or seizing evidence pursuant to the consent exception," finding the failure to comply with knock and notice to be harmless error. (Id., at p. 864.)

Seizing Items not Listed in the Warrant: Those items listed in the warrant may be seized, along with any other items reasonably identified as contraband or evidence of a crime, observed in plain sight during the search. (Skelton v. Superior Court (1969) 1 Cal.3rd 144, 157.)

> Plain View Doctrine: "Where an officer has a valid warrant to search for one item but merely a suspicion, not amounting to probable cause, concerning a second item, that second item is not immunized from seizure if found during a lawful search for the first item." (People v. Bradford (1997) 15 Cal.4th 1229, 1294; citing Horton v. California (1990) 496 U.S. 128, 138-139 [110 S.Ct. 2301; 110 L.Ed.2nd 112, 124].), and noting that prior Supreme Court cases required "probable cause" to believe that the "second item" constitutes evidence of a crime. (People v. Bradford, supra, at p. 1290.)
>
> > Seizing the "second item" is based upon an application of the "plain view doctrine," allowing for seizure of items observed in plain sight from a position the discovering officer has a legal right to be. However; "(t)he officers lawfully must be in a position from which they can view a particular area; it must be immediately apparent to them that the items they are observing may be evidence of a crime, contraband, or otherwise subject to lawful seizure, and the officers must have a lawful right of access to the object. (Citation)" (People v. Bradford, supra, at p. 1295.)
> >
> > Items observed during the lawful execution of a search warrant which are identifiable as contraband or evidence of another crime are subject to seizure despite not being listed in the warrant itself. (People v. Gallegos (2002) 96 Cal.App.4th 612.)
> >
> > "Items in plain view, but not described in the warrant, may be seized when their incriminating character is immediately apparent. [Citation.] The incriminating character of evidence in plain view is not immediately apparent if 'some further search of the object' is required." (People v. Lenart (2004) 32 Cal.4th 1107, 119; citing Minnesota v. Dickerson (1993) 508 U.S. 366, 375 [113 S.Ct. 2130; 124 L.Ed.2nd 334]; see also United States v. Arredondo (8th Cir. 2021) 996 F.3rd 903, where a deputy sheriff believed that the vials laying on the couch "seem[ed] a little odd," the Court holding that something seeming "a little odd" is usually a hunch and not probable cause.)

As evidence of "dominion and control" over a residence, the seizure of a computer not specifically listed in the warrant should be upheld. (People v. Varghese (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 1084, 1100-1103; People v. Balint (2006) 138 Cal.App.4th 200.)

A capital murder defendant did not show that blanket suppression was warranted under the Fourth Amendment because the warrants, obtained in the context of a complex, rapidly evolving investigation, authorized particularized but broad seizures, and a detective testified that officers made a conscientious effort to seize only those items of evidence that were either listed or as for which there was probable cause. There was substantial evidence that items not specifically described in the warrant were in plain view. (People v. Helzer (2024) 15 Cal.5th 622, 645-653.)

When a Second Warrant is Needed:

When evidence of a different crime is discovered during a lawful warrant search, the better procedure is to fall back and obtain a second search warrant for the new offense, thus specifically allowing for the search for more evidence related to the newly discovered crime (see People v. Carrington (2009) 47 Cal.4th 145, 160, 164-168.) and eliminating some difficult legal issues later in the inevitable suppression hearings. (See People v. Albritton (1982) 138 Cal.App.3rd 79.)

In People v. Carrington, supra, officers from agency #2 accompanied officers from agency #1 who were executing a lawful search warrant in their own case. The officers from agency #2 were there for the purpose of making "plain sight" observations of evidence related to their agency's own investigation. Upon making such observations, this information was used to obtain a second warrant directed specifically at agency #2's investigation. This procedure was approved by the California Supreme Court.

"Even assuming the officers (from the agency #2) . . . hoped to find evidence of other offenses, their subjective state of mind would not render their conduct unlawful. . . . The existence of an ulterior motivation does not invalidate an officer's legal justification to conduct a search." (Id., at p. 168; citing Whren v. United States (1996) 517 U.S. 806 [116 S.Ct. 1769; 135 L.Ed.2nd 89].)

This case (i.e., Carrington), citing Whren v. United States for the proposition that an officer's "subjective motivations" are irrelevant, looking only at whether the officers, from an "objective" standpoint, were lawfully acting, in effect overrules People v. Albritton, supra. Albritton stood for the theory that it is illegal to use one warrant to look for evidence related to a different crime, even if such evidence is found in plain sight.

Searching a computer for drug related documents, and discovering child pornography, does not authorize the officer to begin searching for more child pornography without first obtaining a second search warrant for the pornography. (United States v. Carey (10th Cir. 1999) 172 F.3rd 1268, 1273; United States v. Giberson (9th Cir. 2008) 527 F.3rd 882, 890.)

And see United States v. Payton (9th Cir. 2009) 573 F.3rd 859, 861-864, where it was held that failure to include the magistrate's authorization to search defendant's computer, even though in the statement of probable cause the affiant indicated a desire to search any possible computers found in defendant's house, was a fatal omission. Searching defendant's computer, therefore, went beyond the scope of the warrant's authorization.

The fact that the issuing magistrate testified to an intent to allow for the search of defendant's computers, and that the warrant included authorization to search for certain listed records which might be found in a computer, was held to be irrelevant. (Id. at pp. 862-863.)

Problem of Overbreadth: "The Fourth Amendment requires that a warrant particularly describe both the place to be searched and the person or things to be seized. . . . The description must be specific enough to enable the person conducting the search reasonably to identify the things authorized to be seized. The purpose of the breadth requirement is to limit the scope of the warrant by the probable cause on which the warrant is based. . . ."

(United States v. Fries (9th Cir. 2015) 781 F.3rd 1137, 1151; quoting United States v. Smith (9th Cir. 2005) 424 F.3rd 992, 1004.)

The wholesale seizure of more records (a "few dozen boxes") than was authorized by the search warrant, so long as not used, should not result in suppression of the records that were authorized by the warrant. (United States v. Tamura (9th Cir. 1982) 694 F.2nd 591.)

So how does the Ninth Circuit suggest that such a situation be handled? At pp. 595-596, and fn. 3: "In the comparatively rare instances where documents are so intermingled that they cannot feasibly be sorted on site, we suggest that the Government and law enforcement officials generally can avoid violating fourth amendment rights by sealing and holding the documents pending approval by a magistrate of a further search, in accordance with the procedures set forth in the American Law Institute's Model Code of Pre-Arraignment Procedure (Section SS 220.5). If the need for transporting the documents is known to the officers prior to the search, they may apply for specific authorization for large-scale removal of material, which should be granted by the magistrate issuing the warrant only where on-site sorting is infeasible and no other practical alternative exists. (Citation) The essential safeguard required is that wholesale removal must be monitored by the judgment of a neutral, detached magistrate (fn. omitted)."

The Ninth Circuit expanded upon the Tamura decision in United States v. Comprehensive Drug Testing, Inc. (9th Cir. 2010) 621 F.3rd 1162, at pp. 1178-1180, where, in a non-binding concurring opinion, it was suggested that magistrates require as a condition of issuing a search warrant in such cases (i.e., where large amounts of documents or data are subject to being collected that may go beyond the probable cause authority of the warrant) that a "search protocol" be provided for in the affidavit that includes the following requirements:

1. Magistrate judges should insist that the government waive reliance upon the plain view doctrine in digital evidence cases.

2. Segregation and redaction of electronic data must be done either by specialized personnel or an independent third party. If the segregation is to be done by government computer personnel, the government must agree in the warrant application that the computer personnel will not disclose to the investigators any information other than that which is the target of the warrant.

3. Warrants and subpoenas must disclose the actual risks of destruction of information as well as prior efforts to seize that information in other judicial fora.

4. The government's search protocol must be designed to uncover only the information for which it has probable cause, and only that information may be examined by the case agents.

5. The government must destroy or, if the recipient may lawfully possess it, return non-responsive data, keeping the issuing magistrate informed about when it has done so and what it has kept.

Note: The Comprehensive Drug Testing, Inc. protocol is "advisory only," and not always necessary for upholding a search warrant for computerized data. (United States v. Schesso (9th Cir. 2013) 730 F.3rd 1040, 1047-1050; where the warrant was property executed, and nothing for which there was not probable cause was seized.)

> It was pointed out that such a protocol is not a constitutional requirement, although "heeding this guidance will significantly increase the likelihood that the searches and seizures of electronic storage that they authorize will be deemed reasonable and lawful." (Id., at p. 1049.)

Also, the Ninth Circuit has disallowed the use of an affidavit and other attachments to expand upon the list of items to be searched for and seized as shown on the warrant itself, even though the attachments were properly incorporated into the warrant. (United States v. Sedaghaty (9th Cir. 2013) 728 F.3rd 885, 910-915.)

> It was noted by the Court in discussing the "curative effect" that an affidavit may have on a defective warrant, that it is error to use a "broad ranging" probable cause affidavit to serve to expand the express limitations imposed by a magistrate in issuing the warrant itself. (Id., at pp 913-914.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals recognizes three factors relevant in analyzing the breadth of a warrant:

> (1) Whether probable cause existed to seize all items of a category described in the warrant;
>
> (2) Whether the warrant set forth objective standards by which executing officers could differentiate items subject to seizure from those which were not; and
>
> (3) Whether the government could have described the items more particularly in light of the information available.
>
> (United States v. Flores (9th Cir. 2015) 802 F.3rd 1028, 1042-1046.); citing United States v. Lei Shi (9th Cir. 2008) 525 F.3rd 709, 731-732, where the seizure of 11,000 pages, covering five to six years of defendant's Facebook account, was excused when only two sets of Facebook information were used at trial, both from the same day as defendant's crimes.
>
> It was also noted in United States v. Flores that the warrant allowed the government to search only the Facebook account associated with defendant's name and email address, and authorized the government to seize only evidence of violations of 18 U.S.C. § 371 (Conspiracy) and 21 U.S.C. §§ 952 and 960 (Importation of a Controlled Substance). The warrant also established "Procedures For Electronically Stored Information," providing executing officers with sufficient "objective standards" for segregating responsive material from > the rest of Flores's account, helping to minimize the overbreadth issue. (Id., at pp. 1044-1047.)

>
> The Ninth Circuit in Flores also employed the "doctrine of severance," which allows the reviewing court to strike from a warrant those portions that are invalid and preserve those portions that satisfy the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Flores, supra, at pp. 1042-1046.)

Even though the search warrant did not specifically mention cellphones as items to be seized, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeal held that cellphones were within the class of "instrumentalities of criminal activity" the warrant specifically described. As a result, the court held that officers lawfully seized defendant's cellphones. Also, the court held that the search of defendant's car was lawful even though not specifically listed in the warrant because the car was located in the driveway and the warrant authorized the officers to search "the premises and curtilage area." The court found that this allowed the officers to either search the vehicle parked in the curtilage, or to have a drug dog sniff the vehicle's exterior to confirm there was probable cause to search the vehicle for drugs. (United States v. Coleman (8th Cir. AR 2018) 909 F.3rd 925.)

Inclusion in a warrant a request allowing agents "to search and seize all digital devices at the Subject Premises," and "to compel 'any individual, who is found at the Subject Premises and reasonably believed by law enforcement to be a user of (a seized) device, to unlock the device using biometric features . . . .'" was held to be overbroad in an investigation of just two individuals suspected of being involved in an extortion scheme. (In re Search of a Residence in Oakland (N.D. Cal. 2019) 354 F.Supp.3rd 1010.)

"Breadth" deals with the requirement that the scope of the warrant be limited by the probable cause on which the warrant is based. (United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 702. See also People v. Meza (2023) 90 Cal.App.5th 520, 539-543 [2023 Cal.App. LEXIS 282], dealing with the issue of a "geofence" search warrant, citing In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Dated Dec. 10, 1987 (9th Cir. 1991) 926 F.2nd 847, 856-857.)

"This is distinct from the particularity requirement because it 'prevents the magistrate from making a mistaken authorization to search for particular objects in the first instance, no matter how well the objects are described.' (United States v. Weber (9th Cir. 1990) 923 F.2nd 1338, 1342 [although rules regarding particularity and overbreadth 'serve the same ultimate purpose, they achieve the purpose in distinct ways']; see also United States v. Purcell (2nd Cir. 2020) 967 F.3rd 159, 179 ['A warrant that comports with the particularity requirements may, however, be defective due to overbreadth. "[B]readth and particularity are related but distinct concepts""].)" (People v. Meza, supra, at pp. 535-536.)

Pen. Code § 1542.5: Seizure of a Restrained Person's Firearms During the Execution of a Search Warrant: Notwithstanding any other law, with regards to a search warrant issued upon the grounds specified in paragraph (14) of subdivision (a) of Section 1524, the following shall apply:

Subd. (a) The law enforcement officer executing the warrant shall take custody of any firearm or ammunition that is in the restrained person's custody or control or possession or that is owned by the restrained person, which is discovered pursuant to a consensual or other lawful search.

Subd. (b)

(1) If the location to be searched during the execution of the warrant is jointly occupied by the restrained person and one or more other persons and a law enforcement officer executing the warrant finds a firearm or ammunition in the restrained person's custody or control or possession, but that is owned by a person other than the restrained person, the firearm or ammunition shall not be seized if both of the following conditions are satisfied:

(A) The firearm or ammunition is removed from the restrained person's custody or control or possession and stored in a manner that the restrained person does not have access to or control of the firearm or ammunition.

(B) There is no evidence of unlawful possession of the firearm or ammunition by the owner of the firearm or ammunition.

(2) If the location to be searched during the execution of the warrant is jointly occupied by the restrained person and one or more other persons and a locked gun safe is located that is owned by a person other than the restrained person, the contents of the gun safe shall not be searched except in the owner's presence, and with his or her consent or with a valid search warrant for the gun safe.

Note: This section relates to persons subject to a "gun violence restraining order," per P.C. §§ 18100 et seq.

Answering the Telephone: In some cases (e.g., bookmaking, narcotics, etc.), answering the suspect's telephone during service of the warrant may lead to valuable corroborative evidence. (People v. Warner (1969) 270 Cal.App.2nd 900, 907; People v. Sandoval (1966) 65 Cal.2nd 303, 308; People v. Nealy (1991) 228 Cal.App.3rd 447, 452.)

A standard paragraph in the affidavit justifying the expectation of receiving incriminating evidence from callers, and inclusion in the warrant authorization to answer the phone, is advisable, although failure to do so should not preclude answering the phone. (See People v. Vanvalkenburgh (1983) 145 Cal.App.3rd 163, 167.)

Note: Justification for answering the telephone during execution of a warrant may also be premised upon the need to corroborate the occupant's possessory interest over the place being searched, as a form of oral "dominion and control" evidence.

The contents of a telephone call to a narcotics dealer's home asking to buy narcotics, answered by the police executing a search warrant, are admissible as a judicially created exception to the Hearsay Rule. (People v. Morgan et al. (2005) 125 Cal.App.4th 935.)

The Morgan Court further determined that the telephone call was "non-testimonial," as described in Crawford v. Washington (2004) 541 U.S. 36 [124 S.Ct. 1354; 158 L.Ed.2nd 177], and thus admissible over a Sixth Amendment, "right to confrontation" objection. (People v. Morgan et al, supra, at pp. 946-947.)

Other courts have held that the contents of a telephone call are admissible as non-hearsay circumstantial evidence of the defendants' dope dealing. (People v. Nealy (1991) 228 Cal.App.3rd 447; and People v. Ventura (1991) 1 Cal.App.4th 1515.)

Answering incoming calls did not exceed the scope of the relevant search warrant. (United States v. Ordonez (9th Cir. 1984) 737 F.2nd 793, 810 (amended opinion), and United States v. Gallo (9th Cir. 1981) 659 F.2nd 110.)

Searching pursuant to the suspect's consent, unless specifically included in the consent, does not give the searching officers the right to answer the telephone. (People v. Harwood (1977) 74 Cal.App.3rd 460, 465.)

But, with probable cause to believe that a robbery suspect might be calling, and the exigent circumstance of not being able to obtain a search warrant without losing the opportunity to receive the expected call from the suspect, thus compromising the officers' ability to quickly locate and apprehend him, answering the telephone without permission was held to be lawful. (People v. Ledesma (2006) 39 Cal.4th 641, 704.)

Detentions in a Residence During the Execution of a Search Warrant:

The occupants of a residence may be detained during the execution of a search warrant even though they did not match the description of the suspects (e.g., Caucasian instead of African-American) believed to be living there at the time. (Los Angeles County v. Rettele (2007) 550 U.S. 609 [127 S.Ct. 1989; 167 L.Ed.2nd 974]; the court noting that until the rest of the house is checked for the suspects, other occupants may be detained.)

See "Detention of Residents (or Non-Resident) During the Execution of a Search Warrant," under "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above.

Time Limitations: The warrant must be served and returned within ten (10) calendar days of issuance or it is deemed to be "void." A warrant which is executed within the ten-day period shall be deemed to have been timely executed and no further showing of timeliness need be made. (Pen. Code § 1534(a))

However, at least where the execution of the warrant is begun within the statutory time period, and absent any showing of bad faith, failure to complete the execution of the warrant within the 10-day period is not a constitutional violation and will not result in the suppression of any evidence. (People v. Superior Court* [Nasmeh] (2007) 151 Cal.App.4th 85, 98-100; citing United States v. Gerber (11th Cir.1993) 994 F.2nd 1556, 1560.)

> However, the Court in Nasmeh specifically declined to discuss the implications of violating P.C. § 1534 in that defendant had failed to raise the issue at the trial court level. (fn. 5.)

The day the warrant is signed by the magistrate is "day zero," with "day one" being the next day. Saturday, Sunday and holidays are included in the calculation. (People v. Clayton (1993) 18 Cal.App.4th 440, 444-445.)

After service of the warrant, the officer "must forthwith" return the executed warrant to the magistrate with the "receipt and inventory" (referred to as the "return" by some jurisdictions). (Pen. Code § 1537)

> "The officer must forthwith return the warrant to the magistrate, and deliver to him a written inventory of the property taken, made publicly or in the presence of the person from whose possession it was taken, and of the applicant for the warrant, if they are present, verified by the affidavit of the officer at the foot of the inventory, and taken before the magistrate at the time, to the following effect: 'I, R. S., the officer by whom this warrant was executed, do swear that the above inventory contains a true and detailed account of all the property taken by me on the warrant.'"

Even if Pen. Code § 1537 is violated by a return after the 10-day period, this defect does not require suppression of the evidence unless the defendant can show that he was prejudiced by the delay. (People v. Couch (1979) 97 Cal.App.3rd 377; People v. Kirk (1979) 99 Cal.App.3rd 89, 94; People v. Head (1994) 30 Cal.App.4th 954; delay of one year!)

> A violation of Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure,* Rule 41's provisions for filing of the return of inventory, by failing to file the return for two years, did not require the suppression of evidence in that the delayed filing was inadvertence rather than a deliberate or intentional disregard of the rules. (United States v. Beckmann (8th Cir. 2015) 786 F.3rd 672.)

See "Under Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure," below.

Denying a motion to unseal search warrant affidavits under Pen. Code § 1534(a) was not an abuse of discretion because the trial court reasonably found the affidavits either contained official information under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2), or had to remain sealed to protect a confidential informant's identity under Evid. Code § 1041, and properly balanced those interests against the right of access to court records. Cal. Rules of Court, rules 2.550, 2.551, did not require unsealing because the affidavits were kept confidential by law. A First Amendment claim failed under a history and utility test because search warrant materials were not historically open to the public, nor would their disclosure benefit the public. Cal. Const., art. I, §§ 2, 3, subd. (b) did not mandate access because exceptions to disclosure applied. (Electronic Frontier Foundation, Inc. v. Superior Court* (San Bernardino County District Attorney's Office) (2022) 83 Cal.App.5th 407.)

The "return package" consists of the following:

- The original warrant.
- The original affidavit.
- An inventory (or "return" form) of all the items seized, upon which the officer who executed the warrant swears that the inventory is a true list of everything seized during the execution of the warrant, including items seized but which were not listed in the warrant.

Disposition of Seized Property:

The physical evidence seized is to be retained (i.e., "impounded") by the officer pending use of the evidence in court or other court ordered disposition. (P.C. § 1536)

Under Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the execution period specified in a search warrant applies to the time the government has to seize a digital device or to conduct on-site copying of information from the device. This deadline does not apply to the time required to analyze and investigate the contents of the device off-site. Under Rule 41, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeal held that where a warrant for the contents of defendant's cellphone set an execution deadline of November 27, that that represented the date by which the government had to seize the physical cellphone itself. Consequently, the court held that execution of the warrant occurred on November 9, 2015, when defendant's cellphone was removed from the evidence vault and shipped to the data extraction laboratory, which occurred before the deadline of November 27 as specified in the warrant. The fact that the information in the cellphone was not extracted until December 21st is irrelevant. (United States v. Cleveland (6th Cir. OH 2018) 907 F.3rd 423.)

Digital Evidence Obtained by Search Warrant and Sought to be used in a Separate Unrelated Prosecution:

Digital evidence seized by local state authority during the execution of a state-issued search warrant from defendant's cellphone, but not necessary to the prosecution of the state case, cannot be turned over to a federal agency for use in a separate federal prosecution absent a second search warrant seeking the evidence related to the pending federal charges. Citing Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 403 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430, 452], the South Dakota federal District Court noted that the High Court has held that "because cell phones contain immense amounts of personal information about people's lives, they are unique, and law enforcement officers must generally secure a warrant before conducting such a search." Thus, in this case, a federal agent who sought digital evidence from defendant's cellphone collected, but not used in the state prosecution, it was held that the federal ATF agent "should have applied for and obtained a second warrant [that] would have authorized him to search Mr. Hulscher's cell phone data for evidence of (the federal) firearms offenses." (United States v. Hulscher (Dist. of So. Dakota, S. Div. 2017) 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22874; rejecting the Government's argument that; "law enforcement agencies can permanently save all unresponsive data collected from a cell phone after a search for future prosecutions on unrelated charges." (Pg. 7.)

The Court also rejected the Government's argument that the "plain view" exception applied under these circumstances (Pgs. 8-9.), or that there was insufficient "deterrence" to justify the suppression of the resulting evidence (Pg. 9), as held in Herring v. United States

(2009) 155 U.S. 135, 141 [129 S.Ct. 695; 172 L.Ed.2nd 496].

Note: This case is specifically limited to digital evidence that might be contained in a cellphone. However, the Court further notes that for an officer to obtain warrantless access to information retrieved under the authority of a separate warrant that was limited to another unrelated prosecution makes it a "general warrant," which is prohibited under the Fourth Amendment. (Pg. 6.)

One Continuous Search: If officers complete the execution of a warrant, and leave the scene, a second search warrant must be obtained in order to return and renew the search. However, so long as at least one officer remains on the scene between searches, reasonable breaks to accomplish other police activity (e.g., transporting the suspect to jail), do not necessarily mean that a renewed search requires a new warrant. (People v. James (1990) 219 Cal.App.3rd 414.)

The Courts tend to be a bit flexible on this rule. In United States v. Kaplan (9th Cir. 1990) 895 F.2nd 618, after defendant's arrest, his office was searched by FBI agents with a search warrant authorizing the seizure of certain files. Leaving the scene with the files thus obtained, the agents later discovered that they had not received all the files that were authorized by the warrant. Two hours and ten minutes after the initial execution of the warrant, agents returned and seized the remaining files. The Court noted that the issue was whether the second search was really no more than a continuation of the first. The Court decided that it was, citing the fact that the files seized on the second trip were listed in the warrant.

Leaving a Copy of the Warrant, Affidavit and/or Receipt and Inventory: There is no state statutory nor constitutional rule requiring that searching officers show the suspects the warrant, the affidavit to the warrant, or a copy of either, or that a copy of either be left at the scene after the search. (People v. Calabrese (2002) 101 Cal.App.4th 79.)

California Rule: Only a copy of the "receipt and inventory" (or "return") must be left with the occupants or at the scene. (Pen. Code § 1535)

Pen. Code § 1535: "When the officer takes property under the warrant, he must give a receipt for the property taken (specifying it in detail) to the person from whom it was taken by him, or in whose possession it was found; or, in > the absence of any person, he must leave it in the place where he found the property."

>
> There's no requirement that officers advise defendants, at the time items are taken, what it is that is being taken, so long as they ultimately comply with the return requirements of P.C. § 1535 by leaving a receipt for the items taken from the scene. (People v. Reed (1981) 121 Cal.App.3rd Supp. 26, 35.)

Fed. Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 41(d), applying only to the execution of a federal search warrant, requires that the occupant be given a copy of the warrant and a receipt for property taken in the search, or that these documents be left at the scene.

The Ninth Circuit's Opinion: The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal is of the belief that failure to provide to an occupant a copy of a warrant, properly describing the place to be searched and the property to be seized, may be a Fourth Amendment violation (See Ramirez v. Butte Silver Bow County (9th Cir. 2002) 298 F.3rd 1022.), thus creating some potential federal civil liability for state officers who choose to follow the state rule.

> However, the Ninth Circuit has also noted that only a "fundamental" violation of Rule 41(d) will mandate suppression of evidence. Where the agent was not aware of this rule, and otherwise insured that defendant was aware of why they were in his home and what they were looking for, suppression of evidence was not a proper remedy. (United States v. Williamson (9th Cir. 2006) 439 F.3rd 1125; discussing the difference between "intentionally," but not "deliberately," failing to provide defendant with a copy of the warrant prior to searching his house.)
>
> See also United States v. Welch (8th Cir. 2016) 811 F.3rd 275: Although notice to defendant of a Network Investigative Technique warrant did not comport with Fed. Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 41, there was no Fourth Amendment violation because it appeared that the delay was a good-faith application of the warrant and not reckless disregard of proper procedure.
>
> And see United States v. Celestine (9th Cir. 2003) 324 F.3rd 1095, 1105-1108, describing "the policies that underlie the warrant requirement: providing the property owner assurance of the lawful authority of the executing officer, his need to search, and the limits of his power to search."

However, where the occupant tells the searching officers that he does not understand English, and the officers take immediate steps to find a Spanish-speaking interpreter, the Fourth Amendment is not violated when the officers commence the search before the occupant can be read, in his own language, the contents of the warrant. (United States v. Martinez-Garcia (9th Cir. 2005) 397 F.3rd 1205.)

Note: Therefore, despite not being required by state law, it is probably good practice for a state law enforcement officer to show the occupants a copy of the search warrant (but not the affidavit), or, if no one is home, leave a copy of the search warrant at the scene. There is no harm in doing this, and brings the state execution of a search warrant in compliance with the federal rules.

See also United States v. Vesikuru (9th Cir. 2002) 314 F.3rd 1116, 1123-1124.), requiring that the warrant describe the place to be searched and property to be seized with "particularity," thus serving two important purposes. It:

- Limits the discretion of the officers executing the warrant; and

- By showing it to the property owner or resident, it gives notice of the proper scope of the search.

  In order to accomplish these purposes, the warrant must therefore be brought to the scene of the search and shown to the occupants. (Ibid.)

The United States Supreme Court has recently ruled that the Ninth Circuit's belief that a copy of the search warrant must be given to the occupants of the place being searched at the initiation of the search (see United States v. Williamson (9th Cir. 2006) 439 F.3rd 1125, above), is simply wrong. (United States v. Grubbs (2006) 547 U.S. 90, 98-99 [126 S.Ct. 1494; 164 L.Ed.2nd 195].)

> But see the concurring opinion in Grubbs (p. 101), noting that it has yet to be decided whether there is a constitutional requirement to show the property owner a copy of the warrant if he demands to see it.

In United States v. Hector (9th Cir. 2007) 474 F.3rd 1150, 1154, the Ninth Circuit noted that it is not clear whether Grubbs overruled their cases to the contrary, but found that under authority of Hudson v. Michigan (2006) 547 U.S. 586 [126 S.Ct. 2159; 165 L.Ed.2nd 56] (ruling that suppression of evidence is not an appropriate remedy for a constitutional violation that was not the "unattenuated but-for cause" of obtaining the disputed evidence), suppressing evidence is not required where law enforcement's mistake was nothing more than a failure to present a person with a copy of the search warrant.

But then in United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc. (9th Cir. 2009) 568 F.3rd 684, 701, the Ninth Circuit finally conceded that Grubbs overrules any prior cases that might have previously held that the occupant must be given a copy of the warrant affidavit.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed the district court's denial of defendant's pretrial motion to suppress evidence, where defendant asserted that FBI agents executing a search warrant at his residence deliberately violated Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(f)(1)(C) by failing to supply a complete copy of the warrant. The government conceded that the agents violated Rule 41(f)(1)(C) by delivering only the face page of the warrant rather than a complete copy. However, suppression is automatic only for "fundamental" violations of Rule 41, at least without any applicable exception to the exclusionary rule. The issue was whether the district court correctly concluded that the agents' failure to deliver a complete copy of the warrant at the completion of the search was merely negligent, rather than the product of a deliberate disregard of the rule. Defendant failed to show that the FBI deliberately disregarded of the rule. (United States v. Manaku (9th Cir. 2022) 36 F.4th 1186.)

Property In the Residence Belonging to a Third Person:

When a third person is present and his or her personal property is searched during the execution of a search warrant issued for a residence, the issue is whether the warrant can be used as authority to search the third person's personal property. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeal held that "a visitor's privacy interest is complicated when the visitor is connected to the illegal activity at the location" to be searched. In the execution of a search warrant where the warrant was for evidence of drug use and distribution, and a third party—defendant—was found sleeping on the couch, and there was a meth pipe and a closed Brink's metal box lying next to her, the Court held that this gave the officers "particularized suspicion" that defendant was connected to the illicit activity that provided the basis for the warrant. Consequently, the court held that defendant's personal belongings, including the Brink's box, would be subject to the warrant, especially because the warrant included all "locked containers." The court added that while defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the Brink's box, officers had probable cause that she was involved in the criminal activity that formed the basis for the warrant. As a result, the court held that defendant's Brink's box fell within the scope of the warrant and searching it was lawful. (United States v. Simmermaker (8th Cir. 2021) 998 F.3rd 1008; where drugs and a scale were recovered from the Brink's box.)

Destruction of Property in the Execution of a Search Warrant:

Officers are expected to use some discretion in the execution of a warrant to avoid the taking of unnecessarily excessive (i.e., "cumulative") property and engaging in unnecessarily destructive behavior. (San Jose Charter of the Hells Angels Motorcycle Club v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 2005) 402 F.3rd 962; damaging property in the taking of "truckloads" of "indicia of affiliation" property, plus the shooting of several dogs without having considered alternative methods of controlling the dogs.)

However, the fact that property might be damaged or destroyed during the entry does not require a higher degree of exigency in order to justify the no-knock authorization when applying for a search warrant. (United States v. Ramirez (1998) 523 U.S. 65 [118 S.Ct. 992; 140 L.Ed.2nd 191; United States v. Banks, supra, at p. 37 [124 S.Ct. 521; 157 L.Ed.2nd at p. 355]; United States v. Bynum (9th Cir. 2004) 362 F.3rd 574, 580.)

It was not illegal to use a battering ram to gain access to defendant's residence when the fiancée, who was locked out, expressly consented to the use of such a method to gain entry. (United States v. Moore (9th Cir. 2014) 770 F.3rd 809, 814.)

The California Supreme Court has determined in a case that has never been overruled that at least where a "motorized battering ram" is used to force entry into a building, prior judicial authorization in the search or arrest warrant is necessary. Failure to obtain such authorization is both a violation of the California

Constitution and the Fourth Amendment. (Langford v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal.3rd 21.)

> "We conclude therefore that the motorized battering ram may be used in executing searches or arrests only after the LAPD satisfies three preliminary requirements: i.e., it (1) obtains a warrant upon probable cause, (2) receives prior authorization to use the ram from a magistrate, and (3) at the time of entry determines there are exigent circumstances amounting to an immediate threat of injury to officers executing the warrant or reasonable grounds to suspect that evidence is being destroyed." (Id., pg. 32.)
>
> "The magistrate should decide only whether the motorized battering ram could be used with relative safety against a particular building, if the need arises during execution of a search or arrest warrant." (Id., pg. 31.)
>
> The same rule would apply to the use of a motorized battering ram in the execution of an arrest warrant. (Id., pg. 33.)
>
> But such prior judicial authorization is not legally required where the issue is the use of some lesser, less dangerous, force, such as the use of "flashbangs." (Id., pg. 28.)

The use of a battering ram on the door, rubber bullets to knock out windows, and "flash bang" devices (one of which seriously injured defendant) to distract the occupants, even though possibly unreasonable under the circumstances, but where there is no "causal nexus" between the entry and the recovery of evidence in the home, does not require suppression of the evidence. (United States v. Ankeny (9th Cir. 2007) 502 F.3rd 829, 835-838; a one to 1½ second delay between knocking and entering.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has expressly noted that "officers executing a search warrant occasionally 'must damage property in order to perform their duty.'" (West v. City of Caldwell (9th Cir. 2019) 831 F.3rd 978, 986, quoting Liston v. County of Riverside (9th Cir. 1997) 120 F.3rd 965, 979; which in turn quotes Dalia v. United States (1979) 441 U.S. 238, 258 [99 S.Ct. 1682; 60 L.Ed.2nd 177].)

> In West v. City of Caldwell, supra, it was noted that officers, who damaged plaintiff's home by shooting tear gas through its windows, "reasonably believed (beforehand) that (a subject for whom they had an arrest warrant) was in the house, that he was high on meth, that he possessed what had been described as a BB gun, that he was suicidal, and that he owned a .32 caliber pistol. They also knew that he was a gang member with outstanding felony arrest warrants for violent crimes and that he had (recently) aggressively tried to run down a patrol car during a recent high-speed chase." Assuming without deciding that such destructive force was unreasonable under the circumstances, the Court held that the defendant officers were entitled to qualified immunity due to the lack of any prior case authority on the issue of the officers' potential civil liability.

The dissent in West cites (at pg. 990, fn. 2) cases from four other circuits that determined that a general consent to search does not permit intentional damage to personal property. I.e.; United States v. Garrido-Santana (6th Cir. 2004) 360 F.3rd 565, 576; United States v. Torres (7th Cir. 1994) 32 F.3rd 225, 231-232; United States v. Zamora-Garcia (8th Cir. 2016) 831 F.3rd 979, 983; and United States v. Strickland (11th Cir. 1990) 902 F.2nd 937, 942.

> The dissent also noted (Ibid.) that the Third, Tenth, and D.C. Circuits have similarly suggested that although a general consent to search a place or item may permit the police to dismantle or temporarily modify that property, the consent does not give the police authorization to destroy that property or otherwise "render it useless." (See United States v. Kim (3rd Cir. 1994) 27 F.3rd 947, 956-957; quoting United States v. Springs (D.C. Cir. 1991) 936 F.2nd 1330, 1334-1335, 290 U.S. App. D.C. 273); see also United States v. Osage (10th Cir. 2000) 235 F.3rd 518, 521, 522 fn. 2.)

Qualified immunity was appropriately denied for officers who were "unnecessarily destructive" while searching a home. In this case, the officers broke down two doors that were already unlocked, and the occupant of the home saw one officer kicking the open patio door while declaring: "I like to destroy these kind of materials, it's cool." The Court noted that while destroying property during a search "does not necessarily violate the Fourth Amendment," it is a different story where the "Defendants appear to have damaged Plaintiffs' property in a way that was 'not reasonably necessary to execute the search warrant.'" (Mena v. City of Simi Valley (9th Cir. 2000) 226 F.3rd 1031.)

Practice Note: It is just a good idea for officers executing a search warrant not to be any more destructive than absolutely necessary. Juries are prone to penalizing (even if subjectively) officers who unnecessary destroy a defendant's personal property.

Sealing the Warrant Affidavit; i.e., the "Hobbs Warrant*:"

The Problem:

"(T)he contents of a search warrant, including any supporting affidavits setting forth the facts establishing probable cause for the search, become a public record once the warrant is executed." (People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 Cal.4th 948, 962; citing P.C. § 1534(a), and People v. Seibel (1990)219 Cal.App.3rd 1279, 1291.)

The Solution:

To avoid unnecessarily revealing confidential informant information, all or part of the warrant affidavit may be ordered sealed by the court if necessary to protect the identity of the informant. (People v. Hobbs, supra; see also People v. Sanchez (1972) 24 Cal.App.3rd 664, 678; (People v. Galland (2008) 45 Cal.4th 354, 363-365.)

No Right to Public Access: There are two categories of documents that are not covered by the common law right to public access to records of judicial proceedings and records; (1) grand jury transcripts; and (2) warrant materials in the midst of a pre-indictment investigation. (Times Mirror Co. v. United States (9th Cir. 1989) 873 F.2nd 1210, 1219.)

The same is not true for post-investigation warrant materials. (United States v. The Business of the Custer Battlefield Museum (9th Cir. 2011) 658 F.3rd 1188; see "Post-Investigation Disposition of Warrant Application and Supporting Affidavits," below.

How Accomplished: This is done by obtaining the signature of a judge on a separate affidavit (describing the need for sealing) and order, requesting the sealing of a search warrant affidavit.

The warrant itself must contain a corresponding order by the court sealing the warrant affidavit, or a portion thereof: E.g.:

> "GOOD CAUSE appearing therefore, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the attached affidavit (and attachments thereto) be sealed pending further order of the court. IT IS SO ORDERED." (Dated and signed by the magistrate)

When Warrants May be Sealed: Search warrant affidavits are not uncommonly sealed when necessary to protect the identity of a confidential informant either because his or her safety could be jeopardized, and/or because he or she is being used in other investigations that might be compromised if it is known who he or she is. (United States v. Napier (9th Cir. 2006) 436 F.3rd 1133.)

However, despite the lack of any case authority, there is no reason why sealing an affidavit must necessarily be restricted to protecting confidential informants. While this procedure should not be used unless actually necessary, there may be other legitimate reasons for requiring an affidavit to be sealed. (e.g.; to avoid news media publicity compromising an investigation-in-progress.)

> There is as of yet no case authority on the issue as to whether this, or any other purpose other than to protect informant confidentiality, justifies the sealing of a warrant affidavit.
>
> But see Electronic Frontier Foundation, Inc. v. Superior Court (San Bernardino County District Attorney's Office) (2022) 83 Cal.App.5th 407, denying a motion to unseal search warrant affidavits under Pen. Code § 1534(a) was not an abuse of discretion because the trial court reasonably found the affidavits either contained official information under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2), or had to remain sealed to protect a confidential informant's identity under Evid. Code § 1041, and properly balanced those interests against the right of access to court records. Cal. Rules of Court, rules 2.550, 2.551, did not require unsealing because the affidavits were kept confidential by law. A First Amendment claim failed under a history and utility > test because search warrant materials were not historically open to the public, nor would their disclosure benefit the public. Cal. Const., art. I, §§ 2, 3, subd. (b) did not mandate access because exceptions to disclosure applied.

The justification behind the Hobbs decision had a lot to do with the importance of encouraging the use of, and protecting the confidentiality of the identities of, informants. (People v. Hobbs, supra, at p. 958, citing McCray v. Illinois (1967) 386 U.S. 300, 308-309 [18 L.Ed.2nd 62, 69; 87 S.Ct. 1056].)

> "We therefore conclude that, taken together, the informant's privilege (E.C. § 1041), the long-standing rule extending coverage of that privilege to information furnished by the informant which, if disclosed, might reveal his or her identity, and the codified rule that disclosure of an informant's identity is not required to establish the legality of a search pursuant to a warrant is valid on its face (Evid. Code § 1042(b)) compel a conclusion that all or any part of a search warrant affidavit may be sealed if necessary to implement the privilege and protect the identity of a confidential informant." (People v. Hobbs, supra, at p. 971.)

> While a criminal defendant's due process rights (to be treated fairly) at trial are substantial, they "are less elaborate and demanding" in a motion to suppress. The purpose of a trial is to find the truth. The purpose of a suppression motion is "to avoid the truth." "The very purpose of a motion to suppress is to escape the inculpatory thrust of evidence in hand, ..." (United States v. Napier, supra, at p. 1137; quoting McCray v. Illinois, supra., at p. 307.)

The Court in People v. Camel (2017) 8 Cal.App.5th 989, at pg. 1009, approved of the sealing of two attachments to a wiretap warrant.

Criticism of the Procedure: The practice of sealing warrant affidavits is not without its critics, in that a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to confront his accusers is arguably compromised.

The Hobbs sealing was upheld in People v. Theilen (1998) 64 Cal.App.4th 326 (ordered depublished, Dec. 2, 1998; 1998 Cal. LEXIS 5960), but in doing so, the procedure for doing so was criticized by the author of the opinion who felt that federal authority (Waller v. Georgia (1984) 467 U.S. 39 [104 S.Ct. 2210; 81 L.Ed.2nd 31], which involved the closure of a suppression motion to the public.) required the prosecution to demonstrate an "overriding interest," and that prosecution is likely to be prejudiced, before allowing the sealing of an affidavit.

Court Procedures: When testing the validity of a sealed warrant affidavit, the following court procedures should be followed (See People v. Martinez (2005) 132 Cal.App.4th 233.):

- The defense must file a properly noticed motion seeking to quash and/or traverse the search warrant.

- The trial court should conduct an in camera hearing pursuant to E.C. § 915(b) and People v. Luttenberger (1990) 50 Cal.3rd 1, 20-21.

  The prosecution and police officer may be present.

  Defendant and his/her counsel are to be excluded, although defense counsel should be allowed to submit questions for the magistrate to ask any witnesses present at the in camera hearing.

  Failure to conduct an in camera hearing, reviewing the sealed portions of the affidavit to determine whether there are any litigable issues, is an abuse of discretion. (See People v. Galland (2008) 45 Cal.4th 354, 372, citing People v. Galland (2004) 116 Cal.App.4th 489, at pp. 492-494.)

- The trial court should determine whether sufficient grounds exist for maintaining the confidentiality of the informant's identity.

- The trial court then determines whether the entirety of the affidavit or any portion thereof is properly sealed; i.e., whether the extent of the sealing is necessary to avoid revealing the informant's identity.

- In a traversal motion:

  The trial court must scrutinize the affidavit and other materials the magistrate determines are necessary for a fair determination of the issue, such as police reports and information regarding the informant.

  The trial court should consider examining the affiant, the informant, or any other witness whose testimony it deems necessary.

  If the affidavit is found to have been properly sealed, the court must then determine, based upon the general allegations made by defendant in his/her motion, and in considering the public and sealed portions of the affidavit, whether there are any intentional or reckless misstatements or omissions in the affidavit, as with any such motion. (See Franks v. Delaware (1978) 438 US 154, 155-156 [98 S.Ct. 2674; 57 L.Ed.2nd 667, 672].)

  If it is determined that defendant's allegations are not supported by the information before the court, defendant's motion should be denied.

  If it is determined that there is a "reasonable probability" that defendant would prevail on the motion to traverse, the District Attorney must be afforded the option of:

    Consenting to disclosure of the sealed materials and proceeding with the motion to traverse after full disclosure to the defense; or Suffering the granting of defendant's motion to traverse.

- In a motion to quash: If the affidavit is found to have been properly sealed, the trial court should:

  Determine whether the affidavit (public and sealed portions) establishes probable cause (i.e., whether there was a "fair probability") that contraband or evidence would be found in the place searched pursuant to the warrant.

If yes, defendant's motion should be denied.

If the court determines, considering the public and sealed portions, that there is a "reasonable probability" the defendant would prevail, then again, the District Attorney must be given the option of:

> Consenting to disclosure of the sealed materials and proceeding with the motion to quash after full disclosure to the defense; or
>
> Suffering a granting of defendant's motion to quash. (People v. Hobbs, supra, at pp. 971-975.)

Retention of the Documents: A sealed affidavit should generally be retained by the court, but may, upon a five-part showing, be held by a law enforcement agency:

(1) The disclosure would impair further investigation of criminal conduct, or endanger the safety of a confidential informant or the informant's family;

(2) Security procedures at the court clerk's office are inadequate to protect the affidavit against disclosure;

(3) The security procedures at the law enforcement agency are sufficient to protect the affidavit against disclosure;

(4) The law enforcement agency has procedures to ensure the affidavit is retained for 10 years (permanently in capital cases) after the final disposition of the case, pending further order of the court (see Gov't. Code § 68152(j)(18)); and

(5) The magistrate has made a sufficient record of the documents reviewed, including the sealed materials, to permit identification of the original sealed affidavit or to permit reconstruction of the affidavit.

(People v. Galland (2008) 45 Cal.4th 354, 368; also finding that the loss of the affidavit did not invalidate the warrant when "other evidence may be presented to establish the fact that an affidavit was presented, as well as its contents.")

Wiretap Case: The trial court denied discovery of the unredacted supporting wiretap affidavits that were sealed pursuant to People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 Cal.4th 948, in a wiretap case, and then refused to suppress the wiretap evidence. The Appellate Court found that the privileges and procedures of E.C. §§ 1040-1042 (Official Information Privilege) apply to wiretap affidavits. Defendants failed to demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion by ruling that defendants' rights were adequately protected with respect to their requests for disclosure of privileged documentation, and to their challenges to the sufficiency of the wiretap authorization orders in this case. (People v. Acevedo (2012) 209 Cal.App.4th 1040, 1047-1050.)

Post-Investigation Disposition of Warrant Application and Supporting Affidavits:

The public has a qualified common law right of access to warrant materials after an investigation has been terminated. The concerns about suspects destroying evidence, coordinating their stories before testifying, or fleeing the jurisdiction are no longer present once an investigation has been terminated. Absent a compelling reason or factual basis for limiting and restricting the use of such documents, a court may not do so. (United States v. The Business of the Custer Battlefield Museum (9th Cir. 2011) 658 F.3rd 1188.)

Delays in Obtaining a Search Warrant for Detained/Seized Property:

Rule: The standard to be applied when evaluating the legality of the length of time a suspect is deprived of his property pending a search is one of "reasonableness," taking into account the "totality of the circumstances," and not necessarily requiring that the Government pursue the least intrusive course of action. Determining reasonableness requires a "balancing test," balancing "the nature and quality of the intrusion on the individual's Fourth Amendment interests against the importance of the governmental interests alleged to justify the intrusion." (Citations omitted; United States v. Sullivan (9th Cir. 2015) 797 F.3rd 623, 633; finding 21 days to be reasonable during which time the defendant's laptop was in law enforcement custody in that defendant was in custody at the time so he couldn't use it anyway, he was subject to a Fourth waiver, where defendant gave consent to the laptop's seizure, and where the computer had to be transferred to a different agency to conduct the necessary forensic search.)

Case Law:

Delays of between seven and twenty-three days in obtaining search warrants to search hundreds of packages that were seized without a warrant at a post office in Hawaii was held to be unreasonable. (United States v. Dass (9th Cir 1988) 849 F.2nd 414.)

A three-day delay in a police department's unsuccessful attempt to download the contents of defendant's cellphone was held to be reasonable, as well as a one-year delay in obtaining a search warrant for a more thorough forensic search of the cellphone. (United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2017) 875 F.3rd 1265, 1276.)

Officers who took 26½ hours to obtain a search warrant for a residence while the residence was "detained" (i.e., the occupant was kept from reentering), failing to recognize that they were required to act with due diligence and to expedite the process. The resulting evidence, therefore, was subject to exclusion. (United States v. Cha (9th Cir. 2010) 597 F.3rd 995, 1004-1006.)

A 20-day delay in obtaining a search warrant to search an already lawfully seized laptop computer, although unreasonable, was not grounds for suppression of the laptop's contents. "(I)n another category of cases, police misconduct effectively bears no 'fruit.' . . . Unreasonable delays fall into this latter category." (United States v. Jobe, (9th Cir. 2019) 933 F.3rd 1074, 1078-1079; citing United States v. Cha, supra, and comparing the differences in the relevant officers' actions.

Three days upheld as reasonable, comparing it with the 90-minutes defendant's luggage was detained at an airport as described in United States v. Place (1983) 462 U.S. 696 [103 S.Ct. 2637; 77 L.Ed.2nd 110], noting "(t)hat seizure did not disrupt Tran's travel plans because a dashboard camera clearly is not as integral to the necessities of travel as luggage containing clothes, toiletries, and other travel essentials." (People v. Tran (2019) 42 Cal.App.5th 1, 13-14.)

Defendant argued that the investigators' retention of his laptop for fifteen days before seeking a warrant to search it was unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment. The Court recognized that while the initial, warrantless seizure of property may be reasonable, the duration of the seizure pending the issuance of a search warrant must also be reasonable. In this case, the Court held that while several factors weighed in defendant's favor, the fifteen-day delay between the seizure of the laptop and the issuance of the search warrant was reasonable under the circumstances. The Court based its holding primarily on the fact that several different investigative teams were working a complex investigation related to two distinct crimes: fraud and sex trafficking. In addition, the court noted the considerable effort it took to prepare the affidavit supporting the warrant application, as the affidavit was eighteen pages long and included seven pages of specific information about defendant's alleged conduct learned by each of the four investigative teams during their respective investigations. (United States v. Mays (8th Cir. 2021) 993 F.3rd 607.)

Fifteen-day delay between the seizure of defendant's cellphone and the eventual obtaining of a search warrant to search it was not unreasonable. (People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 816-817; balancing the length of the delay with the "substantial interest" the police had in extracting information from defendant's cellphone.)

> Also, the Court noted that the "delay in obtaining a warrant did not adversely affect possessory interests where the defendant did not seek return of property and failed to allege or prove the delay 'adversely affected legitimate interests protected by the Fourth Amendment.'" (Ibid.)

The delay of some 24 days between the seizure of defendant's cellphone an the obtaining of a search warrant to search it was not unreasonable under the circumstances. In this case, the Court reasoned that because smartphones "retain data for long periods of time," delay between the time a cellphone is seized and when it is searched is not likely to cause stored personal data to be lost, or data of potential evidentiary relevance to become stale. In addition, the court added that the defendant (from whom the cellphone was seized) was in police custody for the entire twenty-four-day period, and there was no evidence that either he or anyone acting on his behalf made a request or demand for the cellphone's return, or even inquired about it. The Court concluded that when defendants do not seek the return of seized property, they cannot establish that the delay affected legitimate interests protected by the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Bragg (8th Cir. 2022) 44 F.3rd 1067.)

See also "Staleness," under "The 'Reasonable Particularity' Requirement (Pen. Code §§ 1525, 1529); The Persons, Places, Things and Vehicles to be Searched," above.

Return of Property:

Rule: Property seized by search warrant may only be released by court order:

Pen. Code § 1536: All property taken by warrant is to be retained by the officer "subject to the order of the court."

Pen. Code § 1540: The magistrate has the authority to release property seized by warrant.

Stolen or Embezzled Property: Stolen or embezzled property in cases where a complaint has been filed should be released by a magistrate after notice to anyone claiming an interest in the property. (Pen. Code §§ 1408, 1410, 1413(c))

Otherwise, property may be returned to the lawful owner by the seizing law enforcement officer, but only after notice is given to the person from whom the property was seized. (Pen. Code § 1413(b))

Unclaimed Property:

If, after termination of any related prosecution, or if no case has been filed, and the owner fails to claim the property and no one else has claimed it, it "may" be delivered to the county for disposal pursuant to the procedures set out in Pen. Code § 1411(a).

The section was amended, effective 1/1/2014, to provide in new subd. (b) that the section does not govern the disposition of property held by a pawnbroker and placed on hold by a peace officer pursuant to B&P § 21647 unless the licensed pawnbroker or secondhand dealer refuses to consent to a B&P § 21647 hold on the property, or a search warrant for the business of the licensed pawnbroker or secondhand dealer has resulted in the seizure of the property.

Note: Special provisions cover the disposition of firearms (Pen. Code § 12028) and money (Pen. Code §§ 1420 et seq.)

Case Law:

It is not legally necessary for officers executing a search warrant to give a person from whom property has been seized any notice of the applicable statutes or the means by which that person may seek the return of his or her property. (City of West Covina v. Perkins (1999) 525 U.S. 234 [119 S.Ct. 678; 142 L.Ed.2nd 636]; reversing a Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal opinion to the contrary.)

In determining the amount of restitution under P.C. § 1202.4(f), for defendant's theft of copper wire, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it ordered defendant to pay the full replacement cost while also permitting the victim to retain pieces of wire that the police had returned to the victim because the trial court reasonably concluded that the victim was receiving no windfall, in light of evidence that the returned pieces of wire could not be spliced and were therefore useless in the victim's business operations. It could not be said that the restitution order placed the victim in a better position than before the theft occurred because the copper wire was part of a functioning system before the theft, the victim was in a far less favorable condition after the theft, and further hearings would have burdened and inconvenienced the victim. (People v. Erickson (2018) 30 Cal.App.5th 243.)

The proper avenue of redress for denial of a defendant's nonstatutory motion to return seized property is through a petition for writ of mandate. (Smith v. Superior Court* (San Francisco Police Department) (2018) 28 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1; a marijuana case, citing People v. Hopkins (2009) 171 Cal.App.4th 305, 308.)

Federal Rules:

Federally, Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41(g) provides a mechanism by which any person may seek to recover property seized by federal agents. The rule states that if a motion to return property is granted, "the court must return the property to the movant."

> A provisional arrest warrant was issued for appellee Ramsden at the request of the British government. Appellee was arrested in the hallway outside his hotel room. Appellee was allowed to reenter his room in order to change clothes. The marshals escorted appellee inside and seized various documents in appellee's room. Appellee sought to have the seized documents returned to him pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(e). The lower court granted appellee's motion and ordered the documents returned to appellee without giving the government an opportunity to copy them. The government challenged this ruling on appeal. The Ninth Circuit ruled that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in deciding to exercise equitable jurisdiction in the case. The government's continued retention of the original documents was unreasonable, and the lower court did not err in ordering the documents returned to appellee. However, in light of the policy of compromise underlying Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(e), the most appropriate outcome was to allow appellee to retain the original documents, but to ensure that the government was afforded copies of the documents. Thus, it was error to preclude the government from reviewing or copying the documents. (Ramsden v. United States (9th Cir. 1993) 2 F.3rd 322.)

> The Court used a balancing test in Ramsden it obtained from the Fifth Circuit;
>
> > (1.) Whether the Government displayed a callous disregard for the constitutional rights of the movant;
> > (2.) Whether the movant has an individual interest in and need for the property he wants returned;
> > (3.) Whether the movant would be irreparably injured by denying return of the property; and
> > (4.) Whether the movant has an adequate remedy at law for the redress of his grievance.
> >
> > (See Richey v. Smith (5th Cir. 1975) 515 F.2nd 1239, 1243-1244. See also Snitko v. United States (2024) 90 F.4th 1250, 1259, and fn. 8, below, and United States v. Comprehensive Drug Testing, Inc. (9th Cir. 2010) 621 F.3rd 1162, 1173.)

Where the subject property has been lost or destroyed, Rule 41(g) is silent as to what alternative relief, if any, the movant may seek. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has held that even when it results in a wrong without a remedy, the federal courts are without jurisdiction to award money damages against the government. Equitable considerations standing alone cannot waive the government's immunity from suit. (Ordonez v. United States (9th Cir. 2012) 680 F.3rd 1135.)

The United States Supreme Court has granted certiorari in a case out of the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeal reviewing the Appellate Court's decision holding that Rule 41(g) does not allow for the return of firearms to a convicted felon even though the felon intended to transfer ownership of the firearm to an unrelated person to whom the felon had already sold all his property interest. (See Henderson v. United States (11th Cir. 2014) 555 Fed. Appx. 851.)

See Snitko v. United States (2024) 90 F.4th 1250, where FBI agents, in conjunction with the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) and the United States Postal Inspection Service (USPIS), put together a search protocol consisting of an "Operation Order Search Plan" document and separate document entitled "Supplemental Instructions on Box Inventory." This was all in addition to a traditional search warrant allowing for the search of some 700 private safe deposit boxes used by customers of a private company called US Private Vaults (USPV), a company the government was investigating for various criminal activities, including money laundering.

Burden of Proof when the Return of Property is Contested:

"'When a motion for return of property is made before an indictment is filed (but a criminal investigation is pending), the movant bears the burden of proving both that the seizure was illegal and that he or she is entitled to lawful possession of the property.' United States v. Martinson, 809 F.2nd 1364, 1369 (9th Cir.1987) (citations omitted). 'However, when the property in question is no longer needed for evidentiary purposes, either because trial is complete, the defendant has pleaded guilty, or . . . the government has abandoned its investigation, the burden of proof changes. The person from whom the property is seized is presumed to have a right to its return, and the government has the burden of demonstrating that it has a legitimate reason to retain the property.' Id. (footnotes and citations omitted). The 'government must justify its continued possession of the property by demonstrating that it is contraband or subject to forfeiture.' Id." (United States v. Harrell (9th Cir. 2008) 530 F.3rd 1051, 1057.)

It is the government's (i.e., the prosecution's) burden to prove that defendant's non-contraband evidence should not be returned to him upon filing of a motion under Fed. R. Crim. Pro. 41(g). Failure to submit any evidence to show the difficulty and cost of segregating defendant's requested data from pornographic material, claiming such difficulty and cost to be a "legitimate reason" for refusing to return the non-contraband materials to him, required the remand of the case for a reconsideration of this issue. (United States v. Gladding (9th Cir. 2014) 775 F.3rd 1149, 1151-1154.)

The federal district court did not err in denying appellant's motion under Fed. R. Crim. Proc. 41(g) to obtain funds that the government had seized from him because the government successfully rebutted his claim of ownership by establishing that the money was stolen property and contraband. However, the Government did not establish its right to the money because the Government could not sidestep the forfeiture statutes, including 18 U.S.C.S. § 981(a)(1)(C), and their accompanying procedural protections, by way of a Rule 41(g) proceeding. The government had not perfected title in the seized property and therefore it could not retain or distribute the money. (United States v. Wright (9th Cir. 2023) 49 F.4th 1221.)

Marijuana Cases:

H&S Code § 11473.5: Destruction of Property in Absence of Conviction:

Subd. (a) All seizures of controlled substances, instruments, or paraphernalia used for unlawfully using or administering a controlled substance which are in possession of any city, county, or state official as found property, or as the result of a case in which no trial was had or which has been disposed of by way of dismissal or otherwise than by way of conviction, shall be destroyed by order of the court, unless the court finds that the controlled substances, instruments, or paraphernalia were lawfully possessed by the defendant.

(b) If the court finds that the property was not lawfully possessed by the defendant, law enforcement may request of the court that certain uncontaminated instruments or paraphernalia be relinquished to a school or school district for science classroom education in lieu of destruction.

Note: See H&S Code §§ 11470 et seq. for statutes dealing with the confiscation, forfeiture, destruction, or other disposition, of controlled substances, including marijuana (now called "cannabis"), in the possession of law enforcement or the court.

Case Law:

As an affirmative defense, a defendant found in possession of excessive amounts of marijuana is precluded from asking for a certain amount to be returned to him for medicinal purposes. There is no statutory authority for the court to return some of the marijuana to him after his admission that he possessed more than legally allowed. (Chavez v. Superior Court* [Orange County] (2004) 123 Cal.App.4th 104.)

However, in those cases where the marijuana is determined to be possessed in accordance with state law, the court has the authority (despite the contrary federal law) to order the law enforcement agency to return any confiscated marijuana to the person. (City of Garden Grove v. Superior Court* [Kha] (2007) 157 Cal.App.4th 355.)

Taking or destroying a person's lawful medical marijuana may provide the patient with a cause of action in civil court for the unlawful taking. (See County of Butte v. Superior Court* [Williams] (2009) 175 Cal.App.4th 729.)

If the trial court does not return the marijuana to the defendant (i.e., after dismissal of the case), there can be no appeal from the court's refusal to return it. There is no statutory procedure for such an appeal. The proper remedy is through a petition to the appellate court for a writ of mandate. (People v. Hopkins (2009) 171 Cal.App.4th 305.)

After the granting of a non-statutory motion to return property following dismissal of criminal charges, 21.8 grams of recreational marijuana should have been returned to the owner under H&S Code § 11473.5 because at the time the marijuana was seized, the petitioner lawfully possessed the marijuana under California law in that he was over 21 years of age and the amount was less than 28.6 grams. There is no positive conflict between California law and the federal Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. §§ 801 et seq.) such that the two cannot consistently stand together. The San Francisco Police Department is immune from federal prosecution under the Controlled Substances Act when complying with California's return provisions. (Smith v. Superior Court* (San Francisco Police Department) (2018) 28 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1; "A controlled substance is 'lawfully possessed' under this section if it is lawfully possessed under California law." (pgs. 4-5, citing City of Garden Grove v. Superior Court* [Kha] (2007) 157 Cal.App.4th 355, 380.)

Extensions:

Search warrants must be served within ten (10) calendar days of issuance. (Pen. Code § 1534)

The sole exception provided for by statute is for bank records. If a bank cannot reasonably retrieve the requested records within ten days, the affiant may request for some time period longer than ten days. (Gov't. Code § 7475)

So long as served within the 10-day limit, no further evidence of timeliness need be shown. (Cave v. Superior Court) 1968) 267 Cal.App.2nd 517.)

If, during the 10-day period, it becomes apparent that the warrant cannot, or will not, be served, the officer may do either of the following:

- Submit a new warrant and affidavit, with an added explanation in the affidavit for why the warrant was not executed on time and listing any facts relevant to a possible change in probable cause or why it is believed the property to be seized will still be in the placed to be searched; or

- Take the original warrant, with a supplemental affidavit incorporating by reference the entire original affidavit, back to the issuing magistrate to "revalidate and reissue" the same warrant (People v. Sanchez (1972) 24 Cal.App.4th 664.) upon a showing that the probable cause has not become stale.

  Note: "Penal Code section 1534 makes a warrant void if not executed within 10 days of issuance." (People v. Brocard (1985) 170 Cal.App.3rd 239, 242.)

Special Masters:

Rule: Per Pen. Code § 1524(c), search warrants for documentary evidence in the possession of, or under the control of, a . . .

Lawyer,
Doctor,
Psychotherapist, or

Clergyman,

. . . who is not him or herself reasonably suspected of engaging or having engaged in criminal activity related to the documentary evidence for which a warrant is requested, are invalid unless certain statutory requirements relating to obtaining the assistance of a "special master" are first met. (See Deukmejian v. Superior Court (1980) 103 Cal.App.3rd 253.)

When Not Applicable:

This special master system is specifically not available for evidence coming within the so-called "newsman's privilege," as described in Evid. Code § 1070. (Pen. Code § 1524(g))

A special master is not necessary if the attorney, etc., is him or herself reasonably suspected of the criminal activity about which the documentary evidence is sought. (People v. Blasquez (1985) 165 Cal.App.3rd 408.)

However, this does not preclude an attorney, etc., from obtaining an order from the court sealing the seized files pending an in camera determination of the applicability of any privilege. (People v. Superior Court* [Bauman & Rose] (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 1757.)

The search of a Deputy District Attorney's (DDA) home, when the DDA was the target of the criminal investigation, did not require a special master, while the search of the DDA's office, where there might be confidential material belonging to the District Attorney (as opposed to the DDA himself) did require the services of a special master. (People ex rel. Lockyer v. Superior Court (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 387.)

The Special Master: A "special master" must first be appointed by the court, who must then accompany the officers serving the warrant. A "special master" is an attorney licensed to practice law, in good standing, in California, to be selected from a list of qualified attorneys maintained by the State Bar for the purpose of conducting such searches. (Pen. Code § 1524(d))

"Documentary evidence" includes, but is not limited to, writings, documents, blueprints, drawings, photographs, computer printouts, microfilms, x-rays, files, diagrams, ledgers, books, tapes, audio and video recordings, films or papers of any type or description. (Pen. Code § 1524(f))

Procedure (Pen. Code § 1524(c)-(f)):

> The special master must inform the person in possession of the specific items being sought and allow the party in possession of the documents to voluntarily provide the items requested.
>
> If, in the judgment of the special master, the party fails to provide the items requested, the special master shall conduct the search for the items in the areas designated in the search warrant.
>
> Potentially privileged documents must be sealed.
>
> The documents sealed by the special master cannot be:
>
> > Unsealed and/or turned over to the investigating agency (or to the prosecutor) without notice being given to the person from whom they were seized (i.e., the attorney, physician, psychotherapist, or clergyman); nor
> >
> > Returned to the person from whom they were seized without notice to the person executing the warrant (or, alternatively, to the investigating agency or the prosecutor). (Gordon v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal.App.4th 1546.)

The Court Hearing (Pen. Code § 1524(c)(2)): If the party indicates that the items seized should not be disclosed (e.g., due to "privilege" issues), the special master must seal them and deliver them to the court for a hearing on the issue.

> The court will review the material in camera if a privilege (e.g., attorney-client, or work product, etc., privilege) is claimed. (PSC Geothermal Services Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 25 Cal.App.4th 1697, 1711-1712; Geilim v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal.App.3rd 166, 171.)
>
> The Court has a duty to hear and determine the applicability of a claim of privilege, but lacks the statutory or inherent power to require the parties to bear the cost of a special master's services. (People v. Superior Court* [Laff] (2001) 25 Cal.4th 703.)
>
> A special master may not release even an inventory of the items seized to a police officer after a privilege is invoked. (Magill v. Superior Court (2001) 86 Cal.App.4th 61.)

The hearing will resolve issues related to:

- Suppression issues pursuant to Pen. Code § 1538.5 (i.e., a "motion to suppress evidence.")

- Claims of "privilege," pursuant to E.C. §§ 900 et seq.

The hearing must be held in Superior Court within three (3) days of the service of the warrant, or as soon as possible if three days is impracticable.

> Although the statute is silent on the issue, it has been held that the special master should determine whether a hearing is required and give notice to the parties concerning when and where such hearing is to be held. (Gordon v. Superior Court, (1997) 55 Cal.App.4th 1546.)

Other Warrant Service Conditions:

Execution of the search warrant must be done during business hours if possible. (Pen. Code § 1524(c)(3))

The search warrant must be served on the person who appears to have possession or control of the documents sought. If no such person can be found, the special master is responsible for sealing and returning to the court any items that appear to be privileged. (Pen. Code § 1524(c)(3))

Police officers may accompany the special master during the search, but shall not participate in the search nor shall they examine any of the items being seized except upon agreement of the party upon whom the warrant has been served. (Pen. Code § 1524(e))

*Special Masters and The Electronic Communications Privacy Act:

Special Masters may also be appointed under authority of P.C. § 1546.1(e)(1) of the Electronic Communications Privacy Act upon seeking electronic information obtained through the execution of a warrant or court order. (See "Pen. Code § 1546.1: Search Warrants and Pen Registers and Trap and Trace Devices," above.)

Other Warrants*:

Inspection (or Administrative) Warrants: Enforcement of some codes, such as building, fire, health, safety, health, plumbing, electrical, labor or zoning codes, require the periodic inspections of some buildings. (See Dawson v. City of Seattle (9th Cir. 2006) 435 F.3rd 1054.)

A Regulatory Scheme: California has enacted a regulatory scheme for what are referred to as "inspection warrants," for obtaining search warrants for regulatory inspections "required or authorized by state or local or regulation relating to building, fire (etc.)," code compliance. (Code of Civil Proc. §§ 1822.50 et seq.)

Code of Civ. Pro. §§ 1822.50*: "An inspection warrant is an order, in writing, in the name of the people, signed by a judge of a court of record, directed to a state or local official, commanding him to conduct any inspection required or authorized by state or local law or regulation relating to building, fire, safety, plumbing, electrical, health, labor, or zoning."

Code of Civ. Pro. § 1822.51*: Consent to search is to be requested first.

If Consent is Refused: "An inspection warrant shall be issued upon cause, unless some other provision of state or federal law makes another standard applicable. An inspection warrant shall be supported by an affidavit, particularly describing the place, dwelling, structure, premises, or vehicle to be inspected and the purpose for which the inspection is made. In addition, the affidavit shall contain either a statement that consent to inspect has been sought and refused or facts or circumstances reasonably justifying the failure to seek such consent."

Necessary Showing:

If consent is refused, then a warrant is needed, but may be obtained on less than the traditional probable cause. (See Salwasser Manufacturing Co. v. Occupational Safety & Heath Appeals Board (1989) 214 Cal.App.3rd 625.)

A warrant may be obtained upon a showing that the area is blighted, non-discriminatory searches are conducted on a regular basis, and/or areas are picked at random for inspection.

"Cause" needed to obtain a warrant, when consent is refused, is "deemed to exist if either reasonable legislative or administrative standards for conducting a routine or area inspection are satisfied with respect to the particular place, dwelling, structure, premises, or vehicle, or there is reason to believe that a condition of nonconformity exists with respect to the particular place, dwelling, structure, premises, or vehicle." (CCP § 1822.52)

Examples:

Residences:

A city ordinance gave city building inspectors the right to enter any building at reasonable times in furtherance of their code enforcement duties. The occupant (appellant) of the ground-floor quarters which he leased for residential use of which allegedly violated the apartment building's occupancy permit, denied entrance to building inspectors on three separate occasions, each time demanding that they first obtain a warrant. He was prosecuted under another ordinance that made it a crime to refuse to comply with the inspectors' requests. He claimed the warrantless search requested by the building inspectors violated his Fourth Amendment rights. The U.S. Supreme Court agreed, overruling its prior decision in Frank v. Maryland (1959) 359 U.S. 360 [79 S.Ct. 804; 3 L.Ed.2nd 877], to the extent that it permitted warrantless administrative searches. The Court held that the administrative search was not peripheral to the occupant's Fourth Amendment interests because a criminal prosecution could and did result from his refusal to submit. The Court held that probable cause would still be required for issuance of a warrant for an administrative search, but the standard was lower than for issuance of a warrant in criminal cases. The standard would be met by a reasonableness showing, in light of the reasonable goals of code enforcement. (Camara v. Municipal Court of the City and County of San Francisco (1967) 387 U.S. 523 [87 S.Ct. 1727; 18 L.Ed.2nd 930].)

Where law enforcement officers were asked to assist in the execution of an administrative warrant authorizing the inspection of a private residence for city code violations, they violated the Fourth Amendment because their primary purpose in executing the warrant was to gather evidence in support of a criminal investigation, and, accordingly, defendant was entitled to suppression of evidence obtained during the search. Although law enforcement had initiated a criminal investigation of defendant before the administrative search, it had concluded that it did not have probable cause to arrest defendant or obtain a search warrant for his home, but it knew that a city was going to obtain an inspection warrant for defendant's home and to request assistance at the inspection, and while accompanying the city on its inspection, law enforcement officers photographed incriminating evidence. (United States v. Grey (9th Cir. 2020) 959 F.3rd 1166.)

Commercial Areas:

Appellant appealed his conviction for violating Seattle, Washington Fire Code § 8.01.050, arising from his refusing to permit a fire inspector to conduct a warrantless search of appellant's locked commercial warehouse. On certiorari, the U.S. Supreme Court reversed. The Court ruled that appellant's prosecution for refusing to permit the warrantless search of his commercial premises was barred by the Fourth Amendment. Specifically, the Court ruled that administrative entry, without consent, upon the portions of commercial premises which were not open to the public could only be compelled through prosecution or physical force within the framework of a warrant procedure. The Court held that the basic component of a reasonable search under the Fourth Amendment, that it not be enforced without a suitable warrant procedure, was applicable to business as well as to residential premises. Consequently, appellant was improperly prosecuted for exercising his constitutional right to insist that a warrant be obtained authorizing entry upon his locked warehouse. (See v. City of Seattle (1967) 387 U.S. 541 [87 S.Ct. 1737; 18 L.Ed.2nd 943].)

The Court concluded that sufficient probable cause exists "if reasonable legislative or administrative standards for conducting an area inspection are satisfied with respect to a particular dwelling," employing a "flexible standard of reasonableness." (Id., at pp. 545, 553.)

Code of Civ. Pro. § 1822.53*: Examination of Witnesses: "Before issuing an inspection warrant, the judge may examine on oath the applicant and any other witness, and shall satisfy himself of the existence of grounds for granting such application."

Code of Civ. Pro. § 1822.54*: Issuance and Contents of Warrant: "If the judge is satisfied that the proper standard for issuance of the warrant has been met, he or she shall issue the warrant particularly describing each place, dwelling, structure, premises, or vehicle to be inspected and designating on the warrant the purpose and limitations of the inspection, including the limitations required by this title."

Code of Civ. Pro. § 1822.55*: Duration, Extension or Renewal of Warrant; Execution and Return: "An inspection warrant shall be effective for the time specified therein, but not for a period of more than 14 days, unless extended or renewed by the judge who signed and issued the original warrant, upon satisfying himself that such extension or renewal is in the public interest. Such inspection warrant must be executed and returned to the judge by whom it was issued within the time specified in the warrant or within the extended or renewed time. After the expiration of such time, the warrant, unless executed, is void."

Code of Civ. Pro. § 1822.56*: Manner of Inspection; Notice: "An inspection pursuant to this warrant may not be made between 6:00 p.m. of any day and 8:00 a.m. of the succeeding day, nor in the absence of an owner or occupant of the particular place, dwelling, structure, premises, or vehicle unless specifically authorized by the judge upon a showing that such authority is reasonably necessary to effectuate the purpose of the regulation being enforced. An inspection pursuant to a warrant shall not be made by means of forcible entry, except that the judge may expressly authorize a forcible entry where facts are shown sufficient to create a reasonable suspicion of a violation of a state or local law or regulation relating to building, fire, safety, plumbing, electrical, health, labor, or zoning, which, if such violation existed, would be an immediate threat to health or safety, or where facts are shown establishing that reasonable attempts to serve a previous warrant have been unsuccessful. Where prior consent has been sought and refused, notice that a warrant has been issued must be given at least 24 hours before the warrant is executed, unless the judge finds that immediate execution is reasonably necessary in the circumstances shown."

> Reasonable force may be used to insure everyone's safety, including the temporary detention of a resident's occupants if necessary under the circumstances. (Dawson v. City of Seattle (9th Cir. 2006) 435 F.3rd 1054, 1065-1070.)

Code of Civ. Pro. § 1822.57: Punishment: "Any person who willfully refuses to permit an inspection lawfully authorized by warrant issued pursuant to this title is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Code of Civ. Pro. § 1822.58: Inspections by Personnel of Fish and Game Department: "A warrant may be issued under the requirements of this title to authorize personnel of the Department of Fish and Game to conduct inspections of locations where fish, amphibia, or aquatic plants are held or stored under (Fish & Game Code §§ 15000 et seq. (Div. 12).)."

Code of Civ. Pro. § 1822.59: Inspections for Purpose of Animal or Plant Pest or Disease Eradication:

> (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of Section 1822.54, for purposes of an animal or plant pest or disease eradication effort pursuant to (Food & Agri. Code §§ 5001 et seq. (Div. 4)) or (Food & Agri. Code §§ 9101 et seq. (Div. 5)), the judge may issue a warrant under the requirements of this title describing a specified geographic area to be inspected by authorized personnel of the Department of Food and Agriculture.
>
> (b) A warrant issued pursuant to this section may only authorize the inspection of the exterior of places, dwellings, structures, premises or vehicles, and only in areas urban in character. The warrant shall state the geographical area which it covers and the purpose of and limitations on the inspection.
>
> (c) A warrant may be issued pursuant to this section whether or not the property owners in the area have refused to consent to the inspection. A peace officer may use reasonable force to enter a property to be inspected if so authorized by the warrant.

Code of Civ. Pro. § 1822.60: Warrant for DOJ Inspections: "A warrant may be issued under the requirements of this title to authorize personnel of the Department of Justice to conduct inspections as provided in (B&P Code § 19827(a))."

B&P Code § 19827(a) deals with DOJ's powers with respect to investigations.

Hotels and Motels: Hotels and motels do not qualify as closely regulated businesses, although an administrative subpoena or warrant is all that is necessary for the inspection of the business' guest registry records. (City of Los Angeles v. Patel (2015) 576 U.S. 409, 424-428 [135 S.Ct. 2443; 192 L.Ed.2nd 435].)

Entry to Make Arrests: Use of an administrative, or "inspection" warrant, issued by a court for the purpose of regulating building, fire, safety, plumbing, electrical, health, labor or zoning codes, does not justify an entry by police to make an arrest given the lesser proof standards needed to obtain an administrative warrant. If an entry is effected for the purpose of arresting the occupant, an arrest warrant must first be obtained. (Alexander v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 1994) 29 F.3rd 1355.)

Rendition (or Extradition):

Article IV, § 2, Clause 2 of the United States Constitution states that: "A person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another state, shall on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, be delivered up to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime."

Note: The term "rendition," literally translated as "to surrender," refers to what is more commonly known as "extradition."

The Implementing Statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3182, provides in substance that, on a proper demand of the executive of one state upon the executive of another, it is the duty of the latter to have the fugitive arrested and delivered to the agent of the demanding state.

The federal statute and constitutional provisions provide the basis for the interstate extradition of fugitives.

The "asylum" state has a duty to release to the "demanding" state one who has allegedly violated the laws of the later. It is for the demanding state alone, and not the asylum state, to determine the offending party's innocence or guilt. (In re Golden (1977) 65 Cal.App.3rd 789, 796.)

Upon receipt of the defendant in the "demanding state," his return to the "asylum state" prior to a determination of guilt will result in dismissal of the charges in the demanding state, under the terms of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers. (Alabama v Bozeman (2001) 533 U.S. 146 [121 S.Ct. 2079; 150 L.Ed.2nd 188].)

International extraditions are the subject of treaties between the United States and other individual countries.

E.g.: The district court properly denied petitioner's habeas petition challenging an order certifying him as extraditable to the Czech Republic so he could serve a sentence for a Czech conviction for attempted extortion. 18 U.S.C.S. § 3196 did not amend or conflict with the Treaty Concerning the Mutual Extradition of Fugitive Criminals, July 2, 1925, U.S.-Czech., 44 Stat. 2367 (U.S.T. Mar. 29, 1926). Petitioner's Czech conviction for attempted extortion qualified as an extraditable offense as it was an extraditable offense under the Treaty, petitioner's alleged conduct would be punishable in the United States as attempted extortion under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1951, and attempted extortion in the United States and Czech Republic were substantially analogous and there was dual criminality in petitioner's case. (United States v. Knotek (9th Cir. 2019) 925 F.3rd 1118.)

Extradition by the States: All fifty states have supplemented the federal provisions through the adoption of the "Uniform Criminal Extradition Act." California adopted the Act in 1937. (See P.C. §§ 1548 et seq.)

Pen. Code § 1548.1; the Governor's Duty: "Subject to the provisions of this chapter, the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of the United States, it is the duty of the Governor of this State to have arrested and delivered up to the executive authority of any other State any person charged in that State with treason, felony, or other crime, who has fled from justice and is found in this State."

Under the Uniform Act for Out-of-State Probationer or Parolee Supervision (P.C. §§ 11175 et seq.), a paroled prisoner or probationer may be arrested and brought back from another state, on revocation of his parole or probation, without invoking the more difficult extradition procedure.

If the defendant has a case pending in this state, he may be held here until he is tried and discharged or convicted and has served his sentence. (P.C. § 1551.1).

Procedure:

Pen. Code § 1548.2: The Demand: The demand must be in writing and accompanied by:

A copy, certified as authentic by the executive, of an indictment, information, or affidavit before a magistrate in the demanding state, charging the commission of a crime under the laws of that state; and

A copy of any warrant issued thereon; or

A copy of a judgment of conviction or sentence imposed, with a statement that the person claimed has escaped or violated his bail, probation or parole.

Pen. Code § 1548.3: Investigating the Demand: The governor of the asylum state may then call upon the Attorney General or any District Attorney to Investigate the Demand and report on whether the person should be surrendered.

It is not supposed to be an issue in the asylum state whether or not the defendant is guilty. The only issue to be resolved by the asylum state is whether the defendant in custody is the same person demanded by the other state. (Pen. Code §§ 1550.1. 1553.2)

However, despite the fact that the Uniform Act is worded in mandatory terms, it has been held that while a court may force the governor to make a decision, courts do not have the power to make a governor make a specific decision; i.e., the governor cannot be forced to honor another state's request for extradition. (South Dakota v. Brown (1978) 20 Cal.3rd 765.)

A 30-year delay in extraditing a California resident, nor the defendant's ill health, do not justify an exception to the extradition requirements. (In re Walton (2002) 99 Cal.App.4th 934.)

A probationer who flees California may be ordered to pay the costs of his extradition back to California.

(People v. Washington (2002) 100 Cal.App.4th 590.)

Pen. Code §§ 1547 et seq.: The Governor's Warrant: When the decision is made to surrender the defendant, a "Governor's Warrant of Extradition" is issued which authorizes the arrest and delivery of an accused to the agent of the demanding state.

Pen. Code § 1554.2: This is the relevant statute for requesting the return to California of a fugitive found/detained in other state. The statute specifically states that the person must be "charged with a crime in this state" (subd. (a)), and that the application must be "accompanied by . . . the verified complaint made to the magistrate stating the offense with which the accused is charged" (subd. (c)).

Note: Based upon the wording of this statute, it is arguable that a fugitive must be actually charged by a complaint, information, or indictment, before extradition can proceed. The state cannot issue a Requisition to another state demanding the return of a fugitive from that state until charges are actually filed. As a result, a Ramey warrant (i.e., an affidavit made for the issuance of that warrant; see "Ramey Warrant," under "Arrests" (Chapter 5), above.) is not enough by itself for the Governor to order the extradition of a fugitive, in that the person is not charged with a crime until a charging document is filed with the court.

Waiver of Extradition; Pen. Code § 1555.2: A person may be required to give a prior waiver of extradition as a condition of his or her release from custody, or as a part of a plea bargain, on the original charge which later becomes the subject of the extradition from the asylum state. (Overruling a prior court decision to the contrary, In re Klock (1982) 133 Cal.App.3rd 726.)

Circumventing an Extradition Treaty: Prosecution of a defendant is not precluded merely because a defendant is abducted abroad for the purpose of prosecution, even if done in violation of an extradition treaty, such as when U.S. law enforcement agents forcibly abduct a foreign national in Mexico and bring him to the United States for prosecution. (United States v. Alvarez-Machain (1992) 504 U.S. 655 [112 S.Ct. 2188; 119 L.Ed.2nd 441]; see also Ker v. Illinois (1886) 119 U.S. 436 [7 S.Ct. 225; 30 L.Ed. 421]; People v. Salcido (2008) 44 Cal.4th 93, 119-126.)

Unlawful Flight to Avoid Prosecution ("UFAP"): 18 U.S.C. § 1073; The Fugitive Felon Act:

Scope: This federal statute provides criminal penalties for unlawful flight to avoid prosecution, confinement, giving of testimony, or to avoid service of process. ($5,000 fine and/or 5 years in prison.)

The primary purpose of the statute is to give the federal government the jurisdiction to assist in the location and apprehension of fugitives from state justice, through the use of a "UFAP Warrant."

Procedure:

- A federal complaint for unlawful flight to avoid prosecution is appropriate where there is probable cause to believe that the fugitive has fled and that his flight was for the purpose of avoiding prosecution and that he has moved or traveled in interstate or foreign commerce.

  The mere absence from the state without evidence of an intent to avoid prosecution is not sufficient. (In re King (1970) 3 Cal.3rd 226, 236, fn. 8.)

- Although not legally required, state prosecution should have been commenced by complaint, warrant, indictment, or information, prior to issuance of the federal complaint.

  However, it is not necessary that the flight itself occur prior to the initiation of the prosecution. (Lupino v. United States (8th Cir. 1959) 268 F.2nd 799.)

- Certified copies of the charging documents should be delivered to the Unites States Attorney's Office.

UFAP specifically applies as well to "parental kidnappings" and interstate or international flight to avoid prosecution for that crime.

The Department of Justice has established guidelines for issuing warrants in these cases which require independent and credible information that the kidnapped child is in a condition of abuse or neglect.

UFAP also covers flight for the purpose of avoiding custody or confinement.

Applies to inmates of jails and prisons as well as those on conditional liberty; i.e., probation or parole.

Evidence should be available indicating that a probationer or parolee knew or believed that his conditional liberty was about to be revoked or was at least in jeopardy.

A complaint may also be authorized where a witness has fled the state to avoid giving testimony in a criminal proceeding which involves a felony.

The criminal proceedings must actually have been initiated in state court. (Durbin v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1954) 221 F.2nd 520.)

There should be substantial evidence to indicate that the intent was to flee in order to avoid the giving of testimony.

UFAP prohibits interstate flight "to avoid service of, or contempt proceedings for alleged disobedience of, lawful process, requiring attendance and the giving of testimony or the production of documentary evidence before an agency of a state empowered by the law of such state to conduct investigations of alleged criminal activities."

UFAP does not supersede, nor is it intended to provide an alternative for, state extradition proceedings.

Note: The federal complaint charging unlawful flight will generally be dismissed once a fugitive has been apprehended and turned over to state authorities to await interstate extradition.

Wiretaps and Eavesdropping:

Wiretaps vs. Right to Privacy: Both the federal Congress and California's Legislature, expressing concern over the potential for violating privacy rights (see Alderman v. United States (1969) 394 U.S. 165 [89 S.Ct. 961; 22 L.Ed.2nd 176].), have enacted statutes controlling the use of wiretaps by law enforcement.

Federal rules are contained, for the most part, in the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (Title III, 18 U.S.C. §§ 2510 et seq.). However, in that California's state statutes are more restrictive (see People v. Jones (1973) 30 Cal.App.3rd 852.), it is generally accepted that if a police officer acts in compliance with Pen. Code §§ 629.50 et seq., he or she will also be in compliance with the federal requirements.

> Alderman v. United States, supra: The Fourth Amendment rights of homeowners are implicated by the use of a surreptitiously planted listening device to monitor third-party conversations that occurred within their home.
>
> The federal Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 authorizes the states to enact their own wiretap laws only if the provisions of those laws are at least as restrictive as the federal requirements for a wiretap set out in Title III. (People v. Jackson (2005) 129 Cal.App.4th 129, 146-147; People v. Otto (1992) 2 Cal.4th 1088, 1098.)
>
> The federal District Court denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained from a series of surveillance orders that authorized the interception of communications over cellular phones pursuant to the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, associated with defendant and his co-conspirators. Defendant claimed that the surveillance orders authorized the government to transform the cellular phones into roving electronic bugs by using sophisticated eavesdropping technology. The Ninth Circuit disagreed, sustaining the district court's ruling, noting that if the government seeks authorization for the use of new technology to convert cellular phones into roving bugs, it must specifically request that authority. In this case, however, the surveillance orders were intended only to authorize standard interception techniques and the government only utilized standard interception techniques. (United States v. Oliva (9th Cir. 2012) 705 F.3rd 390, 395-401.)
>
> In a case involving federal wiretap statutes, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal vacated the district court's judgment dismissing Lyudmyla Pyankovska's claims against John Jones as barred under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and entering default judgment against Sean Abid in a wiretap case. Pyankovska had alleged federal and wiretap violations and state common law claims against Abid, her ex-husband, and Jones, his attorney. She alleged that during a child custody proceeding in Nevada state court, Abid had secretly recorded conversations between her and their child, and that Jones had filed selectively edited transcripts of the illegally recorded conversations on the state court's public docket. The district court concluded that Jones's alleged conduct involved First Amendment petitioning activity, which is protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The district court entered default judgment against Abid on the grounds that his responses to various discovery requests were knowingly inaccurate and that he had proceeded in bad faith. The district court awarded Pyankovska $10,000 in statutory damages under the Federal Wiretap Act, but it did not award punitive damages or litigation costs, nor did it discuss or award other categories of damages ostensibly available on her Nevada common-law claims. On appeal, the Court held that Jones violated the Federal Wiretap Act, and it agreed with the district court that the vicarious-consent doctrine did not apply and that Jones's conduct was not protected under Bartnicki v. Vopper (2001) 532 U.S. 514 [121 S.Ct. 1753; 149 L.Ed.2nd 787, which carved out a narrow First Amendment exception to the Federal Wiretap Act for matters of public importance. The Court further held, however, that Jones's conduct was not protected under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The Court concluded that Pyankovska's lawsuit did not impose a burden on petitioning rights because Abid prevailed in the state court custody case, and Jones had no petitioning "right" to use the transcripts. The Court also held that filing illegally obtained evidence on a public court docket is conduct not immunized under Noerr-Pennington, and the Federal Wiretap Act unambiguously applied to Jone"s conduct. Lastly, the Court held that the district court incorrectly computed statutory damages under the Federal Wiretap Act because it did not consider whether Abid violated the statute for more than 100 days, which would render the amount of damages greater than $10,000. In addition, the district court failed to adequately address other categories of damages to which Pyankovska might be entitled, including punitive damages, attorney's fees, and damages on Nevada common-law claims. (Pyankovska v. Abid (9th Cir. 2023) 65 F.4th 1067.)

> Note: The Noerr-Pennington doctrine, derived from two Supreme Court cases, requires courts to construe ambiguous statutes to avoid burdening petitioning activity protected by the First Amendment. (See United States v. Koziol (9th Cir. 2021) 993 F.3rd 1160, 1171.)

See also the Federal Intelligence Surveillance Act (i.e., "FISA"), codified at 50 U.S.C. § 1810:

> In an action alleging covert surveillance of Muslims, alleged to be based solely on their religious identity, plaintiffs' complaint alleged a FISA claim against FBI agents for recordings made by devices planted by FBI agents in a house and office. As to all other categories of surveillance, the agent defendants either did not violate FISA, were entitled to qualified immunity on the FISA claim because plaintiffs' reasonable expectation of privacy was not clearly established, or were not plausibly alleged in the complaint to have committed any FISA violation that may have occurred. Reversing in part, and affirming in part, the Ninth Circuit held that the district court erred in determining sua sponte that Fourth Amendment and FISA claims warranted dismissal under the state secrets privilege because the Government expressly did not request dismissal of the claims based on the state secrets privilege. (Fazaga v. Federal Bureau of Investigation (9th Cir. 2020) 965 F.3rd 1015.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the convictions of four members of the Somali diaspora (i.e., Somalis who were born in Greater Somalia and reside in areas of the world that they were not born in.) for sending, or conspiring to send, $10,900 to Somalia to support a foreign terrorist organization, but questioned the U.S. government's authority to collect bulk data about its citizens' activities under the auspices of a foreign intelligence investigation, as well as the rights of criminal defendants when the prosecution uses information derived from foreign intelligence surveillance. The Court held that the government may have violated the Fourth Amendment when it collected the telephony metadata of millions of Americans, including at least one of the defendants, pursuant to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA), but that suppression is not warranted on the facts of this case. Having carefully reviewed the classified FISA applications and all related classified information, the panel was convinced that under established Fourth Amendment standards, the metadata collection, even if unconstitutional, did not taint the evidence introduced by the government at trial, holding that to the extent the public statements of government officials created a contrary impression, that impression is inconsistent with the contents of the classified record. The Court rejected the government's argument that the defendants lacked standing to pursue their statutory challenge to the (subsequently discontinued) metadata collection program. On the merits, the Court held that the metadata collection exceeded the scope of Congress's authorization in 50 U.S.C. § 1861, which required the government to make a showing of relevance to a particular authorized investigation before collecting the records, and that the program therefore violated that section of FISA. The Court held that suppression is not clearly contemplated by section 1861, and there is no statutory basis for suppressing the metadata itself. The Court's review of the classified record confirmed that the metadata did not and was not necessary to support the requisite probable cause showing for the FISA Subchapter I warrant application in this case, and that even if it were to apply a "fruit of the poisonous tree" analysis, it would conclude that evidence from the government's wiretap of defendant's phone was not the fruit of the unlawful metadata collection. Lastly, The Court confirmed that the Fourth Amendment requires notice to a criminal defendant when the prosecution intends to enter into evidence or otherwise use or disclose information obtained or derived from the surveillance of that defendant conducted pursuant to the government's foreign intelligence authorities. The Court did not decide whether the government failed to prove any required notice in this case because the lack of such notice did not prejudice the defendants. (United States v. Moalin (9th Cir. 2020) 973 F.3rd 977.)

Pen. Code § 630: Statement of Legislative Purpose: Recognizing the advances in science and technology that have led to the development of new devices and techniques for the purpose of eavesdropping upon private communications and the resulting invasion of privacy involved, the Legislature enacted the following statutes for the purpose of protecting the right of privacy of the people of this state.

> It is not the intent of the Legislature, however, to place greater restraints on the use of listening devices and techniques by law enforcement agencies than existed prior to the effective date (i.e., January 2, 1968) of this Chapter. (Ibid.)
>
> This section pertaining to wiretapping and other electronic devices is a general provision declaring a broad legislative purpose; P.C. § 633 is the specific section dealing with the classes exempted from the two preceding sections prohibiting wiretapping and it is only the officers named in the latter section who are exempt from the sanctions imposed by §§ 631 and 632. (55 Op.Cal.Atty.Gen. 151 (1972))

Pen. Code § 631*: Unauthorized Wiretaps:

> (a) Any person who, by means of any machine, instrument, or contrivance, or in any other manner, intentionally taps, or makes any unauthorized connection, whether physically, electrically, acoustically, inductively, or otherwise, with any telegraph or telephone wire, line, cable, or instrument, including the wire, line, cable, or instrument of any internal telephonic communication system, or who willfully and without the consent of all parties to the communication, or in any unauthorized manner, reads, or attempts to read, or to learn the contents or meaning of any message, report, or communication while the same is in transit or passing over any wire, line, or cable, or is being sent from, or received at any place within this state; or who uses, or attempts to use, in any manner, or for any purpose, or to communicate in any way, any information so obtained, or who aids, agrees with, employs, or conspires with any person or persons to unlawfully do, or permit, or cause to be done any of the acts or things mentioned above in this section, is punishable by a fine not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500), or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by imprisonment pursuant to subdivision (h) of Section 1170, or by both a fine and imprisonment in the county jail or pursuant to subdivision (h) of Section 1170. If the person has previously been convicted of a violation of this section or Section 632, 632.5, 632.6, 632.7, or 636, the offense is punishable by a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars ($10,000), or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or by imprisonment pursuant to subdivision (h) of Section 1170, or by both that fine and imprisonment.

Case Law: Violation of wiretapping statutes may also be a Fourth Amendment violation if the illegal wiretap also violates a person's legitimate expectation of privacy. (United States v. Shrylock (9th Cir. 2003) 342 F.3rd 948, 978.)

Note, however, that a similar statute in the state of Oregon, prohibiting the recording of a conversation unless all parties to that conversation know that they're being recorded, has been held by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal as unconstitutional, and in violation of the First Amendment. (See Project Veritas v. Schmidt (9th Cir. 2023) 72 F.4th 1043, holding that Or. Rev. Stat. § 165.540(1)(c), which prohibited making audio and visual recordings unless all participants in the conversation were informed of the recording, violated the First Amendment, as it was a content-based restriction in that it restricted some subject matters and not others. The Court further held that it a failed strict scrutiny review because it was not narrowly tailored to achieving a compelling governmental interest in protecting conversational privacy with respect to each activity within the proscription's scope and there were other ways for Oregon to achieve its interests, such as invasion of privacy and defamation actions. Because the statute did not leave open ample alternative channels for communication, the Court held that it was not a valid "time, place, or manner restriction," so it could not be "saved" through severability by striking its exceptions.

(b) This section shall not apply to any of the following:

(1) Any public utility, or telephone company, engaged in the business of providing communications services and facilities, or to the officers, employees or agents thereof, where the acts otherwise prohibited herein are for the purpose of construction, maintenance, conduct or operation of the services and facilities of the public utility or telephone company.

(2) The use of any instrument, equipment, facility, or service furnished and used pursuant to the tariffs of a public utility.

(3) Any telephonic communication system used for communication exclusively within a state, county, city and county, or city correctional facility.

Case law: Prison Visitors: A phone used during a physical visitation by a prisoner and his or her visitor does not meet the requirements of a "wire communication," not using a line in interstate or foreign commerce. It is therefore not subject to the wiretap restrictions of P.C. § 631. (People v. Santos (1972) 26 Cal.App.3rd 397, 402.)

(c) For purposes of this section, "telephone company" is defined in paragraph (3) of subdivision (c) of Section 638.

(d) Except as proof in an action or prosecution for violation of this section, no evidence obtained in violation of this section shall be admissible in any judicial, administrative, legislative, or other proceeding.

Case Law:

A "Controlled Telephone Call" made by a victim or witness to a suspect for the purpose of obtaining incriminating statements from the suspect, at law enforcement's request (See P.C. §§ 632, 633), is not a privacy violation or an illegal Fourth Amendment search. (See United States v. White (1971) 401 U.S. 745 [91 S.Ct. 1122; 28 L.Ed.2nd 453].)

See also People v. Nakai (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 499, 517-518: Incriminating online chat with a minor is not a confidential communication per P.C. § 632 that requires suppression.

Federal law also has its own version of the wiretap statutes; 18 U.S.C. §§ 2510-2523. (See Bliss v. Corecivic, Inc. (9th Cir. 2020) 978 F.3rd 1144; noting that each separate illegal interception is a violation, and that the two-year statute of limitations begins when the target of the violation first had a reasonable opportunity to discover that her phone calls were being tapped.)

"Title III of the federal Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (Title III) (18 U.S.C. §§ 2510–2520) 'provides a "comprehensive scheme for the regulation of wiretapping and electronic surveillance."' [Citation.] As we have previously observed, Title III 'establishes minimum standards for the admissibility of evidence procured through electronic surveillance; state law cannot be less protective of privacy than the federal Act.' (People v. Leon (2007) 40 Cal.4th 376, 384 . . . .); see Villa v. Maricopa County (9th Cir. 2017) 865 F.3d 1224, 1230 . . .) ["States may choose to enact wiretapping statutes imposing more stringent requirements, or … choose to forego state-authorized wiretapping altogether"].)" (People v. Gonzalez (2021) 12 Cal.5th 367, 392.)

Note: Similar restrictions are contained in:

Pen. Code § 632: Electronic eavesdropping, in general.

Pen. Code § 632.5: Cellular radio telephone communications.

Pen. Code § 632.6: Cordless telephone communications.

Pen. Code § 632.7: Recording communications between cellular radio telephones and cordless telephones, or between these and a landline telephone.

Pen. Code § 632*: *Eavesdropping or Recording Confidential Communications:

Subd. (a): Every person who, intentionally and without the consent of all parties to a confidential communication, by means of any electronic amplifying or recording device, eavesdrops upon or records the confidential communication, whether the communication is carried on among the parties in the presence of one another or by means of a telegraph, telephone, or other device, except a radio, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500), or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or in the state prison, or by both that fine and imprisonment. If the person has previously been convicted of a violation of this section or Section 631, 632.5, 632.6, 632.7, or 636, the person shall be punished by a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars ($10,000), by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or in the state prison, or by both that fine and imprisonment.

> "The text of Penal Code section 632 plainly requires proof of 'intentional conduct' to establish a statutory violation and to invoke the evidentiary sanction set forth in subdivision (d). (Marich (v. MGM/UA Telecommunications, Inc. (2003)) 113 Cal.App.4th (415), at p. 421.) Under the statute, 'the recording of a confidential conversation is intentional if the person using the recording equipment does so with the purpose or desire of recording a confidential conversation, or with the knowledge to a substantial certainty that his use of the equipment will result in the recordation of a confidential conversation.'" (Lozano v. City of Los Angeles (2022) 73 Cal.App.5th 711, 727; quoting People v. Superior Court (Smith) (1969) 70 Cal.2nd 123, 134.)
>
> > The Court in Lozano (at p. 728) further defines the term "intentional," quoting the California Supreme Court: "This court held that 'intentionally' in [the invasion of privacy] statute required an intent to bring about the proscribed result rather than an intent merely to do an act which unintentionally brought about that result. Thus, the [Smith] court concluded that the Penal Code section required an intent to record a confidential communication, rather than simply an intent to turn on a recording apparatus which happened to record a confidential communication." (Italics in original; quoting Estate of Kramme (1978) 20 Cal.3rd 567, 572, fn. 5; and citing People v. Superior Court* (Smith) (1969) 70 Cal.2nd 123.)

In a civil suit alleging a violation of Pen. Code §§ 632(a) and 632.7(a), the plaintiff must prove that the recording of confidential telephone conversations was done intentionally. (Rojas v. HSBC Card Services, Inc. (2018) 20 Cal.App.5th 427; holding that the intentional recording of confidential communications may be proved circumstantially, noting that there was nothing inadvertent or momentary about the defendant company purposely recording 317 telephone calls. Under such circumstances, defendant did not meet its burden of establishing as a matter of law that it did not have knowledge to a substantial certainty that its use of recording equipment would result in the recordation of a confidential conversation of an employee and a third party such as plaintiff.

Claims under the California Invasion of Privacy Act, Pen. Code §§ 630 et seq., alleging that a company had recorded phone conversations between its sales representatives and prospective clients (although recording the sales rep only) without the knowledge or consent of the prospective client, raised triable issues of fact because the prohibition in Pen. Code §§ 632, 632.7, against recording communications without the consent of all parties applied to one-way recordings, and thus the company's undisputed evidence that it recorded only its representatives' voices and not the prospective client's voice did not entitle the company to summary adjudication. Also, because the company's statement that it used "Voice over Internet Protocol" (i.e., "VoIP") technology did not establish what type of phone or device VoIP was, further factual development was necessary before a ruling could be made as to whether § 632.7 applied to VoIP. (Gruber v. Yelp Inc. (2020) 55 Cal.App.5th 591, 605-613.)

Note: Unlike Pen. Code § 632, § 632.7 does not require the communication to have been "confidential." (Id., at p. 606.)

Subd. (b): The term "person" includes an individual, business association, partnership, corporation, limited liability company, or other legal entity, and an individual acting or purporting to act for or on behalf of any government or subdivision thereof, whether federal, state, or local, but excludes an individual known by all parties to a confidential communication to be overhearing or recording the communication.

Subd. (c): The term "confidential communication" includes any communication carried on in circumstances as may reasonably indicate that any party to the communication desires it to be confined to the parties thereto, but excludes a communication made in a public gathering or in any legislative, judicial, executive or administrative proceeding open to the public, or in any other circumstance in which the parties to the communication may reasonably expect that the communication may be overheard or recorded.

General Rules:

"[U]nder section 632 'confidentiality' appears to require nothing more than the existence of a reasonable expectation by one of the parties that no one is 'listening in' or overhearing the conversation. (Citation) Thus, the court concluded, 'a conversation is confidential under section 632 if a party to that conversation has an objectively reasonable expectation that the conversation is not being overheard or recorded.'" *(Flanagan v. Flanagan (2002) 27 Cal.4th 766, 772-773, 776-777.)

"The term 'confidential communication' has been interpreted to include communication by conduct in addition to oral or written dialogue. (See People v. Drennan (2000) 84 Cal.App.4th 1349, 1353, 1356 . . . ['confidential communication' under § 632 addresses the recording of sound-based or symbol-based communications, not still, timed photographs without accompanying sound]; (People v.) Gibbons ((1989) . . . 215 Cal.App.3rd at p. 1209 ['confidential communication' under § 632 encompasses communication by conduct, including sexual relations].) (Footnote omitted)." (People v. Lyon (2021) 61 Cal.App.5th 237, 235-246.)

> In the omitted footnote (fn. 3, at pg. 246), it was recognized that the Drennan court disagreed with the conclusion in Gibbons that the term "confidential communication" under section 632 includes communication by conduct. The Lyon Court concluded that it need not take sides on this issue while holding that the video recordings in this case that formed the basis of the section 632 charges captured both words and real time images.
>
> "'The test of confidentiality is objective. [A party's] subjective intent is irrelevant. [Citation.] "A communication must be protected if either party reasonably expects the communication to be confined to the parties."' (Coulter v. Bank of America (1994) 28 Cal.App.4th 923, 929 . . . .) Whether a party had an objectively reasonable expectation that a communication was not being overheard or recorded is generally a question of fact based on the circumstances presented. (Hataishi v. First American Home Buyers Protection Corp. (2014) 223 Cal.App.4th 1454, 1466 . . . . However, if the undisputed material facts show no reasonable expectation of privacy, the question of whether a party's privacy has been invaded may be determined as a matter of law. (Santa Ana Police Officers Assn. v. City of Santa Ana (2017) 13 Cal.App.5th 317, 325.)" (People v. Lyon, supra, at

p. 246. See also People v. Wyrick (1978) 77 Cal.App.3rd 903.)

In People v. Drennan, supra, a school superintendent who installed a hidden video camera in a high school principal's office to determine if someone was taking or reading confidential documents was improperly convicted of violating Pen. Code § 632(a), since the photographing for a purpose and in a manner which did not reveal the content of any conversation was not an intentional act of recording a "confidential communication" as those terms are used in § 632. The taking of timed, still photographs of two or more people carrying on a confidential conversation, without accompanying sound, does not constitute the recording of a confidential communication under the statute. Nor does § 632 protect a general right of privacy from unconsented videotaping. Such a right enforced by penal sanctions is found in Pen. Code § 647(k).

A confidential communication, for purposes of Pen. Code § 632, need not fall within an evidentiary privilege. Rather, the term includes any communication carried on in circumstances as may reasonably indicate that any party to the communication desires it to be confined to the parties, but excludes a communication made in a public gathering or in any other circumstance in which the parties to the communication may reasonably expect that the communication may be overheard or recorded." (Pen. Code § 632(c).) The test of confidentiality is an objective one, but does not depend on a reasonable expectation the contents of the communication will remain confidential to the parties. Rather, a conversation is confidential for purposes of Pen Code § 632 if the circumstances objectively indicate that any participant reasonably expects and desires that the conversation itself will not be directly overheard by a nonparticipant or recorded by any person, participant or nonparticipant. While one who imparts private information risks the betrayal of his confidence by the other party, a substantial distinction has been recognized between the secondhand repetition of the contents of a conversation and its simultaneous dissemination to an unannounced second auditor, whether that auditor be a person or a mechanical device. Such secret monitoring denies the speaker an important aspect of privacy of communication; i.e., the right to control the nature and extent of the firsthand dissemination of his statements. (Shulman v. Group W Productions, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal.4th 200.)

Where it is shown that at least one of the parties to a conversation had a reasonable expectation of privacy, then it is indeed a violation of P.C. § 632 to record such a conversation. (Turnbull v. ABC (C.D. Cal. 2004) 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23351, at pg. 32.)

Not Confidential, Examples:

Communications between officers during the execution of a search warrant do not qualify as "confidential." (Santa Ana Police Officers Assn. v. City of Santa Ana (2017) 13 Cal.App.5th 317, 325-326.)

It was held that a gas station manager had no reasonable expectation of privacy in a videotaped confrontation between himself and the owners of the gas station, recorded by a hidden camera in the manager's office, and therefore the communications during that confrontation were not "confidential communications" within the meaning of section 632. (People v. Nazary (2010) 191 Cal.App.4th 727.)

While under arrest in the back seat of a patrol car (People v Newton (1974) 42 Cal.App.3rd 292), at least where defendant and his accomplice were under arrest, handcuffed and seated in the back of a police car at the time the recording was taken, and that they had been advised of the charges against them, and where the defendant testified that at the time of the conversation with his accomplice he knew it was being recorded. (People v. Chandler (1968), 262 Cal.App.2nd 350.)

While a prisoner in a jail (except when talking with one's attorney). (People v. Lopez (1963) 60 Cal.2nd 223, 248; People v. Apodaca (1967) 252 Cal.App.2nd 656, 658-659; People v. Blair (1969) 2 Cal.App.3rd 249; People v. Estrada (1979) 93 Cal.App.3rd 76.)

Where a former state correctional facility inmate sued a correctional facility officer under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleging that the officer[s screening of, and intermittent checking in on, his telephone conversations with his attorney, who was not representing the inmate in a criminal matter (but rather a civil matter), violated his Fourth Amendment rights (i.e., illegal wiretapping), the officer was entitled to qualified immunity because she did not violate any Fourth Amendment right that was clearly established at the time of the challenged conduct. The claimed Fourth Amendment right was not clearly established at the time of the underlying conduct because there was no precedent that placed the right beyond debate, particularly as there was no U.S. Supreme Court or applicable circuit court of appeals case considering this issue that placed this Fourth Amendment question beyond debate at the time of the officer's challenged conduct. (Evans v. Skolnik (9th Cir. 2021) 997 F.3rd 1060; but declining to consider the merits of the plaintiff's Fourth Amendment claims, leaving the core issue undecided.)

> Note: This case also comes under the title of "Witherow v. Baker," using the names of the primary litigants.

A tape recording of a conversation between a juvenile murder suspect and his uncle which took place in an interrogation room in a police station, and which was surreptitiously monitored and recorded, was properly admitted into evidence under the general rule that persons within a jail or police facility have no reasonable expectation of privacy as to conversations, where the parties had no recognized privileged relationship; where there was no evidence that the police made any representation of confidentiality or that the uncle was acting as a police agent. (In re Joseph A. (1973) 30 Cal.App.3rd 880.)

In a prosecution of defendant for embezzlement from his partnership, a tape recording of a conversation between defendant and some general partners was not a confidential communication made inadmissible under Pen Code § 632, and the trial court properly admitted it into evidence. Whether a communications is confidential is a preliminary question of fact, and there was substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that the recorded conversation was not a confidential communication where the nature of the meeting and the manner in which it was carried was such that the trial court could reasonably conclude that it was no different than other business meetings of the parties that were not confidential. (People v. Pedersen (1978) 86 Cal.App.3rd 987.)

Telephone bomb threats to state university police made by defendant did not constitute confidential communications within the meaning of Pen. Code § 632, prohibiting the recording of such conversations, and thus the trial court, in defendant's subsequent prosecution for possession of a destructive device or explosive in a public place, properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized as a result of tape recordings of the telephone conversations. (People v. Suite (1980), 101 Cal.App.3rd 680.)

In a personal injury civil action arising out of a motorcycle accident in which plaintiff did not file his lawsuit until a year and eight days after the accident, beyond the normal statute of limitations, a telephone conversation between plaintiff's investigator and defendant was held not to be a confidential communication within the meaning of Pen. Code § 632, so as to bar its use in evidence. In order to determine if plaintiff could claim that the one-year limitations period was tolled while defendant was out of the state (per CCP § 351), the investigator had used the ruse that defendant would be eligible to win money if he answered some questions relative to him leaving the state for more than eight days during that period, thus tolling the statute for that time period. Under the circumstances, defendant could not have had an objectively reasonable expectation of confidentiality. Thus, the trial court erred in finding that a transcript of the conversation, which was secretly taped by the investigator, was excluded under Pen. Code § 632, which, in addition to making it a crime to intentionally record a confidential communication without the consent of all the parties, bars the use of any evidence so obtained. (O'Laskey v. Sortino (1990) 224 Cal.App.3rd 241.)

Video-taping a prostitute's sex acts with defendant at defendant's home is not legal in that the prostitutes acts and comments do not qualify as confidential communications under Pen. Code § 632(a) and (c). (People v. Lyon (2021) 61 Cal.App.5th 237.)

> The Lyon Court notes, however (at p. 249.) that another jurisdiction (i.e., Maine) has held that there is no expectation of privacy in a place where prostitutes carry on their trade, such as the prostitute's residence, studio, or place of business. (Citing State v. Strong (2013) 2013 ME 21.)

Where producers of a television show responded to plaintiffs' advertisement for investors and met with one of plaintiffs' salespersons without revealing their association with the television show, a videotaping of the meeting, part of which was later shown on the show, did not violate the Penal Code's prohibition against eavesdropping on or recording confidential communications. It was essential that plaintiffs prove that the taped conversation was "confidential." Here, the meeting was held at a busy restaurant, waiters frequently came to the table, and the information divulged by the salesperson was not secret and had been divulged to many other potential investors. (Wilkins v. National Broadcasting Co. (1999), 71 Cal.App.4th 1066.)

Ed. Code § 51512, prohibiting surreptitious videotaping in a classroom, and Pen. Code § 632, prohibiting the recording of confidential communications, read together, do not prohibit the use of videotape recordings obtained in violation of § 51512 in disciplinary proceedings against a teacher. While § 51512 provides sanctions against violators, it does not specifically prohibit entities such as the Board of Education or a school district from using such a recording, nor does it imply an exclusionary rule. Section 632, by its terms, is applicable only to confidential communications. (Evens v. Superior Court (1999) 77 Cal.App.4th 320.)

Because defendant could not reasonably have expected that his conversations with a stranger in an Internet chat room would be kept confidential, the conversations he had with a minor were not confidential communications within the meaning of Pen. Code § 632(c). Defendant, therefore, was not entitled under § 632(d) to suppress evidence of sexually explicit conversations with a person who had identified herself as a minor. (People v. Nakai (2010) 183 Cal.App.4th 499.)

Dismissal of a consumer's putative class action against his home security provider was proper because his allegation that he called to dispute a charge did not lead to the conclusion that he had an objectively reasonable expectation that he was not being recorded in violation of Pen. Code § 632. (Faulkner v. ADT Sec. Servs. (9th Cir. 2013), 706 F.3rd 1017.)

Confidential, Examples:

Employees who work in a shared or solo office, and who perform work or personal activities in relative seclusion there, would not reasonably expect to be the subject of secret filming by their employer. (Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal.4th 272, 291.)

In addressing the range of potential intrusions on privacy, the Court explained that at one end of the spectrum are "settings in which work or business is conducted in an open and accessible space, within the sight and hearing not only of coworkers and supervisors, but also of customers, visitors, and the general public." (Id., at p. 290 [e.g., secret videotaping of lunch meeting on crowded outdoor patio of public restaurant, employee in common, open, and exposed area of workplace].) At the other end of the spectrum are places where employees maintain privacy interests, such as "areas in the workplace subject to restricted access and limited view, and reserved exclusively for performing bodily functions or other inherently personal acts." (Ibid., e.g., secret videotaping of locker room in basement of police station, restroom at workplace, designated area for models and dancers to change clothes at workplace.

Communications reflecting an intent to violate the law are not necessarily outside of the legal definition of "confidential communication" of Pen. C § 632(c). (In re Berman (1989) 48 Cal.3rd 517; the issue not decided in an attorney disbarment proceeding, given the weight of the other evidence showing that petitioner, an attorney, had discussed with an undercover F.B.I. agent over the telephone the illegal transportation of drugs.)

The trial court properly granted summary adjudication in favor of a bank and 11 of its employees (plaintiffs) in their action against another bank employee (defendant) under the Privacy Act (Pen. Code §§ 630 et seq.), for secretly recording private conversations. The test of confidentiality is objective, and defendant's subjective intent was irrelevant. Each plaintiff submitted declarations detailing the circumstances surrounding the conversations, the topics discussed, and their own belief and expectation that the conversations were confidential. Defendant's asserted expectation that the subject matter of the conversations would be repeated to other bank employees did not remove them from statutory protection. It was sufficient that the bank employees who were secretly recorded expected the conversations to be private. "Confidentiality" requires nothing more than the existence of a reasonable expectation by one of the parties that no one is "listening in" or overhearing the conversation. There was thus no material issue regarding confidentiality. Also, it was immaterial that defendant never disclosed the tapes to a third party. (Coulter v. Bank of America (1994) 28 Cal.App.4th 923.)

An attorney had an objectively reasonable expectation that conversations between counsel involving litigation matters would not be divulged and were confidential communications under Pen. Code § 632(c). Even though the attorney was put "on notice" that the conversations were "subject to being recorded," the attorney maintained an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy by explicitly withholding consent for tape recording. (Nissan Motor Co. v. Nissan Computer Corp. (2002) 180 F. Supp.2nd 1089.)

In a plaintiff's opposition to an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike, the mere fact that a secretly recorded conversation with defendant took place in a public restaurant does not mean plaintiff failed to advance a prima facie case for a violation of Pen. Code § 632(a); i.e., that their conversation was intended to be in confidence. (Safari Club Int'l v. Rudolph (9th Cir. 2017) 845 F.3rd 1250; noting that privacy is relative and, depending on the circumstances, one can harbor an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in a public location.)

In a case in which plaintiff alleged that defendant violated the Invasion of Privacy Act, Pen. Code §§ 630 et seq., by recording her confidential conversations with her daughter, who was defendant's employee, defendant did not meet its initial burden of establishing, as a matter of law, that it lacked the requisite intent to trigger a violation of Pen. Code § 632(a), or Pen. Code § 632.7(a). Defendant knew that it was recording all of the calls, having previously told its employees that they were authorized to use defendant's telephones for personal use and that their personal calls might be recorded. (Rojas v. HSBC Card Services Inc. (2018) 20 Cal.App.5th 427.)

Subd. (d): Except as proof in an action or prosecution for violation of this section, no evidence obtained as a result of eavesdropping upon or recording a confidential communication in violation of this section shall be admissible in any judicial, administrative, legislative, or other proceeding.

Where in a child sexual abuse case, the California Supreme Court held that the state constitutional right to truth in evidence under Cal. Const., art. I, § 28, subd. (f)(2), abrogated the prohibition in Pen. Code § 632(d), against the admission of secretly recorded conversations in criminal proceedings. The statute did not fit within any express exception and the right to privacy under Cal. Const., art. I, § 1, was not affected. The exclusionary remedy was not revived just because of reenactments and amendments to § 632(d). Such changes did not address the exclusionary remedy. Also, Gov't. Code § 9605 (Effect of Amendment on Time of Enactment; Presumption that Statute Enacted Last Prevails) provides that reenactment under Cal. Const., art. IV, § 9, has no effect on the unchanged portions of an amended statute. Because the exclusionary provision remained abrogated in criminal proceedings, a surreptitious recording was properly admitted into evidence in defendant's trial for committing a lewd and lascivious act upon a child. (People v. Guzman (2019) 8 Cal.5th 673.)

In a disciplinary proceeding of two police officers, the admission of a recording from the digital in-car video system (DICVS) that captured the officers' act of failing to assist a commanding officer's response to a robbery in progress and playing a mobile phone game, "the Pokémon Go video game." was not precluded by Pen. Code § 632, as there was no evidence to show who activated the system and thus that a person intentionally recorded a confidential communication. (Lozano v. City of Los Angeles (2022) 73 Cal.App.5th 711, 727-728.)

Subd. (e): This section does not apply (1) to any public utility engaged in the business of providing communications services and facilities, or to the officers, employees or agents thereof, where the acts otherwise prohibited by this section are for the purpose of construction, maintenance, conduct or operation of the services and facilities of the public utility, or (2) to the use of any instrument, equipment, facility, or service furnished and used pursuant to the tariffs of a public utility, or (3) to any telephonic communication system used for communication exclusively within a state, county, city and county, or city correctional facility.

Subd. (f): This section does not apply to the use of hearing aids and similar devices, by persons afflicted with impaired hearing, for the purpose of overcoming the impairment to permit the hearing of sounds ordinarily audible to the human ear.

Note: Under federal Title III; "(I)t shall not be unlawful . . . for a person acting under color of law to intercept a wire, oral, or electronic communication where . . . one of the parties to the communication has given prior consent to such interception." (Italics added; 18 U.S.C. § 2511(2)(c), (d))

> Note Pen. Code § 632(a), above, specifying that under California law, "all parties" to a "confidential communication" must be aware that they are being recorded or otherwise eavesdropped upon, a violation of which is a felony offense.

Although Pen. Code §§ 631 and 632, which prohibit "wiretapping" and "eavesdropping," respectively, envision and describe the use of same or similar equipment to intercept communications, the manner in which such equipment is used is clearly distinguished and mutually exclusive: "Wiretapping" is intercepting communications by an unauthorized connection to the transmission line whereas "eavesdropping" is interception of communications by the use of equipment which is not connected to any transmission line. (People v. Ratekin (1989) 212 Cal.App.3rd 1165.)

Pen. Code § 632.01: Disclosure or Distribution of Confidential Communications with a Health Care Provider:

(a) It is a felony to intentionally disclose or distribute, in any manner, including but not limited to, Internet Web sites and social media, or for any purpose, the contents of a confidential communication with a health care provider, that was obtained in violation of Pen. Code § 632(a) (i.e., by using an electronic amplifying or recording device to eavesdrop upon or record a confidential communication without the consent of all parties).

In order for aiding and abetting principles to apply, the aider/abettor must violate or aid and abet both Pen. Code §§ 632.01 and 632.

(c) "Health care provider" is defined as any of the following:

(1) A person licensed or certified pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 500 et seq.

(2) A person licensed pursuant to the Osteopathic Initiative Act or the Chiropractic Initiative Act.

(3) A person certified pursuant to H&S Code §§ 1797 et seq.

(4) A clinic, health dispensary, or health facility licensed or exempt from licensure pursuant to H&S Code §§ 1200 et seq.

(5) An employee, volunteer, or contracted agent of any group practice prepayment health care service plan regulated pursuant to the Knox-Keene Health Care Service Plan Act of 1975; H&S Code §§ 1340 et seq.

(6) An employee, volunteer, independent contractor, or professional student of a clinic, health dispensary, or health care facility or health care provider described in this subdivision.

(7) A professional organization that represents any of the other health care providers described in this subdivision.

(d)(1) The recording/overhearing exceptions that already exist for P.C. § 632 in current law apply. (E.g., Per P.C. § 633 [general law enforcement exceptions], P.C. § 633.02 [body-worn cameras or investigating sexual assault], P.C. § 633.05 [city attorneys], P.C. § 633.1 [incoming calls to airport law enforcement], P.C. § 633.5 [obtaining evidence of specified crimes; i.e., extortion, kidnapping, bribery, P.C. § 653m telephone harassment, any felony involving violence against the person, and human trafficking], P.C. § 633.6 [recording by domestic violence victim with judicial permission], and P.C. § 633.8 [hostage or barricade situations; see below].)

(d)(2) This section does not affect the admissibility of any evidence that would otherwise be admissible pursuant to the authority of any section specified in paragraph (d)(1).

Punishment: Felony; 16 months, 2 or 3 years in prison, and/or a fine of up to $2,500 per violation, or up to $10,000 per violation with a prior conviction for the same offense. (Subd. (b))

Note: This legislation, effective 1/1/2017, was a knee-jerk reaction to the highly publicized "Planned Parenthood" eavesdropping case where defendants surreptitiously recorded a conversation with plaintiffs concerning their handling of aborted fetuses.

Pen. Code § 632.7: Eavesdropping On, and Recording of, Communications Transmitted Between Cellular or Cordless Telephones; Punishment:

(a) Every person who, without the consent of all of the parties to a communication, intercepts or receives and intentionally records, or assists in the interception or reception and intentional recordation of, a communication transmitted between two cellular radio telephones, a cellular radio telephone and a landline telephone, two cordless telephones, a cordless telephone and a landline telephone, or a cordless telephone and a cellular radio telephone, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500), or by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year, or in the state prison, or by both that fine and imprisonment. If the person has been convicted previously of a violation of this section or of Section 631, 632, 632.5, 632.6, or 636, the person shall be punished by a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars ($10,000), by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year, or in the state prison, or by both that fine and imprisonment.

(b) This section shall not apply to any of the following:

(1) Any public utility, or telephone company, engaged in the business of providing communications services and facilities, or to the officers, employees, or agents thereof, where the acts otherwise prohibited are for the purpose of construction, maintenance, conduct, or operation of the services and facilities of the public utility or telephone company.

(2) The use of any instrument, equipment, facility, or service furnished and used pursuant to the tariffs of the public utility.

(3) Any telephonic communication system used for communication exclusively within a state, county, city and county, or city correctional facility.

(c) For purposes of this section, "telephone company" is defined in paragraph (3) of subdivision (c) of Section 638.

(d) As used in this section, each of the following terms have the following meaning:

> (1) "Cellular radio telephone" means a wireless telephone authorized by the Federal Communications Commission to operate in the frequency bandwidth reserved for cellular radio telephones.
>
> (2) "Cordless telephone" means a two-way, low power communication system consisting of two parts, a "base" unit which connects to the public switched telephone network and a handset or "remote" unit, that are connected by a radio link and authorized by the Federal Communications Commission to operate in the frequency bandwidths reserved for cordless telephones.
>
> (3) "Communication" includes, but is not limited to, communications transmitted by voice, data, or image, including facsimile.

Case Law:

> Because Pen. Code § 632.7(a) prohibits parties as well as nonparties from intentionally recording a communication transmitted between a cellular or cordless telephone and another device without the consent of all parties to the communication, the Court of Appeal erred when it held that only parties to the communication were protected. Although § 632.7 does not apply when all parties to a communication use landline phones, no absurdity resulted because Pen. Code § 632 often would apply to such a conversation and some portion of the statutory scheme would provide for liability, regardless of the type of telephone used to receive a call, so long as at least one end of the conversation was on a cellular or cordless telephone. The rule of lenity did not apply because legislative intent was not uncertain. (Smith v. LoanMe, Inc. (2021) 11 Cal.5th 183.)
>
> > Note: The so-called "rule of lenity" generally requires that "ambiguity in a criminal statute should be resolved in favor of lenity, giving the defendant the benefit of every reasonable doubt on questions of interpretation." (Citing People v. Nuckles (2013) 56 Cal.4th 601, 611.) "But '[t]he rule of lenity does not apply every time there are two or more reasonable interpretations of a penal statute.'" (Citing People v. Manzo (2012) 53 Cal.4th 880, 889.) "On the contrary, this principle applies only 'when "two reasonable interpretations of the same provision stand in relative equipoise."'" (Id., at p. 201.)

Pen. Code § 633: Exceptions; Law Enforcement:

Nothing in Section 631, 632, 632.5, 632.6, or 632.7 prohibits the Attorney General, any district attorney, or any assistant, deputy, or investigator of the Attorney General or any district attorney, any officer of the California Highway Patrol, any chief of police, assistant chief of police, or police officer of a city or city and county, any sheriff, undersheriff, or deputy sheriff regularly employed and paid in that capacity by a county, police officer of the County of Los Angeles, peace officers of CDCR's Office of Internal Affairs, or any person acting pursuant to the direction of one of these law enforcement officers acting within the scope of his or her authority, from overhearing or recording any communication that they could lawfully overhear or record prior to the effective date of this chapter.

Nothing in Section 631, 632, 632.5, 632.6, or 632.7 renders inadmissible any evidence obtained by the above-named persons by means of overhearing or recording any communication that they could lawfully overhear or record prior to the effective date of this chapter.

Case Law:

A participant in a telephone conversation, which otherwise would have been in violation of P.C. § 632, may properly record a telephone conversation at the direction of a law enforcement officer, acting within the course and scope of his or her authority, in the course of a criminal investigation. (Telish v. State Personnel Board* [California Dept. of Justice] (2015) 234 Cal.App.4th 1479, 1487-1494.)

In finding that having an informant secretly record telephone conversations with the defendant, the Court ruled that "the looseness of law enforcement direction to [the informant] in making the tape recordings properly goes to the weight given to those recordings and not their initial admissibility." (People v. Towery (1985) 174 Cal.App.3rd 1114, 1129; see also People v. Clark 63 Cal.4th 522, 595.)

Both the California Invasion of Privacy Act and the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (18 U.S.C. §§ 2510-2522.) proscribe only intentional, as opposed to inadvertent, overhearing or intercepting of communications. (People v. Buchanan (1972) 26 Cal.App.3rd 274.)

The restrictions on eavesdropping apply for the benefit of a person outside the state as well, so long as one party to a telephone conversation is in California. (Kearney v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal.4th 95.)

Plaintiff employee of the National City Police Department was accused of sexually harassing another employee. In order to obtain evidence of plaintiff's acts, his "flirtatious" conversation with the employee was secretly recorded. Plaintiff was subsequently terminated from his job. Suing the City of National City, plaintiff's allegation that he had been illegally recorded was dismissed as a result of a summary judgment motion, the district (trial) court relying upon § 633, and ruling that because police supervisors could secretly record the private conversations of their employees by "wiring" one party to the conversation prior to the enactment of § 633, the actions of plaintiff's supervisors did not run afoul of § 632 in this case. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal disagreed. The legislative history of § 633 and the dictates of the California Constitution compel a conclusion that § 633 protects only electronic recording and eavesdropping "in the course of criminal investigations," and not police recordings of their own employees as a matter of internal discipline. (Rattray v. City of National City (9th Cir. 1994) 51 F.3rd 793, 796-798.)

In evaluating the language of this section, where it says; "or any person acting pursuant to the direction of one of these law enforcement officers acting within the scope of his or her authority," the California Attorney General has rendered an opinion to the effect that although inspectors for the Bureau of Food and Drug Inspections are law enforcement officers, they are not listed among those law enforcement officers in Pen. Code § 633 who exempted from the prohibitions imposed by Pen. Code §§ 631 and 632. However, they can still use electronic devices when acting under the direction of the law enforcement officers designated in this section. (55 Op.Atty.Gen. 151, April 7, 1972.)

Pen. Code § 633.5*: Exception; Recording by Party to the Communication for the Purpose of Obtaining Evidence*:

Sections 631, 632, 632.5, 632.6, and 632.7 do not prohibit one party to a confidential communication from recording the communication for the purpose of obtaining evidence reasonably believed to relate to the commission by another party to the communication of the crime of extortion, kidnapping, bribery, any felony involving violence against the person, including, but not limited to, human trafficking, as defined in Section 236.1, or a violation of Section 653m, or domestic violence as defined in Section 13700. Sections 631, 632, 632.5, 632.6, and 632.7 do *no*t render any evidence so obtained inadmissible in a prosecution for extortion, kidnapping, bribery, any felony involving violence against the person, including, but not limited to, human trafficking, as defined in Section 236.1, a violation of Section 653m, or domestic violence as defined in Section 13700, or any crime in connection therewith.

A juvenile child molest victim may be a party to a telephone conversation with her adult molester when the consent to recording the telephone call is given by the minor's parent. (People v. Trever P. (2017) 14 Cal.App.5th 486.)

A person may initiate and tape record a telephone call in an attempt to gain evidence of child molestation alleged to have been committed by the person called. Such evidence would be admissible in a subsequent civil or criminal proceeding. (82 Ops. Cal. Atty. Gen. 148.)

Pen. Code § 13700(b) defines "domestic violence," as follows: "Domestic violence" means abuse committed against an adult or a minor who is a spouse, former spouse, cohabitant, former cohabitant, or person with whom the suspect has had a child or is having or has had a dating or engagement relationship. For purposes of this subdivision, "cohabitant" means two unrelated adult persons living together for a substantial period of time, resulting in some permanency of relationship. Factors that may determine whether persons are cohabiting include, but are not limited to, (1) sexual relations between the parties while sharing the same living quarters, (2) sharing of income or expenses, (3) joint use or ownership of property, (4) whether the parties hold themselves out as spouses, (5) the continuity of the relationship, and (6) the length of the relationship.

Note: The Family Code has a slightly different definition of "domestic violence" at section 6211.

Jail and Prison Inmates: The Recording of prisoner telephone conversations, even when made between the jail and the outside world, would fall within the restrictions of both the federal and state wiretap statutes unless the inmate is put on notice that his conversations may be monitored and/or recorded.

Under Title III; "(I)t shall not be unlawful . . . for a person acting under color of law to intercept a wire, oral, or electronic communication where . . . one of the parties to the communication has given prior consent to such interception." (Italics added; 18 U.S.C. § 2511(2)(c), (d))

Based upon this, it has been held that where a sign has been posted indicating that "telephone calls may be monitored and recorded," inmates are on notice, and his or her "decision to engage in conversations over those phones constitutes implied consent to that monitoring and takes any wiretap outside the prohibitions of Title III." (People v. Kelly (2002) 103 Cal.App.4th 853, 858; warrantless recording of defendant's telephone conversations to parties on the outside approved.)

Such warning signs also take such telephone calls outside the search warrant provisions of California's wiretap statutes (P.C. §§ 629.50 et seq.) as well. (Id., at pp. 859-860.)

Wiretap Procedures and Restrictions: Pen. Code §§ 629.50 through 629.98 regulate the implementation of "wiretaps" and the use of information obtained thereby, including derivative evidence, and are listed in detail below. (See People v. Jackson (2005) 129 Cal.App.4th 129, 144-159.)

Pen. Code § 629.50: Requirements for a Wiretap Order:

An application for a wiretap order authorizing the interception of a wire, electronic pager, or electronic cellular telephone communication shall:

- Be made in writing upon the personal oath or affirmation of:

  The Attorney General,

  Chief Deputy Attorney General,

  Chief Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Law Division, or

  A District Attorney, or the person designated to act as District Attorney in the District Attorney's absence.

  The language "the principal prosecuting attorney," found in 18 U.S.C. § 2516(2), may include a state assistant district attorney who had been duly designated to act in the absence of the elected district attorney. Compliance with 18 U.S.C. § 2516(2) necessarily requires an analysis of the applicable state wiretap statute, i.e., P.C. § 629.50. The attorney designated to act in the district attorney's absence, as specified in P.C. § 629.50, must be acting in the district attorney's absence not just as an assistant district attorney designate with the limited authority to apply for a wiretap order, but as an assistant district attorney duly designed to act for all purposes as the district attorney of the political subdivision. (United States v. Perez-Valencia (9th Cir. 2013) 727 F.3rd 852, 854-855.)

> Upon remand for a determination of the assistant district attorney's duties and responsibilities at the time he requested the instant wiretap order, it was found that the assistant district attorney did in fact meet the necessary requirements to bring him within the dictates of 18 U.S.C. § 2516(2) and P.C. § 629.50. (United States v. Perez-Valencia (9th Cir. 2014) 744 F.3rd 600.)

> P.C § 629.50(a) does not require that the application describe the circumstances of the district attorney's absence. Had the Legislature intended to impose such a requirement, compelling the application to include a "full and complete statement of the facts" confirming the circumstances of the district attorney's absence, it could have directed as much. But that is not what the Legislature did. Instead, it required only that the application must "be made in writing upon the personal oath or affirmation of . . . a district attorney, or the person designated to act as district attorney in the district attorney's absence." The express provisions of the wiretap statute require nothing more. (People v. Gonzalez (2021) 12 Cal.5th 367, 393-394.)

- Be made to:

  The presiding judge of the Superior Court, or Another judge designated by the presiding judge, or

  The highest judge listed on an "ordered list" of additional judges, upon a determination that none of the above judges are available.

  > The fact that the application was made to a "successor judge" designated by the presiding judge to hear applications if the first-named judge is unavailable did not violate the requirements under this section. (People v. Munoz (2001) 87 Cal.App.4th 239, 242.)

Federal statutes limit federal wiretap orders to the interception of communications to "only within the territorial jurisdiction of the court in which the judge is sitting." (18 U.S.C. § 2518(c)) The fact that a federal judge purported to authorize the interception of communications outside the judge's jurisdiction, at least where the improperly obtained communications are not used by the Government, does not invalidate the entire wiretap order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2518(10)(a)(ii). (Dahda v. United States (2018) 584 U.S. 440 [138 S.Ct. 1491; 200 L.Ed.2nd 842].)

- Include all of the following information:

The identity of the investigative or law enforcement officer making the application,

The apparent discrepancy between the person who prepared the government's application for a wiretap and the person who signed it did not render the interception of the wire communications unlawful under 18 U.S.C. § 2518 because misidentification of the authorizing officer in the wiretap application is not a technical deficiency that requires suppression. (United States v. Fowlkes (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 954, 968-969.)

The identity of the investigative or law enforcement officer authorizing the application,

Failure to identify the authorizing official should not invalidate the subsequent wiretap order. (See United States v. Callum (9th Cir. 2005) 410 F.3rd 571, discussing the corresponding federal statute; 18 U.S.C. § 2518(4)(d).)

But where the failure to include information identifying the Department of Justice as authorizing a wiretap application makes it impossible for a judge to conclude from the face of the application that it had been in fact so authorized, will invalidate the warrant. (United States v. Staffeldt (9th Cir. 2006) 451 F.3rd 578; an attached memorandum purportedly identifying the Department of Justice as authorizing the wiretap application was, due to human error, the wrong memorandum.)

See also United States v. Scurry (D.C. Cir. 2016) 821 F.3rd 1; finding that failure to identify the "high-level Justice Department official who approved the wiretap application," as required by 18 U.S.C. § 2518(4)(d), was sufficient to invalidate the wiretap order.

The identity of the law enforcement agency that is to execute the order,

A statement attesting to a review of the application and the circumstances in support thereof by the chief executive officer or his or her designee (who must be identified by name) of the law enforcement agency making the application,

A full and complete statement of the facts and circumstances relied upon by the applicant to justify his or her belief that an order should be issued, including:

Details as to the particular offense that has been, is being, or is about to be committed,

The fact that conventional investigative techniques have been tried and were unsuccessful, or why they reasonably appear to be unlikely to succeed or to be too dangerous,

A particular description of the nature and location of the facilities from which, or the place where the communication is to be intercepted,

A particular description of the type of communication sought to be intercepted, and

The identity, if known, of the person committing the offense and whose communications are to be intercepted, or if that person's identity is not known, then the information relating to the person's identity that is known to the applicant.

> Wiretap authority is tied to specific communications facilities or locations (including a specific telephone or cellphone), and not individual suspects. So when a previously unknown coconspirator is identified, it is not necessary to cease the eavesdropping nor make application to the court for a new order. (United States v. Reed (9th Cir. 2009) 575 F.3rd 900, 910-912.)
>
> In the context of a motion to suppress wiretap evidence, the district court judge was held to have erred in applying an "abuse of discretion" standard to both determinations made by the issuing judge; i.e., (1) whether the affidavit contained a full and complete statement of facts under 18 U.S.C. § 2518(1)(c), and (2) the ultimate decision that it was necessary to authorize the wiretap, under § 2518(3)(c). However, the error was harmless in that the wiretap affidavits adequately explained why the interception of wire communications was necessary to investigate the conspiracy and the target subjects, and they contained a full and complete statement of facts to establish necessity under 18 U.S.C. § 2518(1)(c). (United States v. Rodriguez (9th Cir. 2017) 851 F.3rd 931, 937-944.)
>
> Failing to discuss the availability of state wiretaps was not a material omission because there was no meaningful difference in the level of intrusiveness. The affidavits disclosed that an informant had cooperated with the Government previously in a limited way, and gave specific reasons why using the informant as to the current conspiracy generally was not a viable option going forward. The district court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that using the informant was unlikely to result in the > successful prosecution of each and every member of the conspiracy where the affidavit gave very specific reasons why the informant was unlikely to work particularly well. (United States v. Estrada (9th Cir. 2018) 904 F.3rd 854, 861-865.)

A statement of the period of time for which the interception is required to be maintained:

> And if the nature of the interception is such that the authorization for interception should not automatically terminate when the described type of communication has been first obtained, a particular description of the facts establishing probable cause to believe that additional communications of the same type will occur thereafter, and
>
> A full and complete statement of the facts concerning all previous applications known to the individual authorizing and to the individual making the application, to have been made to any judge of a state or federal court for authorization to intercept wire, electronic pager, or wire or electronic communication involving any of the same persons, facilities, or places specified in the application, and the action taken by the judge on each of those applications.
>
> This requirement may be satisfied by making inquiry of the California Attorney General and the United States Department of Justice and reporting the results of these inquiries in the application.
>
> Note: Use of a wiretap to combat a large conspiracy, given the greater threat to society, allows for the use of greater discretion by the courts to allow the government to use wiretaps. (United States v. McGuire (9th Cir. 2002) 307 F.3rd 1192, 1198.)

Failure to show that all traditional investigative methods have been tried and determined to be inadequate will result in a suppression of any evidence obtained from the resulting wiretaps. (United States v. Gonzalez, Inc. (9th Cir. 2006) 437 F.3rd 854; see 18 U.S.C. § 2518.)

However, law enforcement officials need not exhaust every conceivable investigative technique before seeking a wiretap order. (United States v. Lococo (9th Cir. 2008) 514 F.3rd 860; see also United States v. Rivera (9th Cir. 2008) 527 F.3rd 891; United States v. Reed (9th Cir. 2009) 575 F.3rd 900, 908-910.)

> "The necessity for the wiretap is evaluated in light of the government's need not merely to collect some evidence, but to 'develop an effective case against those involved in the conspiracy.'" (Id., at p. 909, quoting United States v. Rivera, supra, at p. 902, and United States v. Decoud, infra, at pg. 1007.)

The fact that a pen register could have been used, with its limited value in collecting necessary information, does not mean that the necessity for a wiretap had not been established. "The necessity for the wiretap is evaluated in light of the government's need not merely to collect some evidence, but to 'develop an effective case against those involved in the conspiracy." (United States v. Decoud (9th Cir. 2006) 456 F.3rd 996, 1006-1007; the fact that the informant had been sent to prison, and that a surveillance had been detected, helped to establish the need for a wiretap.)

If the application is for the extension of an order, a statement setting forth the number of communications intercepted pursuant to the original order, and the results thus far obtained from the interception, or a reasonable explanation of the failure to obtain results.

An application for a modification of the original order may be made when there is "probable cause" to believe that the target of a wiretap is using a facility or device that is not subject to the original order.

The modified order is only good for that period that applied to the original order. The application must provide all the information required of the original order and a statement of the results thus far obtained from the interception, or a reasonable explanation for the failure to obtain results.

The judge may require the applicant to furnish additional testimony or documentary evidence in support of the application.

A judge must accept a facsimile copy of the signature that is required on an application for a wiretap order.

The original signed document is to be sealed and kept with the application.

Case Law:

The three defendants were found guilty of conspiracy to distribute controlled substances. In a consolidated appeal, defendants raised numerous challenges to the admission of wiretap evidence. The Eighth Circuit of Appeal held that the defendants' motion to suppress evidence from the wiretaps was properly denied. In regards to defendants' argument that the district court erred in admitting the wiretap evidence, the court found that the district court did not clearly err in determining that the Government had satisfied the necessity requirement. The court reasoned that the affidavits explained in great detail how these conventional methods had failed—and would have likely continued to fail—to reveal the full extent of the organization's drug-trafficking activities and membership because, among other reasons, and that defendant and their associates utilized various and frequently changing residences and vehicles. Further, the orders authorizing the wiretaps expressly required minimization, providing that interception "must immediately terminate when it is determined that the conversation is unrelated to communications subject to interception." (United States v. Armstrong (8th Cir. 2023) 60 F.4th 1151.)

Pen. Code § 629.51: Definitions:

(a) For the purposes of this chapter, the following terms have the following meanings:

(1) "Wire communication" means any aural transfer made in whole or in part through the use of facilities for the transmission of communications by the aid of wire, cable, or other like connection between the point of origin and the point of reception (including the use of a like connection in a switching station), furnished or operated by any person engaged in providing or operating these facilities for the transmission of communications.

(2) "Electronic communication" means any transfer of signs, signals, writings, images, sounds, data, or intelligence of any nature in whole or in part by a wire, radio, electromagnetic, photoelectric, or photo-optical system, but does not include any of the following:

(A) Any wire communication defined in paragraph (1).

(B) Any communication made through a tone-only paging device.

(C) Any communication from a tracking device.

(D) Electronic funds transfer information stored by a financial institution in a communications system used for the electronic storage and transfer of funds.

(3) "Tracking device" means an electronic or mechanical device that permits the tracking of the movement of a person or object.

(4) "Aural transfer" means a transfer containing the human voice at any point between and including the point of origin and the point of reception.

(5)

(A) "Prohibited violation" means any violation of law that creates liability for, or arising out of, either of the following:

(i) Providing, facilitating, or obtaining an abortion that is lawful under California law.

(ii) Intending or attempting to provide, facilitate, or obtain an abortion that is lawful under California law.

(B) As used in this paragraph, "f*acilitating*" or "facilitate" means assisting, directly or indirectly in any way, with the obtaining of an abortion that is lawful under California law.

(b) This chapter applies to the interceptions of wire and electronic communications. It does not apply to stored communications or stored content.

(c) The act that added this subdivision is not intended to change the law as to stored communications or stored content.

Case Law:

See People v. Von Villas (1992) 11 Cal.App.4th 175, at p. 224, defining "wire communication" as "any aural transfer made in whole or in part through the use of facilities for the transmission of communications by the aid of wire, cable, or other like connection between the point of origin and the point of reception (including the use of such connection in a switching station) furnished or operated by any person engaged in providing or operating such facilities for the transmission of interstate or foreign commerce . . . ."

A phone used during a physical visitation by a prisoner and his or her visitor does not meet the requirements of a "wire communication," not using a line in interstate or foreign commerce. It is therefore not subject to the wiretap restrictions of P.C. § 631. (People v. Santos (1972) 26 Cal.App.3rd 397, 402.)

But cloned cellphones are included. (United States v. Staves (2004) 383 F.3rd 977.)

The audio portion of a videotape would seem to fall within this definition. (United States v. Shrylock (9th Cir. 2003) 342 F.3rd 948, 977; "The videotapes contained both video and audio portions. The audio portions are governed by the federal wiretap statute, 18 U.S.C. §§ 2510 et seq.")

Pen. Code § 629.52: Authority to Issue a Wiretap Order:

Upon application made under Section 629.50, the judge may enter an ex parte order, as requested or modified, authorizing interception of wire or electronic communications initially intercepted within the territorial jurisdiction of the court in which the judge is sitting, if the judge determines, on the basis of the facts submitted by the applicant, all of the following:

(a) There is probable cause to believe that an individual is committing, has committed, or is about to commit, one of the following offenses:

(1) Importation, possession for sale, transportation, manufacture, or sale of controlled substances in violation of Section 11351, 11351.5, 11352, 11370.6, 11378, 11378.5, 11379, 11379.5, or 11379.6 of the Health and Safety Code with respect to a substance containing heroin, cocaine, PCP, methamphetamine, fentanyl, or their precursors or analogs where the substance exceeds 10 gallons by liquid volume or three pounds of solid substance by weight.

(2) Murder, solicitation to commit murder, a violation of Section 209, or the commission of a felony involving a destructive device in violation of Section 18710, 18715, 18720, 18725, 18730, 18740, 18745, 18750, or 18755.
(3) A felony violation of Section 186.22.
(4) A felony violation of Section 11418, relating to weapons of mass destruction, Section 11418.5, relating to threats to use weapons of mass destruction, or Section 11419, relating to restricted biological agents.
(5) A violation of Section 236.1.
(6) An attempt or conspiracy to commit any of the above-mentioned crimes.

Note: The equivalent under the federal statutes is 18 U.S.C. § 2518(3)(a).

(b) There is probable cause to believe that particular communications concerning the illegal activities will be obtained through that interception, including, but not limited to, communications that may be utilized for locating or rescuing a kidnap victim.

(c) There is probable cause to believe that the facilities from which, or the place where, the wire or electronic communications are to be intercepted are being used, or are about to be used, in connection with the commission of the offense, or are leased to, listed in the name of, or commonly used by the person whose communications are to be intercepted.

(d) Normal investigative procedures have been tried and have failed or reasonably appear either unlikely to succeed if tried or too dangerous.

Note: The equivalent under the federal statutes is 18 U.S.C. § 2518(3)(c).

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision in this section, no magistrate shall enter an ex parte order authorizing interception of wire or electronic communications for the purpose of investigating or recovering evidence of a prohibited violation, as defined in Section 629.51.

Case Law:

"The requirement of necessity is designed to ensure that wiretapping is neither 'routinely employed as the initial step in criminal investigation' (United States v. Giordano (1974) 416 U.S. 505, 515, 94 S.Ct. 1820, 40 L.Ed.2nd 341) nor 'resorted to in situations where traditional investigative techniques would suffice to expose the crime.' (United States v. Kahn (1974) 415 U.S. 143, 153, fn. 12.)" (People v. Leon (2007) 40 Cal.4th 376, 385.)

> "(I)t is not necessary that law enforcement officials exhaust every conceivable alternative before seeking a wiretap." (Ibid.)

The necessity requirement of subdivision (d) of this section (and the similar federal requirement under 18 U.S.C. § 2518(1)(c) & (3)(c)) was met based upon the trial court's finding that the evidence against the defendant was purely circumstantial, witnesses against the defendant wished to remain anonymous, questioning of the defendant was not likely to produce any additional evidence, and that the defendant was likely to call friends from his jail cell and have them destroy evidence if he discovered that he was the focus of the new murder investigation. (People v. Zepeda (2001) 87 Cal.App.4th 1183, 1205.)

Similarly, where a dangerous conspiracy is being investigated (e.g., the "Montana Freemen"), where infiltration would be dangerous and difficult, and informants were generally uncooperative, this requirement is met. (United States v. McGuire (9th Cir. 2002) 307 F.3rd 1192, 1197.)

> But see United States v. Blackmon (9th Cir 2001) 273 F.3rd 1204, citing United States v. Carneiro (9th Cir. 1988) 861 F.2nd 1171, 1181, for the proposition that a conspiracy does not loosen the standard of proof on this issue.

And even when informants are used, a finding that such informants "could not possibly reveal the full nature and extent of the enterprise and it's countless, and at times disjointed, criminal tentacles," satisfied this requirement. (United States v. Shrylock (9th Cir. 2003) 342 F.3rd 948, 975-976; see also United States v. Gomez (9th Cir. 2004) 358 F.3rd 1221.)

It is not necessary that the government prove that it pursued "to the bitter end . . . every non-electronic device." (Citation). "(T)he adequacy of the showing concerning other investigative techniques is 'to be tested in a practical and common sense fashion [citation] that does not 'hamper unduly the investigative powers of law enforcement agents.'" (People v. Leon (2007) 40 Cal.4th 376, 392.)

It was not necessary that investigators have attempted to provide cloned cellphones for defendant's use as a prerequisite to applying for a wiretap warrant in that monitoring cloned cellphones itself would require a wiretap order to be lawful. (United States v. Staves (9th Cir. 2004) 383 F.3rd 977.)

The necessity for a wiretap is evaluated in light of the government's need not merely to collect some evidence, but to develop an effective case against the defendants. An "effective case" means "proof beyond a reasonable doubt," not merely to get an indictment. Where the investigation of a drug-distribution conspiracy was stalled at information obtained from a pen register and trap and trace device, obtaining a series (i.e., 4) of wiretaps was held to be lawful. (United States v. Garcia-Villalba (9th Cir. 2009) 585 F.3rd 1223, 1227-1234; rejecting defendant's argument that by the time a wiretap for a fourth cellphone was obtained, law enforcement was relying upon an impermissible "cascading theory of necessity.") Examples of factors used to establish a necessity for a wiretap (pp. 1228-1230):

- Pen register and trap and trace device does not reveal the contents of the defendants' conversations.
- Physical surveillance was impossible due to main defendant living in a rural location.
- Defendants used counter-surveillance techniques.
- A trash search was impossible due to main defendant living in a rural location.
- Search warrants, subpoenas, interviews and arrests would have terminated the investigation before all the coconspirators were found.
- Confidential informants could not be developed.

Note: Use of pen registers and trap and trace devices, except maybe when combined with other forms of electronic surveillance, is not enough alone to establish necessity for a wiretap. (United States v. Garcia-Villalba, supra., at p. 1228, citing United States v. Gonzalez, Inc., (9th Cir. 2005) 412 F.3rd 1102, 1113.)

It is where the intercepted communications were first heard by federal government agents that determines which federal court has jurisdiction for purposes of filing the resulting criminal prosecution, at least under the federal rules; i.e., 18 U.S.C. § 2518(3). (United States v. Luong (9th Cir. 2006) 471 F.3rd 1107.)

The first question to be answered in analyzing a motion to suppress wiretap evidence is whether the defendant established a violation of the Wiretap Act. If the defendant did not establish a violation of the Wiretap Act, there can be no constitutional violation and no suppression. (People v. Camel (2017) 8 Cal.App.5th 989, 1001.)

> The Court in Camel rejected defendant's argument that in determining probable cause, a court is to use the old Aguilar-Spinelli test (Aguilar v. Texas (1964) 378 U.S. 108 [12 L.Ed.2nd 723; 84 S. Ct. 1509]; Spinelli v. United States (1969) 393 U.S. 410 [21 L.Ed.2nd 637; 89 S. Ct. 584]), holding instead that the totality-of-the-circumstances test (per Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213 [76 L.Ed.2nd 527; 103 S. Ct. 2317].) is to be used since passage of Proposition 8 (the Truth in Evidence Proposition) in June of 1982. (Id., at pp. 1004-1010.)
>
> The Court in Camel further approved of the sealing of two attachments to the warrant affidavit under authority of People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 Cal.4th 948. (Id., at pp. 1009.)

In a challenge to the trial court's finding of (1) probable cause and (2) necessity supporting the issuance of a wiretap warrant, the Ninth Circuit upheld the lower court's rulings. (United States v. Motley (9th Cir. 2023) 89 F.4th 777, 781-782, 787-789.)

> "To authorize a federal wiretap warrant under 18 U.S.C. § 2516, the judge must find, as relevant here, that "there is probable cause for belief that an individual is committing, has committed, or is about to commit" certain offenses. 18 U.S.C. § 2518(3)(a)." "The wiretap affidavit established that Motley and several others, who were in frequent contact with Motley, were all obtaining large amounts of prescription opioids from the same physician; that Motley was buying the prescriptions for himself and others; and that Motley and at least one other coconspirator were selling the prescribed pills. This evidence provided a 'substantial basis' for the district court's finding that there was probable cause that Motley was engaged in a conspiracy to illegally distribute prescription opioids." (Id., at p. 787.)

"Turning to necessity, the affidavit explained, in specific detail, law enforcement's investigative methods, why those methods had been exhausted, and why other methods would likely be ineffective in identifying the members and scope of the conspiracy." That fact that some of the co-conspirators were already identified did not preclude efforts to identify all of them, the Court noting that the cases have "consistently upheld findings of necessity where traditional investigative techniques lead only to apprehension and prosecution of the main conspirators, but not to apprehension and prosecution of . . . other satellite conspirators." (Id., at p. 787, citing United States v. Torres (9th Cir. 1990) 908 F.2nd 1417, 1422.)

Pen. Code § 629.53: Judicial Guidelines: The Judicial Council may establish guidelines for judges to follow in granting an order authorizing the interception of any wire, electronic pager, or electronic communication.

Pen. Code § 629.54: Contents of the Wiretap Order:

> An order authorizing the interception of any wire, electronic digital pager, or electronic cellular telephone communication shall specify all of the following:
>
> - The identity, if known, of the person whose communications are to be intercepted, or if the identity is not known, then that information relating to the person's identity known to the applicant,
>
> - The nature and location of the communication facilities as to which, or the place where, authority to intercept is granted,

- A particular description of the type of communication sought to be intercepted, and a statement of the illegal activities to which it relates,

- The identity of the agency authorized to intercept the communications and of the persons making the application, and

- The period of time during which the interception is authorized including a statement as to whether or not the interception shall automatically terminate when the described communication has been first obtained.

Pen. Code § 629.56: Oral Approval in Lieu of Court Order:

Upon the informal application by the Attorney General, Chief Deputy Attorney General, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, or a District Attorney, or a person to act as District Attorney in the District Attorney's absence, the presiding judge of the Superior Court, or the first available judge designated as provided in P.C. § 629.50, may grant oral approval for an interception, without a court order, if he or she determines all of the following:

- There are grounds upon which an order could be issued under this chapter, and

- There is probable cause to believe that an emergency situation exists with respect to the investigation of an offense enumerated in Pen. Code § 629.52, and

- There is probable cause to believe that a substantial danger to life or limb exists justifying the authorization for immediate interception of a private wire, electronic digital pager, or electronic cellular telephone communication before an application for an order could with due diligence be submitted and acted upon.

Approval for an interception under this section shall be conditioned upon filing with the judge by midnight of the second full court day after the oral approval, a written application for an order which, if granted consistent with this chapter, shall also recite the oral approval under this subdivision and be retroactive to the time of the oral approval.

Pen. Code § 629.58: Duration of a Wiretap Order:

No order entered under this chapter shall authorize the interception of any wire, electronic pager, or electronic cellular telephone, or electronic communication for a period longer than:

- Necessary to achieve the objective of the authorization, nor in any event,

- Thirty (30) days.

The 30-day limit on a wiretap begins on the day of the initial interception, or 10 days after the issuance of the wiretap order, whichever comes first.

Extensions of an order may be granted in accordance with Pen. Code § 629.50 and upon the court making the findings required by Pen. Code § 629.52.

The period of extension shall be no longer than the authorizing judge deems necessary to achieve the purposes for which it was granted and in no event longer than thirty (30) days.

Every order and extension thereof shall contain a provision that the authorization to intercept shall:

- Be executed as soon as practicable,

- Be conducted so as to minimize the interception of communications not otherwise subject to interception under this chapter, and

- Terminate upon attainment of the authorized objective, or in any event at the time expiration of the term designated in the order or any extensions.

> Where the target of the wiretap order is discovered to be using an alias, and changes his name during the life of the order, agents did not fail to "minimize" the interception of conversations not related to the investigation by continuing to eavesdrop on the target while he uses the new name. (United States v. Fernandez (9th Cir. 2008) 527 F.3rd 1247.)

In the event the intercepted communication is in a foreign language, an interpreter of that foreign language may assist peace officers in executing the authorization provided in this chapter, provided that:

- The interpreter has had the same training as any other interceptor authorized under this chapter, and

- The interception shall be conducted so as to minimize the interception of communications not otherwise subject to interception under this chapter.

Pen. Code § 629.60: Progress Reports:

Whenever an order authorizing an interception is entered, the order shall require reports in writing or otherwise to be made to the judge who issued the order:

- Showing the number of communications intercepted pursuant to the original order; and

- A statement setting forth what progress has been made towards achievement of the authorized objective, or

- A satisfactory explanation for its lack of progress, and the need for continued interception.

The judge shall order that the interception immediately terminate if he or she finds that:

- Progress has not been made, and

- The explanation for its lack of progress is not satisfactory, or

- No need exists for continued interception.

The reports shall:

- Be filed with the court at least every ten (10) days, or more frequently if ordered by the court; and

- Be made by any reasonable and reliable means, as determined by the judge.

When a defendant moved to suppress evidence on the grounds the reports required under Pen. Code § 629.60 were inadequate or untimely, the State had the burden to show there was no error. However, the violation did not contravene a central purpose of California's Presley-Felando-Eaves Wiretap Act of 1988, Pen. Code §§ 629.50 et seq., or the purpose of the provision was achieved despite any error. Under that framework, the trial court did not err in denying defendants' motion to suppress wiretap evidence because the wiretaps were obtained legally and minimized. (People v. Roberts et al. (2010) 184 Cal.App.4th 1149.)

See Price v. Superior Court (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 13, 60-62, for an analysis of the Roberts decision, describing the similar circumstances under the suppression authorization, but not requirement, under California's Electronic Communications Privacy Act (CalECPA).

Pen. Code § 629.61: Report to Attorney General:

A court order authorizing an interception shall require a report in writing or otherwise to be made to the Attorney General, showing:

- What persons, facilities, places or any combination of these, are to be intercepted; and

- The action taken by the judge on each application.

The report shall be made at the interval that the order may require, but not less than ten (10) days after the order was issued.

The report shall be made by any reasonable and reliable means, as determined by the Attorney General.

The Attorney General may issue regulations prescribing the collection and dissemination of information collected.

The Attorney General shall, upon the request of an individual making an application for an interception order, provide any information known as a result of these reporting requirements, as required by Pen. Code § 629.50(a)(6).

Pen. Code § 629.62: Annual Report to the Legislature, etc.:

The Attorney General shall prepare and submit an annual report to the Legislature, the Judicial Council, and the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Court on interceptions conducted under the authority of this chapter during the preceding year.

Information for this report shall be provided to the Attorney General by any prosecutorial agency seeking an order pursuant to this chapter.

The report shall include all of the following data:

- The number of orders or extensions applied for,
- The kinds of orders or extension applied for,
- The fact that the order or extension was granted as applied for, was modified, or was denied,
- The number of wire, electronic pager, and electronic cellular telephone devices that are the subject of each order granted,
- The period of interceptions authorized by the order, and the number and duration of any extensions of the order,
- The offense specified in the order or application, or extension of any order,
- The identity of the applying law enforcement officer and agency making the application and the person authorizing the application,
- The nature of the facilities from which, or the place where communications were to be intercepted,
- A general description of the interceptions made under the order or extension, including:

    The number of persons whose communications were intercepted.

    The number of communications intercepted.

    The percentage of incriminating communications intercepted.

    The percentage of other communications intercepted, and

    The approximate nature, amount, and costs of the manpower and other resources used in the interceptions,

- The number of arrests resulting from interceptions made under the order or extension, and the offenses for which arrests were made,
- The number of trials resulting from the interceptions,
- The number of motions to suppress made with respect to the interceptions, and the number granted or denied,

- The number of convictions resulting from the interceptions and the offenses for which the convictions were obtained, and a general assessment of the importance of the interceptions,

- Except with regard to the initial report required by this section, the information required by the preceding five (5) paragraphs (excluding the immediately preceding paragraph about the number of convictions) with respect to orders or extensions obtained in a preceding calendar year,

- The date of the order for service of inventory made pursuant to Pen. Code § 629.68, confirmation of compliance with the order, and the number of notices sent.

- Other data that the Legislature, the Judicial Council, or the Director of the Administrative Office shall require.

The annual report shall include a summary analysis of the above. The Attorney General may issue regulations prescribing the content and form of the reports required to be filed by a prosecutorial agency.

The Attorney General's annual report shall be filed no later than April of each year.

The Attorney General shall, upon the request of an individual making an application for an interception order, provide any information known as a result of these reporting requirements that would enable the individual making an application to comply with the requirements of Pen. Code § 629.50(a)(6).

Pen. Code § 629.64: Recording, Sealing and Retaining Intercepted Communications:

The contents of any wire or electronic communication intercepted by any means authorized by this chapter shall, if possible, be recorded on any recording media.

The recording of the contents of any wire or electronic cellular telephone communication shall be done in a way that:

- Will protect the recording from editing or other alterations, and

- Will ensure that the audiotape recording can be immediately verified as to its authenticity and originality, and

- Any alteration can be immediately detected.

The monitoring or recording device used shall be of a type, and shall be installed, to preclude any interruption or monitoring of the interception by any unauthorized means.

Immediately upon the expiration of the period of the order, or extensions thereof, the recordings shall be made available to the judge issuing the order.

The recording shall be sealed under the direction of the judge. The presence of the seal, or a satisfactory explanation for the absence of the seal, shall be a prerequisite for the use or disclosure of the contents of any wire or electronic cellular telephone communication or evidence derived therefrom under Pen. Code § 629.78, below.

> See United States v. McGuire (9th Cir. 2002) 307 F.3rd 1192, 1201-1205, where the FBI in a federal wiretap provided satisfactory reasons for delaying the sealing where they had the court's permission, the judge was in another district, and they took steps to protect the recordings pending the sealing.
>
> Information received from a pen register and/or a trap and trace device, recording "call data content" (i.e., "CDC," data about call origination, length, and time of call), are not protected by the wiretap statutes. There is no expectation of privacy in such information, per Smith v. Maryland (1979) 442 U.S. 735 [99 S.Ct. 2577; 61 L.Ed.2nd 220]. (United States v. Reed (9th Cir. 2009) 575 F.3rd 900, 914-917.)

Custody of the recordings shall be where the judge orders.

Recordings shall be retained for a minimum of ten (10) years, and shall be destroyed thereafter only upon an order of the issuing or denying judge.

Duplicate recordings may be made for use or disclosure pursuant to Pen. Code §§ 629.74 and 629.76 (below) for investigations.

The sealing order may be oral or written, and the physical sealing of the tapes need not be done in the judge's presence. (People v. Superior Court* [Westbrook] (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 41, 47-51; discussing former Pen. Code § 629.14, now § 629.64.)

Pen. Code § 629.66: Application and Orders to be Sealed:

The application and orders made pursuant to this chapter shall be:

- Sealed by the judge.
- Kept where the judge orders.
- Disclosed only upon a showing of good cause before a judge.
- May be made to the defendant and at trial.
- Retained for ten (10) years, and thereafter destroyed only upon order of the issuing or denying judge.

See People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 Cal.4th 948, re; sealing warrant affidavits.

Pen. Code § 629.68: Notice to Parties to Intercepted Communications:

Within a reasonable time, but no later than ninety (90) days:

- After termination of the period of an order or extensions thereof; or

- After filing of an application for an order of approval under Pen. Code § 629.56 which has been denied;

The issuing judge shall issue an order that shall require the requesting agency to serve:

- Persons named in the order or application, and

- Other known parties to intercepted communications;

An inventory which shall include notice of all of the following:

- The fact of the entry of the order, and

- The date of the entry and the period of authorized interception, and

- The fact that during the period wire, electronic digital pager, or electronic communication, cellular telephone communications were or were not intercepted.

Upon the filing of a motion, the judge may, in his or her discretion, make available to the person or his or her counsel for inspection the portions of the intercepted communications, applications and orders that the judge determines to be in the interest of justice.

On an ex parte showing of good cause to a judge, the serving of the inventory required by this section may be postponed.

The period of postponement shall be no longer than the authorizing judge deems necessary to achieve the purposes for which it was granted.

Case law:

The "interest of justice" standard under Pen. Code § 629.68, applies to a wiretap target's motion for inspection of wiretap materials and did not require a showing of good cause because the presumption against disclosure to the general public, as reflected in the "good cause" standard of Pen. Code § 629.66, did not apply when the person seeking wiretap materials was the target of that wiretap. Because the interest of justice standard required balancing the interests of the movant, the government, non-movants, and the public, a wiretap target's desire to pursue a lawsuit under Pen. Code § 629.86, could suffice to demonstrate that inspection would be in the interests of justice. The presumption of regularity in Evid. Code § 664 was inapplicable because the Legislature gave individuals an opportunity to litigate the issue of the propriety of government action. (Guerrero v. Hestrin (2020) 56 Cal.App.5th 172.)

Pen. Code § 629.70: Discovery Prerequisite to Use in Evidence:

A criminal defendant shall be notified that he or she was identified as the result of an interception, such notice being before a plea of guilty or at least ten (10) days before trial, hearing or proceeding in the case other than an arraignment or grand jury proceeding.

The defendant is also entitled to a copy of all recorded interceptions, a copy of the court order, and accompanying application and monitoring logs, at least ten (10) days before trial, hearing or proceeding in the case other than a grand jury proceeding.

As a prerequisite to admissibility into evidence or other disclosure in any trial, hearing, or other proceeding, except a grand jury proceeding, of the contents of any intercepted wire, electronic pager, or electronic cellular telephone communication, *or a*ny evidence derived there from, each party shall be furnished not less than ten (10) days before such trial, hearing, or proceeding, with:

- A transcript of the contents of the interception, and
- A copy of all recorded interceptions, and

- A copy of the court order, accompanying application, and monitoring logs.

The ten (10) day period may be waived by the judge if he or she finds that it was not possible to furnish the party with the above information ten days before trial, hearing or proceeding, and that the party will not be prejudiced by the delay in receiving that information.

The court may issue an order limiting disclosure to the parties upon a showing of good cause.

> The trial court denied discovery of the unredacted supporting wiretap affidavits that were sealed pursuant to People v. Hobbs (1994) 7 Cal.4th 948, and then refused to suppress the wiretap evidence. The Appellate Court found that the privileges and procedures of E.C. §§ 1040-1042 (Official Information Privilege) applies to wiretap affidavits. Defendants failed to demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion by ruling that defendants' rights were adequately protected with respect to their requests for disclosure of privileged documentation, and to their challenges to the sufficiency of the wiretap authorization orders in this case. (People v. Acevedo (2012) 209 Cal.App.4th 1040, 1047-1050.)

Pen. Code § 629.72: Motions to Suppress:

Any person in any trial, hearing or proceeding may move to suppress:

- Some or all of the contents of any intercepted wire, electronic pager, or electronic communication, or

- Any evidence derived there from;

Only on the basis that the contents or evidence were obtained in violation of:

- The Fourth Amendment, or

- The terms of this Chapter.

> This Chapter, having been enacted subsequent (1995-1996) to the passage of Proposition 8 (June, 1982), and by a two/thirds vote of the Legislature, makes effective this statutory exclusionary rule. (People v. Leon (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 966, 977-978.)

A suppression motion shall be made, determined, and subject to review in accordance with the procedures set forth in Pen. Code § 1538.5.

Case law:

> As such, in order to warrant an evidentiary hearing and the cross-examining of the affiant to a wiretap search warrant, the defendant must first meet the requirements of Franks v. Delaware (1978) 438 U.S. 154 [98 S.Ct. 2674; 57 L.Ed.2nd 667]. I.e., defendant must first make a substantial preliminary showing that a false statement was deliberately or recklessly included in the affidavit submitted in support of the wiretap application, and that such false statement was material to the court's finding of necessity. (United States v. Shrylock (9th Cir. 2003) 342 F.3rd 948, 976-977.)
>
> "Evidence obtained from an unlawful wiretap may only be suppressed if the wiretap violated the United States Constitution or a procedure intended to play a central role in the legislative scheme and the purpose of that procedure was not achieved in some other manner." (People v. Jackson (2005) 129 Cal.App.4th 129, 148-153; finding also that California's Truth in Evidence provisions (i.e., Proposition 8) do not prevent the suppression of evidence obtained in violation of the wiretap statutes that were enacted subsequent to the passage of Proposition 8 by at least a two-thirds majority. Pgs. 152-153.)
>
> > An officer's "good faith" is not grounds for denying a defendant's motion to suppress based on a violation of the wiretap statutes. (People v. Jackson, supra, at pp. 153-160.)
>
> Failure to raise a search issue or one dealing with compliance with the statutory requirements of a wiretap waive (i.e., "forfeit") that issue for purposes of appeal. (People v. Davis (2008) 168 Cal.App.4th 617, 625-632.)

Pen. Code § 629.74: Disclosure to Other Law Enforcement Agencies:

> The Attorney General, any Deputy Attorney General, District Attorney, Deputy District Attorney, or any peace officer, who by any means authorized by this Chapter has obtained knowledge of the contents of any wire, electronic digital pager, or electronic cellular telephone communication, or evidence derived therefrom, may disclose the contents to:
>
> - Anyone referred to in this section (above),

- Any investigative or law enforcement officer defined in 18 U.S.C. § 2510(7), or

- Any judge or magistrate;

To the extent disclosure is:

- Permitted per Pen. Code § 629.82, and

- Appropriate to the proper performance of the official duties of the individual making or receiving the disclosure.

No other disclosure, except to a grand jury, of intercepted information is permitted prior to a public court hearing by any person regardless of how the person may have come into possession thereof.

Pen. Code § 629.76: Use of Intercepted Information:

The Attorney General, any Deputy Attorney General, District Attorney, Deputy District Attorney, or any peace officer or federal law enforcement officer;

Who, by means authorized by this Chapter, has obtained knowledge of the contents of any wire, electronic pager, or electronic cellular communication, or evidence derived there from;

May use the contents or evidence to the extent the use:

- Is appropriate to the proper performance of his or her official duties; and

- Is permitted by Pen. Code § 629.82.

Pen. Code § 629.78: Disclosure of Intercepted Information in Testimony:

Any person who has received, by any means authorized by this chapter, any information concerning a wire or electronic communication, or evidence derived therefrom, intercepted in accordance with the provisions of this chapter;

May, per Pen. Code § 629.82, disclose the contents of that communication or derivative evidence;

While giving testimony under oath or affirmation in any criminal court proceeding or in any grand jury proceeding, or in an administrative or disciplinary hearing involving the employment of a peace officer.

Pen. Code § 629.80: Privileged Communications:

No otherwise privileged communication intercepted in accordance with this Chapter shall lose its privileged character.

Note: See Evid. Code, §§ 900 et seq. for the statutory privileges.

When a peace officer or federal law enforcement officer, while engaged in the intercepting of wire, electronic pager, or electronic communication pursuant to this Chapter, intercepts a privileged communication;

- He or she shall immediately cease the interception for at least two (2) minutes.

- After two (2) minutes, interception may be resumed for up to thirty (30) seconds during which time the officer shall determine if the nature of the communication is still privileged.

- If still privileged, the officer shall again cease interception for at least two (2) minutes.

- After two (2) minutes, the officer may again resume interception for up to thirty (30) seconds to redetermine the nature of the communication.

- The officer shall continue to go online and offline in this manner until the time that the communication is no longer privileged or the communication ends.

The recording device shall be metered so as to authenticate upon review that interruptions occurred as set for in this section.

See People v. Reyes (2009) 172 Cal.App.4th 671, 681-687, noting the minimization requirements under 18 U.S.C. § 2518(5) and discussing the "standing" of one of the defendants to raise the issue even though it was not her phone that was tapped, and United States v. McGuire (9th Cir. 2002) 307 F.3rd 1192, 1199-1203, discussing the "minimization" of intercepted fax communications under the federal statutes.

> What is required in the way of "minimization" depends upon the circumstances. The minimization requirement is lessened when there is uncertainty as to the scope of the conspiracy, or when co-conspirators are talking. (People v. Reyes, supra.)

Pen. Code § 629.82*: Interception of Communications Relating to Crimes Other Than Those Specified in the Authorization Order:

(a) If a peace officer or federal law enforcement officer, while engaged in intercepting wire or electronic communications in the manner authorized by this chapter, intercepts wire or electronic communications relating to crimes other than those specified in the order of authorization, but that are enumerated in subdivision (a) of Section 629.52, grand theft involving a firearm, a violation of Section 18750 or 18755, or a violent felony as defined in subdivision (c) of Section 667.5,

(1) the contents thereof, and evidence derived therefrom, may be disclosed or used as provided in Sections 629.74 and 629.76 and

(2) the contents and any evidence derived therefrom may be used under Section 629.78 when authorized by a judge if the judge finds, upon subsequent application, that the contents were otherwise intercepted in accordance with the provisions of this chapter. The application shall be made as soon as practicable.

(b) If a peace officer or federal law enforcement officer, while engaged in intercepting wire or electronic communications in the manner authorized by this chapter, intercepts wire or electronic communications relating to crimes other than those specified in subdivision (a), the contents thereof, and evidence derived therefrom, may not be disclosed or used as provided in Sections 629.74 and 629.76, except to prevent the commission of a public offense. The contents and any evidence derived therefrom may not be used under Section 629.78, except where the evidence was obtained through an independent source or inevitably would have been discovered, and the use is authorized by a judge who finds that the contents were intercepted in accordance with this chapter.

(c) The use of the contents of an intercepted wire or electronic communication relating to crimes other than those specified in the order of authorization to obtain a search or arrest warrant entitles the person named in the warrant to notice of the intercepted wire or electronic communication and a copy of the contents thereof that were used to obtain the warrant.

(d) Applicability of the "plain view" (or "plain hearing" doctrine to wiretaps; Restrictions

(1) If a peace officer or federal law enforcement officer, while engaged in intercepting wire or electronic communications in the manner authorized by this chapter, intercepts wire or electronic communications relating to crimes, other than those specified in subdivision (a), and involving the employment of a peace officer, the contents thereof, and evidence derived therefrom, may not be disclosed or used as provided in Sections 629.74 and 629.76, except to prevent the commission of a public offense or in an administrative or disciplinary hearing involving the employment of a peace officer. The contents and any evidence derived therefrom may not be used under Section 629.78, except if the evidence was obtained through an independent source or inevitably would have been discovered, and the use is authorized by a judge who finds that the contents were intercepted in accordance with this chapter.

(2) This section does not authorize the use of an intercepted wire or electronic communication involving acts that only involve a violation of a departmental rule or guideline that is not a public offense under California law.

(3) If an agency employing peace officers utilizes evidence obtained pursuant to this subdivision in an administrative or disciplinary proceeding, the agency shall, on an annual basis, report both of the following to the Attorney General:

> (A) The number of administrative or disciplinary proceedings involving the employment of a peace officer in which the agency utilized evidence obtained pursuant to this subdivision.
>
> (B) The specific offenses for which evidence obtained pursuant to this subdivision was used in those administrative or disciplinary proceedings.

(4)

> (A) The Attorney General may issue regulations prescribing the form of the reports required to be filed pursuant to paragraph (3) by an agency utilizing intercepted wire or electronic communications in an administrative or disciplinary proceeding against a peace officer.
>
> (B) The Attorney General shall include information received pursuant to paragraph (3) in its annual report made pursuant to Section 629.62.

Case Law:

Section 629.82(a) extends the "plain view" doctrine to information communicated by someone other than the person identified in the wiretap order about a crime other than the one which justified the tap. (People v. Jackson (2005) 129 Cal.App.4th 129, 145.)

See also United States v. Carey (9th Cir. 2016) 836 F.3rd 1092, holding that evidence obtained in "plain hearing," when overhearing speakers unrelated to the target conspiracy while listening pursuant to a valid wiretap, is admissible.

Pen. Code § 629.84: Criminal Punishment for Violations:

Any violation of this Chapter is punishable by:

- A fine not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500.00), or
- Imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year, or
- Imprisonment in the state prison or county jail, pursuant to P.C. § 1170(h), for 16 months, 2 or 3 years (see P.C. § 18), or
- Both the above fine and the county jail or state prison imprisonment.

Pen. Code § 629.86: Civil Remedies for Unauthorized Interceptions:

Any person whose wire, electronic pager, or electronic cellular telephone communication is intercepted, disclosed, or used in violation of this Chapter shall have the following civil remedies:

- A civil cause of action against any person who intercepts, discloses, or uses, or procures any other person to intercept, disclose, or use the communications.
- Be entitled to recover, in that action, all of the following:
    - Actual damages, but not less than liquidated damages computed at the rate of one hundred dollars ($100.00) a day for each day of violation, or one thousand ($1,000.00), whichever is greater; and
    - Punitive damages; and

- Reasonable attorney's fees and other litigation costs reasonably incurred.

A good faith reliance on a court order is a complete defense to any civil or criminal action brought under this Chapter, or under Chapter 1.5 (Pen. Code §§ 630 et seq.; Eavesdropping), or any other law.

Case law:

> The "interest of justice" standard under Pen. Code § 629.68, applies to a wiretap target's motion for inspection of wiretap materials and did not require a showing of good cause because the presumption against disclosure to the general public, as reflected in the "good cause" standard of Pen. Code § 629.66, did not apply when the person seeking wiretap materials was the target of that wiretap. Because the interest of justice standard required balancing the interests of the movant, the government, non-movants, and the public, a wiretap target's desire to pursue a lawsuit under Pen. Code § 629.86, could suffice to demonstrate that inspection would be in the interests of justice. The presumption of regularity in Evid. Code § 664 was inapplicable because the Legislature gave individuals an opportunity to litigate the issue of the propriety of government action. (Guerrero v. Hestrin (2020) 56 Cal.App.5th 172.)

Pen. Code § 629.88: Effects of Other Statutes:

Nothing in P.C. §§ 631 (Wiretapping), 632.5 (Intercepting or Receiving Cellular Radio Telephone Communications), 632.6 (Intercepting or receiving Cordless Telephone Communications), or 632.7 (Recording Communications Via Cellular Radio, Cordless, or Landline Telephone Without Consent of All Parties) shall be construed as:

- Prohibiting any peace officer or federal law enforcement officer from intercepting of any wire, electronic digital pager, or electronic cellular telephone communication pursuant to an order issued in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter, or

- Rendering inadmissible in any criminal proceeding in any court or before any grand jury any evidence obtained by means of an order issued in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter.

Nothing in Pen. Code § 637 (Wrongful disclosure of Telegraphic or Telephonic Communication) shall be construed as prohibiting the disclosure of the contents of any wire, electronic pager, or electronic cellular telephone communication obtained by any means authorized by this Chapter.

Nothing in this Chapter shall apply to any conduct authorized by Pen. Code § 633 (Exceptions for Law Enforcement; Eavesdropping).

Pen. Code § 629.89: Covert Residential Entries Prohibited:

No order issued pursuant to this Chapter shall either directly or indirectly authorize entry into or upon the premises of a residential dwelling, hotel room, or motel room, for installation or removal of any interception device or for any other purpose.

Notwithstanding that this entry is otherwise prohibited by any other section or code, this Chapter expressly prohibits covert entry of a residential dwelling, hotel room, or motel room to facilitate an order to intercept a wire, electronic digital pager, or electronic communication.

Pen. Code § 629.90: Order for Cooperation of Public Utilities, Landlords, Custodians and Others:

An order authorizing the interception of wire, electronic pager, or electronic cellular telephone communication shall direct, upon request of the applicant, that:

- A public utility engaged in the business of providing communications services and facilities, or
- A landlord, or
- A custodian, or
- Any other person;

Furnish the applicant forthwith all information, facilities, and technical assistance necessary to accomplish the interception unobtrusively and with a minimum of interference with the services the person or entity is providing the person whose communications are to be intercepted.

Any such person or entity furnishing facilities or technical assistance shall be fully compensated by the applicant for the reasonable costs of furnishing the facilities and technical assistance.

Pen. Code § 629.91: Civil or Criminal Liability; Reliance Upon a Court Order:

A good faith reliance on a court order issued in accordance with this Chapter by any public utility, landlord, custodian, or any other person furnishing information, facilities, and technical assistance as directed by the order;

Is a complete defense to any civil or criminal action brought under this Chapter, or Chapter 1.5 (P.C. §§ 630 et seq.), or any other law.

Pen. Code § 629.92: Authority to Conform Proceedings and Order to Constitutional Requirements:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any court to which an application is made in accordance with this Chapter may take any evidence, make any finding, or issue any order required to conform the proceedings or the issuance of any order of authorization or approval to the provisions of:

- The Constitution of the United States, o*r*
- Any law of the United States, or
- This Chapter.

Pen. Code § 629.94: Training and Certification of Law Enforcement Officers:

The Commission on "Peace Officer Standards and Training" ("POST"), in consultation with the Attorney General, shall establish a course of training in the legal, practical, and technical aspects of the interception of private wire, electronic pager, or electronic communication and related investigativ*e techniques.*

The Attorney General shall set minimum standards for certification and periodic recertification* of the following persons as eligible to apply for orders authorizing the interception of private wire, electronic digital pagers, or electronic communication, to conduct the interceptions, and to use the communications or evidence derived from them in official proceedings:

- Investigative or law enforcement officers; and

- Other persons, when necessary, to provide linguistic interpretation who are designated by the Attorney General, Chief Deputy Attorney General, or Chief Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Law Division, or the District Attorney or the district attorney's designee, and are supervised by an investigative or law enforcement officer.

POST (Peace Officer Standards and Training) may charge a reasonable enrollment fee for those students who are employed by an agency not eligible for reimbursement by the Commission to offset the costs of the training.

The Attorney General may charge a reasonable fee to offset the costs of certification.

Note*: Recertification has been set for every five (5) years.

Pen. Code § 629.96*: Severability:

If any provision of this Chapter, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the Chapter, and the application of its provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Pen. Code § 629.98*: Automatic Repeal:

This Chapter shall remain in effect only until January 1, 2030, and as of that date is repealed.

Pen. Code § 632*: Eavesdropping, Compared: Separate from, and in addition to, the restrictions on wiretapping, is the issue of "eavesdropping" on the "confidential communications" of others (effective 11/8/67).

(a) A person who, intentionally and without the consent of all parties to a confidential communication, uses an electronic amplifying or recording device to eavesdrop upon or record the confidential communication, whether the communication is carried on among the parties in the presence of one another or by means of a telegraph, telephone, or other device, except a radio, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500) per violation, or imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year, or in the state prison, or by both that fine and imprisonment. If the person has previously been convicted of a violation of this section or Section 631, 632.5, 632.6, 632.7, or 636, the person shall be punished by a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars ($10,000) per violation, by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year, or in the state prison, or by both that fine and imprisonment.

(b) For the purposes of this section, "person" means an individual, business association, partnership, corporation, limited liability company, or other legal entity, and an individual acting or purporting to act for or on behalf of any government or subdivision thereof, whether federal, state, or local, but excludes an individual known by all parties to a confidential communication to be overhearing or recording the communication.

(c) For the purposes of this section, "confidential communication" means any communication carried on in circumstances as may reasonably indicate that any party to the communication desires it to be confined to the parties thereto, but excludes a communication made in a public gathering or in any legislative, judicial, executive, or administrative proceeding open to the public, or in any other circumstance in which the parties to the communication may reasonably expect that the communication may be overheard or recorded.

(d) Except as proof in an action or prosecution for violation of this section, evidence obtained as a result of eavesdropping upon or recording a confidential communication in violation of this section is not admissible in any judicial, administrative, legislative, or other proceeding.

(e) This section does not apply (1) to any public utility engaged in the business of providing communications services and facilities, or to the officers, employees, or agents thereof, if the acts otherwise prohibited by this section are for the purpose of construction, maintenance, conduct, or operation of the services and facilities of the public utility, (2) to the use of any instrument, equipment, facility, or service furnished and used pursuant to the tariffs of a public utility, or (3) to any telephonic communication system used for communication exclusively within a state, county, city and county, or city correctional facility.

(f) This section does not apply to the use of hearing aids and similar devices, by persons afflicted with impaired hearing, for the purpose of overcoming the impairment to permit the hearing of sounds ordinarily audible to the human ear.

Case law:

> See People v. Ratekin (1989) 212 Cal.App.3rd 1165: Although Pen. Code §§ 631 and 632, which prohibit wiretapping and eavesdropping, respectively, envision and describe the use of same or similar equipment to intercept communications, the manner in which such equipment is used is clearly distinguished and mutually exclusive: "Wiretapping" is intercepting communications by an unauthorized connection to the transmission line whereas "eavesdropping" is interception of communications by the use of equipment which is not connected to any transmission line.
>
> However, see People v. Guzman (2019) 8 Cal.5th 673, where in a child sexual abuse case, the California Supreme Court held that the state constitutional right to truth in evidence under Cal. Const., art. I, § 28, subd. (f)(2), abrogated the prohibition in Pen. Code § 632(d), against the admission into evidence of secretly recorded conversations in criminal proceedings. The statute did not fit within any express exception and the right to privacy under Cal. Const., art. I, § 1, was not affected. The exclusionary remedy was not revived just because of reenactments and amendments to **§

632(d). Such changes did not address the exclusionary remedy. Also, Gov't. Code § 9605 (Effect of Amendment on Time of Enactment; Presumption that Statute Enacted Last Prevails) provides that reenactment under Cal. Const., art. IV, § 9, has no effect on the unchanged portions of an amended statute. Because the exclusionary provision remained abrogated in criminal proceedings, a surreptitious recording was properly admitted into evidence in defendant's trial for committing a lewd and lascivious act upon a child.

Pen. Code § 633.8: Eavesdropping in Hostage or Barricading Situations:

(a) Legislative Intent: To allow peace officers to eavesdrop and record confidential oral communications in hostage and barricading situations.

(b) A peace officer may use an electronic amplifying or recording device to eavesdrop on and/or record, any oral communication within a particular location in response to the taking of a hostage or the barricading of a location if:

(1) The officer reasonably determines that an emergency situation exists involving the immediate danger of death or serious physical injury to any person;

(2) The officer reasonably determines that the emergency situation requires that eavesdropping occur immediately; and

(3) There are grounds upon which an order could be obtained pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 2516(2) for the offenses specified in it.

Note: 18 U.S.C. § 2516(2) permits the interception of wire, oral, or electronic communications when the interception may provide evidence of the commission of murder, kidnapping, gambling, robbery, bribery, extortion, or dealing in narcotic drugs, marijuana or other dangerous drugs, or other crimes dangerous to life, limb, or property, and is punishable by imprisonment for more than one year.

(c) Only a peace officer who has been designated by either a district attorney or by the Attorney General may make the three determinations listed above.

(d) A peace officer is not required to knock or announce his or her presence before entering or before installing or using any electronic amplifying or recording devices.

(e) An application for an order approving eavesdropping must be made within 48 hours after the eavesdropping has begun.

> Compliance with P.C. § 629.50 (setting forth the requirements of a wiretap application) is required.

(f) Any oral communications overheard must be recorded, and in such a manner as to protect the recording from alterations.

(g) A "barricading" occurs when a person refuses to come out from a covered or enclosed position, or when a person is held against his or her will and the captor has not made a demand.

(h) A "hostage situation" occurs when a person is held against his or her will and the captor has made a demand.

(i) A judge is prohibited from granting an eavesdropping application in anticipation of an emergency situation.

> A judge is required to grant the application in a barricade or hostage situation where there is probable cause to believe that an individual is committing, has committed, or is about to commit an offense listed in 18 U.S.C. § 2516(2) (see Note above) and only if the peace officer has fully complied with the requirements of this section.

(j) A peace officer who makes the decision to use an eavesdropping device is not required to undergo wiretap training pursuant to Pen. Code § 629.94.

(k) A peace officer is required to stop using an eavesdropping device when the barricade or hostage situation ends, or upon the denial by a judge for an order approving eavesdropping, whichever occurs first.

(l) Nothing in this new section is intended to affect the admissibility or inadmissibility of evidence.

Chapter 11*:

Searches of Persons:

General Rule*: "Warrantless searches and seizures (of persons) are presumed to be unreasonable, 'subject only to a few specifically established and well-delineated exceptions.'" (People v. Thomas (2018) 29 Cal.App.5th 1107, 1113; citing People v. Diaz (2011) 51 Cal.4th 84, 90.)

> "Such 'specifically established and well-delineated exceptions' include exigent circumstances, searches incident to arrest, vehicle searches, and border searches." (United States v. Cano (9th Cir. 2019) 934 F.3rd 1002, 1011.)
>
> > And then there are exceptions to each of these exceptions. "First, any search conducted under an exception must be within the scope of the exception. Second, some searches, even when conducted within the scope of the exception, may be so intrusive that they require additional justification, up to and including probable cause and a search warrant." (Ibid.; Italics added.)
>
> Of all the areas where a person has a legitimate "reasonable expectation of privacy" protecting the person from governmental intrusions, none, perhaps, is greater than that person's own body. (See Winston v. Lee (1985) 470 U.S. 753, 759 [105 S.Ct. 1611; 84 L.Ed.2nd 662]: "A compelled surgical intrusion into an individual's body for evidence . . . implicates expectations of privacy and security of such magnitude that the intrusion may be 'unreasonable;' even if likely to produce evidence of a crime.")
>
> > Note: Although not mentioned specifically anywhere in the U.S. Constitution, one's "right to privacy" is inferred from a reading of the Constitution itself, and its amendments, which provide a "penumbra" (i.e., "umbrella") effect of privacy. (See Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479 [85 S.Ct. 1678; 14 L.Ed.2nd 510].)

Need for a Warrant?

> Given the relative "mobility" of one's person, with sufficient cause, a warrantless search of a person may generally be justified, with the exception of intrusions below the skin level; e.g., blood tests. (See Missouri v. McNeely (2013) 569 U.S. 141 [133 S.Ct. 1552; 185 L.Ed.2nd 696].)
>
> See also United States v. Fowlkes (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 954, 960-968; the physical extraction of a plastic baggie by police officers during a jail strip search of a baggie from defendant's rectum without a warrant or persons with proper medical training held to be a Fourth Amendment violation.

And see Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438, 461-479 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560], and Missouri v. McNeely (2013) 569 U.S. 141 [133 S.Ct. 1552; 185 L.Ed.2nd 696], restricting the taking of a blood sample in DUI cases to when an actual consent is obtained, or exigent circumstances are present. (See "Blood Samples in DUI Cases," and "Driving Under the Influence Cases," respectively, below.)

Three Legal Justifications for Warrantless Searches of a Person*: Where lawful, warrantless searches of a person are justifiable under one or more of the following legal theories:

- Searches Incident to Arrest
- Searches with Probable Cause
- Searches with Less Than Probable Cause

Searches Incident to Arrest: A warrantless search of a person and the area within his/her immediate reach incident to that person's custodial arrest, with or without any probable cause to believe there is any contraband or evidence subject to seizure on the person, is lawful, and is justified by the need to keep contraband and weapons out of jail, to preserve any possible evidence, and to protect the officer. (Chimel v. California (1969) 395 U.S. 752 [89 S.Ct. 2034; 23 L.Ed.2nd 685]; New York v. Belton (1981) 453 U.S. 454 [101 S.Ct. 2860; 69 L.Ed.2nd 768]; United States v. Robinson (1973) 414 U.S. 218, 224 [94 S.Ct. 467; 38 L.Ed.2nd 427]; People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1213; United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2019) 913 F.3rd 793, 805; In re T.F.-G. (2023) 94 Cal.App.5th 893, 899-904.)

History Behind the Rule: See Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438, 458-461 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560], for a description of the history behind the rule, dating back from the 18th century.

Legal Justification: "The rule allowing contemporaneous searches (incident to arrest) is justified, for example, by the need to seize weapons and other things which might be used to assault an officer or effect an escape, as well as by the need to prevent the destruction of evidence of the crime—things which might easily happen where the weapon or evidence is on the accused's person or under his immediate control." (United States v. Ventresca (1965) 380 U.S. 102, 107 [85 S.Ct. 741; 13 L.Ed.2nd 684, 688]; see also Cupp v. Murphy (1973) 412 U.S. 291, 296 [93 S.Ct. 2000; 36 L.Ed.2nd 900]; Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 383 [134 S.Ct. 2473, 2483; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430]; United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 937-938; Birchfield v. North Dakota, supra.)

> "A custodial arrest of a suspect based on probable cause is a reasonable intrusion under the Fourth Amendment; that intrusion being lawful, a search incident to the arrest requires no additional justification. It is the fact of the lawful arrest which establishes the authority to search, and we hold that in the case of a lawful custodial arrest a full search of the person is not only an exception to the warrant requirement of the Fourth Amendment, but is also a 'reasonable' search under that Amendment." (United States v. Robinson (1973) 414 U.S. 218, 235 [94 S.Ct. 467; 38 L.Ed.2nd 427]; People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1213.)

"A person detained for investigation has no constitutional right to dispose of evidence." (People v. Quick (2016) 5 Cal.App.5th 1006, 1008; citing People v. Bracamonte (1975) 15 Cal.3rd 394, 405, fn. 6; and People v. Maddox (1956) 46 Cal.2nd 301, 306.)

A warrantless "search incident to arrest" may be made of an arrestee and the area within her immediate reach even though the arrestee has been handcuffed and can no longer lunge for weapons or evidence. (People v. Rege (2005) 130 Cal.App.4th 1584; but see below.)

> Per Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], this rule does not generally apply to arrests within a vehicle once the subject has been secured. See "Searches Incident to Arrest," under "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 10), below.

Establishing the rule as a blanket rule, and not an issue that is to be decided on a case by case basis, the U.S. Supreme Court eventually held that: "The authority to search the person incident to a lawful custodial arrest, while based upon the need to disarm and to discover evidence, does not depend on what a court may later decide was the probability in a particular arrest situation that weapons or evidence would in fact be found upon the person of the suspect." The mere "fact of the lawful arrest" justifies "a full search of the person." (United States v. Robinson (1973) 414 U.S. 218, 235-236 [94 S.Ct. 467; 38 L.Ed.2nd 427].)

Such a search has traditionally been justified by the need to search "for weapons, instruments of escape, and evidence of crime" upon performing a custodial arrest. (People v. Diaz (2011) 51 Cal.4th 84.)

See also the concurring, minority opinion in People v. Summers (1999) 73 Cal.App.4th 288; for an excellent description of the legal reasoning behind searches incident to arrest, and why (at least as the argument went at that time prior to the decision in Arizona v. Gant, infra.) it is irrelevant that the person arrested had already been moved from the immediate location where the arrest is first made.

Blood vs. Breath Tests in DUI Cases:

Being arrested for driving while under the influence of alcohol, taken alone, justifies warrantless breath tests but not blood tests, since breath tests are less intrusive, just as informative, and (in the case of conscious suspects) readily available. (Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438, 444-450 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560]; see also Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) 588 U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040].)

See "Blood Samples in DUI Cases," below.

Exceptions:

Cellphones: The "incident to arrest" rule, however, has been held not to apply to cellphones in that cellphones do not pose a danger to officers and once seized, it is unlikely any evidence contained in the phone is going to be destroyed. When balanced with the large amount of personal information likely to be found in cellphones, a warrantless intrusion into the phone is not justified under the Fourth Amendment absent exigent circumstances. (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 393-397 [134 S.Ct. 2473, 2489-2491; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430].)

See "Searches of High Tech Devices" (Chapter 17), below.

Blood Samples in DUI Cases: Nor does the "incident to arrest" rule apply to the extraction of a blood sample from the person of an arrestee in DUI (Driving while Under the Influence) cases (noting that the significantly lesser bodily intrusion of a breath test may be administered incident to arrest without consent or a search warrant). (Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560].)

The majority of the Supreme Court rejected the dissenting justices' use of Missouri v. McNeely (2013) 569 U.S. 141 [133 S.Ct. 1552; 185 L.Ed.2nd 696], dealing with exigent circumstances, in this context, noting that McNeely is an "exigent circumstance" case, while the issue here is a "search incident to arrest." (136 S.Ct. at p. 2180.)

See "V.C. § 13353*: Blood or Breath Tests for D.U.I. Arrestees*," under "Warrantless Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 9), above.

Physical Body Cavity Searches:

The fact that the offense for which the defendant was arrested is classified as a felony does not mean that a strip search is constitutional. The seriousness of the offense must be balanced with all the other factors. (Kennedy v. Los Angeles (9th Cir. 1989) 901 F.2nd 702, 710-716; arrest for grand theft did not warrant a visual strip search, under the circumstances.)

Being arrested for possession of marijuana does not justify a physical body cavity search at the side of the road. (See Hamilton v. Kindred (5th Cir. 2017) 845 F.3rd 659; holding that it was clearly established in the Fifth Circuit that an officer could be liable as a bystander in a civil case involving excessive force (referring to the physical body cavity search) if he knew a constitutional violation was taking place and he had a reasonable opportunity to prevent the harm.)

In Memphis, two police officers were accused of doing a body cavity search of the plaintiff by bending him over a police car, pulling down his pants, and one officer putting his finger up the plaintiff's anus to "the second knuckle joint." Plaintiff missed the statute of limitations deadline by five days as (it was alleged) the police department "slow-walked" the investigation in an alleged attempt to avoid a lawsuit. The Court, in a 2-to-1 ruling, held that plaintiff was to be excused for missing the statute of limitations and allowed the lawsuit to proceed. (Billingsly v. Doe (6th Cir. 2022) 2022 U.S.App. LEXIS 25198.)

Note: The Memphis Police Department denies the officers committed the alleged act, apparently acknowledging that if proven to be true, the officers' actions were improper.

(See "Strip Searches Restricted," under "Strip Searches of Prisoners," below.)

Legal Justification for Searches Incident to Arrest Under Debate:

The Ninth Circuit Court noted in United States v. Weaver (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F.3rd 1104, at page 1107, that searches incident to arrest have gone well beyond the "rational underpinnings" of the Supreme Court's original approval of such searches in New York v. Belton, supra. More specifically, the Court noted how "officer safety and preservation of evidence" (see Chimel v. California, supra.) are no longer a major concern when the arrestee is handcuffed and put into a nearby patrol car. And the Court quoted Supreme Court Justice O'Conner who is noted to have said that, "lower court decisions seem now to treat the ability to search a vehicle incident to the arrest of a recent occupant as a police entitlement rather than as an exception justified by the twin rationales of Chimel . . . [This is] a direct consequence of Belton's shaky foundation." (Concurring opinion in Thornton v. United States (2004) 541 U.S. 615, 624 [124 S.Ct. 2127; 158 L.Ed.2nd 905].)

Note that the U.S. Supreme Court decided in Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], that a warrantless search of a vehicle incident to arrest is lawful only when the arrestee is unsecured and within reaching distance of the passenger compartment at the time of the search.

Although the United States Supreme Court has indicated that Gant is limited to "circumstances unique to the vehicle context" (see Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 398-399 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430], citing Gant at p. 343.), at least one California court has applied it to the residential situation. (See People v. Leal (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1051; arrest in a residence.)

See "Incident to Arrest," under "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.

Then, in United States v. Maddox (9th Cir. 2010) 614 F.3rd 1046, at pages 1048-1049, the Ninth Circuit found that a search of a metal vial on the defendant's key chain was unlawful where, although under defendant's control when he was physically arrested, it was no longer within reach and was beyond defendant's ability to conceal or destroy evidence by the time it was searched because defendant had been handcuffed and put into a patrol car.

However, with the metal vial in Maddox being taken from defendant's hand as he was being arrested, an argument can be made that pursuant to the subsequent California Supreme Court decision of People v. Diaz (2011) 51 Cal.4th 84, where it was held that containers "immediately associated with the person" are still subject to a search incident to arrest, even though the suspect has been arrested and secured, and even if the container is not searched until later. (See below.)

Despite the above debate, the United States Supreme Court reiterated the need for a "categorical rule" in Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438, 466 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560], reaffirming that warrantless searches incident to arrest of the person of the arrestee and the area within his immediate reach are lawful; applying this rule to breath tests in DUI cases.

Transportation of an Arrestee; the "Custodial Arrest" Requirement:

Rule: Anyone who is arrested and is to be transported to jail, the police station, a detoxification center, home, etc. (i.e., a "custodial arrest"), may be fully searched prior to the transportation. (United States v. Robinson (1973) 414 U.S. 218 [94 S.Ct. 467; 38 L.Ed.2nd 427].)

Robinson involved an arrest for driving on a revoked license where the arrestee was transported to the police station. In the decision, the Court referred to it as a "full custodial arrest" which, in turn, was "defined at (sic) one where an officer 'would arrest a subject and subsequently transport him to a police facility for booking,' . . . ." (pg. 223, fn. 2.)

Other than this brief comment (above), and in noting that Robinson had been subjected to a "full custodial arrest," the issue of whether or not an actual transportation of the arrestee was a legal prerequisite to a "search incident to that arrest" was not discussed.

A misdemeanor cite and release at the scene of the contact (i.e., a "non-custodial arrest"), absent probable cause to believe the arrestee has evidence or contraband on him, would not be subject to a search incident to arrest for the simple reason he is not to be transported; i.e., it is not a "custodial arrest." (See People v. Brisendine (1975) 13 Cal.3rd 528; United States v. Moto (9th Cir. 1993) 982 F.2nd 1384.)

> Brisendine found a search incident to arrest to be illegal where the person was to be cited at the scene and released for a misdemeanor fire code (i.e., an illegal campfire) violation. Although Brisendine was based upon a pre-Proposition 8 interpretation of the California Constitution, the Court did note at page 548, fn. 15: "We also accept the (United States Supreme Court's) view (in Robinson and Gustafson; see below) that transportation in a police vehicle per se justifies a limited weapons search, regardless of the likelihood that a particular arrestee is armed."
>
> Although the California Supreme Court in Brisendine limited searches incident to a "custodial arrest" to looking for weapons, interpreting the more restrictive California Constitution, it still preconditioned such a search upon the transportation of the arrestee.
>
> In United States v. Moto, supra., the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal found the defendants' custodial arrest for an infraction, where they were transported to the police station, to be contrary to the provisions of P.C. § 853.5 mandating the release of the subject on his written promise to appear absent an exception to the rule, as provided for in the statute. Assuming without discussing the issue that a cite and release is not a custodial arrest, the Court here found the "search incident to arrest" to be a Fourth Amendment violation.

Moto is questionable authority in light of more recent pronouncements from both the United States and California Supreme Courts (See Atwater v. City of Lago Vista (2001) 532 U.S. 318 [121 S.Ct. 1536; 149 L.Ed.2nd 549]; Virginia v. Moore (2008) 553 U.S. 164 [128 S.Ct. 1598; 170 L.Ed.2nd 559]; People v. McKay (2002) 27 Cal.4th 601, 607; and see also United States v. McFadden (2nd Cir. 2001) 238 F.3rd 198, 204; People v. Gomez (2004) 117 Cal.App.4th 531.) have ruled that transporting and even booking a person for a fine-only offense, even if contrary to state law, is not a Fourth Amendment violation and thus does not subject the resulting evidence to suppression. However, the Court's assumption is still valid that a "custodial arrest," involving the transportation of the arrestee to a police station, is a necessary prerequisite to a lawful "search incident to arrest."

Pen. Code § 853.5 has been held to provide the exclusive grounds for a custodial arrest for an infraction. (Edgerly v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2013) 713 F.3rd 976, 981-985; citing In re Rottanak K. (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 260, and People v. Williams (1992) 3 Cal.App.4th 1100.)

In order to justify a search incident to arrest, the subject must have actually been subjected to a custodial arrest. Absent such an actual arrest and transportation, the rule that a search incident to a citation not being lawful, per Knowles v. Iowa (1998) 525 U.S. 113 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142 L.Ed.2nd 492], applies. (People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1216-1219; In re D.W. (2017) 13 Cal.App.5th 1249, 1253.)

Taking a person into "protective custody," where, for instance, he is acting irrationally (e.g., intoxicated, in this case), allows for a patdown for weapons only, prior to transporting him. (United States v. Gilmore (10th Cir.) 776 F.3rd 765.)

Search Incident To a Citation:

There is no such thing as a "search incident to a citation," because of the lack of a physical transportation of the subject from the scene of the "arrest" (i.e., citation). (Knowles v. Iowa (1998) 525 U.S. 113 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142 L.Ed.2nd 492]; see also People v. Brisendine (1975) 13 Cal.3rd 528, 538-552; People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1218; In re D.W. (2017) 13 Cal.App.5th1249, 1253.)

> In Knowles, the Court noted that the officer, under Iowa law, had the option of physically arresting or only citing the driver for a speeding violation. The officer chose to do the later. Therefore, no transportation of the defendant was contemplated. The Supreme Court, in discussing the differences between a cite and release situation (albeit for an infraction) when compared to a "custodial arrest" where the subject is transported to a police station, noted the following significant factor:
>
> > "We have recognized that . . . officer safety . . . is 'both legitimate and weighty,' [Citations]. The threat to officer safety from issuing a traffic citation, however, is a good deal less than in the case of a custodial arrest. In Robinson, we stated that a custodial arrest involves 'danger to an officer' because of 'the extended exposure which follows the taking of a suspect into custody and transporting him to the police station.' (Italics added) 414 U.S., at 234-235 . . . . We recognized that '[t]he danger to the police officer flows from the fact of the arrest, and its attendant proximity, stress, and uncertainty, and not from the grounds for arrest.' Id., at 234, n. 5 . . . . A routine traffic stop, on the other hand, is a relatively brief encounter and 'is more analogous to a so-called "Terry stop" . . . than to a formal arrest.' [Citations] ("Where there is no formal arrest ... a person might well be less hostile to the police and less likely to take conspicuous, immediate steps to destroy incriminating evidence"). (Parenthesis in original; pgs. 487-488.)

An notable exception to this rule is when there is probable cause to search for illegally possessed marijuana. The fact that the illegal simple possession of marijuana is a citable offense only, does not preclude officers from doing a probable cause vehicle search for illegally possessed marijuana, such as when the occupants of the vehicle are all under the age of 21. (See (People v. Castro (2022) 86 Cal.App.5th 314; finding the "automobile exception" to the warrant requirement applicable to a search of a vehicle for marijuana, and noting (at p. 320) that "[w]here such probable cause exists, a law enforcement officer may search the vehicle 'irrespective of whether [the offense] is an infraction and not an arrestable offense.'" Quoting from People v. McGee (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 796, 805; and People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, 564.)

Note: See "Search Incident to a Citation," under "Other Requirements and Limitations," below.

Note also that the California Penal Code dictates that misdemeanor-related laws apply equally to infractions. (Pen. Code § 19.7)

Officer's Intent to Transport:

Although there has to be a transportation of the suspect in order to justify a search incident to arrest, the physical arrest does not need to be for an offense for which custody (as opposed to a citation) is mandatory. (Gustafson v. Florida (1973) 414 U.S. 260 [94 S.Ct. 488; 38 L.Ed.2nd 456].)

In Gustafson, defendant was lawfully arrested for driving without a valid license in his possession and searched incident to that arrest. The officer had planned to transport the defendant to the police station prior to the search; a lawful procedure under Florida law. The search was upheld as a lawful search incident to this "lawful custodial arrest."

At page 265, the Gustafson Court notes that: "Though the officer here was not required to take the petitioner into custody by police regulations as he was in Robinson, and there did not exist a departmental policy establishing the conditions under which a full-scale body search should be conducted, we do not find these differences determinative of the constitutional issue. [Citation] It is sufficient that the officer had probable cause to arrest the petitioner and that he lawfully effectuated the arrest, and placed the petitioner in custody."

This comment, which is not further explained, seems to recognize a difference between a "full custodial arrest" (as it is referred to in Robinson) and the mere citation and release at the scene.

> Also, in footnote 3 (Id., at p. 266), again inferring a difference between citing and releasing at the scene and the taking of the suspect into "custody" for transportation, the Court notes that: "Smith (the officer) testified that he wrote about eight to ten traffic citations per week, and that about three or four out of every 10 persons he arrested for the offense of driving without a license were taken into custody (and transported) to the police station. Smith indicated that an offender is more likely to be taken into custody if he does not reside in the city of Eau Gallie. Finally, Smith testified that after making a custodial arrest, he always searches the arrestee before placing him into the patrol car."
>
> > Note: It therefore is helpful if the officer is able to honestly testify to some objective standard he or she uses for determining when a person arrested for such an offense is to be transported, minimizing the argument that the officer only decided, after the search, to transport the arrestee.

Transporting an arrested minor (even if for only a "status offense" such as a curfew violation or truancy), whether the minor is to be transported home (In re Demetrius A. (1989) 208 Cal.App.3rd 1245; prowling.) or to a police station (In re Charles C. (1999) 76 Cal.App.4th 420; curfew.), justifies a search incident to arrest. (See also In re Humberto O. (2000) 80 Cal.App.4th 237; truancy.)

> In Humberto O., the juvenile was taken into custody for a truancy violation. However, it was noted in the decision that "the officers planned to cuff defendant's hands behind his back, put him in the patrol car, and transport him to school." (pg. 240.) Education Code §§ 48264 and 48265 require that the minor be transported to his parents or to school (among other choices). (Id., at p. 241, fn. 2.) "The limited nature of a section 48264 arrest requires that the minor be transported to school, as the officers here planned to do." (Id., at p. 244.) Searching the backpack he was carrying incident to this custodial arrest was upheld.
>
> In In re Demetrius A., supra, without discussing the issue of the necessity for a transportation, it was noted that the minor was arrested for prowling and was going to be transported home. A search incident to such a custodial arrest was lawful.

In In re Charles C., supra, the minor was "taken into temporary custody" (i.e., "arrested," see Id., at p. 425, fn. 3.) and transported to the police station where he was searched "incident to the arrest." The search was upheld, holding that it was irrelevant that the search was not conducted until after the transportation. (But see "Contemporaneous in Time and Place" requirement, below.) Without further discussing the issue, the Court did note that citing (albeit for an infraction) at the scene and releasing the subject does not justify a search incident to such a citation. (Id., at p. 424, fn. 2, citing Knowles v. Iowa (1998) 525 U.S. 113 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142 L.Ed.2nd 492].)

Contemporaneous in Time and Place:

General Rule: The "search incident to arrest" theory is, as a general rule, only applicable if the search is conducted "contemporaneous in time and place:" I.e., the search must be conducted at the time and location of the arrest. Searching after transportation to another location cannot be justified under this theory, absent some practical necessity for moving the person first. (Chimel v. California (1969) 395 U.S. 752 [89 S.Ct. 2034; 23 L.Ed.2nd 685]; see also People v. Ingham (1992) 5 Cal.App.4th 326; People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1037.)

"(The) 'justifications (for allowing a search incident to arrest) are absent where a search is remote in time or place from the arrest. Once an accused is under arrest and in custody, then a search made at another place, without a warrant, is simply not incident to the arrest.'" (United States v. Ventresca (1965) 380 U.S. 102, 107 [85 S.Ct. 741; 13 L.Ed.2nd 684, 688]; quoting Preston v. United States (1964) 376 U.S. 364, 367 [84 S.Ct. 881; 11 L.Ed.2nd 777, 780-781].)

See also United States v. McLaughlin (9th Cir. 1999) 170 F.3rd 889, where the search was conducted five minutes after the arrest, where the officer first drove the defendant from the scene. "The relevant distinction turns not upon the moment of arrest versus the moment of the search but upon whether the arrest and search are so separated in time or by intervening acts that the latter cannot be said to have been incident to the former." (Id., at p. 893, quoting United States v. Abdul-Saboor (D.C. Cir. 1996) 85 F.3rd 664, 668; see also United States v. Hudson (9th Cir. 1996) 100 F.3rd 1409; search three minutes after the arrest valid as a search incident to arrest.)

"In evaluating the reasonableness of a search incident to arrest, we have examined not only whether the area searched was within the arrestee's 'immediate control,' but also whether any event occurred after the arrest that rendered the search unreasonable. (United States v.) Maddox, 614 F.3rd (1046) at 1048. While '[t]here is no fixed outer limit for the number of minutes that may pass between an arrest and a valid, warrantless search,' (United States v. McLaughlin, 170 F.3rd 889, 892 (9th Cir. 1999), we have said that the search must be 'spatially and temporally incident to the arrest,' United States v. Camou, 773 F.3rd 932, 937 (9th Cir. 2014). See also United States v. Smith, 389 F.3rd 944, 951 (9th Cir. 2004) (per curiam) (interpreting the temporal requirement to mean that the search must be 'roughly contemporaneous with the arrest'); United States v. Monclavo-Cruz, 662 F.2nd 1285, 1288 (9th Cir. 1981) (holding that the search of the purse of an arrestee 'more than an hour after her arrest at the station house' was not valid incident to arrest)." (United States v. Cook (9th Cir. 2015) 808 F.3rd 1195, 1198-1200; upholding the search of defendant's backpack immediately upon his arrest despite him being handcuffed at the time, differentiating the facts from Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], where the defendant was fully secured by being not only handcuffed, but also locked inside a patrol car.)

> But see United States v. Davis (4th Cir. 2021) 997 F.3rd 191, where the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeal applied the theory of Gant (above) to an arrestee's backpack that he dropped on the ground upon being arrested following a foot pursuit, and which was searched after he was arrested and handcuffed.

A search of a cellphone made an hour and twenty minutes after the defendant's arrest, with a string of intervening acts occurring between the arrest and the eventual search, is too far removed from the arrest to be considered a search incident to the defendant's arrest. (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 937-939.)

However, see United States v. Edwards (1974) 415 U.S. 800 [94 S.Ct. 1234; 39 L.Ed.2nd 771], where it was held that police could seize the defendant's clothing and conduct tests for evidence incident to an arrest that had occurred 10 hours earlier. Edwards noted that officers were authorized to seize the defendant's clothing immediately upon arrest, but they delayed because "it was late at night; no substitute clothing was then available." (Id. at p. 805.) The Court in Edwards reasoned: "This was no more than taking from respondent the effects in his immediate possession that constituted evidence of crime. This was and is a normal incident of a custodial arrest, and reasonable delay in effectuating it does not change the fact that Edwards was no more imposed upon than he could have been at the time and place of the arrest or immediately upon arrival at the place of detention." (Ibid.)

Where defendant's car was searched after his arrest, when the arrest took place two blocks from his car and necessitated that he be transported back to his car before it was searched, it was held that the search "did not take place 'when and where' he was lawfully arrested," resulting in a finding that the "search incident to arrest" theory did not apply. (People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1035-1037.)

Search Before or After Arrest:

Where there is preexisting probable cause to arrest, it is irrelevant whether the search occurs before or after the formal act of arrest. (In re Lennies H. (2005) 126 Cal.App.4th 1232, 1239-1240; United States v. Smith (9th Cir. 2005) 389 F.3rd 944.)

"An officer with probable cause to arrest can search incident to the arrest before making the arrest. (Rawlings v. Kentucky (1980) 448 U.S. 98, 111; 100 S.Ct. 2556; 65 L.Ed.2nd 633; People v. Adams (1985) 175 Cal.App.3rd 855, 861 . . .) (People v. Limon (1993) 17 Cal.App.4th 524, 538, . . .) The fact that a defendant is not formally arrested until after the search does not invalidate the search if probable cause to arrest existed prior to the search and the search was substantially contemporaneous with the arrest. (Rawlings v. Kentucky, supra, 448 U.S. at p. 111; People v. Adams, supra, 175 Cal.App.3rd at p. 961, . . .)" (In re Lennies H., supra. See also People v. Sims (2021) 59 Cal.App.5th 943, 954, fn. 5.)

Note: These are "probable cause" cases, and cannot be used to justify a pre-arrest search conducted solely on a "search incident to arrest" theory.

See also "Order of Search & Arrest," under "Searches with Probable Cause," below.

Exceptions:

A search of a container (e.g., a purse or a backpack) that was lawfully searched incident to arrest, may again be searched at a later time (e.g., at the police station) without a warrant in that with the first incident-to-arrest search, the suspect's expectation of privacy has been reduced to the point where the later warrantless search is then reasonable. (United States v. Burnette (9th Cir. 1983) 698 F.2nd 1038, 1049; see also United States v. Cook (9th Cir. 2015) 808 F.3rd 1195, 1198-1200; United States v. Lustig (9th Cir. 2016) 830 F.3rd 1075, 1085.)

However, probable cause to cite a person for a traffic offense is not the equivalent of having probable cause to arrest. Search incident to a citation is not lawful. (People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1216-1219; citing Knowles v. Iowa (1989) 525 U.S. 113 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142 L.Ed.2nd 492.)

See "Search Incident to a Citation," under "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above, and under "Other Requirements and Limitations," immediately below.

Other Requirements and Limitations:

Search Incident to a Citation: There is no such thing as a "search incident to a citation," because of the lack of the right to physically transport the subject. (Knowles v. Iowa (1998) 525 U.S. 113 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142 L.Ed.2nd 492]; see also People v. Brisendine (1975) 13 Cal.3rd 528, 538-552.)

However, it is not unconstitutional to make a custodial arrest (i.e., transporting to jail or court) of a person arrested for a minor misdemeanor (Atwater v. City of Lago Vista (2001) 532 U.S. 318 [121 S.Ct. 1536; 149 L.Ed.2nd 549]; Virginia v. Moore (2008) 553 U.S. 164 [128 S.Ct. 1598; 170 L.Ed.2nd 559].); or even for a fine-only, infraction. (People v. McKay (2002) 27 Cal.4th 601, 607; see also United States v. McFadden (2nd Cir. 2001) 238 F.3rd 198, 204.)

In order to justify a search incident to arrest, however, the subject must have actually been subjected to a custodial arrest. Absent such an actual arrest and transportation, the rule that a search incident to a citation not being lawful, per Knowles v. Iowa (1998) 525 U.S. 113 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142 L.Ed.2nd 492], applies. (People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1216-1219; In re D.W. (2017) 13 Cal.App.5th1249, 1253.)

California's statutory provisions require the release of misdemeanor arrestees in most circumstances. (E.g., see P.C. §§ 853.5, 853.6, V.C. §§ 40303, 40500) However, violation of these statutory requirements is not a constitutional violation and, therefore, should not result in suppression of any evidence recovered as a result of such an arrest. (People v. McKay, supra, at pp. 607-619, a violation of V.C. § 21650.1 (riding a bicycle in the wrong direction); People v. Gomez (2004) 117 Cal.App.4th 531, 538-540, seat belt violation (V.C. § 27315(d)(1)), citing: Atwater v. City of Lago Vista, supra; see also People v. Bennett (2011) 197 Cal.App.4th 907, 918.)

> See "Sanctions for Violations," "Misdemeanors and Infractions," under "Arrests" (Chapter 5), above.
>
> See also "Search Incident to a Citation," under "Transportation of an Arrestee; the 'Custodial Arrest' Requirement," above.

An notable exception to this rule is when there is probable cause to search for marijuana. The fact that the illegal simple possession of marijuana is a citable offense only, does not preclude officers from doing a probable cause vehicle search for illegally possessed marijuana. (See (People v. Castro (2022) 86 Cal.App.5th 314; finding the "automobile exception" to the warrant requirement applicable to a search of a vehicle for marijuana, and noting (at p. 320) that "[w]here such probable cause exists, a law enforcement officer may search the vehicle 'irrespective of whether [the offense] is an infraction and not an arrestable offense.'" Quoting from People v. McGee (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 796, 805; and People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, 564.)

Searches of Containers: Such a search includes any containers found within the area of the defendant's arrest. (New York v. Belton (1981) 453 U.S 454 [101 S.Ct. 2860; 69 L.Ed.2nd 768]; People v. Gutierrez (1984) 163 Cal.App.3rd 332; United States v. Robinson (1973) 414 U.S. 218 [94 S.Ct. 467; 38 L.Ed.2nd 427]; cigarette package found on defendant's person.)

> A few years after Robinson, the Supreme Court clarified that the "search incident to arrest" exception was limited to "personal property . . . immediately associated with the person of the arrestee." (United States v. Chadwick (1977) 433 U.S. 1 [97 S.Ct. 2476; 53 L.Ed.2nd 538].)
>
> It matters not that the container searched did not belong to the person arrested, so long as it was found within the arrested defendant's "lunging area." (People v. Prance (1991) 226 Cal.App.3rd 1525; People v. Mitchell (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 672.)

But see Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], below, severely limiting the search incident to an arrest where the suspect has already been secured.

And see Riley v. California ((2014) 573 U.S. 373[134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430], holding that cellphones found on an arrestee may not be searched absent a search warrant.

Cellphones are not containers for purposes of the vehicle exception to the search warrant requirement. (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 941-943.)

See also United States v. Lara (9th Cir. 2016) 815 F.3rd 605, 610-611; declining to include defendant's cellphone under the category of a "container," in defendant's Fourth waiver search conditions.

In United States v. Davis (4th Cir. 2021) 997 F.3rd 191, The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeal applied the theory of Gant (above) to an arrestee's backpack that he dropped on the ground upon being arrested following a foot pursuit, and which was searched after he was arrested and handcuffed.

Property of Booked Person: Property in the possession or under the control of a subject who is booked into custody is subject to search: "Once articles have lawfully fallen into the hands of the police they may examine them to see if they have been stolen, test them to see if they have been used in the commission of a crime, return them to the prisoner on his release, or preserve them for use as evidence at the time of trial. (People v. Robertson (1966) 240 Cal.App.2nd 99, 105-106 . . . .) During their period of police custody an arrested person's personal effects, like his person itself, are subject to reasonable inspection, examination, and test. (People v. Chaigles (1923) 237 N.Y. 193 [142 N.E. 583, 32 A.L.R. 676], Cardozo, J.)" (People v. Rogers (1966) 241 Cal.App.2nd 384, 389.)

But see Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], discussed below.

And see People v. Diaz (2011) 51 Cal.4th 84, allowing a search incident to arrest of items "immediately associated with the person," even if not done until sometime after the suspect's arrest.

Also see Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430], below, holding that cellphones, seized incident to arrest, may not be searched without a search warrant.

Note: By inference, Riley overrules People v. Diaz, supra, in so far as it relates to cellphones. (See People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1212-1226.)

Seizure and Search of Children:

As with adults, children also possess a Fourth Amendment right to be secure in their persons against unreasonable searches and seizures. Medical examinations that are at least partially investigatory are well within the ambit of the Fourth Amendment. Searches conducted without a warrant are per se unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment, subject only to a few specifically established and well-delineated exceptions. (Mann v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2018) 907 F.3rd 1154, 1164-1167; none of such exceptions applying in this case.)

The parents' Fourteenth Amendment due process rights are violated by the warrantless taking as well, with the performance of medical examinations on their children without notice to the parents and absent exigent circumstances or a court order. (Id., at pp. 1160-1164.)

A minor (14 years old) was seized without sufficient probable cause when a detective interviewed him at school concerning a four-year-old's allegations of child molest, when the victim's account of the facts were inconsistent and conflicting. Further investigation should have been conducted given the problems with the minor's story. (Stoot v. City of Everett (9th Cir. 2009) 582 F.3rd 910, 918-921; but qualified immunity supported summary judgment in the officer's favor.)

Arrest in the Home: A person arrested in his home is subject to search as is the area within his immediate reach. (People v. Summers (1999) 73 Cal.App.4th 288; see the concurring, minority opinion for an excellent description of the legal reasoning behind searches incident to arrest, and why it is irrelevant that the person arrested had already been moved from the immediate location where the arrest is first made.)

However, the U.S. Supreme Court recently restricted searches incident to arrest when searching a vehicle in Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485]. In Gant, it was held that a warrantless search of a vehicle incident to arrest is lawful only when the arrestee is unsecured and within reaching distance of the passenger compartment at the time of the search.

The theory of Gant may not be restricted to vehicle searches. The same theory, disallowing a search incident to arrest when the suspect has already been secured, has been held to be applicable as well to an arrest within one's residence. (People v. Leal (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1051.)

The Leal court, citing Summers and Gant, noted that there are limitations to this rule: "A different rule of reasonableness applies when the police have a degree of control over the suspect but do not have control of the entire situation. In such circumstances—e.g., in which third parties known to be nearby are unaccounted for, or in which a suspect has not yet been fully secured and retains a degree of ability to overpower police or destroy evidence—the Fourth Amendment does not bar the police from searching the immediate area of the suspect's arrest as a search incident to an arrest." (Id., at p. 1060.)

It was also noted in Leal that the law was sufficiently settled prior to Gant that "good faith" reliance upon prior authority did not allow for the admissibility of the evidence recovered in this case. (Id., at pp. 1065-1066.)

Arrests in a Vehicle: The same applies to a person arrested in his vehicle; the person and the passenger area (as the "lunging area") of that vehicle may be searched incident to that arrest. (New York v. Belton (1981) 453 U.S 454 [101 S.Ct. 2860; 69 L.Ed.2nd 768].)

But see Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], above, and "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.

Exceptions:

Strip Searches: A search incident to arrest does not include the right to conduct a "strip search," which, as a "serious intrusion upon personal rights" and "an invasion of personal rights of the first magnitude" (Chapman v. Nichols (10th Cir. 1993) 989 F.2nd 393, 395-396.), is generally not allowed prior to booking. (Foote v. Spiegel (Utah 1995) 903 F.Supp. 1463.)

See "Strip Searches of Prisoners," below.

Cellphones Found on the Person: A warrantless search incident to arrest also does not include cellphones found on the person at the time of his arrest. (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430].)

However, the Supreme Court also noted (134 S.Ct. at p. 2494) that the lack of a warrant may be excused where "exigent circumstances" are found, to include:

- The need to prevent the imminent destruction of evidence;
- To pursue a fleeing suspect; and
- To assist persons who are seriously injured or are threatened with imminent injury.

Cellphones are not containers for purposes of the vehicle exception to the search warrant requirement. (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 941-943.)

See also United States v. Lara (9th Cir. 2016) 815 F.3rd 605, 610-611; declining to include defendant's cellphone under the category of a "container," in defendant's Fourth waiver search conditions.

The "Inevitable Discovery" doctrine also applies, excusing an illegal search of one's cellphone incident to his arrest, where it is shown by a preponderance of the evidence that law enforcement would have inevitably recovered the same information by lawful means. (People v. Fayed (2020) 9 Cal.5th 147, 182-184; conceding that a warrantless search of defendant's cellphone incident to his arrest, recovering only his cellphone number, was illegal under Riley, but where the same number had also been lawfully recovered from his wife's (the murder victim) phone and from several other sources, it was held that the "inevitable discovery" rule applied.)

See "Doctrine of Inevitable Discovery," under "Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 8), above.

See "Seizures and Searches of High Tech Devices" (Chapter 17), below.

Searches with Probable Cause:

Rule: A person may also be searched without a search warrant any time a law enforcement officer has "probable cause" to believe the person has contraband or other seizeable property on him. (People v. Coleman (1991) 229 Cal.App.3rd 321.)

The "Exigency" excusing the need for a search warrant, obviously, is the fact that when probable cause develops to believe that the a person possesses contraband or evidence of a crime, there will not be an opportunity to obtain a search warrant without risking the loss or destruction of the items sought. (See below)

Probable Cause may be found from the defendant's own admissions which, without independent evidence of the corpus of the crime, would not be admissible in court. The likelihood of conviction is not relevant in establishing probable cause to arrest. (People v. Rios (1956) 46 Cal.2nd 297; defendant's admission that he had injected drugs two weeks earlier sufficient to establish probable cause for the past possession of a controlled substance. Search incident to the arrest was therefore lawful.)

When defendant refused to empty his pockets on the hood of a federal law enforcement officer's car, there was no search. But after defendant admitted to possessing marijuana, and was then asked a second time to empty his pockets, this time complying, doing so constituted a search. But with defendant's admission to possessing marijuana, the search was based upon probable cause and lawful. (United States v. Pope (9th Cir. 2012) 686 F.3rd 1078, 1080-1084.)

Pen. Code § 833; Authority to Search: By statute, in California, peace officers are authorized to search any person the officer has "legal cause to arrest" for "dangerous weapons," and then seize such weapon pending the determination whether the person will continue to be arrested.

Note: In that most of the rules on "searches incident to arrest" are constitutionally-based case decisions, anywhere they might differ from the language of this statute (e.g., the need to transport the arrested person as a condition of a search incident to arrest; see above), the case law is likely to take precedence.

See "Frisks" below.

Order of Search & Arrest: It is irrelevant whether the officer, with probable cause to believe a subject possesses contraband or some other tangible evidence of a crime, searches first and then arrests, or arrests first and then searches incident to that arrest (Rawlings v. Kentucky (1980) 448 U.S. 98, 110 [100 S.Ct. 2556; 65 L.Ed.2nd 633, 645]; People v. Gonzales (1989) 216 Cal.App.3rd 1185, 1189; People v. Avila (1997) 58 Cal.App.4th 1069.), so long as the search is "substantially contemporaneous" with the arrest. (See People v. Cockrell (1965) 63 Cal.2nd 659, 666; People v. Nieto (1990) 219 Cal.App.3rd 1275, 1277; see also United States v. Anchondo (10th Cir. 1998) 156 F.3rd 1043, 1045-1046.)

A search of a vehicle incident to arrest is lawful where there exists probable cause to arrest before the search is conducted, even if, in the sequence of events, the search takes place before the actual physical arrest of the defendant, so long as the search is "roughly contemporaneous" with the arrest. (United States v. Smith (9th Cir. 2005) 389 F.3rd 944; see also United States v. Lugo (10th Cir. 1999) 170 F.3rd 996.)

> But see Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], below, under "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), severely limiting the "search incident to arrest" theory, at least in vehicles.

The old California rule of requiring a valid arrest, even of an unconscious suspect, prior to the extraction of a blood sample (See People v. Superior Court* [Hawkins] (1972) 6 Cal.3rd 757, 762.), was abrogated by passage of Proposition 8, in June, 1982. Now, so long as probable cause exists to believe that the defendant was driving while intoxicated, a formal arrest is not a prerequisite to a warrantless seizure of a blood sample. (People v. Trotman (1989) 214 Cal.App.3rd 430, 435; People v. Deltoro (1989) 214 Cal.App.3rd 1417, 1422, 1425.)

> But see Missouri v. McNeely (2013) 569 U.S. 141 [133 S.Ct. 1552; 185 L.Ed.2nd 696], requiring a search warrant prior to the blood draw except in exigent circumstances.
>
> The implied consent provisions under Veh. Code § 23612(a)(5), where, by statute, blood may be drawn from an unconscious or dead DUI suspect, does not overcome the need for a search warrant without a showing of exigent circumstances. (People v. Arredondo (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 186, 193-205; no exigency found, pp. 205-206.)
>
> > Note: Petition for Review was dismissed and the case remanded in light of the decision in Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) 588 U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040], where the U.S. Supreme Court held that when a DUI arrestee is unconscious, this fact alone will "almost always" constitute an exigency, allowing for a warrantless blood draw. However, this "almost always" language should not be taken too literally. There still has to be shown to be an exigency, necessitating a warrantless blood draw. (See People v. Alvarez (2023) 98 Cal.App.5th 531, 541-551.)

Knowles v. Iowa (1998) 525 U.S. 113 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142 L.Ed.2nd 492], does not prevent a search incident to a lawful arrest from occurring before the arrest itself, even if the crime of arrest was different from the crime for which probable cause existed. The smell of fresh and burnt marijuana in defendant's car, along with plastic baggies in the glove compartment and defendant's unusual search of the glove compartment, indicated a fair probability that he had committed, was committing, or was about to commit the offense of marijuana transportation, per H&S § 11360. Thus, the search prior to arrest was supported by probable cause. (United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2019) 913 F.3rd 793, 799-801.)

> Per the Court: "(A) search, incident to a lawful arrest, does not necessarily need to follow the arrest to comport with the Fourth Amendment. United States v. Smith, 389 F.3rd 944, 951 (9th Cir. 2004) (citing Rawlings v. Kentucky, 448 U.S. 98, 111, 100 S.Ct. 2556, 65 L.Ed.2nd 633 (1980)). Instead, probable cause to arrest must exist at the time of the search, and the arrest must follow 'during a continuous sequence of events.' Id. If these conditions are satisfied, the fact that the arrest occurred shortly after the search does not affect the search's legality." (Pg. 799.)

Intrusions into the Human Body: Of all the areas where a person has a legitimate "reasonable expectation of privacy" protecting the person from governmental intrusions, none, perhaps, is greater than that person's own body. (See Winston v. Lee (1985) 470 U.S. 753, 759 [105 S.Ct. 1611; 84 L.Ed.2nd 662]; "A compelled surgical intrusion into an individual's body for evidence . . . implicates expectations of privacy and security of such magnitude that the intrusion may be 'unreasonable;' even if likely to produce evidence of a crime.")

> Substantial Justification: "A body search . . . requires 'a more substantial justification' than other searches." (Italics added; George v. Edholm (9th Cir. 2014) 752 F.3rd 1206, 1217-1220; citing Winston v. Lee, supra, at p. 767.)
>
> "The Interests in Human Dignity and Privacy" forbid intrusions into the human body "on the mere chance that desired evidence might be obtained." (Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 768 [86 S.Ct. 1826; 16 L.Ed.2nd 908, 918]; People v. Bracamonte (1975) 15 Cal.3rd 394, 402-405.)
>
> Shocking the Conscience: Searches which "shock the conscience," or which are unreasonable under the circumstances, are not allowed. (Rochin v. California (1952) 342 U.S 165 [72 S.Ct. 205; 96 L.Ed. 183]; Winston v. Lee, supra, at pp. 760-763 [84 L.Ed.2nd at pp. 668-671].)
>
> > Although the Rochin case was determined under the Fourteenth Amendment "due process" clause, the Supreme Court has since determined that this type of issue is to be viewed under the scrutiny of the reasonableness of the search under the Fourth Amendment. (County of Sacramento v. Lewis (1998) 523 U.S. 833, 849 [140 L.Ed.2nd 1043]; George v. Edholm, supra, at p. 1217; Mann v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2018) 907 F.3rd 1154, 1160, fn. 8.)

Factors to Consider: In determining the lawfulness of such an intrusion, including the forced extraction of blood, the court will consider:

- The degree of resistance by the suspect.
- The severity of the crime at issue.
- Whether the suspect posed an immediate threat to the safety of the officers or others.
- Whether the police refused to respect a reasonable request to undergo a different form of testing.
- The degree of the authorities' need for the evidence.

(Hammer v. Gross (9th Cir. 1991) 932 F.2nd 842.)

The Supreme Court in Winston (at pp. 761-762) has identified three other factors to consider:

(1) The extent to which the procedure may threaten the safety or health of the individual,

(2) The extent of intrusion upon the individual's dignitary interests in personal privacy and bodily integrity, and

(3) The community's interest in fairly and accurately determining guilt or innocence.

(See also George v. Edholm (9th Cir. 2014) 752 F.3rd 1206, at pp. 1217-1220.)

Driving Under the Influence Cases:

Urine Samples: Routine urine screens taken by state agents constitute searches within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment whether or not the results are reported to the police. (Mann v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2018) 907 F.3rd 1154, 1164; citing Ferguson v. City of Charleston (2001) 532 U.S. 67, 76 fn.9 [121 S.Ct. 1281; 149 L.Ed.2nd 205].)

Blood Extractions: "The extraction of blood or other materials from a person's body for purposes of chemical testing constitutes a search and seizure for purposes of this guarantee." (i.e., the Fourth Amendment). (People v. Arredondo (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 186, 193; citing People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1119; see also Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560]; People v. Nault (2021) 72 Cal.App.5th 1144, 1148.)

Note: Petition for Review was dismissed in People v. Arredondo and the case remanded in light of the decision in Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) 588 U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040], where the U.S. Supreme Court held that when a DUI arrestee is unconscious, this fact alone will "almost always" constitute an exigency, allowing for a warrantless blood draw.

"The Fourth Amendment provides in relevant part that '[t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause.' Our cases have held that a warrantless search of the person is reasonable only if it falls within a recognized exception. See, e.g., United States v. Robinson, 414 U.S. 218, 224, 94 S.Ct. 467, 38 L.Ed.2nd 427 (1973). That principle applies to the type of search at issue in this case, which involved a compelled physical intrusions beneath McNeely's skin and into his veins to obtain a sample of his blood for use as evidence in a criminal investigation. Such an invasion of bodily integrity implicates an individual's 'most personal and deep-rooted expectations of privacy.' Winston v. Lee, 470 U.S. 753, 760, 105 S.Ct. 1161, 84 L.Ed.2nd 662 (1985); see also Skinner* v. *Railway Labor Executives' Assn., 489 U.S. 602, 616, 109 S.Ct. 1402, 103 L.Ed.2nd 639 (1989)." (Missouri v. McNeely (2013) 569 U.S. 141, 148 [133 S.Ct. 1552; 185 L.Ed.2nd 696].)

See also People v. Meza (2018) 23 Cal.App.5th 604, 610; "A blood draw is a search under the Fourth Amendment."

"A blood draw is a search of the person." (People v. Lopez (2020) 46 Cal.App.5th 317, 324, citing Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438 [195 L.Ed.2nd 560; 136 S.Ct. 2160]. See also People v. Alvarez (2023) 98 Cal.App.5th 531, 546-551.)

Blood vs. Breath Tests: Birchfield v. North Dakota, supra, at pp. 460-464 [136 S.Ct. at pp. 2176-2178]:

> Blood tests are a "significant intrusion:"
>
> - They require a "piercing of the skin."
>
> - "(U)nlike a breath test, (a blood test) places in the hands of law enforcement authorities a sample that can be preserved and from which it is possible to extract information beyond a simple BAC (blood-alcohol concentration) reading."
>
> A breath test, on the other hand, while also a "search," constitutes a relatively minor intrusion (i.e., "does not "implicat[e] significant privacy concerns") in that:
>
> - It "'do(es) not require piercing the skin' and entail(s) 'a minimum of inconvenience.'"
>
> - "(B)reath tests are capable of revealing only one bit of information, the amount of alcohol in the subject's breath. . . . No sample of anything is left in the possession of the police."
>
> - "(P)articipation in a breath test is not an experience that is likely to cause any great enhancement in the embarrassment that is inherent in any arrest."

Lesser Intrusions: Lesser warrantless intrusions into a human body may, under some circumstances such as driving under the influence cases, be upheld with a sufficient exigency. (Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 768 [86 S.Ct. 1826; 16 L.Ed.2nd 908, 918]; e.g., blood withdrawal.)

> It is recognized by the courts that the "'delay necessary to procure a warrant . . . may result in the destruction of valuable evidence,' 'blood and breath samples taken to measure whether these substances were in the bloodstream when a triggering event occurred must be obtained as soon as possible.'" (People v. Thompson (2006) 38 Cal.4th 811, 825; quoting Skinner v. Railway Labor Executives' Assn. (1989) 489 U.S. 602, 623 [103 L.Ed.2nd 639]; see also People v. Toure (2015) 232 Cal.App.4th 1096, 1103-1104.)

> "Invasions of the body, including nonconsensual extractions of an incarcerated felon's blood for DNA profiling, are searches entitled to the protections of the Fourth Amendment. (Skinner v. Railway Labor Executives' Assn. (1989) 489 U.S. 602, 616–617 [103 L.Ed.2nd 639; 109 S.Ct. 1402].) 'As the text of the Fourth Amendment indicates, the ultimate measure of the constitutionality of a governmental search is "reasonableness."' (Vernonia School Dist. 47J v. Acton (1995) 515 U.S. 646, 652 [132 L.Ed.2nd 564; 115 S.Ct. 2386].)" (People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1119-1120.)

Missouri v. McNeely and Schmerber v. California:

Schmerber v. California, supra, was limited to its circumstances (i.e., with a traffic accident to investigate and the defendant hospitalized) by Missouri v. McNeely (2013) 569 U.S. 141 [133 S.Ct. 1552; 185 L.Ed.2nd 696], where the Supreme Court held that being arrested for driving while under the influence did not allow for a non-consensual warrantless blood test absent exigent circumstances beyond the fact that the blood was metabolizing at a normal rate.

> "In those drunk-driving investigations where police officers can reasonably obtain a warrant before a blood sample can be drawn without significantly undermining the efficacy of the search, the Fourth Amendment mandates that they do so." (Id. at p. 152.)

Schmerber was not overruled by McNeely, but merely differentiated on its facts. (Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438, 482-485 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560].)

> In Schmerber, the defendant had been in a traffic collision and had to be transported to the hospital due to his injuries. The Court in McNeely pointed out "that where time had to be taken to bring the accused to a hospital and to investigate the scene of the accident, there was no time to seek out a magistrate and secure a warrant." (Citation) 'Given these special facts,' we found that it was appropriate > for the police to act without a warrant. (Citation)" (Missouri v. McNeely, supra, at p. 151.)

However, when otherwise lawful, Schmerber requires no more than that blood be drawn in a constitutionally reasonable manner, which is not necessarily limited to being by a physician and in a hospital. Drawing blood by someone qualified to do so, and even in a jail or a police station, will normally meet the requirement that it be done in a "medically approved manner." Also, it is reasonable for the officer himself, observing the blood-draw procedure, as opposed to an expert, to provide the necessary testimony to meet this standard. (People v. Cuevas (2013) 218 Cal.App.4th 1278, 1283-1286; People v. Harris (2015) 234 Cal.App.4th 671, 692-697.)

Also, where actual consent is found (e.g., by signing a consent form), the rule of McNeely is irrelevant. An officer's testimony, which the trial court, in its discretion, found to be credible, to the effect that the defendant expressly consented, is sufficieint to allow for a warrantless blood draw. (People v. Elder (2017) 11 Cal.App.5th 123, 130-131.)

In determining whether or not exigent circumstances apply to relieve an officer of the necessity of first obtaining a search warrant, a court is to consider the "totality of the circumstances." (People v. Meza (2018) 23 Cal.App.5th 604, 610-612; citing Missouri v. McNeely, supra, at p. 149, and noting that "technological advances" in the expeditious obtaining of search warrants must be considered, and declining to establish a bright line rule that DUI cases involving traffic accidents are exempt in all cases from the warrant requirement.)

> In Meza, it was held that defendant's blood-alcohol level evidence should have been suppressed due to the failure of the arresting officer to obtain a search warrant, but that the error was harmless in light of evidence of an earlier blood sample obtained by the hospital, and for which there was testimony that although the hospital was not licensed for forensic testing, it was licensed by the State Department of Public Health and accredited by the College of American Pathologists as a clinical laboratory, and that treating physicians rely on the results of its tests > to be accurate. (People v. Meza, supra, at pp. 612-613.)

>
> The fact that one's blood-alcohol level evidence disappears only "gradually and relatively predictably" must be considered as a part of the totality of the circumstances. (Id., at pp. 610-611.)
>
> Another factor that should be considered is the number of officers involved in the investigation. (Ibid.)

Exigent circumstances existed to justify a warrantless blood draw where defendant, suspected of being a drunk driver, created an exigency by injuring himself badly, such that he was unconscious and had to be helicoptered to a hospital where surgery was performed almost immediately. This left no time in which to obtain a search warrant. (People v. Nault (2021) 72 Cal.App.5th 1144.)

> "Circumstances are exigent when blood-alcohol evidence is dissipating, as it always is, and a pressing health, safety, or law enforcement need takes priority over a warrant application." (Id. at p. 1148; citing (Mitchell v. Wisconsin (2019) 588 U.S. __, __ [204 L.Ed.2nd 1040; 139 S.Ct. 2525, 2537]; and Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 770–771 [16 L.Ed.2nd 908; 86 S.Ct. 1826].) "The fact the human body continuously metabolizes alcohol is not enough." (Ibid., citing Mitchell, at p. ___ [139 S.Ct. at p. 2537].)
>
> "In Schmerber, supra, 384 U.S. 757, the United States Supreme Court concluded that exigent circumstances could justify a warrantless blood draw during a DUI investigation because BAC diminishes over time and officers may need time to investigate an accident scene or attend to other pressing needs. (Id. at pp. 770–771.) But, 'while the natural dissipation of alcohol in the blood may support a finding of exigency in a specific case, as it did in Schmerber, it does not do so categorically. Whether a warrantless blood test of a drunk-driving suspect is reasonable must be determined case by case based on the totality of the circumstances.'

(McNeely, supra,* 569 U.S. at p. 156.)" (People v. Alvarez (2023) 98 Cal.App.5th 531, 543.)

The Unconscious DUI Suspect:

"When a driver is unconscious, the general rule is a warrant is not needed." (Ibid., citing Mitchell, supra,* 588 U.S. at p. ___ [139 S.Ct. at p. 2531].) "The Fourth Amendment 'almost always' permits a warrantless blood test when police officers do not have a reasonable opportunity for a breath test before hospitalization." (Missouri v. McNeely, supra,* at p. 156; citing Mitchell, at p. ___ [139 S.Ct. at p. 2539].)

However, where the investigating officer had about two hours during which he could have obtained a search warrant, knowing that it only took about 30 to 45 minutes to get one telephonically, no exigency was found excusing the extraction of blood from an unconscious suspect in a fatal traffic collision. (People v. Alvarez (2023) 98 Cal.App.5th 531, 542-543.)

Note: Alvarez is unique in that and the driver remained conscious and responsive until 90 minutes after the crash, which included interacting with the officer for almost 45 minutes in the emergency room. He then closed his eyes and was either ignoring the officer or was unconscious. The Court later noted that nothing in the record showed that the officer was precluded from obtaining a telephonic search warrant.

Exception; No Governmental Involvement:

The removal and seizure of bullet fragments from defendant's head by medical personnel during emergency surgery, "acting independently of law enforcement directives," does not implicate the Fourth Amendment. (People v. Caro (2019) 7 Cal.5th 463, 498.)

Implied Consent to a Warrantless Blood Draw in DUI cases:

Actual Consent vs. Implied Consent: California's "implied consent law" (V.C. § 23612(a)(1)(A) & (B)) has been held to be a factor, among the "totality of the circumstances," in determining whether or not a DUI arrestee has given "actual consent" to a warrantless blood draw. (People v. Harris (2015) 234 Cal.App.4th 671, 681-692.)

> "(A)ctual consent to a blood draw is not 'implied consent,' but rather a possible result of requiring the driver to choose whether to consent under the implied consent law. (Citation.) '[T]he implied consent law is explicitly designed to allow the driver, and not the police officer, to make the choice as to whether the driver will give or decline to give actual consent to a blood draw when put to the choice between consent or automatic sanctions. Framed in the terms of "implied consent," choosing the "yes" option affirms the driver's implied consent and constitutes actual consent for the blood draw. Choosing the "no" option acts to withdraw the driver's implied consent and establishes that the driver does not give actual consent.' (Citation)" (Id., at p. 686.)
>
> > Note: To put this rule into a formula: Implied consent per V.C. § 23612 + circumstances consistent with consent = actual consent.
> >
> > But see People v. Alvarez (2023) 98 Cal.App.5th 531, 548-549, indicating that implied consent is insufficient to allow for a warrantless blood draw under any circumstances: "[(F)or warrantless blood draw under implied consent statute, Fourth Amendment requires "actual consent" that is "freely and voluntarily given"]; (Citing People v. Harris (2015) 234 Cal.App.4th 671), . . . at p. 686 ["rather than determine whether 'implied consent' to a chemical test satisfies the Fourth Amendment, we must determine whether submission to a chemical test, after advisement under the implied consent law, is freely and voluntarily given and constitutes actual consent"]; id. at p. 689 ["(W)e must determine whether defendant's submission in this case was freely and voluntarily given under the normal totality of the circumstances analysis"]; People v. Mason (2016) 8 Cal.App.5th Supp. 11, 19–33, . . .] 'To recap, we have concluded that advance "deemed" consent under the implied consent law cannot be considered actual Fourth Amendment consent']; People v. Ling (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1, 3–5, 10–11 . . .] [lawfulness of consent to blood draw post-McNeely 'will be based on a consideration of the totality of all the circumstances'].) No California court after McNeely has held that the implied consent statute is sufficient by itself to justify a warrantless blood draw under the Fourth Amendment."

At p. 549, the Alvarez Court cites numerous cases from other jurisdictions, with similar implied consent statutes, that have reached the same conclusion.

"(T)he failure to disclose accurate information regarding the potential legal consequences of certain behavior would seem to be a more logical basis for a defendant to assert that his or her decision to engage in that behavior was coerced and involuntary." (People v. Harris, supra, at p. 689; see also People v. Ling (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1, 9.)

Exigent circumstances also excuse the lack of a search warrant. When defendant caused a traffic collision, resulting in the need to care for injured victims and delaying the DUI investigation, and where defendant was uncooperative making it impossible to determine when he'd had his last drink, forcing a blood draw without a search warrant was justified by exigent circumstances. (People v. Toure (2015) 232 Cal.App.4th 1096, 1103-1105.)

But see People v. Meza (2018) 23 Cal.App.5th 604, where the People failed to show why the arresting officer could not have obtained a search warrant for defendant's blood in the two hours between defendant's traffic accident and the actual taking of a blood sample.

"The Legislature's goal was thus to balance the rights, concerns, and dignity of the individual against the need to enforce California's DUI laws, and to avoid the unpredictability of forced blood draws. Its solution was to 'devise . . . an additional or alternative method of compelling a person arrested for drunk driving to submit to a test for intoxication, by providing that such person will lose his automobile driver's license for a period . . . if he refuses to submit to a test for intoxication.'" (People v. Valencia (2015) 240 Cal.App.4th Supp. 11, 18.); citing Hernandez v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1981) 30 Cal.3rd 70, 77.)

See Veh. Code § 23577 for other "enhanced" administrative punishments, that may be imposed upon a DUI conviction, for a person who refuses a chemical test of his blood or breath when arrested for DUI.

"Our prior opinions have referred approvingly to the general concept of implied-consent laws that impose civil penalties and evidentiary consequences on motorists who refuse to comply." (Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U.S. 438, 476-477 [136 S.Ct. 2160; 195 L.Ed.2nd 560]; citing McNeely, supra. [569 U.S.

141]; and South Dakota v. Neville (1983) 459 U.S. 553, 560 [103 S.Ct. 916; 74 L.Ed.2nd 748].)

> The Court, in Birchfield, however, held that statutes that make it a crime to refuse a blood test in a DUI case, or otherwise imposed penal sanctions for refusing to submit to a blood test, were unconstitutional.

An arresting officer's failure to advise defendant under V.C. § 23612(a)(2)(B), of his statutory right to choose either a blood or breath test did not violate the Fourth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, and thus Cal. Const., art. I, § 28, subd. (f)(2) required the admission of blood test results into evidence. (People v. Vannesse (2018) 23 Cal.App.5th 440.)

Where defendant was charged with misdemeanor DUI, the appellate court concluded that defendant freely consented to the search of his blood. Although a statement by the arresting officer was incomplete under Veh. Code § 23612(a)(1)(D), there was no evidence the officer intended to deceive defendant about his right to refuse a blood altogether. Nor was the officer's statement about the implied consent law demonstrably false. At no point before or after defendant consented to the test did he indicate any objection. Looking at the totality of the circumstances, including the officer's conduct, the existence of the implied consent law, and defendant's actions before and after he consented to the blood test, the appellate court could not say the trial court's finding that defendant voluntarily consented to the test was error. (People v. Balov (2018) 23 Cal.App.5th 696.)

> "[T]he implied consent law is explicitly designed to allow the driver, and not the police officer, to make the choice as to whether the driver will give or decline to give actual consent to a blood draw when put to the choice between consent or automatic sanctions. Framed in the terms of 'implied consent,' choosing the 'yes' option affirms the driver's implied consent and constitutes actual consent for the blood draw. Choosing the 'no' option acts to withdraw the driver's implied consent and establishes that the driver does not give actual consent." [Citation.]" (Id., at p. 702; People v. Lopez (2020) 46 Cal.App.5th 317, 326.)

The Fourth Amendment was held not to have prohibited a finding of implied consent to a blood draw under California's former law, even though defendant was advised that the law required a chemical test, because he was given a choice of tests. Just because the state cannot compel a warrantless blood test does not mean that it cannot offer one as an alternative to the breath test that it clearly can compel. The trial court properly found that defendant's consent to a blood draw was voluntary, even though he had been advised that a breath or blood test was required by the law. Both arresting officers testified to the circumstances under which defendant gave his consent to the blood test and there was no testimony that he only gave actual consent because of the threat of criminal prosecution. (People v. Nzolameso (2019) 39 Cal.App.5th 1181.)

The Fourth Amendment did not require suppression of evidence from a warrantless blood draw because substantial evidence supported a finding that defendant consented. After the officer instructed her that the implied consent law required her to undergo a blood draw (she having been arrested for driving while under the influence of a drug), defendant did not object or refuse to undergo the test, did not resist any of the officers' directions, and voluntarily placed her arm on the table to allow the phlebotomist to draw her blood. The result was not changed by the officer's failure to relate the admonitions regarding the consequences of refusal. (People v. Lopez (2020) 46 Cal.App.5th 317.)

See "Veh. Code § 23612," under "California's Implied Consent Law In Driving Under the Influence (DUI) Cases," under "Warrantless Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 9), above.

The admonition that defendant's refusal to submit to chemical testing would result in a license suspension was not invalidated by the omission of an admonition that refusal would result in a fine or imprisonment. The department was not seeking a fine or imprisonment. (Elmore v. Gordon (2021) 73 Cal.App.5th 520, 522-523.)

V.C. § 23612(a)(1)(A) provides that: "A person who drives a motor vehicle is deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her blood or breath for the purpose of determining the alcoholic content of his or her blood…." In subd. (d)(2), the code add: "If a blood or breath test is not available…, the person shall submit to the remaining test in order to determine the percent, by weight, of alcohol in the person's blood." In a case where the petitioner chose a breath test, and declined to submit to a blood test when told that the breathalyzer was broken and unavailable, the Court held that a breathalyzer device cannot be viewed as "unavailable" without first contacting other stations in the vicinity. The trial court, therefore, was in error for denying the petitioner's writ of mandate seeking to require the Department of Motor Vehicles not to suspend his driver's license. (Tarzia v. Gordon (2023) 2023 Cal.App.Unpub. LEXIS 3432.)

Petitioner. arrested for DUI, was taken to a lab facility, where Yasmin Ramos, a phlebotomist, took a needle from a sealed package supplied by the County Forensic Lab, cleaned Petitioner's arm, and drew two vials of blood. The county lab measured Petitioner's BAC at 0.110 percent, +/- 0.004 percent. The lab report certified that the "sample appears to be compliant with Title 17" of the California Code of Regulations. At a hearing, Petitioner attempted to rebut the presumption, Evidence Code section 664, that the blood was properly collected. Petitioner called one witness, Salustiano Ribeiro, the president of Bay Area Phlebotomy and Laboratory Services, who testified that Ramos was a CPT, not a "qualified person" (licensed physician, RN, LVN, licensed clinical laboratory scientist, licensed clinical laboratory bioanalyst, certified paramedic, or licensed physician assistant). Petitioner also established that a licensed physician had not approved the policies and procedures that Ramos followed; a qualified person had not verified Ramos' competency to draw blood for alcohol testing before she was first allowed to do so without direct supervision; a qualified person had not reviewed Ramos' work at least once a month; and no qualified individual was accessible for consultation within 30 minutes. The hearing officer rejected Petitioner's arguments and ordered the suspension of his driving privilege. The court of appeal affirmed, citing Gerwig v. Gordon (2021) 61 Cal.App.5th 59, as it's authority. While Petitioner had rebutted the presumption that the blood test was properly performed, the evidence established the reliability of the manner of collection of Petitioner's blood. (Phillips v. Gordon (2023) 97 Cal.App.5th 702.)

Implied Consent and the Unconscious or Deceased DUI Suspect:

The old California rule of requiring a valid arrest, even of an unconscious suspect, prior to the extraction of a blood sample (See People v. Superior Court* [Hawkins] (1972) 6 Cal.3rd 757, 762.), was abrogated by passage of Proposition 8, in June, 1982. Now, so long as probable cause exists to believe that the defendant was driving while intoxicated, a formal arrest is not a prerequisite to a warrantless seizure of a blood sample. (People v. Trotman (1989) 214 Cal.App.3rd 430, 435-437; People v. Deltoro (1989) 214 Cal.App.3rd 1417, 1422, 1425.)

Note: But see below.

The implied consent provisions under Veh. Code § 23612(a)(5), where, by statute, blood may be drawn from an unconscious or dead DUI suspect, does not overcome the need for a search warrant without a showing of exigent circumstances. (People v. Arredondo (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 186 (petition for review granted), 193-205; no exigency found, pp. 205-206.)

Also note Veh. Code § 13384 (effective since 1999) requiring for all new and renewed driver's licenses to include the applicant's written consent to submit to a chemical test or tests of that person's blood, breath, or urine, or to submit to a preliminary alcohol screening test pursuant to Veh. Code § 23136 (persons under 21 years of age with a blood alcohol level of .01% or higher), when requested to do so by a peace officer, and for the applicant to sign a written declaration consenting to the above. The legal effect of this mandated written consent has yet to be tested, but may offer a solution to the inability of section 23612's "implied consent" provisions to avoid the need for a search warrant. (See People v. Arredondo, at p. 198, & fn. 7.)

Note: Petition for Review was dismissed and the case remanded in light of the decision in Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) 588 U.S.__, __ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040], where the U.S. Supreme Court held that when a DUI arrestee is unconscious, this fact alone will "almost always" constitute an exigency, allowing for a warrantless blood draw (see below).

In those cases where a suspected DUI driver is unconscious and therefore unable to give a breath test, the exigent-circumstances rule will almost always permit a blood draw without a warrant given the fact that the circumstances commonly involve other tasks that may be incompatible with the procedures that would be required to obtain a warrant, such as investigating a traffic accident, attending to other injured drivers or passengers, and preventing further accidents. (Mitchell v. Wisconsin (June 27, 2019) 588 U.S.__ [139 S.Ct. 2525; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040]; "In this respect, the case for allowing a blood draw is stronger here than in Schmerber* v. *California, . . ." (139 S.Ct. at p. 2538, fn. 8.)

> Immediate medical treatment administered by the hospital staff could delay (or otherwise distort the results of) a blood draw conducted later, upon receipt of a warrant, thus reducing its evidentiary value. (Id, at p. __.)
>
> The availability of telephonic search warrant procedures is irrelevant. "(W)ith better technology, the time required (to obtain a search warrant) has shrunk, but it has not disappeared." (Id, at p. __.)
>
> But, see dissenting opinion at pp. __-__.

Where an on-going investigation into a fatal crash was in the process, with three fatalities and an injured suspect, the Court noted that "pressing investigative responsibilities existed," which "reduced the number of police resources available to investigate the crash," plus the on-duty Assistant U.S. Attorney could not be reached (it being in the early morning hours) and that obtaining a telephonic search warrant would take 3 to 5 hours, the Court determined that exigent circumstances allowed for the warrantless extraction of blood from the DUI suspect. (United States v. Manubolu (1st Cir. ME 2021) 13 F.4th 57.)

"When a driver is unconscious, the general rule is a warrant is not needed." (Italics in original, citing Mitchell v. Wisconsin, supra, 588 U.S. at p. ___ [139 S.Ct. at p. 2531; 204 L.Ed.2nd 1040].) "The Fourth Amendment 'almost always' permits a warrantless blood test when police officers do not have a reasonable opportunity for a breath test before hospitalization." (People v. Nault (2021) 72 Cal.App.5th 1144, 1148; citing Mitchell, at p. ___ [139 S.Ct. at p. 2539].)

However, where an officer had over two hours to obtain a search warrant which, telephonically, could have been accomplished in 30 to 45 minutes, and where the defendant was unconscious in the hospital, his failure to do so did not qualify for a "good faith" exception. The resulting blood test results should have been suppressed. (People v. Alvarez (2023) 98 Cal.App.5th 531, 542-543.)

> The Court in Alvarez held at p. 547 that: "It was not objectively reasonable for (the officer) to believe that the implied consent law even applied here. (§ 23612.) The only two subdivisions of the statute deeming drivers to have given their consent to a blood draw are subdivisions (a)(1)(A) and (B), both of which apply only if the driver is

"lawfully arrested for an offense allegedly committed in violation of Section 23140*,* 23152*, or* 213153*."* (Italics added.) Section 23612, subdivision (a)(1)(C) further states that "[t]he testing shall be incidental to a lawful arrest (Italics added) . . . ." By its plain language, therefore, the implied consent law applies only if the person has been lawfully arrested for one of the listed offenses. (See People v. Superior Court* (Hawkins) (1972) 6 Cal.3rd 757, 765 . . .] ["the Legislature took pains to condition its use upon a lawful arrest for driving under the influence … ."].)

In Alvarez, the Court held that because the officer did not yet know who was at fault, probable cause did not yet exist supporting the defendant's arrest, citing People v. Trotman (1989) 214 Cal.App.3rd 430, 435, People v. Deltoro (1989) 214 Cal.App.3rd 1417, 1425, and United States v. Chapel (9th Cir. 1995) 55 F.3rd 1416, 1419, for the argument that an officer must have at least probable cause to arrest for the implied consent rules of V.C. § 23612 to apply. "Thus, 'a formal arrest is not a precondition to the warrantless extraction of blood so long as probable cause exists to believe that the defendant was driving under the influence and that an analysis of the sample will yield evidence of that crime.'" (Alvarez, at p. 548, quoting People v. Trotman, supra, at p. 437.)

McNeely is Not Retroactive:

A forced blood draw performed in 2011, before McNeely was decided, does not require the suppression of the blood result in that police officers are entitled to act on the law as it is understood at the time to apply. The Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule does not require suppression of evidence from a warrantless blood draw because the draw was conducted in an objectively reasonable reliance on then-binding precedent. (People v. Youn (2014) 229 Cal.App.4th 571, 576-579; People v. Jimenez (2015) 242 Cal.App.4th 1337, 1360-1365; see also People v. Rossetti (2014) 230 Cal.App.4th 1070, 1074-1077; four officers held defendant down as a warrantless forced draw was made in a medically approved manner.)

Where defendant's blood was taken over his objection and without a warrant, Missouri v. McNeely, supra, did not mandate suppression of the blood result in that McNeely was decided after the arrest in this case. Also, defendant was subject to search and seizure conditions under his "post-release community supervision" (PRCS) terms, eliminating the need for a search warrant. With probable cause to believe that he was driving while under the influence of alcohol when he had a traffic accident, his mandatory PRCS search and seizure conditions, authorizing the blood draw without the necessity of a search warrant, was not in violation of the Fourth Amendment. (People v. Jones (2014) 231 Cal.App.4th 1257, 1262-1269.)

Pen. Code § 1524(a) Amended: Since McNeely, the California Legislature has amended Pen. Code § 1524(a), adding new subd. (13), providing statutory authority for a search warrant to retrieve a DUI suspect's blood when necessary due to the suspect's refusal to submit to a blood test.

Per Subd. (a)(13): "To obtain a blood sample in V.C. §§ 23140 (person under age 21 driving with BA of 0.05 or higher), 23152 (DUI), and 23153 (DUI with injury) cases when the person has refused to submit to or has failed to complete a blood test, and the sample will be drawn in a "reasonable, medically approved manner." This new paragraph is not intended to abrogate a court's mandate to determine the propriety of the issuance of a search warrant on a case-by-case basis."

Additional Case Law:

The blood test in a drunk driving case should have been suppressed when the defendant had already given a urine sample that was the functional equivalent of the blood test for evidentiary purposes. (People v. Fiscalini (1991) 228 Cal.App.3rd 1639.)

But, forcing an arrested DUI suspect to give blood after the suspect intentionally frustrated the officer's attempts at obtaining a breath sample was held to be lawful. (People v. Sugarman (2002) 96 Cal.App.4th 210; a pre-McNeely case.)

When otherwise lawful, Schmerber requires no more than that blood be drawn in a constitutionally reasonable manner, which is not necessarily limited to being by a physician and in a hospital. Drawing blood by someone qualified to do so, and even in a jail, will normally meet the requirement that it be done in a "medically approved manner." Also, it is reasonable for the officer himself, observing the blood-draw procedure, as opposed to an expert, to provide the necessary testimony to meet this standard. (People v. Cuevas (2013) 218 Cal.App.4th 1278, 1283-1286; People v. Harris (2015) 234 Cal.App.4th 671, 692-697.)

Also, where actual consent is found (e.g., by signing a consent form), the rule of McNeely is irrelevant. An officer's testimony, which the trial court, in its discretion, found as credible, is sufficieint to allow for a warrantless blood draw. (People v. Elder (2017) 11 Cal.App.5th 123, 130-131.)

Use of Force in Making a Blood Draw:

Where otherwise lawful (e.g., an exigency existed or a search warrant was obtained), using physical force to effect a blood draw, so long as the officers "act reasonably and use only that degree of force which is necessary to overcome a defendant's resistance in taking a blood sample," is lawful. (People v. Rossetti (2014) 230 Cal.App.4th 1070, 1077-1079; quoting Carlton v. Superior Court (1985)170 Cal.App.3rd 1182, 1187-1191.)

In Rossetti, four officers held a handcuffed defendant on the floor when defendant was "kicking around and not doing what [he was] told to do" while a licensed phlebotomist drew blood. The use of force was upheld as reasonable. (People v. Rossett, supra.)

Also, in Carlton, a struggling defendant was held by six officers to the floor in a "temporary carotid restraint" position, with his face to the floor, as blood was withdrawn by a registered nurse. The force used was upheld as reasonable. (Carlton v. Superior Court, supra.)

See also People v. Ryan (1981) 116 Cal.App.3rd 168, where the force used was upheld as reasonable when a resisting defendant was restrained by five police officers as a technician removed the blood sample from his left arm, without any showing that the officers "introduced any wantonness, violence or beatings."

But see People v Kraft (1970) 3 Cal.App.3rd 890, where defendant refused to submit to a blood test. Taken to a hospital, defendant resisted being taken inside, resulting in an officer striking him in the cheek with a closed fist. While being carried to a bed in an examination room, defendant fell or was pushed to the floor. While on the floor, police immobilized him while a physician withdrew blood. One officer held defendant's arm while also holding a scissor lock on his legs. It was acknowledged in testimony that defendant's behavior had not been aggressive but was "defensive." The court concluded that the officers' "strong arm" tactics were "aggressive beyond all need" and exceeded the limits of permissible force. (Id., at pp. 895-899.)

See also Freitas v. Shiomoto (2016) 3 Cal.App.5th 294: The trial court erred in finding that rebuttal of the presumption of regulatory compliance in a driver's license suspension proceeding required the driver to prove the gas chromatograph used in taking an arrested driver's breath sample was improperly calibrated or maintained because the driver could rebut presumption by showing that a testing apparatus was improperly employed when his sample was tested.

Other Examples of Bodily Intrusions:

Held to be Reasonable; Examples:

Scraping underneath a suspect's fingernails to find evidence of a crime has been upheld by the United States Supreme Court, calling such a procedure a "very limited intrusion." (Cupp v. Murphy (1973) 412 U. S. 291, [93 S.Ct. 2000; 36 L. Ed. 2nd 900].)

Forcing a suspect to submit to the removal of a rubber finger stall of powdered drugs from his rectum, the procedure being conducted by a physician and involving little if any pain, was approved. (People v. Woods (1956) 139 Cal.App.2nd 515.)

Inserting the capped end of a ballpoint pen and prying a 2-inch wad of masking tape out of defendant's mouth, suspected of being evidence, is not unreasonable. (People v. Fulkman (1991) 235 Cal.App.3rd 555, 563.)

The U.S. Supreme Court has described the process of the warrantless collecting of a DNA sample, as part of a routine booking process, by rubbing a swab on the inside of a person's cheek as a "negligible" intrusion, and lawful. (Maryland v. King (2013) 569 U. S. 435, 446, [133 S.Ct. 1958; 186 L.Ed.2nd 1].)

However, see the earlier case of Friedman v. Boucher (9th Cir. 2009) 580 F.3rd 847, 852-853, where it was held that the taking of a DNA sample via a "buccal swab" of the mouth of a pre-trial detainee, without statutory authorization, is a search under the Fourth Amendment, and illegal absent a search warrant or an exigent circumstance allowing for such a search.

There is no privacy right in the mouthpiece of the PAS device, which was provided by the police and where defendant abandoned any expectation of privacy in the saliva he deposited on the device when he failed to wipe it off. Whether defendant subjectively expected that the genetic material contained in his saliva would become known to the police was irrelevant because he deposited it on a police device and thus made it accessible to the police. The officer who administered the PAS (Preliminary Alcohol Screening) test testified that used mouthpieces were normally discarded in the trash. Thus, any subjective expectation defendant may have had that his right to privacy would be preserved was unreasonable. (People v. Thomas (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 338.)

Requiring a parolee, subject to search and seizure conditions, and where officers had at least a reasonable suspicion to believe that he was dealing drugs, to remove his pants and bend over, and then "flicking" at a visible baggie that was held between his buttocks (but not inside his anal cavity), causing the baggie to fall out, was held not to be unreasonable. (United States v. Doxey (6th Cir. Mich. 2016) 833 F.3rd 692.)

"'In the prison context, where inmates are routinely subject to medical procedures, including blood draws, and where their expectation of bodily privacy, while intact, is diminished [citation], the intrusiveness of a blood draw is even further minimized.'" (People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1120; quoting Nicholas v. Goord (2nd Cir. 2005) 430 F.3rd 652, 669 [fn. omitted)].)

Held to be Unreasonable; Examples:

Where a suspect underwent a digital rectal exam and two enemas before being forced to drink a liquid laxative, the search was held to be unreasonable. (United States v. Cameron (9th Cir. 1976) 538 F.2nd 254, 258-260.)

In balancing the interests, the California Supreme Court determined that a magistrate could not lawfully authorize a search warrant in a child molest/incest case for a medical examination consisting of the manual massage of the prostate gland causing a discharge of semen. (People v. Scott (1978) 21 Cal.3rd 284, 291-295; "(T)he more intense, unusual, prolonged, uncomfortable, unsafe or undignified the procedure contemplated, or the more it intrudes upon essential standards of privacy, the greater must be the showing for the procedure's necessity.")

Surgery to remove a bullet from the accused was found, under the circumstances, to be unreasonable. (Winston v. Lee (1985) 470 U.S. 753, 760-763 [105 S.Ct. 1611; 84 L.Ed.2nd 662, 668-671].)

> Such a procedure will not even be allowed with a court order. (Ibid.)
>
> This is not to say, however, that surgery would never be lawful. As the Supreme Court pointed out in Winston v. Lee, supra, at p. 760 [84 L.Ed.2nd at p. 669]: "The reasonableness of surgical intrusions beneath the skin depends on a case-by-case approach, in which the individual's interests in privacy and security are weighed against society's interests in conducting the procedure. In a given case, the question whether the community's need for evidence outweighs the substantial privacy interests at stake is a delicate one admitting of few categorical answers." In Winston, the defendant would have had to been subjected to general anesthesia, and the prosecution's need for the bullet was questionable, given other evidence of the defendant's guilt.

It was held to be a clear Fourth Amendment violation where the plaintiff claimed that doctors sedated him, took blood samples, and inserted a catheter into his penis. (Ellis v. City of San Diego (9th Cir. 1999) 176 F.3rd 1183, 1186, 1191-1192.)

The forced paralysis, intubation, and digital rectal examination of a suspect where it is suspected that he was concealing contraband in his rectum amounted to an unreasonable search in violation of the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Booker (6th Cir. 2013) 728 F.3rd 535.)

Sedating the plaintiff, opening his anus with an endoscope and inserting long forceps into his rectum, and then inserting a tube into his nose and running the tube into his stomach to pump a gallon of liquid laxative through his digestive system thus triggering a complete evacuation of his bowels, when done without consent or a warrant, held to be a violation of the Fourth Amendment. (George v. Edholm (9th Cir. 2014) 752 F.3rd 1206, 1217-1220.)

Qualified immunity for an Internal Revenue Service Agent was properly denied in an action alleging that the agent violated plaintiff's Fourth Amendment right to bodily privacy when, during the lawful execution of a search warrant at plaintiff's home, the agent (a female) escorted plaintiff (also a female) to the bathroom and monitored her while she relieved herself. Given the scope, manner, justification, and place of the search, a reasonable jury could conclude that the agent's actions were unreasonable and violated plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights. The agent's general interests in preventing destruction of evidence and promoting officer safety did not justify the scope or manner of the intrusion into plaintiff's most basic subject of privacy, her naked body. A reasonable officer in the agent's position would have known that such a significant intrusion into bodily privacy, in the absence of legitimate government justification, was unlawful. (Ioane v. Hodges (9th Cir. 2019) 939 F.3rd 945, 956-957.)

Privacy in the Hospital Room and During Medical Emergencies:

The California Supreme Court has expressed "concerns about incursions on the privacy we maintain in our bodies (which) are heightened during medical procedures. (See, e.g., Sanders v. American Broadcasting Companies (1999) 20 Cal.4th 907, 917 . . . [citing cases where pictures of a patient in a hospital constituted an actionable intrusion upon seclusion under tort law]; but see Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal.4th 272, 294, fn. 9 . . . [indicating that state tort law privacy rights are not necessarily coextensive with the 4th Amend.].)" (People v. Caro (2019) 7 Cal.5th 463, 495-498; finding it unnecessary to resolve the issue of an officer entering the defendant's hospital room during emergency procedures in that any error in admitting evidence of photographs taken there was harmless.)

However: "Intrusive body searches are permissible when they are reasonably necessary to respond to an immediate medical emergency." (George v. Edholm (9th Cir. 2014) 752 F.3rd 1206, 1219, citing People v. Bracamonte (1975) 15 Cal.3rd 394; United States v. Husband (7th Cir. 2000) 226 F.3rd 626, 635.)

In Edholm, it was held that the "speculative, generalized risk" that a baggie of drugs secreted in the plaintiff's rectum might rupture is insufficient by itself to justify the warrantless extraction (see above) of that baggie. "Every person who hides a baggie of drugs in his rectum faces a risk that the baggie will rupture. But the mere fact 'that the suspect is concealing contraband does not authorize government officials to resort to any and all means at their disposal to retrieve it.'" (George v. Edholm, supra, quoting United States v. Cameron (9th Cir 1976) 538 F.2nd 254, 258.)

While the potential for death without treatment qualifies as a "medical emergency," where the suspect himself is responsible for the risk, only a showing of the "greatest imminent harm" will justify intrusive action for the purpose of removal of a drug from his body. (United States v. Cameron (9th Cir. 1976) 538 F.2nd 254, 259, fn. 8.)

Photographs taken of a defendant during surgery and afterwards in the recovery room may or may not be admissible. See People v. Caro (2019) 7 Cal.5th 463, 497, noting that at least one state has held that a defendant has no reasonable expectation of privacy in an operating room because of "a patient's traditional surrender to his or her physician of the right to determine who may and may not be present during medical procedures." (State v. Thompson (1998) 222 Wis.2nd 179, 192 [585 N.W.2nd 905].) On the other hand, however, it has also been held that the privacy rights we maintain in our bodies are heightened during medical procedures. (See, e.g., Sanders v. American Broadcasting Companie*s* (1999) 20 Cal.4th 907, 917; citing cases where pictures of a patient in a hospital constituted an actionable intrusion under tort law.) The Supreme Court in Caro declined to decide the issue in that admission of the questioned photos was held not to be prejudicial given the amount of other evidence proving defendant's guilt.

DNA Swabs taken for the Purpose of Eliminating Others as a Suspect:

A state court order pursuant to Arizona Revised Statutes § 13-3905 authorizing the collection of DNA samples from officers of the Phoenix Police Department satisfied the Warrant Clause of the Fourth Amendment in that the orders were issued by a state court judge and described a saliva sample to be seized by mouth swab from the person of plaintiff police officers. The state court expressly found probable cause to believe that the crime of homicide had been committed and that excluding public safety personnel as the source of the of DNA left at the scene would have plainly aided in the conviction of an eventual criminal defendant by negating any contention at trial that police had contaminated the relevant evidence. No undue intrusion occurred because it was hardly unreasonable to ask sworn officers to provide saliva samples for the sole purpose of demonstrating that DNA left at a crime scene was not the result of inadvertent contamination by on-duty public safety personnel. (Bill v. Brewer (9th Cir. 2015) 799 F.3rd 1295.)

Choking: Searches of the person may also include the need to forcefully keep a suspect from swallowing evidence.

Rule: So long as the suspect can be prevented from swallowing without "choking" him, reasonable force may normally be used. (People v. Jones (1989) 209 Cal.App.3rd 725; People v. Johnson (1991) 231 Cal.App.3rd 1, 15-17.)

> "Choking" is legally defined as preventing a person from breathing. (See People v. Johnson, supra, at p. 16, citing Jones, at p. 730, in noting that "choking someone to recover evidence violates due process, without any need to inquire into the precise degree of choking involved."

Examples:

> Holding a subject's Adam's apple to prevent swallowing is okay. (People v. Cappellia (1989) 208 Cal.App.3rd 1331, 1337.)
>
> Using pepper spray to cause the subject to spit out the contents of his mouth is probably not unreasonable. (United States v. Holloway (Kan. 1995) 906 F.Supp. 1437.)
>
> > But see Headwaters Forest Defense v. County of Humboldt (9th Cir. 2002) 276 F.3rd 1125, holding that the use of pepper spray on non-violent demonstrators to gain their compliance is unreasonable, and grounds for civil liability.
>
> Inserting the capped end of a ballpoint pen and prying a 2-inch wad of masking tape out of defendant's mouth, suspected of being evidence, is not unreasonable. (People v. Fulkman (1991) 235 Cal.App.3rd 555, 563.)
>
> The use of reasonable force in extracting blood, when done in a medically approved manner, is lawful. (Ritschel v. City of Fountain Valley (2005) 137 Cal.App.4th 107; a misdemeanor case.)
>
> See "Chokehold," under "Specific Weapons or Techniques in the Use of Force," under "Use of Force" (Chapter 7), above.

Searches with Less Than Probable Cause*: In certain instances, where the governmental interests are stronger than in cases of "ordinary criminal wrongdoing," or the individual's privacy interests are diminished, the probable cause standards have been relaxed. For instance:

> Persons in Pervasively Regulated Industries or Sensitive Positions: In some situations, where there exists a strong governmental interest, neither a warrant nor a showing of individualized suspicion is required to support the validity of statute requiring employees to submit to a blood or urine test. For instance:

Government Employees: A random search, without cause, of an employee's personal effects by a government employer, at least where the employee has prior notice that his possessions may be subject to search, has been held to be lawful. (United States v. Gonzalez (9th Cir. 2002) 300 F.3rd 1048)

Railway Workers: The testing of blood or urine of railway workers involved in certain train accidents. (Skinner v. Railway Labor Executives' Assn. (1989) 489 U.S. 602 [103 L.Ed.2nd 639].)

Drug Testing for Customs Officers: Drug testing as a condition of placement or employment for Customs officers in a position involving the interdiction of drugs or carrying of firearms. (National Treasury Employees Union v. Von Raab (1989) 489 U.S. 656 [109 S.Ct. 1384; 103 L.Ed.2nd 685].)

Exception: Similar requirements for persons who were only required to handle classified material was rejected as being too broad. (Ibid.)

Exceptions:

Candidates for Public Office: A urinalysis drug test requirement for candidates for public office, however, was held to violate the Fourth Amendment. (Chandler v. Miller (1997) 520 U.S. 305 [117 S.Ct. 1295; 137 L.Ed.2nd 513].)

A State Hospital's Drug Testing Policy for Unwed Mothers: See Ferguson v. City of Charleston (2001) 532 U.S. 67 [121 S.Ct. 1281; 149 L.Ed.2nd 205], finding a state hospital's drug testing policy, developed in conjunction with the police, for testing unwed mothers for drug abuse, to be unconstitutional, at least without informing the mothers of the purposes for the test.

See also "Special Needs Searches and Seizures," under "Warrantless Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 9), above.

For Students:

See "School Searches," under "Exceptions to the Search Warrant Requirements," under "Warrantless Searches and Seizures" (Chapter 9), above.

Frisks (or "Patdowns" or "Patsearches") for offensive weapons are considered searches, albeit limited in intrusiveness and scope.

Defined: Frisks generally consist of a police officer doing no more than feeling (i.e., "patting down") the outside of a suspect's clothing, checking for the feel of any potential offensive weapons. (See Terry v. Ohio (1968) 392 U.S. 1 [88 S.Ct. 1868; 20 L.Ed.2nd 889].)

> Often referred to as a "Terry frisk." (See Thomas v. Dillard (9th Cir. 2016) 818 F.3rd 864, 875.)

Rule:

> "A Terry stop must be 'confined in scope' to a 'carefully limited search of the outer clothing . . . in an attempt to discover weapons.' (Citation) If weapons are discovered, they 'may properly be introduced in evidence against the person from whom they were taken.'" (United States v. Baker (9th Cir. Jan. 30, 2023) 58 F.4th 1109, __; quoting Terry v. Ohio (1968) 392 U.S. 1, at pp. 29, 30, & 31 [88 S.Ct. 1868; 20 L.Ed.2nd 889].)
>
> "If an officer has a reasonable suspicion, supported by specific and articulable facts, that criminal activity is afoot, the officer may conduct a brief, investigative stop. ((Terry v. Ohio, supra.), at pp. 21–22.) Additionally, if the officer conducting the so-called Terry stop believes the suspect is armed and dangerous, the officer may perform a limited search of a person's outer clothing for weapons, i.e., a "patsearch," whether or not the officer has probable cause to arrest. (Id., at pp. 27, 30.)" (In re Jeremiah S. (2019) 41 Cal.App.5th 299, 304.)
>
> > "Because a patsearch 'is a serious intrusion upon the sanctity of the person, which may inflict great indignity and arouse strong resentment,' it is subject to Fourth Amendment restrictions and "not to be undertaken lightly." (Ibid., quoting Terry, at p. 17.)
>
> "In the event that, during the Terry stop, the officer justifiably believes that 'the individual whose suspicious behavior he is investigating at close range is armed and presently dangerous to the officer or to others,' the officer 'may conduct a patdown search' or frisk 'to determine whether the person is in fact carrying a weapon.'" (United States v. Brown (9th Cir. 2021) 996 F.3rd 998, 1004, quoting Minnesota v. Dickerson (1993) 508 U.S. 366, at p. 373 [113 S.Ct. 2130; 124 L.Ed.2nd 334], which in turn quotes Terry v. Ohio (1968) 392 U.S. 1, at p. 24 [88 S.Ct. 1868; 20 L.Ed.2nd 889]).

> Further noting that: "'Each element, the stop and the frisk, must be analyzed separately; the reasonableness of each must be independently determined.'" (Ibid., quoting United States v. Thomas (9th Cir 1988) 863 F.2nd 622, 628.)

"In connection with an otherwise lawful investigative detention under Terry, 'an officer may conduct a brief pat-down (or frisk) of an individual when the officer reasonably believes that 'the persons with whom he [or she] is dealing may be armed and presently dangerous.'" (United States v. Brown (9th Cir. 2021) 996 F.3rd 998, 1007, quoting United States v. I.E.V. (9th Cir. 2013) 705 F.3rd 430, 434.)

> In Brown, it was held that while the officer had sufficient reasonable suspicion to conduct a Terry stop, and to pat the defendant down for weapons, he did not have sufficieint probable cause to simply reach into his pockets and extract incriminating evidence. (Id., at pp. 1007-1013.)

The police officer needs to be able to articulate facts establishing a "reasonable" or "rational" suspicion that the person may be armed. (Terry v. Ohio, supra.)

> Some courts refer to the test as being a "reason to believe" that the subject may be armed. (People v. Lopez (2004) 119 Cal.App.4th 132; see also In re H.H. (2009) 174 Cal.App.4th 653, 657.)

When an officer has sufficient reasonable suspicion to believe a suspect is armed, he also has, as a matter of law, reasonable suspicion to believe the suspect is dangerous. (United States v. Robinson (4th Cir. 2017) 846 F.3rd 694.)

The test is an objective one. An officer need not later demonstrate that he was in actual fear. (People v. Osborne (2009) 175 Cal.App.4th 1052, 1061-1062.)

Constitutionality:

"(T)here exists 'a narrowly drawn authority to permit a reasonable search for weapons for the protection of the police officer, where he has reason to believe that he is dealing with an armed and dangerous individual, regardless of whether he has probable cause to arrest the individual for a crime. The officer need not be absolutely certain that the individual is armed; the issue is whether a reasonably prudent man in the circumstances would be warranted in the belief that his safety or that of others was in danger.' (Citation)) '[I]n determining whether the officer acted reasonably in such circumstances, due weight must be given, not to his inchoate and unparticularized suspicion or "hunch," but to the specific reasonable inferences which he is entitled to draw from the facts in light of his experience.' (Citation) '[I]n justifying the particular intrusion the police officer must be able to point to specific and articulable facts which, taken together with rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant that intrusion.' (Citation) 'And in making that assessment it is imperative that the facts be judged against an objective standard: would the facts available to the officer at the moment of the seizure or the search "warrant a man of reasonable caution in the belief" that the action taken was appropriate?' (Citation) An officer's good faith is not enough." (King v. State of California (2015) 242 Cal.App.4th 265, 283; citing Terry v. Ohio, supra.)

> See also People v. Pantoja (2022) 77 Cal.App.5th 483, at p. 488, quoting King above, and noting that: "'The sole justification of the search . . . is the protection of the police officer and others nearby, and it must therefore be confined in scope to an intrusion reasonably designed to discover guns, knives, clubs, or other hidden instruments for the assault of the police officer.' ([Terry, supra, 392 U.S.] at p. 29.) The officer must be able to point to specific and articulable facts together with rational inferences therefrom which reasonably support a suspicion that the suspect is armed and dangerous." (Citing People v. Dickey (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 952, 956.)

A "stop and frisk" is constitutionally permissible if two conditions are met:

- The investigatory stop (i.e., "detention") must be lawful; i.e., when a police officer reasonably suspects that the person apprehended is committing or has committed a criminal offense.

- The police officer must reasonably suspect that the person stopped is armed and dangerous.

  (Arizona v. Johnson (2009) 555 U.S. 323 [129 S.Ct. 781; 172 L.Ed.2nd 694]; see also People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, 559-560.)

A court's analysis regarding whether a frisk is constitutional "is a dual one" asking:

- Whether the officers' action was justified at its inception, and

- Whether the officers' action was "confined in scope" by engaging in a carefully limited search of the outer clothing in an attempt to discover weapons which might be used to assault an officer.

(United States v. I.E.V. (9th Cir. 2013) 705 F.3rd 430, 435; citing Terry v. Ohio (1968) 392 U.S. 1, 20, 29-30 [88 S.Ct. 1868; 20 L.Ed.2nd 889].)

Differentiating a "search" from a "seizure," the Second Circuit Court of Appeal discussed the difference between conducting a patdown (a search) and positioning him in preparation for doing a patdown (a seizure), noting the traditional conditions that must be present for it to be a search, i.e., whether police: (1) "physically intrud[es] on a constitutionally protected area" under United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400, or (2) violate a person's "reasonable expectation of privacy" under Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347. In this case, merely ordering defendant to stand at the rear quarter panel, even when the officers had the subjective intent to position defendant for a frisk, simply was not a search under either Jones or Katz. Consequently, the Court concluded that no Fourth Amendment search occurred until the frisking officer's "hands physically came into contact with Weaver['s]" person. (United States v. Weaver (2nd Cir. NY, 2021) 9 F.4th 129.)

Articulable Facts:

"[A]n 'inchoate and unparticularized suspicion or "hunch"' is insufficient." (Italics added; People v. Pantoja (2022) 77 Cal.App.5th 483, at p. 489, quoting In re Jeremiah S. (2019) 41 Cal.App.5th 299, 305.)

"To establish reasonable suspicion a suspect is armed and dangerous, thereby justifying a frisk, 'the police officer must be able to point to specific and articulable facts which, taken together with rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant that intrusion.' (Citation) A 'mere "inchoate and unparticularized suspicion or hunch"' that a person is armed and dangerous does not establish reasonable suspicion (Citations), and circumstances suggesting only that a suspect would be dangerous if armed are insufficient (Italics added; Citation). There must be adequate reason to believe the suspect is armed." (Thomas v. Dillard (9th Cir. 2016) 818 F.3rd 864, 876.)

> "Considerations relevant to this inquiry typically include visible bulges or baggy clothing that suggest a hidden weapon; sudden movements or attempts to reach for an object that is not immediately visible; evasive and deceptive responses to an officer's questions about what the individual was doing; and unnatural hand postures that suggest an effort to conceal a weapon." (In re Jeremiah S. (2019) 41 Cal.App.5th 299, 305, citing Thomas v. Dillard, at p. 877; and noting that the type of crime involved is also relevant.

A pat-down search was held not to be justified based on circumstances that the defendant "(1) had no identification, (2) exercised his Fourth Amendment right and refused to allow the deputy to search the vehicle, (3) was nervous and sweating, (4) or because baking powder was found in a film canister" because "[n]one of these considerations, considered singly or in combination, would lead an officer to '". . . reasonably believe in the possibility that a weapon may be used against him."'" (People v. Dickey (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 952.)

A claim of "harassing" customers of a business, with no reports of violence, battery, assault, threats or weapons, does not reasonably suggest the presence of weapons. Nor did the fact that defendant was wearing a jacket and sweatshirt on a "pretty warm" day provide reasonable grounds to believe (at least by itself) he was armed and/or dangerous and might gain immediate control of a weapon. (People v. Thomas (2018) 29 Cal.App.5th 1107, 1117.)

In determining whether a suspicion sufficieint to justify a patdown search of a person is reasonable, a court must evaluate the "totality of the circumstances" surrounding the stop, including the "collective knowledge" of all officers involved in the stop. A reasonable suspicion may exist "even if each fact alone is susceptible of innocent explanation." In this case, considering the collective knowledge of the three deputies at the scene, it was known that (1) defendant had been an inmate at the local county jail; (2) a woman who was arrested with heroin on her person earlier that day told one of the deputies that she was heading to defendant's house; (3) defendant was argumentative and noncompliant, adamantly refusing to comply with lawful orders to exit the truck; and (4) defendant was agitated, fidgeting, moving around in his seat, and very defensive. Based on the totality of the circumstances, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeal held that it was reasonable for the searching deputy to believe that his safety or the safety of the other deputies was in danger; therefore, he was justified in conducting a patdown search of the defendant. (United States v. Bishop (11th Cir. 2019) 940 F.3rd 1242.)

Under the Fourth Amendment, reasonable suspicion that a minor was involved in the strong-arm robbery of a purse (i.e., a "purse snatch") and a cellphone did not support a pat search because there was no other aspect of the stop that, together with the minor's status as a robbery suspect, gave rise to a reasonable belief that he might be armed and dangerous. The court declined to recognize a rule that would be tantamount to automatically validating pat searches in all lawful detentions related to a fresh strong-armed robbery report. (In re Jeremiah S. (2019) 41 Cal.App.5th 299.)

> "This requires that the officer provide 'specific and articulable facts which, taken together with rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant [the] intrusion.' (Id., at p. 305; quoting Terry v. Ohio (1968) 392 U.S. 1, at p. 21 [88 S.Ct. 1868; 20 L.Ed.2nd 889].)

However, it has been held that a school resource officer patting a non-student down for possible weapons on a high school campus, where the defendant/minor was to be moved to the security office, need not be justified by an articulable suspicion that he might be armed. (In re Jose Y. (2006) 141 Cal.App.4th 748.)

Although lawfully detained at a warehouse where someone had been seen climbing under a fence, patting defendant down for weapons was held to be illegal under circumstances where the officers were unable to articulate any reasonable suspicion to believe he might be armed. Specifically, defendant only vaguely matched the description of the person described by an anonymous tipster. The tip itself did not allege any "ongoing crime or emergency." The contact occurred mid-day, in broad daylight, and not in a high-crime area. And although the defendant exhibited a suspicious response to being contacted (nervous, putting his hands in his pockets), none of this indicated that he might be armed. What concerned the court the most was how the officers reacted. Instead of asking defendant additional questions, such as where he lived or if he knew anything about a burglary at the warehouse where he was contacted, defendant was frisked immediately upon being contacted. The court concluded with the reminder that "frisks need to account for the totality of circumstances—they cannot be rote or reflexive." (United States v. Howell (7th Cir. 2020) 958 F.3rd 589.)

The Ninth Circuit affirmed a criminal judgment in a case in which the district court denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence, and the defendant entered a conditional guilty plea to being a convicted felon in possession of a firearm. In this case, Police Detectives detained the defendant after observing a bulge under his sweatshirt that likely indicated a concealed firearm, which is presumptively unlawful to carry in California. Defendant was verbally uncooperative, yelling at the detectives. After defendant's companion was found to be in possession of a firearm, defendant was tased and searched, resulting in the recovery of a firearm in a shoulder holster. The Court held that the district court did not clearly err in crediting the detective's testimony that he observed on the defendant a "very large and obvious bulge" that suggested (in the officer's training and experience) a concealed firearm. The Court further held that reasonable suspicion supported the stop, and that the district court therefore properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence found during the search. A dissenting justice argued that, without other corroborating evidence, a sweatshirt bulge alone did not give an objectively reasonable and particularized suspicion to stop and detain the defendant. (United States v. Bontemps (9th Cir. 2020) 977 F.3rd 909.)

In a traffic stop for infractions (defective tail and license plate lights), where defendant was cooperative, did not appear to be intoxicated, his driver's license was valid, he answered the officer's questions, made no furtive or sudden movements, or exhibited any other suspicious behavior, patting defendant down for weapons was held to be illegal despite defendant wearing baggy clothing (i.e. a sweat shirt, which was naturally baggy, and on a cold night), the lateness of the hour (1:30 a.m.), in a high crime area, and he having a criminal record (over two years old) for weapons offenses (but no violence). (People v. Pantoja (2022) 77 Cal.App.5th 483, at p. 488-492.)

In a case where an officer during a traffic stop conducted three successive patdowns of defendant before finally finding a gun hidden in defendant's underwear, defendant conceded the legality of the first patdown (based upon defendant's observed nervousness and—upon being asked to exit his vehicle—his act of immediately resting the front of his pelvis against the car even though he had not been asked to do so). Nothing unusual was found during the first patdown during which the officer did not check defendant's groin area. The Court held that the second pat-down was also reasonable and not contrary to the Fourth Amendment given the way defendant walked twice between his car and the police car, again repeatedly resting his pelvis against the cars as if to prop something up, and continuing to appear unusually nervous. Based upon this, the Court held that the officer could reasonably infer that defendant was hiding a weapon in his pants. Again, however, nothing was found. As for the third patdown, after defendant claimed his exaggerated limp was due to a traffic accident, and during which a loaded firearm was discovered in his groin area, the Court upheld its legality. The court concluded that defendant's exaggerated limp elevated the officer's suspicions. Also, the officer did not have to accept defendant's story that he had injured his leg in a car accident. (United States v. Smith (7th Cir. 2022) 32 F.4th 638.)

Denial of defendant's motion to suppress under Fourth Amendment was proper because his answers to officer's questions about why he was at salvage lot at 3:00 a.m. were odd; he claiming to be there waiting until the lot opened so that he could inquire about a stolen car when no such theft had been reported. Under a totality of circumstances analysis, these facts were sufficient to provide officer with reasonable suspicion to conduct a Terry stop. The Court further ruled that despite defendant's argument that the bulge in his pockets was insufficient to justify the frisk, under the totality of the circumstances, it was reasonable for the officer to fear for his safety. Therefore, the court concluded that the officer had reasonable suspicion to justify the attempted frisk. (United States v. Stokes (8th Cir. 2023) 62 F.4th 1104.)

Relevance of a Detainee's Prior Criminal History:

Standing alone, a detainee's prior criminal history (i.e., arrests and/or convictions) is insufficient to justify a patdown for weapons. (See United States v. Foster (4th Cir. 2011) 634 F.3rd 243, 246; United States v. Mathurin (3rd Cir. 2009) 561 F.3rd 170, 177; United States v. Davis (10th Cir. 1996) 94 F.3rd 1465, 1469; United States v. Sandoval (10th Cir. 1994) 29 F.3rd 537, 542; People v. Pantoja (2022) 77 Cal.App.5th 483, at p. 488, 490-491.)

But see People v. Bush (2001) 88 Cal.App.4th 1048, where the officer was informed by his dispatch that defendant had a history of violence, possession of weapons and was reported to be a kick-boxer. The Court (at pg. 1053) made the following observations: "In our job as appellate court judges, we have been called upon to review hundreds upon hundreds of criminal convictions. Our > experience has led us to the conclusion that, unfortunately, felons convicted of illegal weapons offenses often later carry concealed weapons, and they do so more than six years after an initial conviction. Moreover, while some persons who are 'very violent' reform such tendencies, many, many others do not. The information possessed by the dispatcher was not unreasonably stale (i.e., six years old). That information provided 'specific and articulable facts' which reasonably warranted the officer in believing that defendant was dangerous and could gain immediate control of weapons."

For Weapons Only: A frisk is a limited search for weapons only. (Santos v. Superior Court (1984) 154 Cal.App.3rd 1178; United States v. I.E.V. (9th Cir. 2013) 705 F.3rd 430, 435.)

> "The 'sole justification' of the patsearch 'is the protection of the police officer and others nearby.' (Citation.) Its purpose "'is not to discover evidence of crime, but to allow the officer to pursue his [or her] investigation without fear of violence.'" (In re Jeremiah S. (2019) 41 Cal.App.5th 299, 304; quoting Minnesota v. Dickerson (1993) 508 U.S. 366, 373 [113 S.Ct. 2130; 124 L.Ed.2nd 334].)
>
> > E.g.: Wrong answer: "I patted him down for weapons and/or contraband."
>
> Patting a person down for identification is not lawful even though the person has been lawfully stopped and claims to have no identification. (People v. Garcia (2006) 145 Cal.App.4th 782.)
>
> > But see "Searching for Identification," below.

Examples of Lawful Patdowns:

> Stopping, detaining, and patting down a known gang member, observed running through traffic in a gang area, while looking back nervously as if fleeing from a crime (as either a victim or a perpetrator), was held to be lawful (In re H.M. (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 136.)
>
> Patting down a passenger in a vehicle for weapons held to be justified based upon the defendant's observed furtive movements of the passenger during the stop of the vehicle, along with his apparently false denial and then unreasonable explanation for the furtive movements. (United States v. Burkett (9th Cir. 2010) 612 F.3rd 1103.)

A probation officer confronted with an uncooperative, irate individual who was present in the house of a juvenile probationer during a Fourth waiver search, when the detained visitor appeared to be a gang member and who was overly dressed for the weather, and who attempted to turn away and cover his stomach when ordered not to do so, lawfully patted the visitor down for weapons. (People v. Rios (2011) 193 Cal.App.4th 584, 598-600.)

> The Court further determined that a probation officer has the legal authority to detain and patdown a non-probationer pursuant to P.C. § 830.5(a)(4) (i.e.; enforcing "violations of any penal provisions of law which are discovered while performing the usual or authorized duties of his or her employment.") (Id, at p. 600.)

A contact in the middle of the night, where the officer was alone with no one in the immediate vicinity who might offer assistance, while outnumbered by three people including one confrontational, much taller male, and a second wearing a knife on a sheath, when both males were wearing clothing loose enough to conceal other weapons, justified a patdown for weapons. (People v. Mendoza (2011) 52 Cal.4th 1056, 1082.)

A patdown for firearms was justified by a nervous suspect's continual touching of a bulge in his sweatshirt and his physical resistance to being detained. (People v. Parrott (2017) 10 Cal.App.5th 485, 495-496; "A police officer has a strong need to practice caution and self-protection when on patrol."

Repeatedly placing his hand in his coat pockets in disregard of an officer's requests to keep his hands out of his pockets, in a manner consistent with someone who was in possession of a weapon, justified a patdown for weapons. (United States v. Reddick (8th Cir. AR 2018) 910 F.3rd 358.)

An officer's observation of a budge in defendant's pants pocket after contacting defendant in response to a citizen's 911 call that a person similar to defendant's description had a gun, was held to have justified a patdown for weapons. (United States v. Adair (7th Cir. IL 2019) 925 F.3rd 931.)

Upon a deputy sheriff responding to a call regarding a disturbance of the peace, defendant was stopped and questioned. During questioning and inquiries regarding his fanny pack he wore around his waist, the deputy became uneasy by defendant's responses and the contents of the fanny pack. The deputy could see what appeared to be the outline of a small gun. Defendant's refusal to take the fanny pack off and put it on the patrol car heightened the deputy's concern. The deputy therefore placed defendant in the patrol car for his safety, and inspected the fanny pack. A gun was found and defendant was prosecuted and convicted of being a felon in the possession of a firearm despite his argument that the search was illegal. On appeal, defendant argued that he was not under arrest, none of the exceptions to the warrant requirement applied, and a warrantless search incident to arrest was inapplicable as it was limited to a patdown of a suspect's outer clothing in searching for weapons. The court affirmed defendant's conviction, holding that the search was legal in that a protective seizure and search for weapons was not limited to a person's body. Rather, a seizure required a balancing of the intrusion against the governmental interest in neutralizing the threat of physical harm to police, and the search was an objectively reasonable preventive measure. (People v. Ritter (1997) 54 Cal.App. 274.)

Where defendant, recognized as a member of a violent street gang, was found to be driving a car with at least two other gang members in the car, in an area contested by two rival gangs, where a passenger—also a gang member—had already been patted down for weapons and a firearm recovered, it was held that it was lawful to pat the defendant down as well based upon the reasonable suspicion that he too, under these circumstances, may be armed. (People v. Esparza (2023) 95 Cal.App.5th 1084, 1090-1093; resulting in the recovery of a firearm.)

Examples of Unlawful Patdowns:

A traffic stop for an equipment violation in a "high crime" (i.e., gang) area at night is not reasonable suspicion, by itself, sufficient to justify a detention or patdown for weapons. (People v. Medina (2003) 110 Cal.App.4th 171.)

Patting down a suspect in a mail theft, merely because the interview is to take place in a small, crowded interview room, that the interview might turn confrontational, and it was felt that patting the suspect down would be the "prudent" thing to do, is not sufficient reasonable suspicion to believe the person might be armed. (United States v. Flatter (9th Cir. 2006) 456 F.3rd 1154.)

A person's assertion of his Fourth Amendment right not to be searched cannot be used to establish a reasonable suspicion to believe that he might be armed. (In re H.H. (2009) 174

Cal.App.4th 653, citing People v. Dickey (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 952.)

The alerting by a drug-sniffing dog on defendant's vehicle, but where no drugs were found in the vehicle, and where defendant's companion becomes noticeably nervous, does not justify by itself a patdown for weapons. Also, believing the object felt during a patdown to be contraband as opposed to a weapon does not justify the lifting of defendant's shirt (i.e., a search) to recover the object (found to be a "brick" of marijuana). (United States v. I.E.V. (9th Cir. 2013) 705 F.3rd 430, 434-442.)

The officer's belief that two subjects are engaged in an act of domestic violence by itself is insufficient to justify a detention and a frisk for weapons absent some other facts indicating that at least one of the subjects is armed. (Thomas v. Dillard (9th Cir. 2016) 818 F.3rd 864, 875-886; but see dissent at pp. 892-901, arguing that the fact alone that domestic violence is involved, given the dangerousness of domestic violence incidents, is sufficient to justify a patdown for weapons.)

> The fact that a suspect is wearing clothing capable of hiding a weapon is not a factor, by itself, tending to indicate that he may be armed. (Id., at p. 884.)
>
> Neither is the fact that the suspect declined to submit to an officer's request that he consent to being searched. The suspect is under no legal obligation to consent. "An individual's steadfast refusal to consent to a search cannot become the basis for reasonable suspicion, absent any other specific facts, to justify a forced search of that individual." (Ibid. See also United States v. Santos (10th Cir. 2005) 403 F.3rd 1120, 1125-1126.)

Merely being present at the scene of some unexplained police activity, being observed opening a garage door, appearing to be surprised, and wearing baggie clothing with the pockets apparently being "full of items," held not to justify a "Terry stop" nor a patdown of the defendant's clothing. (United States v. Job (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 852, 860-862.)

Denial of the defendant's motion to suppress by the trial court could not stand where police officers did not have reasonable suspicion of criminal activity when they stopped and frisked the defendant, a black man. The totality of the circumstances did not add up to enough reasonable suspicion: I.e., there was no reliable tip, no reasonable inference of criminal behavior, no police initiative to investigate a particular crime in a high crime area, and flight occurred without any previous attempt to talk to the suspect. An anonymous tip that defendant had a gun created at most a very weak inference that he was unlawfully carrying the gun without a license, and not enough to alone support a Terry stop, because in Washington State it was presumptively lawful to carry a gun. The record did not support a finding that the manner in which defendant was carrying his gun was unlawful under Wash. Rev. Code § 9.41.270. (United States v. Brown (9th Cir. 2019) 925 F.3rd 1150.)

Under the Fourth Amendment, reasonable suspicion that a minor was involved in the strong arm robbery of a purse (i.e., a "purse snatch") and a cellphone did not support a pat search because there was no other aspect of the stop that, together with the minor's status as a robbery suspect, gave rise to a reasonable belief that he might be armed and dangerous. The court declined to recognize a rule that would be tantamount to automatically validating pat searches in all lawful detentions related to a fresh strong-armed robbery report. (In re Jeremiah S. (2019) 41 Cal.App.5th 299.)

Factors to Consider: A reasonable suspicion to believe that a person may be armed and dangerous is to be determined based upon an evaluation of the "totality of the circumstances" known to the officer at the time. (Thomas v. Dillard, supra.) Such factors may include (recognizing that more than one factor may be required):

- Observing a visible bulge in a person's clothing that could indicate the presence of a weapon. (United States v. Flatter (9th Cir. 2006) 456 F.3rd 1154, 1157; United States v. Bontemps (9th Cir. 2020) 977 F.3rd 909.)

- Seeing a weapon in an area the suspect controls, such as the passenger area of a car. (Michigan v. Long (1983) 463 U.S. 1032, 1050 [103 S.Ct. 3469; 77 L.Ed.2nd 1201.)

- "Sudden movements" suggesting a potential assault or "attempts to reach for an object that was not immediately visible." (United States v. Flatter, supra, citing United States v. Flippin (9th Cir. 1991) 924 F.3nd 163, 164-166; cf. Ybarra v. Illinois (1979) 444 U.S. 85, 93 [100 S.Ct. 338; 62 L.Ed.2nd 238], holding that reasonable suspicion was lacking where an individual's hands were empty and he made "no gestures or other actions indicative of an intent to commit an assault.")

See also United States v. Brown (9th Cir. 2021) 996 F.3rd 998, 1007-1008: "We have recognized that 'abrupt movements or . . . suspicious, furtive behavior' may 'justifiably prompt[]' an officer 'to fear for his [or her] safety.'" (Quoting United States v. Thomas (9th Cir. 1988) 863 F.2nd 622, 629.)

- "Evasive and deceptive responses" to an officer's questions about what an individual was up to. (United States v. Burkett (9th Cir. 2010) 612 F.3rd 1103, 1107.)

- Unnatural hand postures that suggest an effort to conceal a firearm. (United States v. Burkett, supra: Suspect opened the passenger car door with his left hand and kept his right hand next to his body and appeared to reach for his coat pocket.)

- Whether the officer observes anything during an encounter with the suspect that would dispel the officer's suspicions regarding the suspect's potential involvement in a crime or likelihood of being armed. (Terry v. Ohio (1968) 392 U.S. 1, at p. 21, 28 [88 S.Ct. 1868; 20 L.Ed.2nd 889]; United States v. $109,179 in U.S. Currency (9th Cir. 2000) 228 F.3rd 1080, 1086.)

The "nature of the suspected crime" suspected is a factor in determining whether a frisk for weapons is lawful. "(C)ertain crimes carry with them the propensity for violence, and individuals being investigated for those crimes may be pat searched without further justification." (People v. Osborne (2009) 175 Cal.App.4th 1052, 1059; see also Sibron v. New York (1968) 392 U.S. 40, 74 [20 L.Ed.2nd 917].) For instance:

Mail theft: No. (United States v. Flatter (9th Cir. 2006) 456 F.3rd 1154.)

Robbery: Yes. (Terry v. Ohio (1968) 392 U.S. 1 [88 S.Ct. 1868; 20 L.Ed.2nd 889]; United States v. Hill (9th Cir. 1976) 545 F.2nd 1191; Green v. Newport (7th Cir. Wis. 2017) 868 F.3rd 629.)

Second degree strong arm robbery (i.e., purse snatch): No. (In re Jeremiah S. (2019) 41 Cal.App.5th 299.)

Bank robbery: Yes. (United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2009) 581 F.3rd 994.)

Nighttime burglary: Yes. (United States v. Mattarolo (9th Cir. 2000) 209 F.3rd 1153, 1158.)

Counterfeiting: No. (United States v. Thomas (9th Cir. 1988) 863 F.2nd 622, 629.)

Large-scale narcotics dealing: Yes. (United States v. $109,179 in U.S. Currency (9th Cir. 2000) 228 F.3rd 1080, 1086-1087; United States v. Post (9th Cir. 1979) 607 F.2nd 847.)

> "(W)e have recognized that where 'officers reasonably suspected that [a person] was involved in narcotics activity, it was also reasonable for them to suspect that he [or she] might be armed.'" (United States v. Brown (9th Cir. 2021) 996 F.3rd 998, 1008, citing United States v. Davis (9th Cir. 2008) 530 F.3rd 1069, 1082-1083; and referencing United States v. Flatter (9th Cir. 2006) 456 F.3rd 1154, 1158.
>
> > Note: In Brown, the drug activity appeared only to be a hand-to-hand sale, and not necessarily "large scale." The Court, nonetheless, found sufficient cause to justify a patdown for weapons although that was not the issue in this case, but rather whether the officer had sufficient cause to do a full search of defendant's pockets (he did not).

Drug trafficking: Yes. (People v. Limon (1993) 17 Cal.App.4th 524, 535; People v. Lee (1987) 194 Cal.App.3rd 975, 983; United States v. Thompson (7th Cir. 2016) 842 F.3rd 1002; People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553; United States v. Green (8th Cir. IA 2019) 946 F.3rd 433)

Large-scale marijuana growing operation: Yes. (United States v. Davis (9th Cir. 2008) 530 F.3rd 1069, 1082-1083; "Because officers reasonably suspected that Richard Davis was involved in narcotics activity, it was also reasonable for them to suspect that he might be armed.")

> See also People v. Collier (2008) 166 Cal.App.4th 1374; traffic stop where the odor of marijuana was detected and defendant was wearing baggy clothing through which any possible bulges could not be seen; patdown lawful.
>
> But see United States v. I.E.V. (9th Cir. 2012) 705 F.3rd 430, where it was held that a drug-sniffing dog alerting on defendant's vehicle, without any other indications that defendant was armed, was insufficient cause to justify a patdown for weapons.

Drug-related offense; i.e., under the influence only: No. (Ramirez v. City of Buena Park (9th Cir. 2009) 560 F.3rd 1012, 1021-1023: The fact that the defendant was reasonably believed to be under the influence of a controlled substance, by itself, was not cause to pat him down for weapons.)

Vehicle burglary: No, but when combined with tools lying nearby, including screwdrivers that could be used as a weapon, the fact that the suspect might be on parole, and he was acting "real nervous," patting him down for weapons was justified. (People v. Osborne (2009) 175 Cal.App.4th 1052, 1059-1062.)

Auto theft: Yes. (United States v. Davidson (8th Cir. 2015) 808 F.3rd 325.)

Domestic violence: No, at least as a general rule. (Thomas v. Dillard (9th Cir. 2016) 818 F.3rd 864, 878-886, and fn. 9; but see dissent arguing to the contrary; pp. 892-901.)

The "Totality of the Circumstances:"

Whether or not a reasonable suspicion exists is based on an evaluation of the "totality of the circumstances," precluding the practice of "picking each factor apart separately." (See United States v. Arvizu (2002) 534 U.S. 266, 274 [151 L.Ed.2nd 740, 122 S. Ct. 744]; Terry precludes a "divide-and-conquer" analysis. See also People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, 560; and United States v. Valdes-Vega (9th Cir. 2013) 738 F.3rd 1074, 1078-1079.)

But see concurring opinion in United States v. Raygoza-Garcia (9th Cir. 2018) 902 F.3rd 994, at pp. 1002-1004, criticizing what the justices consider to be putting too much emphasis on otherwise innocent behavior in establishing a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity.

Reasonable Suspicion that is Dispelled:

A frisk is not justified when additional or subsequent facts become known to the officer during the contact that dispel or negate the suspicion. (Terry v. Ohio, supra, at p. 28; United States v. $109,179 in U.S. Currency (9th Cir. 2000) 228 F.3rd 1080, 1086; Thomas v. Dillard (9th Cir. 2016) 818 F.3rd 864, at p. 877, and fn. 8.)

See United States v. Thomas (9th Cir. 1988) 863 F.2nd 622, 626-630: Although there was reasonable suspicion to stop a driver who roughly resembled a counterfeiting suspect and was near the scene of the crime, once the driver exited his vehicle and it was clear he did not match the suspect's description, there was no reasonable suspicion under the circumstances to justify further detention or a frisk.

Vehicle Drivers and Passengers:

The driver of a motor vehicle stopped for a traffic offense, ordered by a police officer to exit his vehicle, is subject to be patted down for offensive weapons whenever it is determined that there is a reasonable suspicion to believe that he or she "might be armed and presently dangerous." (Pennsylvania v. Mimms (1977) 434 U.S. 106, 112 [98 S.Ct. 330; 54 L.Ed.2nd 331].)

The same rule applies to passengers in the motor vehicle. They are subject to being ordered out of the vehicle (Maryland v. Wilson (1997) 519 U.S. 408, 415 [117 S.Ct. 882; 137 L.Ed.2nd 41].), may be detained for the duration of the traffic stop (Brendlin v. California (2007) 551 U.S. 249 [127 S.Ct. 2400; 168 L.Ed.2nd 132].), and then patted down so long as there is an articulable reasonable suspicion to believe that they may be armed. (Arizona v. Johnson (2009) 555 U.S. 323 [129 S.Ct. 781; 172 L.Ed.2nd 694].)

See also Knowles v. Iowa (1998) 525 U.S. 113, 117-118 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142 L.Ed.2nd 492]; Officers who conduct "routine traffic stop[s]" may "perform a 'patdown' of a driver and any passengers upon reasonable suspicion that they may be armed and dangerous." (See also Arizona v. Johnson, supra., at p. 324.)

In a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil rights action, where a CHP officer was found to be civilly liable after a jury trial, the Court held that the evidence supported a finding that a frisk was unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment because the jury found that the traffic stop was constitutionally unreasonable in that the purported reason for the stop; i.e., loud music, was based upon inconsistent, conflicting evidence. The jury could have reasonably discounted testimony that the patdown was justified by horn honking, purported loose clothing, or the presence of gangs in the area. (King v. State of California (2015) 242 Cal.App.4th 265, 278-291.)

Consensual Patdowns: A patdown, like any other search, may be performed when the suspect provides a free and voluntary consent.

After defendant, who had prior drug and firearm-related convictions, paid cash for a last-minute, one-way ticket without checking any luggage, an officer asked defendant for permission to search his bag and his person. Defendant consented twice and spread his arms and legs to facilitate the search. The officer felt something hard and unnatural in defendant's groin area and arrested him. The appellate court determined that defendant voluntarily consented to a patdown search because he was not in custody, officers told him he was free to leave, and officers did not tell him that they could obtain a search warrant if he refused to consent. The scope of the search was reasonable because it was reasonable for the officer to assume the consent included the groin area since the officer specifically advised defendant that the officer was looking for narcotics, defendant lifted his arms and spread his legs, defendant never objected or revoked consent, the search did not extend inside the clothing, and the officer methodically worked his way up defendant's legs before searching the groin. (United States v. Russell (9th Cir. 2012) 664 F.3rd 1279, 1281-1284.)

In the Absence of a Reasonable Suspicion, as a "Special Needs" Search:

Where it is shown there to be a strong governmental interest (i.e., a "special need") in responding to the sounds of gunfire and preventing violence in a high crime area where recent shootings and homicides (six shooting and two homicides in that past three months) had occurred, thus constituting an "exigent circumstance." (United States v. Curry (4th Cir. 2019) 937 F.3rd 363.)

The Appellate Court found that the officers acted reasonably in stopping defendant and the other men without individualized suspicion that any of them were involved in the sounds of gunfire in that area, and patting defendant down for firearms when he declined to raise his short and expose his belt line. The Court recognized that the officers were rushing to respond to shots fired seconds earlier in a densely populated residential neighborhood. The court noted the officers were faced with the prospect that an active shooter might continue to threaten the safety of the public. Even though one purpose of the officers' actions that night may have included ordinary law enforcement, the immediate purpose of stopping defendant and the other men and illuminating them with their flashlights was to protect the public and themselves from the threat posed by an active shooter. (Ibid.)

Permissible Procedures:

Limited to Outer Clothing; Exceptions: A frisk is limited to the outer clothing, except when the clothing (or purse, etc.) is so resistant as to prevent feeling a possible weapon below the clothing. (People v. Brisendine (1975) 13 Cal.3rd 528, 542.)

E.g.: Where the officer responded to a 9-1-1 call of a disturbance, and was directed to the defendant who was wearing a fanny pack in which the officer could see the apparent outline of a pistol, taking the fanny pack from the defendant and unzipping the outer compartment to remove what was in fact determined to be a pistol was not unreasonable. (People v. Ritter (1997) 54 Cal.App.4th 274.)

Removal of Weapons: When an object is felt which might be a weapon of any sort, that object may then be removed and inspected. (People v. Snyder (1992) 11 Cal.App.4th 389; bottle; People v. Atmore (1970) 13 Cal.App.3rd 244, 247; shotgun shell.)

When Suspect Reaches for a Weapon: When an officer reasonably believes the suspect is reaching for a weapon, the officer need not first undertake a patdown search to feel for the object for which the suspect is reaching. (People v. Wigginton (1973) 35 Cal.App.3rd 732, 737-740; People v. Superior Court* [Holmes] (1971) 15 Cal.App.3rd 806, 813; People v. Atmore (1970) 13 Cal.App.3rd 244, 247-248; People v. Woods (1970) 6 Cal.App.3rd 832, 838; People v. Sanchez (1967) 256 Cal.App.2nd 700, 703-704; People v. Rosales (1989) 211 Cal.App.3rd 325, 329.)

Pen. Code § 833.5; Statutory Authority to Patdown: California statutes provide legal authority for peace officers to detain and "conduct a limited search" of a person the officer has "reasonable cause" to believe has a firearm or other deadly weapon and to seize any weapon found. If the person is convicted of a charge related to the firearm or weapon, it shall be deemed a nuisance and disposed of pursuant to Pen. Code §§ 18000 & 18005 (formerly, Pen. Code § 12028).

Note: In that most of the rules on "patdown searches" are from constitutionally-based case decisions, anywhere they might differ from the language of this statute, the case law is likely to take precedence.

Problems:

During a "Consensual Encounter:" A patdown is probably not lawful, although it may never become an issue in that if an officer observes something giving him or her an articulable reasonable suspicion that the consensually encountered person may be armed, that same reasonable suspicion would likely elevate the situation into one justifying a lawful detention as well as a patdown. (See People v. Lee (1987) 194 Cal.App.3rd 975, 982-983; People v. Rosales (1989) 211 Cal.App.3rd 325, 330.)

During Execution of a Search Warrant or a "Fourth Waiver*" search, at least for narcotics: Courts tend to recognize the likelihood that narcotics suspects are often armed and may allow a patdown with no more than the conclusory opinion that the "need for officer safety" dictated the need for a patdown. (People v. Samples 1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 1197.)

Note Ybarra v. Illinois (1979) 444 U.S. 85 [100 S.Ct. 338; 62 L.Ed.2nd 238], where the United States Supreme Court determined to be illegal the detention and patdown of anyone and everyone at the scene of the execution of a narcotics search warrant (i.e., a bar), absent evidence connecting each person to be detained and patted down with the illegal activity being investigated.

During a "Fourth Waiver*" search of a narcotics suspect's home: A patdown of a "known associate" of a probationer whose home is being searched according to that person's terms of probation, with evidence of drug abuse occurring at the house, but without an articulable suspicion that the defendant (the "associate") might be armed, but just because it is "the safe thing to do," is illegal. (People v. Sandoval (2008) 163 Cal.App.4th 205.)

Feeling a Controlled Substance: The "Plain Feel" Doctrine: When an officer feels a controlled substance (or other items subject to seizure) during the patdown for weapons, and he or she has the training and expertise to recognize that the object is probably an illegal substance or object, he may do a full search based upon that newly developed probable cause. (People v. Lee (1987) 194 Cal.App.3rd 975; People v. Thurman (1989) 209 Cal.App.3rd 817, 825-826; see also United States v. Pacheco (6th Cir. 2016) 841 F.3rd 384; United States v. Greene (3rd Cir. PA 2019) 927 F.3rd 723.)

Under what is sometimes referred to as the "plain feel" doctrine, having probable cause to believe that an item felt during a lawful patdown for weapons is illegal contraband (i.e., it being "immediately apparent"), a search of the person for the contraband is justified. (United States v. Graves (3rd Cir. PA 2017) 877 F.3rd 494.)

E.g.: Feeling a lump which could not have been a weapon, plus other factors (prior lawful observation of pagers, gram scale upon which there was an odor of methamphetamine, and a plastic baggie), justified a finding of probable cause to search for contraband. (People v. Dibb (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 832.)

"Police officers may also seize 'nonthreatening contraband detected during a protective patdown search . . . so long as the officers' search stays within the bounds marked by Terry.'" (United States v. Baker (9th Cir. 2023) 58 F.4th 1109, 1117; quoting Minnesota v. Dickerson (1993) 508 U.S. 366, 378, at p. 373 [113 S.Ct. 2130; 124 L.Ed.2nd 334].)

However, if the officer feels what might be a controlled substance in the pocket, and "manipulates" it (Minnesota v. Dickerson (1993) 508 U.S. 366, 378 [113 S.Ct. 2130; 124 L.Ed.2nd 334]; People v. Dickey (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 952, 957.) or "shakes" it (United States v. Miles (9th Cir. 2001) 224 F.3rd 1009.) in an attempt to confirm or verify his suspicions, the manipulation or shaking of the object is a search for contraband, done without probable cause, and illegal. (Ibid.)

Unless the incriminating character of the contraband becomes "immediately apparent" to the officer, he may not retrieve it and may not manipulate it in an attempt to determine what the item may be. (United States v. Davis (9th Cir. 2008) 530 F.3rd 1069, 1082-1084.)

> See also United States v. Craddock (8th Cir. 2016) 841 F.3rd 756; where the Court held that feeling during a patdown what was apparently a keyfob to a vehicle did not supply the necessary probable cause to believe that it might belong to a stolen vehicle parked nearby. Recovering the keyfob was held to be an illegal search.

But, feeling a bulge that is believed to be a weapon, and manipulating it in an attempt to verify that it is a weapon, which requires no more than a reasonable suspicion, is lawful. (United States v. Mattarolo (9th Cir. 1999) 209 F.3rd 1153.)

Feeling a bulge and being unable to determine whether or not it is a weapon, it is okay to ask the suspect. If the suspect admits that it is contraband, this will give the officer probable cause to arrest and search. (People v. Avila (1997) 58 Cal.App.4th 1069, 1075-1977.)

But feeling a bulge and recognizing that it is not a weapon (a film canister, in this case), and then asking the subject what it is, has been argued by some to be illegal as a "preliminary step to an illegal search" (see People v. Valdez (1987) 196 Cal.App.3rd 799, 807); a questionable decision at best.

Feeling a bulge which the officer immediately recognized as car keys, after the subject had denied having any car keys on him, and with other evidence tending to connect him to a recent carjacking during which the car keys were taken, was sufficient probable cause to believe that the car keys were evidence of a crime and to justify the retrieval of the keys from his pocket. (In re Lennies H. (2005) 126 Cal.App.4th 1232.)

Frisk for a Firearm based upon an Uncorroborated Anonymous Tip:

A detention and patdown for weapons, based upon an uncorroborated anonymous tip alone, is not lawful in that anonymous information has repeatedly been held to be legally insufficient to establish a reasonable suspicion. There is no such thing as a "firearms exception" to this rule. (Florida v. J.L. (2000) 529 U.S. 266 [120 S.Ct. 1375; 146 L.Ed.2nd 254].)

But note: The U.S. Supreme Court, in dicta, hinted strongly that had the anonymous tipster warned of something more dangerous, such as a bomb, a patdown based upon this tip alone might be upheld. The Court also indicated that certain areas where there is a lessened expectation of privacy, such as in an airport or on school grounds, may also be an exception to this rule. (Id., at pp. 273-274.)

> See In re K.J. (2018) 18 Cal.App.5th 1123, 1134-1135, using the "school grounds" dicta from J.L. as an excuse to lessen the corroboration requirement in a case where a tipster told a school principal that defendant had a gun with him on campus.
>
> Also, the Second Circuit Court of Appeal held in United States v. Albarado (2nd Cir. 1974) 495 F.2nd 799, 803, that "Even the unintrusive magnetometer walk-through is a search in that it searches for and discloses metal items within areas most intimate to the person where there is a normal expectation of privacy."

The J.L. Court, in a concurring opinion, also briefly discusses "predictive information" which may supply the necessary corroboration, such as being able to correctly describe future actions of the suspect. Also, unconnected anonymous informants, or anything which would add the element of credibility to the information, might sufficiently corroborate the anonymous informant. (Florida v. J.L., at p. 275 [146 L.Ed.2nd at p. 263].)

> See "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above.

Taking the hint, the appellate court in People v. Coulombe (2001) 86 Cal.App.4th 52, found sufficient corroboration justifying a patdown for a firearm when the information came from two separate informants, where the tips were close in time, the informants contacted the officer personally (thus putting their anonymity at risk), and the setting was in a crowded throng of celebrants at a New Year's Eve street party, thus increasing the danger.

The fact that the physical description of a suspect who is reported by an anonymous tipster to have a gun in his pocket is very specific still does not corroborate the tipster's information. Absent at least some suspicious circumstances observed by the responding police officers, finding the person described by the tipster does not create a reasonable suspicion justifying a detention or a patdown for weapons. (People v. Jordan (2004) 121 Cal.App.4th 544, 553-652; the quick confirmation of the physical description of the defendant and his location, by itself, is legally insufficient.)

A late night radio call concerning two specifically described males causing a disturbance, with one possibly armed, in a known gang area at an address where a call concerning a daytime shooting days earlier resulted in the recovery of two firearms, and where the described males are found within minutes of the call, is sufficient to justify a detention and a patdown. (In re Richard G. (2009) 173 Cal.App.4th 1252, 1257-1258, fn. 1.)

Other Situations:

Frisk of a person for weapons was lawful when it had been reported to police by a witness that one of several people present had been seen with a firearm, defendant was uncooperative and belligerent, and he kept reaching for an area in his baggy pants where there appeared to be a large, heavy object. (People v. Lopez (2004) 119 Cal.App.4th 132.)

Stopping someone suspected of having just committed an armed carjacking, with the observation of a knife and bullets, and then a gun, all in plain sight, was more than enough to justify a cursory check of the suspects for possible weapons. Then, feeling objects which, as the deputy testified, could be, or could contain, weapons, the deputy was justified in removing and inspecting those items. (United States v. Hartz (9th Cir. 2006) 458 F.3rd 1011, 1018-1019.)

Patting a non-student down for possible weapons on a high school campus, where the defendant/minor was to be moved to the security office, need not be justified by an articulable suspicion that he might be armed. (In re Jose Y. (2006) 141 Cal.App.4th 748.)

A traffic stop where the odor of marijuana was detected and defendant was wearing baggy clothing through which any possible bulges could not be seen, held to be lawful. (People v. Collier (2008) 166 Cal.App.4th 1374.)

Abandoned Property:

General Rule: There is no expectation of privacy in abandoned, or discarded, property. Such property, therefore, may be searched or seized without a warrant or even probable cause.

Property abandoned by a suspect, without both a subjective and an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy, may be seized and searched without probable cause and without a warrant. (In re Baraka H. (1992) 6 Cal.App.4th 1039.)

Leaving all his belongings in a motel room, disappearing in the middle of the night and without making arrangements to extend his stay, it was held that defendant abandoned the motel room, his personal belongings in the room, and his vehicle in the parking lot. There being no reasonable expectation of privacy in these items due to this abandonment, defendant lost his standing to challenge the warrantless entry. (People v. Parson (2008) 44 Cal.4th 332, 342-348.)

Leaving a cellphone at the scene of a crime negates the suspect's expectation of privacy in the contents of that phone, and is therefore abandoned property despite the suspect's subjective wish to retrieve it, which he fails to act on. "Abandonment . . . is not meant in the strict property-right sense, but rests instead on whether the person so relinquished his interest in the property that he no longer retained a reasonable expectation of privacy in it at the time of the search." (People v. Daggs (2005) 133 Cal.App.4th 361.)

Abandoning a cigarette butt onto a public street constitutes a loss of one's right to privacy in that butt, making it available to law enforcement to recover and test for DNA without a search warrant. (People v. Gallego (2010) 190 Cal.App.4th 388, 394-398.)

Tricking a suspect out of an item of personal property and then testing it for DNA is another issue. But, as noted in Gallego, at p. 396, several courts from other jurisdictions have found such a tactic to be lawful. (See Commonwealth v. Perkins (Mass. 2008) 883 N.E.2nd 230; and Commonwealth v. Bly (Mass. 2007) 862 N.E.2nd 341; testing cigarette butts and a soda can left behind after an interview with police. Commonwealth v. Ewing (Mass 2006) 67 Mass.App.Ct. 531 [854 N.E.2nd 993, 1001; offering defendant cigarettes and a straw during an interrogation. People v. LaGuerre (2006) 29 A.D.3rd 822

[815 N.Y.S.2nd 211]; obtaining a DNA sample from a piece of chewing gum defendant voluntarily discarded during a contrived soda tasting test. State v. Athan (Wash. 2007) 158 P.3rd 27; DNA obtained from defendant's saliva from licking an envelope he mailed to detectives in a police ruse.)

There is no privacy right in the mouthpiece of the PAS device, which was provided by the police and where defendant abandoned any expectation of privacy in the saliva he deposited on the device when he failed to wipe it off. Whether defendant subjectively expected that the genetic material contained in his saliva would become known to the police was irrelevant because he deposited it on a police device and thus made it accessible to the police. The officer who administered the PAS (Preliminary Alcohol Screening) test testified that used mouthpieces were normally discarded in the trash. Thus, any subjective expectation defendant may have had that his right to privacy would be preserved was unreasonable. (People v. Thomas (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 338.)

The Thomas court further held that using defendant's DNA taken from the PAS device mouthpiece to legitimately test defendant's blood/alcohol level, with his consent, was not a coercive ruse, and therefore lawful. (Id., at p. 344.)

By throwing his backpack onto the roof of a house upon the approach of police officers, defendant abandoned any expectation of privacy in that backpack that he might have previously had. (United States v. Juszczyk (10th Cir. Kan. 2017) 844 F.3rd 1213.)

The defendant's subjective reasoning for abandoning a cellphone held to be irrelevant. Leaving his cellphone in a crashed motor vehicle for the stated purpose of getting away from other who were shooting at him did not prevent the responding officers from seizing the cellphone and searching it in an attempt to locate the person who had been driving it. (United States v. Crumble (8th Cir. MN 2018) 878 F.3rd 656.)

Trashcans: There is no reasonable expectation of privacy in the trash one places in trashcans out at the curb for pick up. (California v. Greenwood (1988) 486 U.S. 35 [108 S.Ct. 1625; 100 L.Ed.2nd 30].)

Fresh marijuana stem and leaf cuttings found in a trashcan in front of a residence establishes probable cause justifying the issuance of a search warrant for the residence. (People v. Thuss (2003) 107 Cal.App.4th 221.)

Having the trash collection company collect defendant's trash on his regular pickup day (i.e., a "trash pull"), segregating it from other trash, was constitutional and did not violate defendant's reasonable expectation of privacy. (United States v. Thompson (8th Cir. S.D., 2018) 881 F.3rd 629.)

The "Threatened Illegal Detention:" What happens when the property is abandoned as a direct result of a police officer's attempt to illegally stop and detain a suspect?

The United States Supreme Court resolved a previous three-way split of authority: There is no constitutional violation in a "threatened unlawful detention." The Fourth Amendment does not apply to such a situation until the person is actually illegal detained; i.e., when the officer actually catches the defendant or the defendant otherwise submits to the officer's authority (i.e.; he gives up). (California v. Hodari D. (1991) 499 U.S. 621 [111 S.Ct. 1547; 113 L.Ed.2nd 690].)

Result: Any evidence abandoned (e.g., tossed or dropped) during a foot pursuit of a fleeing suspect, even without any reasonable suspicion justifying a detention (i.e., a "threatened unlawful detention"), is admissible as abandoned property (as well as supplying the necessary "reasonable suspicion" to justify the suspect's detention upon being caught).

But, if the suspect does not abandon the contraband until after he has been caught, and thus illegally detained, then it is subject to suppression as "fruit of the poisonous tree;" i.e., the unlawful detention.

Defendant discarding a firearm as officers were attempting to (arguably) illegally arrest him, did not require the suppression of the firearm in that when the gun was discarded, defendant had not yet been "touched" nor had he "submitted" to the officers. Thus, the Fourth Amendment was not yet implicated. (United States v. McClendon (9th Cir. 2013) 713 F.3rd 1211, 1214-1217.)

The Court noted that a temporary hesitation, nor the officer's use of firearm while telling him he was under arrest, does not alter the rule of Hodari D. (Id., at pp. 1216-1217.)

The definition of a "seizure" was expanded a bit by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Torres v. Madrid (Mar. 25, 2021) __ U.S. __, __ [141 S.Ct. 989; 209 L.Ed.2nd 190], where the Court ruled that a "seizure" occurs when "(t)he application of physical force to the body of a person with intent to restrain is a seizure, even if the force does not succeed in subduing the person."

The Madrid Court overruled a lower court's holding that a suspect's continued flight after being shot by police negates a Fourth Amendment excessive-force claim.

Searching for Identification:

General Rule: A patdown of an individual for identification is illegal: Patdowns on less than probable cause are allowed only for the purpose of discovering offensive weapons, and then only when the officer is able to articulate a "reasonable suspicion" for believing why the person might be armed. (People v. Garcia (2006) 145 Cal.App.4th 782.)

Exceptions:

A circumstance allowing for a check for identification has been found, however, where the defendant claimed to have none, but the officer could see that he had a wallet in his pocket. (People v. Long (1987) 189 Cal.App.3rd 77; telling the suspect to check his wallet and then insisting on watching him do so justified by the need to insure that he didn't conceal evidence or retrieve a weapon.)

Retrieving a wallet from a suspect where the wallet was visible in his pocket, after the suspect, who was lawfully detained, said he didn't have any identification, done for the purpose of checking the wallet for identification, was lawful "under the unique facts of this case." (People v. Loudermilk (1987) 195 Cal.App.3rd 996.)

Searching for a Driver's Identification and/or Vehicle Documentation:

The California Supreme Court had previously ruled that during a lawful traffic stop, at least after a demand for the driver's license and other vehicle documentation is made and a negative response is obtained (see United States v. Lopez (C.D.Cal. 1979) 474 F.Supp. 943, 948-949.), a warrantless, suspicionless intrusion into the vehicle for the limited purpose of locating such identification and documentation is lawful, even if the driver denies that any such documentation exists. In so doing, the officer may look in any location where it is reasonable to believe he or she might find such documentation. (In re Arturo D. (2002) 27 Cal.4th 60;

Arturo D. was joined with the companion case, People v. Hinger (using the same cite) out of the Fourth District Court of Appeal.

This was held to include under the front seat (whether looking from the front or rear of the seat), in a glove compartment, and over the visor. It would probably not include within containers found in the vehicle or the trunk, absent some articulable reason to believe why such documentation might actually be there. (Id., at p. 86, and fn. 25.)

Arturo D. was overruled by the California Court in People v. Lopez (2019) 8 Cal.5th 353, however, at least so far as it had ruled that the warrantless search of the vehicle for the driver's identification is concerned. The rule is now that although a driver's denial of having his driver's license or other identification with him does not justify an officer's search of the automobile for such identification, it might if the officer is able to develop the necessary "probable cause" that the driver lied about his identity. (People v. Lopez, supra, at pp. 372-373.)

The California Supreme Court's decision of People v. Lopez (2019) 8 Cal.5th 353, overruled the Arturo D. decision, but only so far as it pertained to the limited search of a vehicle for the driver's identification. In so holding, the Court noted that its decision in Lopez is limited to searches for identification, and does not purport to overrule prior cases that have upheld searches of vehicles under similar circumstances where the officer is looking for vehicle documentation. (Id., at p. 385, fn. 3; see below.)

See "Searching a Vehicle for a Driver's License and/or Vehicle Registration, VIN Number, Proof of Insurance, etc.," under "Searches of Vehicles" (Chapter 12), below.

Fingerprint Evidence:

No Right to Refuse, Upon Arrest:

Upon being arrested, an arrestee has no legal right to refuse a fingerprint examination. (Virgle v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal.App.4th 572.)

The legal authority for fingerprinting an arrestee can be inferred from various state statutes:

Pen. Code § 7(21): Describing the obtaining of fingerprints as part of the booking procedure.

Pen. Code § 853.6(g): The requirement that persons arrested and released on a misdemeanor citation provide fingerprints prior to the person's scheduled court appearance.

Pen. Code §§ 13125, 13127: Providing for the retention of certain basic information, including fingerprint identification numbers, on arrested individuals.

"Fingerprints taken pursuant to an arrest are part of so-called 'booking' procedures, designed to ensure that the person who is arrested is in fact the person law enforcement officials believe they have in custody. (Fn. omitted)" (United States v. Kinkade (9th Cir. 2003) 345 F.3rd 1095, 100-1101 (Reversed on other grounds); citing Smith v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1963) 324 F.2nd 879, 883; and Napolitano v. United States (1st Cir. 1965) 340 F.2nd 313, 314.)

Fingerprints taken upon arrest for identification purposes are lawful, even if the product of an illegal arrest. (Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Lopez-Mendoza (1984) 468 U.S. 1032, 1039-1040 [104 S.Ct. 3479; 82 L.Ed.2nd 778].)

If, however, the fingerprints are found to have been obtained for "investigative purposes," such prints are subject to suppression absent probable cause justifying the arrest. (Davis v. Mississippi (1969) 394 U.S. 721 [89 S.Ct. 1394; 22 L.Ed.2nd 676]; Hayes v. Florida (1985) 470 U.S. 811 [105 S.Ct. 1643; 84 L.Ed.2nd 705]; United States v. Beltran (9th Cir. 389 F.3rd 864.)

However, even after fingerprints are taken for investigative purposes, and therefore suppressed as the product of an illegal arrest, the court, upon request, can require defendant to submit a new set of fingerprints for purposes of trial on the new criminal offense. (United States v. Garcia-Beltran (9th Cir. 2006) 443 F.3rd 1126; United States v. Parga-Rosas (9th Cir. 2001) 238 F.3rd 1209; United States v. Ortiz-Hernandez (9th Cir. 2005) 427 F.3rd 567.)

It can also be argued that refusal to cooperate in providing fingerprints during the booking procedure is a violation of P.C. § 148(a)(1), for interfering with the officer in the performance of his or her duties. (See People v. Quiroga (1993) 16 Cal.App.4th 961, 971-972; where defendant's conviction for P.C. § 148(a)(1) upheld for refusing to identify himself during the booking procedure, at least for a felony offense.)

> However, in noting that Pen. Code § 148(a)(1) provides that "when no other punishment is prescribed," the Court held that; "(a) refusal to disclose personal identification following arrest for a misdemeanor or infraction cannot constitute a violation of Pen. Code, § 148 (resisting a peace officer). By enacting Pen. Code, § 853.5 (refusal by person arrested for infraction to provide identification), Pen. Code, § 853.6, subd. (i)(5) (failure of person arrested for misdemeanor to provide satisfactory evidence of personal identification), Veh. Code, § 40302 (mandatory appearance before magistrate), and Veh. Code, § 40305 (failure of nonresident to furnish satisfactory evidence of identity), the Legislature established other ways of dealing with such nondisclosure." (Id., at p. 970.)

In that fingerprint evidence does not involve any Fifth Amendment, self-incrimination issues (see Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 764 [86 S.Ct. 1826; 16 L.Ed.2nd 908, 916].), an arrestee has no right to refuse to provide them at his or her booking. (United States v. Kelly (2nd Cir. 1932) 55 F.2nd 67; People v. Jones (1931) 112 Cal.App. 68.)

Use of Force:

While excessive force is not permissible (People v. Matteson (1964) 61 Cal.2d 466.), reasonable force which does not "shock the conscience" may be used if necessary in order to secure fingerprints from the arrested subject. (People v. Williams (1969) 71 Cal.2nd 614, 625.)

Five deputies holding down a resisting criminal defendant for the purpose of obtaining his fingerprints, in a courtroom (but out of the jury's presence), where there were found to be less violent alternatives to obtaining the same evidence, is force that "shocks the conscience" and a violation of the defendant's Fourteenth Amendment due process rights. (People v. Herndon (2007) 149 Cal.App.4th 274; held to be "harmless error" in light of other evidence and because defendant created the situation causing the force to be used.)

Refusal Upon Less than an Arrest:

> Absent an arrest, the refusal to provide law enforcement with fingerprints is not a crime. However, it is apparently lawful to stop and fingerprint a particular suspect on less than probable cause, at least if the coerciveness is minimized by doing the fingerprinting at the scene and without transportation to a police station. (Davis v. Mississippi (1969) 394 U.S. 721 [89 S.Ct. 1394; 22 L.Ed.2nd 676]; Hayes v. Florida (1985) 470 U.S. 811 [105 S.Ct. 1643; 84 L.Ed.2nd 705]; Virgle v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal.App.4th 572; Kaupp v. Texas (2003) 538 U.S. 626, 630, fn. 2 [123 S.Ct. 1843; 155 L.Ed.2nd 814, 820].)

Right to Assistance of Counsel:

> The taking of a defendant's fingerprints is not a critical stage of criminal proceedings at which a defendant needs the presence of counsel. Therefore, there is no Sixth Amendment right to the presence of counsel at the taking of fingerprints (i.e, "booking"). (People v. Williams (1969) 71 Cal.2nd 614, 625; citing United States v. Wade (1967) 388 U.S. 218, 227-228 [18 L.Ed.2d 1149, 1157-1158].)

Handwriting (and other types of) Exemplars:

> Similarly, a criminal arrestee does not have a Fifth Amendment self-incrimination right not to provide a handwriting exemplar. (Schmerber v. California (1966) 384 U.S. 757, 768 [86 S.Ct. 1826; 16 L.Ed.2nd 908, 918]; Gilbert v. California (1967) 388 U.S 263 [87 S.Ct. 1951; 18 L.Ed.2nd 1178]; People v. Graves (1966) 64 Cal.2nd 208.)
>
> The same legal theory applies to a "voice exemplar" (United States v. Dionisio (1973) 410 U.S. 1 [93 S.Ct. 764; 35 L.Ed.2nd 67].), as well as submitting to being photographed. (Schmerber v. California, supra.)
>
> Note: While it may be physically impossible to force an arrestee to provide any of the above, because there is no constitutional right not to cooperate, his that he refused may be used in evidence against him.

Jail, Prison, and Prisoner Searches:

> Booking Inventory Searches: A person who is to be booked, and who has objects in his possession, may be subjected to an inventory search despite the lack of probable cause to believe he has anything illegal on him. (Illinois v. Lafayette (1983) 462 U.S. 640 [103 S.Ct. 2605; 77 L.Ed.2nd 65].)

Scope: "This exception (to the search warrant requirement) permits 'police to search the personal effects of a person under lawful arrest as part of the routine administrative procedure at a police station house incident to booking and jailing the suspect.'" (People v. Turner (2017) 13 Cal.App.5th 397, 403; quoting People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1212, 1213.)

> "Booking" entails the recordation of an arrest in official police records, and the taking by the police of fingerprints and photographs of the person arrested. (See People v. Superior Court* [Simon] (1971) 7 Cal.3rd 186, 208; see also P.C. § 7, subd. 21.)

Purposes:

> Warrantless searches may be made by jail and prison officials to accommodate legitimate "institutional needs and objectives;" primarily internal security. (Hudson v. Palmer (1984) 468 U.S. 517, 524 [104 S.Ct. 3194; 82 L.Ed.2nd 393, 401].)
>
> Other Purposes include:
>
> - To prevent the introduction of drugs and other contraband (including weapons) into the premises;
>
> - The detection of escape plots; and
>
> - The maintenance of sanitary conditions.
>
> (See Hudson v. Palmer, supra, at p. 527 [82 L.Ed.2nd at pp. 403-404]; United States v. Cohen (2nd Cir. 1986) 796 F.2nd 20, 22-23.)
>
> - Post-booking searches also serve the purpose of collecting evidence against inmates, including pretrial detainees.
>
> (People v. Davis (2005) 36 Cal.4th 510, 523-529.)

Justifications: Booking searches are justified under a number of legal theories:

- To safeguard the person's property and for security purposes. (Illinois v. Lafayette (1983) 462 U.S. 640, 643-647 [103 S.Ct. 2605; 77 L.Ed.2nd 65]; People v. Laiwa (1983) 34 Cal.3rd 711, 724-727; People v. Hamilton (1988) 46 Cal.3rd 123, 137.)

See Gov't. Code § 26640; duty of the sheriff to take charge of, and safely keep, the property of a prisoner.

- To prevent introduction of weapons and contraband into the jail facility. (People v. Gilliam (1974) 41 Cal.App.3rd 181, 189.)

- To discover evidence pertaining to the crime for which the person was arrested. (People v. Maher (1976) 17 Cal.3rd 196, 200-201.)

Belated Search Incident to Arrest: Older authority has held that a booking search is really a "search incident to arrest with an inconsequential time lag." (People v. Superior Court* [Murry] (1973) 30 Cal.App.3rd 257, 263; and United States v. Edwards (1974) 415 U.S. 800, 803 [94 S.Ct. 1234; 39 L.Ed.2nd 771].)

A defendant detained at a jail for failure to present satisfactory evidence of identification, pursuant to Veh. Code § 40307, may properly be subjected to a booking search even though not formally booked into the jail. (People v. Benz (1984) 156 Cal.App.3rd 483, 489.)

Note: This theory is questionable given more recent authority holding that a "search incident to arrest" must be contemporaneous with the arrest. (See "Contemporaneous in Time and Place," above.)

Containers: The right to conduct a warrantless booking search includes the right to search containers (e.g., purse, wallet, etc.) in the possession of the person to be booked. (Illinois v. Lafayette (1983) 462 U.S. 640, 643-647 [103 S.Ct. 2605; 77 L.Ed.2nd 65]; People v. Hamilton (1988) 46 Cal.3rd 123, 137.)

Exception; Cellphones: This rule, however, does not include cellphones despite the argument that cellphones are nothing more than a "container of information" (e.g., see People v. Michael E. (2014) 230 Cal.App.4th 261, 276-279.):

A warrantless search incident to arrest also does not include cellphones found on the person at the time of his arrest. (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430].)

Note: Either consent or a warrant is required.

Cellphones are not containers for purposes of the vehicle exception to the search warrant requirement. (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 941-943.)

See also United States v. Lara (9th Cir. 2016) 815 F.3rd 605, 610-611; declining to include defendant's cellphone under the category of a "container," in defendant's Fourth waiver search conditions.

See "Seizures and Searches of High Tech Devices" (Chapter 17), below.

Post-Booking Searches of Impounded Property: A warrantless search of a prisoner's impounded property, such as a wallet or a purse, which was not searched until after completion of the booking process, and when there is no exigency, violates the inmate's privacy rights. A search warrant will be required to lawfully search the impounded wallet, purse, or other item. (People v. Smith (1980) 103 Cal.App.3rd 840; evidence recovered from a wallet, not previously searched, in the defendant's booked property.)

Exceptions: Although Smith has never been expressly overruled, its continuing validity is seriously in question. At the very least, the exceptions to Smith have just about eaten up the rule. For instance:

No warrant is necessary for a post-booking search when the personal property searched has previously been viewed by officials. (E.g.; during the booking process or during a lawful search incident to arrest.) (People v. Davis (2000) 84 Cal.App.4th 390; United States v. Holzman (9th Cir. 1989) 871 F.2nd 1496, 1505; United States v. Thompson (5th Cir. 1988) 837 F.2nd 673, 675; United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 1987) 820 F.2nd 1065, 1071-1072.)

Property which is evidence of a crime may be taken from the person of the defendant without a warrant, even hours after booking, for the purpose of examination and testing. (United States v. Edwards (1974) 415 U.S. 800, 806 [94 S.Ct. 1234; 39 L.Ed.2nd 771, 777]; defendant's clothing, worn at the time of the booking, taken from him ten hours later, after replacement clothing was purchased for him.)

Note, however, the Supreme Court refused to "conclude that the Warrant Clause of the Fourth Amendment is never applicable to post-arrest seizures of the effects of an arrestee. [fn. Omitted]" (Id., at p. 808 [39 L.Ed.2nd at p. 778].)

Recovery of a ring from defendant's booked property, contained in, and readily visible through, a transparent property bag, without the need to search any containers, was lawfully seized from defendant's property without the need for a warrant. (People v. Superior Court* [Gunn] (1980) 112 Cal.App.3rd 970.)

> Note, however, the Court's discussion indicating that the right to search property without a warrant may even be broader: "Once articles have lawfully fallen into the hands of the police they may examine them to see if they have been stolen, test them to see if they have been used in the commission of a crime, return them to the prisoner on his release, or preserve them for use as evidence at the time of trial. [Citation] During their period of police custody an arrested person's personal effects, like his person itself, are subject to reasonable inspection, examination, and test. [Citation] Whatever segregation the police make as a matter of internal police administration of articles taken from a prisoner at the time of his arrest and booking does not derogate the fact of their continued custody and possession of such articles. [Citation]" (Id., at pp. 974-975.)

Ring worn by defendant in a robbery, visible to and identifiable by the victim, and properly in the custody of the sheriff after booking, does not hold the "vestige of privacy" as did the wallet in Smith, and was therefore properly retrieved from his impounded property in the jail and used as evidence in trial. (People v. Bradley (1981) 115 Cal.App.3rd 744, 751; see also People v. Davis (2000) 84 Cal.App.4th 390.)

The warrantless search of defendant's personal effects, as an extension of the booking process, is okay. (People v. Panfili (1983) 145 Cal.App.3rd 387, 392-394; where the arresting officer was instructed to isolate the property for a more detailed search later.)

An exception, however, does not to apply to cellphones in that cellphones do not pose a danger to officers and once seized, it is unlikely any evidence contained in the phone is going to be destroyed. When balanced with the large amount of personal information likely to be found in cellphones, a warrantless intrusion into the phone is not justified under the Fourth Amendment absent exigent circumstances. (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430].)

Strip Searches of Prisoners:

Fifth and Fourteenth Due Process, and Fourth Amendment Search and Seizure Issues:

Rule: Whether a prison or county jail inmate may be lawfully subjected to a "strip search" has been the subject of some controversy, and been held to depend upon the circumstances, with Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment "due process," as well as Fourth Amendment "search and seizure" implications.

The Fourth Amendment: The Fourth Amendment right of the people to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures "extends to incarcerated prisoners; however, the reasonableness of a particular search is determined by reference to the prison context." (Michenfelder v. Sumner (9th Cir. 1988) 860 F.2nd 328, 332; Bell v. Wolfish (1979) 441 U.S. 520, 545; [99 S.Ct. 1861; 60 L. Ed.2nd 447]; Bull v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2010) 595 F.3rd 964, 972.)

"Reasonableness," under the Fourth Amendment, requires the court to balance the need for the particular search against the invasion of personal rights that the search entails. Courts must consider the scope of the intrusion, the justification for initiating it, and the place in which it is conducted. (Bell v. Wolfish, supra, at p. 559.)

"A prison 'is a unique place fraught with serious security dangers. Smuggling of money, drugs, weapons, and other contraband is all too common an occurrence.' . . . In determining whether a prison search is reasonable under the Fourth Amendment, the prison's 'significant and legitimate security interests' must be balanced against the privacy interests of those who enter, or seek to enter, the prison.'" (Cates v. Stroud (9th Cir. 2020) 976 F.3rd 972, 979, quoting Bell v. Wolfish (1979) 441 U.S. 520, 558, 559-560 [99 S.Ct. 1861; 60 L.Ed.2nd 447].)

However, "(i)t is well-established that prisoners do not shed all constitutional rights at the prison gate, though these rights may be limited or restricted." (Cates v. Stroud, supra, citing Bell v. Wofish, supra, at pp. 545-546.)

"Prisoners retain only those rights 'not inconsistent with their status as . . . prisoners or with the legitimate penological objectives of the corrections system.'" (Cates

v. Stroud, supra, quoting Gerber v. Hickman (9th Cir. 2002) 291 F.3rd 617, 620.)

Note also authority (albeit the minority rule) from another circuit holding that prisoners have no privacy interests protected by the Fourth Amendment. (Johnson v. Phelan (7th Cir. 1995) 69 F.2rd 144, 150.)

However, even if a prisoner retains some degree of his or her Fourth Amendment rights, strip searches are reasonably related to legitimate penological interests, and therefore, if conducted properly, and limited to when necessary under the circumstances, are legal. (Michenfelder v. Sumner, supra, at p. 333.)

Due Process: Even if the Fourth Amendment is inapplicable, the (Fifth and) Fourteenth Amendment "due process" clause(s) prohibit(s) prison officials from "treating prisoners in a fashion so 'brutal' and 'offensive to human dignity' as to 'shock the conscience.'" (Vaughn v. Ricketts (9th Cir. 1988) 859 F.2nd 736, 742; digital cavity searches conducted in a brutal fashion.)

Visual Body Inspections:

Rule: The constitutionality of a visual inspection of a prison inmate's unclothed body, including body cavities, depends upon a balancing of (1) the scope of the particular intrusion, (2) the manner in which it is conducted, (3) the justification for initiating the search, and (4) the place in which it is conducted. (People v. Collins (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 137, 152-153.)

The Collins Court also noted that the more intrusive, "physical body cavity search" requires judicial authorization (i.e., a search warrant) and the use of properly trained medical personnel. (Id., at p. 143; see also Bouse v. Bussey (9th Cir. 1977) 573 F.2nd 548, 550; and United States v. Fowlkes (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 954, 960-968.)

California Code of Regulations, Title 15, § 3287(b), allows for a visual search of an inmate, clothed or unclothed, whenever there is a "substantial reason to believe the inmate may have unauthorized or dangerous items concealed on his or her person." (Italics added) Judicial authorization (i.e., a search warrant), and the use of "medical personnel in a medical setting," is only required in the case of a "physical (as opposed to a non-contact visual) body cavity search." In Collins, supra, a visual inspection of the defendant's rectal area was intended, for which it is generally accepted that the rigorous requirements of the more intrusive "physical body cavity search" is not required.

Case Law:

> Such visual body cavity searches have been upheld under circumstances constituting less than even a reasonable suspicion, such as after a visit to the law library, infirmary or exercise room, or an encounter with an outsider. (People v. Collins, supra, at pp. 152-155; Goff v. Nix (8th Cir. 1986) 803 F.2nd 358, 368-371; Campbell v. Miller (7th Cir. 1986) 787 F.2nd 217, 228; and Arruda v. Fair (1st Cir. 1983) 710 F.2nd 886, 886-888.)
>
> > Note: Violation of the administrative provisions for the searching of prisoners in a prison, absent a constitutional violation, does not require the suppression of any resulting evidence. (People v. Collins, supra, at p. 156.)
>
> See Byrd v. Maricopa County Board of Supervisors (9th Cir. 2017) 845 F.3rd 919, where it was held that a federal district court had erred when it sua sponte dismissed a pretrial detainee's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil suit which challenged a county sheriff's policy of allowing female guards to observe male pretrial detainees' use of the shower and bathroom, as plaintiff had stated claims under the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments because the scope and manner of the intrusions were far broader than those that have been previously approved, such that the claim was not foreclosed by precedent, and whether it was a violation of his right to bodily privacy or cruel and unusual punishment required further litigation.

Blood Draws:

> "'In the prison context, where inmates are routinely subject to medical procedures, including blood draws, and where their expectation of bodily privacy, while intact, is diminished [citation], the intrusiveness of a blood draw is even further minimized.'" (People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1120; quoting Nicholas v. Goord (2nd Cir. 2005) 430 F.3rd 652, 669 [fn. omitted)].)

Strip Searches Restricted: With these principles in mind, the Courts have been reluctant to grant jail and prison officials carte blanch authority to conduct unrestricted strip searches:

> A "search incident to arrest" does not include a "strip search" which, as a "serious intrusion upon personal rights" and "an invasion of personal rights of the first magnitude" (Chapman v. Nichols (10th Cir. 1993) 989 F.2nd 393, 395-396.), is generally not allowed prior to booking. (Foote v. Spiegel (10th Cir Dist. Utah 1995) 903 F.Supp. 1463.)
>
> The fact that the offense for which the defendant was arrested is classified as a felony does not mean that a strip search is constitutional. The seriousness of the offense must be balanced with all the other factors. (Kennedy v. Los Angeles (9th Cir. 1989) 901 F.2nd 702, 710-716; arrest for grand theft did not warrant a visual strip search, under the circumstances.)
>
> But, a visual strip search was upheld for a person arrested for grand theft auto, in that this offense is sufficiently associated with violence to justify the intrusion into defendant's privacy. (Thompson v. Los Angeles (9th Cir. 1989) 885 F.2nd 1439, 1445-1448.)
>
> > Thompson v. Los Angeles, supra, however, was overruled in Bull v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2010) 595 F.3rd 964 (see below; "Strip Searches Upheld"), in so far as it noted that strip searches must be based upon a reasonable suspicion that the arrestee is carrying contraband and not on whether he is going to be place in a jail's general population.
>
> Also, searches which are excessive, vindictive, harassing, or unrelated to any legitimate penological interest will not be upheld. (Michenfelder v. Sumner, supra, at p. 332; routine and repeated visual body cavity searches upheld for inmates in a maximum security prison holding Nevada's 40 most dangerous prisoners.)
>
> Contact body cavity searches of female inmates conducted by police officers, without medical personnel, in a non-hygienic manner and in the presence of male officers, rejected as unreasonable. (Bonitz v. Fair (1st Cir. 1986) 804 F.2nd 164, 172-173.)
>
> However, female prison guards subjecting male inmates to periodic body cavity searches was held not to be a Fourteenth

Amendment due process violation, nor an Eighth Amendment "cruel and unusual punishment," and therefore will not subject the guards to any civil liability. (Somers v. Thurman (9th Cir. 1997) 109 F.3rd 614.)

A "partial strip search" (i.e., with the prisoner clothed in his boxer shorts only) of a male prisoner by a female detentions cadet (or any such "cross-gender" strip search), held to be a Fourth Amendment violation absent an emergency situation. (Byrd v. Maricopa County Sheriff's Department (9th Cir. 2011) 629 F.3rd 1135, 1140-1147; but see the dissent, pgs. 1147-1154.)

Being arrested for possession of marijuana does not justify a physical body cavity search at the side of the road. (See Hamilton v. Kindred (5th Cir. 2017) 845 F.3rd 659; holding that it was clearly established in the Fifth Circuit that an officer could be liable as a bystander in a civil case involving excessive force (referring to the physical body cavity search) if he knew a constitutional violation was taking place and he had a reasonable opportunity to prevent the harm.)

In a concurring opinion to the Supreme Court's denial of certiorari in a case where the female plaintiff was subjected to a warrantless inspection of her vagina and anus by a male doctor, based upon what was alleged to be a "reasonable suspicion that she was hiding contraband, Justice Sonia Sotomayer noted that '(t)he necessity of a (body cavity) search and its extent cannot be determined in a vacuum. It must instead "be judged in light of the availability of . . . less invasive alternative[s].'" (Citing Birchfield* v. North Dakota (2016) 579 U. S. 438 (136 S.Ct. 2160, at pp. 2165 & 2184.).) "When such an option exists, the State must offer a 'satisfactory justification for demanding the more intrusive alternative.'" Ibid. Also citing Florida v. *Royer (1983) 460 U.S. 491, 500 [103 S.Ct. 1319; 75 L.Ed.2nd 229]: "[T]he investigative methods employed should be the least intrusive means reasonably available to verify or dispel the officer's suspicion"). (Brown v. Polk County (Apr. 19, 2021) __ U.S. __, __ [141 S.Ct. 1304; 209 L.Ed.2nd 573]; noting that the court below "did not address the option of a solely visual search . . . or multiple visual searches over time, . . . (or) X ray or transabdominal ultrasound, . . . (or) isolat(ing) the detainee and investigate further to obtain probable cause, . . . (or) await a monitored bowel movement." (at p. __.)

Strip Searches Upheld:

A full body cavity search of a group of 40 to 44 inmates returning to an honor farm from a day's work furlough was upheld when based upon information that marijuana was being brought into the honor farm. The body cavity searches were conducted by a doctor using an acceptable medical procedure. (People v. West (1985) 170 Cal.App.3rd 326.)

X-raying all incoming prisoners being moved from one high-risk prison to a second high-risk prison is lawful. (People v. Pifer (1989) 216 Cal.App.3rd 956.)

An en banc panel of the Ninth Circuit reversed its prior decisions and in Thompson v. City of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 1989) 885 F.2nd 1439, and Giles v. Ackerman (9th Cir. 1984) 746 F.2nd 614, and held that a sheriff's blanket policy of doing non-contact strip searches of all persons being placed into the general jail population was reasonable and lawful. (Bull v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2010) 595 F.3rd 964.)

Resolution of the Conflict:

Finally, the United States Supreme Court ended the debate on this issue. Defendant, arrested on an outstanding warrant and briefly incarcerated in two different jails in the general jail population, was subject to strip searches on two occasions. The charges against him were later dismissed in that defendant had earlier satisfied the requirements of the warrant. Defendant claimed that individuals arrested for minor offenses should not be required to remove their clothing and expose the most private areas of their bodies to close visual inspection as a routine part of the jail intake process. He argued that jail officials could conduct this kind of search only if they had reason to suspect a particular inmate of concealing a weapon, drugs or other contraband. The Supreme Court disagreed and, in a 5-to-4 decision, affirmed the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, holding that the search procedures at the two jails struck a reasonable balance between inmate privacy and the needs of the institutions. (Florence v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Burlington (2012) 566 U.S. 318 [132 S.Ct. 1510; 182 L.Ed.2nd 566].)

In so holding, the Court accepted the prison officials' assertions, supported by evidence presented, that strip searches were needed to:

- Detect injury or disease upon intake; Identify gang-related markings and tattoos so as to avoid housing problems and violence, and

- Detect contraband that might be harmful to prisoners and prison officials alike.

Note: This rule probably does not apply to persons arrested on a minor traffic offense and/or who are not held in the jail's general population. (See Id., 132 S.Ct. at pp. 1522-1523; "This case does not require the Court to rule on the types of searches that would be reasonable in instances where, for example, a detainee will be held without assignment to the general jail population and without substantial contact with other detainees.")

See also "Misdemeanor (and Infraction) Booking Searches," below, and Brown v. Polk County (Apr. 19, 2021) __ U.S. __ [141 S.Ct. 1304; 209 L.Ed.2nd 573].)

Continued Limitations:

However, the forcible removal of a baggie containing drugs from defendant's rectum by officers without medical training or a warrant during a visual body cavity search, while defendant was in the city jail, was held to have violated defendant's Fourth Amendment rights. (United States v. Fowlkes (9th Cir. 2015) 804 F.3rd 954, 960-968.)

See Cal. Code of Reg., Title 15, § 3287(b), for statutory rules on strip searches of prison inmates.

Misdemeanor (and Infraction) Booking Searches:

Statutory Rules re Body Cavity Searches and Housing in the General Jail Populations: In the case of most misdemeanor and infraction arrestees, the California Legislature has restricted by statute the right to conduct "strip" and "visual" or "physical" body cavity searches, as well as rule concerning housing in the general jail population (Pen. Code §§ 4030 & 4031; see below.)

Pen. Code § 4030(a): Legislative purpose to establish "a statewide policy strictly limiting strip and body cavity searches" for pre-arraignment misdemeanor and infraction detainees in county jails.

Pen. Code § 4030(b): The following restrictions apply only to pre-arraignment detainees arrested for infraction and misdemeanor offenses, and minors detained prior to a detention hearing for infraction and misdemeanor violations. They do not apply to prisoners of the Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation or the Division of Juvenile Justice in the Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation, or to post-arraignment inmates in local custody.

Pen. Code § 4030(c): Definitions:

> Subd. (c)(1): "Body Cavity" means the stomach or rectal cavity of a person, and vagina of a female person.
>
> Subd. (c)(2): "Physical Body Cavity Search" means physical intrusion into a body cavity for the purpose of discovering any object concealed in the body cavity. (Often referred to as a "manual body cavity search" in federal cases.)
>
> Subd. (c)(3): "Strip Search" means any search which requires the officer to remove or arrange some or all of that person's clothing so as to permit a visual inspection of the underclothing, breasts, buttocks, or genitalia of the person.
>
> Subd. (c)(4): "Visual Body Cavity Search" means visual inspection of a body cavity.

Pen. Code § 4030(d)(1): Notwithstanding any other law, including V.C. § 40304.5, when a person is arrested and taken into custody, that person may be subjected to patdown searches, metal detector searches, body scanners, and thorough clothing searches in order to discover and retrieve concealed weapons and contraband substances prior to being placed in a booking cell.

> Subd. (d)(2) An agency that utilizes a body scanner pursuant to this subdivision shall endeavor to avoid knowingly using a body scanner to scan a woman who is pregnant.

Pen. Code § 4030(e): A person arrested and held in custody on a misdemeanor or infraction offense, except those involving weapons, controlled substances, or violence, or a minor detained prior to a detention hearing on the grounds that he or she is a person described in W&I Code §§ 300, 601 or 602, except for those minors alleged to have committed felonies or offenses involving weapons, controlled substances, or violence, shall not be subjected to a strip search or visual body cavity search prior to placement in the general jail population, unless a peace officer has determined there is reasonable suspicion, based on specific and articulable facts, to believe that person is concealing a weapon or contraband, and a strip search will result in the discovery of the weapon or contraband. A strip search or visual body cavity search, or both, shall not be conducted without the prior written authorization of the supervising officer on duty. The authorization shall include the specific and articulable facts and circumstances upon which the reasonable suspicion determination was made by the supervisor.

Pen. Code § 4030(f)(1) & (2): Restrictions on being Confined in the General Jail Population:

> Subd. (f)(1) Except pursuant to the provisions of para. (2), a person arrested and held in custody on a misdemeanor or infraction offense not involving weapons, controlled substances, or violence, shall not be confined in the general jail population unless all of the following are true:
>
> > (A) The person is not cited and released.
> >
> > (B) The person is not released on his or her own recognizance.
> >
> > (C) The person is not able to post bail within a reasonable time, not less than three hours.
>
> Subd. (f)(2) A person shall not be housed in the general jail population prior to release pursuant to the provisions of para. (1) unless a documented emergency exists and there is no reasonable alternative to that placement. The person shall be placed in the general population only upon prior written authorization documenting the specific facts and circumstances of the emergency. The written authorization shall be signed by the uniformed supervisor of the facility or by a uniformed watch commander. A person confined in the general jail population pursuant to para. (1) shall retain all rights to release on citation, his or her own recognizance, or bail that were preempted as a consequence of the emergency.
>
> An arrest for the misdemeanor offense of being under the influence of a controlled substance, per H&S § 11550, does not justify a later visual body cavity search at the jail prior to being taken into the general jail population, despite this statute to the contrary, absent any specific articulable facts amounting to a reasonable suspicion that the arrestee does in fact possess a controlled substance. (Way v. County of Ventura (2006) 445 F.3rd 1157.)

Pen. Code § 4030(g): No person (nor a minor, prior to a disposition hearing) arrested for an infraction or a misdemeanor offense shall be subjected to a "physical body cavity search" except under the authority of a search warrant issued by a magistrate specifically authorizing the physical body cavity search.

Pen. Code § 4030(h): A copy of the prior written authorization required by subds. (e) and (f) and the search warrant required by subd. (g) shall be placed in the agency's records and made available, on request, to the person searched or his or her authorized representative. With regard to a strip search or visual or physical body cavity search, the time, date, and place of the search, the name and sex of the person conducting the search, and a statement of the results of the search, including a list of items removed from the person searched, shall be recorded in the agency's records and made available, upon request, to the person searched or his or her authorized representative.

Pen. Code § 4030(i): Persons conducting a "strip search" or a "visual body cavity search" shall not touch the breasts, buttocks, or genitalia of the person being searched.

Pen. Code § 4030(j): "Physical body cavity searches" may be conducted only:

- Under sanitary conditions.

- Only by a physician, nurse practitioner, registered nurse, licensed vocational nurse or emergency medical technician Level II, licensed to practice in this state.

Pen. Code § 4030(k)(1): All persons conducting or otherwise present for a "strip search," or a "visual" or "physical body cavity search," except for physicians or licensed medical personnel, shall be of the same sex as the person being searched.

Subd. (k)(2) A person within sight of the visual display of a body scanner depicting the body during a scan shall be of the same sex as the person being scanned, except for physicians or licensed medical personnel.

Pen. Code § 4030(l): All "strip searches," or "visual" or "physical body cavity searches" shall be conducted in an area of privacy so that the search cannot be observed by persons not participating in the search. Persons are considered to be participating in the search if their official duties relative to search procedure require them to be present at the time the search is conducted.

Pen. Code § 4030(m): Violation of any of the above is a misdemeanor; 6 months and $1,000 fine. (P.C. § 19)

Pen. Code § 4030(n) & (o): Civil remedies for violations.

Pen. Code § 4031: Searches of Minors in Juvenile Detention Centers:

Subd. (a): This section applies to all minors detained in a juvenile detention center on the grounds that he or she is a person described in W&I §§ 300, 601, or 602, and all minors adjudged a ward of the court and held in a juvenile detention center on the grounds he or she is a person described in W&I §§ 300, 601, or 602.

Subd. (b): Persons conducting a strip search or a visual body cavity search shall not touch the breasts, buttocks, or genitalia of the person being searched.

Subd. (c): A physical body cavity search shall be conducted under sanitary conditions, and only by a physician, nurse practitioner, registered nurse, licensed vocational nurse, or emergency medical technician Level II licensed to practice in this state. A physician engaged in providing health care to detainees, wards, and inmates of the facility may conduct physical body cavity searches.

Subd. (d): A person conducting or otherwise present or within sight of the inmate during a strip search or visual or physical body cavity search shall be of the same sex as the person being searched, except for physicians or licensed medical personnel.

Subd. (e): All strip searches and visual and physical body cavity searches shall be conducted in an area of privacy so that the search cannot be observed by persons not participating in the search. Persons are considered to be participating in the search if their official duties relative to search procedure require them to be present at the time the search is conducted.

Subd. (f): A person who knowingly and willfully authorizes or conducts a strip searches and visual or physical body cavity search in violation of this section is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Subd. (g): Nothing in this section shall be construed as limiting the common law or statutory rights of a person regarding an action for damages or injunctive relief, or as precluding the prosecution under another law of a peace officer or other person who has violated this section.

Subd. (h): Any person who suffers damage or harm as a result of a violation of this section may bring a civil action to recover actual damages, or one thousand dollars ($1,000), whichever is greater. In addition, the court may, in its discretion, award punitive damages, equitable relief as it deems necessary and proper, and costs, including reasonable attorney's fees.

Subd. (i): This section does not limit the protections granted by P.C. § 4030 to individuals described in subd. (b) of that section.

Case law:

People v. Wade (1989) 208 Cal.App.3rd 304: Probable cause existed for a visual body cavity search of a defendant arrested for a narcotics violation, although other Pen. Code § 4030 requirements were not met. However, Pen. Code § 4030 does not provide for suppression of evidence as a remedy for violating the terms of this section, and the search was valid under federal constitutional law. Therefore, the resulting evidence was admissible despite the Pen. Code § 4030 violation.

An en banc panel of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, in Bull v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2010) 595 F.3rd 964, overruled itself in its prior decision of Giles v. Ackerman (9th Cir 1984) 746 F.2nd 614, Giles having held that a person arrested on minor misdemeanor arrest warrants, with no prior criminal history or any relationship to drugs or weapons, could not be subjected to a strip search even though she was to be put into the general jail population. Florence v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Burlington (2012) 566 U.S. 318 [132 S.Ct. 1510; 182 L.Ed.2nd 566] also has the effect of overruling these prior Ninth Circuit decisions.

Balancing the interests involved, it has been held to be a Fourteenth (and Fifth) Amendment due process violation to strip-search a misdemeanor arrestee where the arrestee is not to be intermingled with the general jail population, the offense for which she was arrested is not one commonly associated with the possession of weapons or contraband (i.e., DUI in this case), and there is no cause to believe she may possess either. (Logan v. Shealy (4th Cir. 1981) 660 F.2nd 1007.)

See Byrd v. Maricopa County Board of Supervisors (9th Cir. 2017) 845 F.3rd 919, where it was held that a federal district court had erred when it sua sponte dismissed a pretrial detainee's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil suit which challenged a county sheriff's policy of allowing female guards to observe male pretrial detainees' use of the shower and bathroom, as plaintiff had stated claims under the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments because the scope and manner of the intrusions were far broader than those that have been previously approved, such that the claim was not foreclosed by precedent, and whether it was a violation of his right to bodily privacy or cruel and unusual punishment required further litigation.

Searches of Jail Cells:

The United States Supreme Court has upheld the random, warrantless searches of an inmate's prison cell, concluding that the Fourth Amendment's proscription against unreasonable searches and seizures is not applicable because an inmate has no reasonable expectation of privacy in his or her cell. (Hudson v. Palmer (1984) 468 U.S. 517, 526 [104 S.Ct. 3194; 82 L.Ed.2nd 393, 402-403].)

The courts have found the rules for prisons to be no different than those for a county jail. (See DeLancie v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal.3rd 865, overruled on other grounds.)

The California Supreme Court is in accord, applying the rule of Hudson v. Palmer to a defendant's jail cell. (People v. Bittaker (1989) 48 Cal.3rd 1046, 1096.)

In discussing the warrantless seizure of materials from the defendant's jail cell that were relevant to a pending murder prosecution, the California Supreme Court, at pages 1095-1096, noted that: "(D)efendant had no reasonable expectation of privacy in property within his jail cell either under federal law (see Hudson* v. Palmer (1984) 468 U.S. 517, 526 [104 S.Ct. 3194; 82 L.Ed.2d 393, 402-403 . . .].) or under California decisions which govern searches antedating DeLancie v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal.3d 865 . . . (see People v. *Valenzuela (1984) 151 Cal.App. 3d 180, 189 . . . and cases there cited). Since Budds could have seized the manuscript without asking for or receiving consent, the issues defendant raises are immaterial to the validity of the seizure."

The California Supreme Court has also interprets Hudson to mean that eavesdropping on jail inmates' (including pretrial detainees) conversations is lawful due to the lack of an expectation of privacy, and even if done for the purpose of collecting evidence. (People v. Davis (2005) 36 Cal.4th 510, 523-529; recognizing that some courts disagree on whether pretrial detainees have a higher expectation of privacy than do convicted inmates.)

Similarly, the warrantless search of defendant's dormitory room in a state hospital where he had been committed as a sexually violent predator (SVP) was lawful, defendant not having a reasonable expectation of privacy in the dormitory. The dormitory shared none of the attributes of privacy of a home. The dormitory itself accommodated multiple patients. Officers conducted random searches on a daily basis. Also, various signs throughout the facility warned residents that they were subject to such searches. (People v. Golden (2017) 19 Cal.App.5th 905.)

See also Cal. Code of Reg., Title 15, §§ 3287(a) and 4711 for statutory rules on the searches of prison cells and other inmate property.

Male Correctional Officers and Female Inmates; Pen. Code § 2644:

Subd. (a): A male correctional officer shall not conduct a pat down search of a female inmate unless the prisoner presents a risk of immediate harm to herself or others or risk of escape and there is not a female correctional officer available to conduct the search.

Subd. (b): A male correctional officer shall not enter into an area of the institution where female inmates may be in a state of undress, or be in an area where they can view female inmates in a state of undress, including, but not limited to, restrooms, shower areas, or medical treatment areas, unless an inmate in the area presents a risk of immediate harm to herself or others or if there is a medical emergency in the area. A male correctional officer shall not enter into an area prohibited under this subdivision if there is a female correctional officer who can resolve the situation in a safe and timely manner without his assistance. To prevent incidental viewing, staff of the opposite sex shall announce their presence when entering a housing unit.

Subd. (c): If a male correctional officer conducts a pat down search under an exception provided in subd. (a) or enters a prohibited area under an exception provided in subd. (b), the circumstances for and details of the exception shall be documented within three days of the incident. The documentation shall be reviewed by the warden and retained by the institution for reporting purposes.

Subd. (d): The department may promulgate regulations to implement this section.

Monitoring of Jail Visitations and Telephone Calls:

Rule: Given an inmate's lack of any reasonable expectation of privacy, the California Supreme Court in People v. Loyd (2002) 27 Cal.4th 997 (overruling its previous decision in Delancie v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal.3rd 865), upheld the constitutionality of the following, even when done for the sole purpose of seeking incriminating evidence, and despite the lack of a warrant or other judicial authorization.

- Monitoring and recording of jail visitations.
- Monitoring and recording of jail conversations over internal phone lines.
- Monitoring and recording of jail conversations over external phone lines.

Note: Pen. Code §§ 2600 & 2601(d), purporting to provide state prison (and by inference, county jail) inmates with a right to have visitors, were both amended by the Legislature in 1997 (via SB 1260), eliminating that right.

Case Law:

The Court in People v. Loyd (2002) 27 Cal.4th 997, specifically declined to decide the applicability of Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (18 U.S.C. §§ 2510-2520) to the monitoring and recording of jail conversations over external telephone lines.

However, under Title III; "(I)t shall not be unlawful . . . for a person acting under color of law to intercept a wire, oral, or electronic communication where . . . one of the parties to > the communication has given prior consent to such interception." (18 U.S.C. § 2511(2)(c), (d))

>
> See People v. Zepeda (2001) 87 Cal.App.4th 1183, where the need to obtain judicial authorization was assumed, without discussion, to be the law.

Based upon this, it has been held that where a sign has been posted indicating that "telephone calls may be monitored and recorded," inmates are on notice, and his or her "decision to engage in conversations over those phones constitute implied consent to that monitoring and takes any wiretap outside the prohibitions of Title III." (People v. Kelly (2002) 103 Cal.App.4th 853, 858; warrantless recording of defendant's telephone conversations to parties on the outside approved.)

> Such warning signs also take such telephone calls outside the search warrant provisions of California's wiretap statutes. (Pen. Code §§ 629.50 et seq.; Id., at pp. 859-860.)

See also *People v. Windham (2006) 145 Cal.App.4th 881: The warrantless monitoring and recording of a jail inmates' telephone calls, where signs were posted, a message was heard at the beginning of every call, and jail rules provided to inmates, all noted that telephone calls would be monitored, violated neither the federal Title III rules nor California's Privacy Act provisions (Pen. Code §§ 630 et seq.)

Note also, a phone used during a physical visitation by a prisoner and his or her visitor does not meet the requirements of a "wire communication," not using a line in interstate or foreign commerce. It is therefore not subject to the wiretap restrictions of Pen. Code § 631. (People v. Santos (1972) 26 Cal.App.3rd 397, 402.)

The California Supreme Court interprets Hudson v. Palmer (1984) 468 U.S. 517, 526 [104 S.Ct. 3194; 82 L.Ed.2nd 393, 402-403], to similarly allow eavesdropping on the conversations of inmates (including pretrial detainees) due to the lack of an expectation of privacy, even if done for the purpose of collecting evidence. (People v. Davis (2005) 36 Cal.4th 510, 523-529.)

See also People v. Leonard (2007) 40 Cal.4th 1370, 1404, where the California Supreme Court found no violation of the Fourth Amendment, the California Constitution's right to privacy, and Title III of the federal Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets

Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. § 3711) by videotaping the defendant's end of a telephone conversation with his father when the defendant knew he was being videotaped.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal is in accord. (United States v. Van Poyck (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F.3rd 285, 291; "(A)ny expectation of privacy in outbound calls from prison is not objectively reasonable and . . . the Fourth Amendment is therefore not triggered by the routine taping of such calls.")

See also United States v. Monghur (9th Cir. 2009) 588 F.3rd 975, 979; noting that the defendant conceded, "as he must, that he had no expectation of privacy in those calls" from county jail, where warnings were posted that telephone conversations from jail were monitored and recorded; citing Van Poyck, supra.)

Exceptions: There are a number of very important exceptions with which law enforcement must be aware:

Pen. Code § 636(a): Eavesdropping on Conversations with an Attorney, Religious Advisor, or Licensed Physician: Makes it a felony to eavesdrop on, or record, by means of an electronic device, a conversation between a person in the physical custody of a law enforcement officer or other public officer, or who is on the property of a law enforcement agency or other public agency, and that person's attorney, religious advisor, or licensed physician. (See In re Jordan (1972) 7 Cal.3rd 930, 937-938, fn. 3; People v. Lopez (1963) 60 Cal.2nd 223, 248.)

Subdivision (b) makes it a felony to eavesdrop on such a conversation by "nonelectronic" means, but excludes inadvertently overhearing such a conversation, or when the conversation is in a courtroom or other room used for adjudicatory proceedings.

However, a state prison inmate has no reasonable expectation of privacy under either P.C. § 636 or Cal. Const., art. I, § 1, when he is being seen by a physician for treatment. It is not a violation of these provisions for a correctional officer to be allowed to be present during such examinations where the officer's presence is a matter of prison policy to further the safety and security of the institution, consistent with Pen. Code § 2600. (Faunce v. Cate (2013) 222 Cal.App. 4th 166, 170-172.)

Lulling an Inmate into Believing a Conversation was Confidential: Where jail officers acted so that the suspect "and his wife were lulled into believing that their conversation would be confidential." (North v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal.3rd 301, 311; People v. Loyd (2002) 27 Cal.4th 997, 1002.)

See also, "Wiretap Laws," under "Searches with a Search Warrant" (Chapter 10), above.

Monitoring Jail Mail:

Rule: It is constitutionally permissible to monitor inmate mail coming into a jail facility. (Wolff v. McDonnell (1974) 418 U.S. 539, 576-577 [94 S.Ct. 2963; 41 L.Ed.2nd 935]; People v. Dinkins (1966) 242 Cal.App.2nd 892, 903; People v. Jones (1971) 19 Cal.App.3rd 437, 449.)

Under the theory of People v. Loyd (2002) 27 Cal.4th 997, it would seem that monitoring all non-legal mail, coming in and going out of a facility, would be constitutionally permissible even if the purpose is to look for incriminating evidence.

Outgoing mail may be monitored, "to prevent any threats emanating from inmates." (People v. Jones, supra, see Cal. Code Regs, Title 15, § 3138(a))

Exception: The sole exception is legal correspondence to the defendant's attorney. (Cal. Code Regs, tit. 15, § 3141(b), (c)): "An attorney at law listed with a state bar." (subd. (c)(6))

An inmate's "legal mail" (i.e., correspondence with the prisoner's attorney) may be opened as well, so long as it is not read. (People v. Poe (1983) 145 Cal.App.3rd 574; People v. White (1984) 161 Cal.App.3rd 246.)

A prison inmate has a viable lawsuit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 where he has alleged that prison officials have opened and read, as opposed to merely inspected for contraband, his legal mail address to his attorney, and, in seeking injunctive relief, he sufficiently alleged the threatened repetition of his Sixth Amendment rights where he remains incarcerated and a corrections director personally informed him that prison officials were permitted to read his legal mail. (Nordstrom v. Ryan (9th Cir. 2014) 762 F.3rd 903,908-912; citing Wolff v. McDonnell (1974) 418 U.S. 539, 576-577 [94 S.Ct. 2963; 41 L.Ed.2nd 935], which upheld the right of jail officials to open and inspect, but not read, mail to an inmates attorney.)

A prisoner has a First Amendment right to be present when his properly marked legal mail is opened for inspection. (Hayes v. Idaho Correctional Center (9th Cir. 2017) 849 F.3rd 1204.)

A prisoner's Sixth Amendment right to counsel and First Amendment freedom of speech are violated when jail guards read, or even open while not in the prisoner's presence, his legal mail relating to criminal proceedings. (Mangiaracina v. Penzone (9th Cir, 2017) 849 F.3rd 1191.)

"Intra-jail mail" between inmates may also be read "to discover any threats that might be made to an inmate, 'snitch jackets' placed on other inmates, and to detect coordination of possible escape attempts between inmates in custody." (People v. McCaslin (1986) 178 Cal.App.3rd 1, 4.)

Additional Case Law:

The marital communication privilege does not protect defendant's personal letters to his wife. (United States v. Griffin (9th Cir. 2006) 440 F.3rd 1138.)

Interference with outgoing prisoner mail is only justified if the regulation furthers an important or substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of expression. The limitation of First Amendment freedoms must be no greater than is necessary or essential to the protection of the particular governmental interest involved. With respect to the first requirement, the U.S. Supreme Court identified three relevant governmental interests: (1) The preservation of internal order and discipline; (2) the maintenance of institutional security against escape or unauthorized entry; and (3) the rehabilitation of the prisoners. Prison officials may not censor inmate correspondence simply to eliminate unflattering or unwelcome opinions or factually inaccurate statements. Rather, they must show that a regulation authorizing mail censorship furthers one or more of the substantial governmental interests of security, order, and rehabilitation. (Lane v. Swain (9th Cir. 2018) 910 F.3rd 1293, 1296; citing Procunier v. Martinez (1974) 416 U.S. 396, 412-413 [94 S.Ct. 1800; 40 L.Ed.2nd 224].)

The second prong requires the limitation to be "no greater than is necessary" to protect such interests. The Supreme Court has made clear, however, that Procunier should not be read "as subjecting the decisions of prison officials to a strict 'least restrictive means' test." (Id, quoting Thornburgh v. Abbott (1989) 490 U.S. 401, 411 [109 S.Ct. 1874; 104 L.Ed.2nd 459].)

In Lane, The district court properly denied the inmate's three 28 U.S.C. § 2241 habeas corpus petitions, stemming from the revocation of his good time credits for violating Bureau of Prison ("BOP") Prohibited Acts Code 203, 28 C.F.R. § 541.3, Table 1, by sending threatening letters from prison, holding that the term "another" and the phrase "any other offense" were not so broad and vague as to violate his rights under the First Amendment when read reasonably in the context of the prison setting, and limiting the phrase "any other offense" to criminal offenses or violations of BOP rules.

Prison authorities may enact and enforce rules restricting the receipt of magazines and other literature so long as such regulations "support the legitimate penological interests of reducing prohibited behaviors such as sexual aggression and gambling and maintaining respect for legitimate authority." (Bahrampour v. Lampert (9th Cir. 2004) 356 F.3rd 969.)

Turner v. Safley (1987) 482 U.S. 79 [107 S.Ct. 2254; 96 L.Ed.2nd 64], laid out a four-factor test for evaluating the reasonableness of jail regulations, requiring courts to consider (1) whether there is a "rational connection" between the regulation and a "legitimate and neutral" government objective; (2) whether "alternative means of exercising the right" remain available to inmates; (3) "the impact accommodation of the asserted constitutional right will have on guards and other inmates, and on the allocation of prison resources;" and (4) whether "the existence of obvious, easy alternatives" to the regulation indicate that it "is an 'exaggerated response' to prison concerns."

A jail policy of prohibiting unsolicited commercial mail (i.e., magazines) was held to be lawful where the four-factors of Turner v. Safley, supra, were satisfied. Given the problems that the paper from such mail cause in a jail (e.g., covering windows and lights, blocking air vents and speakers, clogging toilets, passing notes, obstructing security cameras, and hiding contraband), and in light of the fact that a more appropriate method of allowing the contents of the magazines to be made available to inmates (i.e., the use of electronic kiosks), the jail's policy was upheld as reasonable. (Crime Justice & Am., Inc. v. Honea (9th Cir. 2017) 876 F.3rd 966.)

Note: None of the above cases have required, or indicated the need for, a search warrant to monitor jail mail.

Regulating Jail/Prison Visitations:

Rule: There is no constitutionally guaranteed "due process" right to visitation for jail or prison inmates. "The denial of prison access to a particular visitor 'is well within the terms of confinement ordinarily contemplated by a prison sentence,' (Hewitt v. Helms (1983) 459 U.S. 460, 468 [107 S.Ct. 2672; 96 L.Ed.2nd 654].), and therefore is not independently protected by the Due Process Clause." (Kentucky Department of Corrections v. Thompson (1989) 490 U.S. 454, 461 [109 S.Ct. 1904; 104 L.Ed.2nd 506, 515].)

Exceptions:

See Pen. Code §§ 2600 & 2601(d), purporting to provide state prison (and by inference, county jail) inmates with a right to have visitors, were both amended by the Legislature in 1997 (via SB 1260), eliminating that right.

A state, however, may create such enforceable liberty interests in the prison, and presumably county jail, settings by statute. (Ibid.; Hewitt v. Helms (1983) 459 U.S. 460, 469 [107 S.Ct. 2672; 96 L.Ed.2nd 654].)

However, it has been held, at least for purposes of persons attempting to visit an inmate of any of the prisons of the California Department of Corrections, while justifying the lowered search standard on the theory that keeping weapons and contraband out of a prison is an important governmental interest and that therefore searching visitors is an "administrative search," the visitor must be given the option of forgoing the visit, and leaving, rather than submitting to a strip search. (Estes v. Rowland (1993) 14 Cal.App.4th 508.) See below.

Case Law:

A person who intends to visit a prison or county jail inmate will be subject to a strip search, including a "visual body cavity search," whenever there is a "reasonable suspicion" to believe the visitor possessions weapons and/or contraband. (In re Roark (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 1946.)

The Los Angeles County Jail has the authority to ban all contact visits between visitors and inmates because of the threat they posed. (Block v. Rutherford (1984) 468 U.S. 576 [104 S.Ct. 3227; 82 L.Ed.2nd 438].)

A county jail, including lockers located outside the visitor center but maintained by the jail personnel, particularly with signs warning visitors that they were subject to search, is the equivalent to a closely regulated business allowing for a warrantless search of a visitor and the property he deposits in the lockers. (People v. Boulter (2011) 199 Cal.App.4th 761.)

It is not a violation of the constitutional right of association (First Amendment), against cruel and unusual punishment (Eight Amendment), nor due process (Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments) to limit the number and relationship of visitors, such regulations being reasonably related to "legitimate penological interests." (Overton v. Bazzetta (2003) 539 U.S. 126 [123 S.Ct. 2162; 156 L.Ed.2nd 162].)

Prison Parking Lot Searches:

California: The Rule of Estes v. Rowland (1993) 14 Cal.App.4th 508:

In Estes v. Rowland, supra (the Government, by stipulation, and probably giving away a lot more than the case law requires), the following requirements were imposed upon the Department of Corrections before a strip search of a prison visitor or the search of the person's vehicle will be allowed:

- All persons eligible to visit inmates must be mailed written notice in English and Spanish of a dog search policy, the reasons for the policy, and the consequences of finding contraband in a vehicle or on the person of a prison visitor.

- Immediately prior to a proposed search, the driver of each vehicle must be informed orally and in writing (again, in English and Spanish) of what the search will entail, the reasons for it, and the consequences of finding contraband. The notice must advise the driver that he or she has the option of leaving and returning without the car without losing visiting privileges for that day. Searches may be conducted only after written consent for the search is first obtained from the driver.

- If the driver decides to leave, passengers may stay and cannot be denied their visit.

- Local police officers may not be involved in the search process, and may not be present at the search unless there is some valid reason for their presence. Violations of the Vehicle Code may not be reported to any law enforcement agency.

- No vehicle may be delayed more than ten (10) minutes prior to the search. A wait of up to 30 minutes is allowed "in unusual situations" (see p. 529 of the decision) "where the exigency is not created by the Department (of Corrections)."

- A search should take no longer than reasonably necessary.

- Dogs must be kept at least twenty (20) feet from visitors at all times.

- Searchers may not read books, letters or other documents in possession of the visitors absent a reasonable suspicion that they are contraband.

- A visitor may be requested to submit to a strip search if a drug dog alerts on the individual or drugs are found in the vehicle. The person must be given the reasons for the search orally and in writing, and given the option of refusing to be searched and leaving the grounds.

- The Department of Corrections must adopt regulations encompassing the conditions and must distribute them to all institutions.

The Ninth Circuit:

The Court in Cates v. Stroud (9th Cir. 2020) 976 F.3rd 972, 983-984, differentiated cases from other circuits (e.g., United States v. Prevo (11th Cir. 2006) 435 F.3rd 1343; Neumeyer v. Beard (3rd Cir. 2005) 421 F.3rd 210, 211, and McDonell v. Hunter (8th Cir. 1987) 809 F.2nd 1302, 1309; Romo v. Champion (10th Cir. 1995) 46 F.3rd 1013) with seemingly contrary opinions, and held that visitors could be subjected to vehicle searches while in a prison parking lot without being given the option to leave. It was noted, for instance, that there is a substantial difference between a strip search ("humiliating and intrusive") and a vehicle search, the vehicle search being significantly less intrusive. It was also noted that prisoners had access to the parking lot at that the facilities in issue.

Strip Searches of Jail/Prison Visitors:

Problem: "A prison 'is a unique place fraught with serious security dangers. Smuggling of money, drugs, weapons, and other contraband is all too common an occurrence.' . . . In determining whether a prison search is reasonable under the Fourth Amendment, the prison's 'significant and legitimate security interests' must be balanced against the privacy interests of those who enter, or seek to enter, the prison.'" (Cates v. Stroud (9th Cir. 2020) 976 F.3rd 972, 979, quoting Bell v. Wolfish (1979) 441 U.S. 520, 558, 559-560 [99 S.Ct. 1861; 60 L.Ed.2nd 447].)

"Like prisoners, prison visitors retain only those rights that are consistent with the prison's significant and legitimate security interests. But visitors' privacy interests, and their threats to prison security, are distinct from those of inmates and detainees." (Cates v. Stroud, supra, at p. 979.)

"While 'some quantum of individualized suspicion is usually a prerequisite to a constitutional search or seizure,' (Citation omitted), the unique context of the prison facility does not always require individualized suspicion. Some searches of visitors to 'sensitive facilities,' like courthouses or prisons, require no individualized suspicion provided that the searches are both limited and necessary. (Citation omitted). Pat-down searches and metal detector screenings of visitors may be conducted as a prerequisite to visitation without any individualized suspicion, given the weighty institutional safety concerns. Such searches are 'relatively inoffensive' and 'less intrusive than alternative methods,' and they may be avoided by the simple expedient of not visiting the prison. (Citation omitted.)" (Cates v. Stroud, supra, at pp. 979-980.)

The Cates Court also noted (at p. 980) that; "(i)n circumstances where they threaten prison security, prison visitors may be strip searched when based on reasonable and individualized suspicion." (Italics in original; citing Burgess v. Lowery (7th Cir. 2000) 201 F.3rd 942, 945; "recognizing 'a long and unbroken series of decisions by our sister circuits' finding "strip searches of prison visitors . . . unconstitutional in the absence of reasonable suspicion that the visitor was carrying contraband.")

"However, even where there is reasonable suspicion that a prison visitor is carrying contraband, a strip search is permissible only if it can be justified by a legitimate security concern." (Cates v. Stroud, supra.)

In Cates v. Stroud, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal affirmed the district court's summary judgment for defendant prison guards and state officials for the Office of the Inspector General in an action brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 alleging that plaintiff's constitutional rights were violated when she was, among other things, subjected to a strip search upon arriving at a prison to visit her boyfriend. Although she signed a "consent to search" form, the form did not specify that it included a strip search of her person. The Court held that plaintiff's unconsented strip search was unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment, and that even if there was a reasonable suspicion that plaintiff was seeking to bring drugs into the prison (based upon informant tips, the validity of which the Court did not discuss), the civil defendant female state investigator who performed the search violated plaintiff's rights under the Fourth Amendment by subjecting her to the search without first giving plaintiff the option of leaving the prison. However, prior to the decision in this case, there has been no controlling precedent in the Ninth Circuit, or a sufficiently robust consensus of persuasive authority in other circuits, holding that prior to a strip search a prison visitor—even a visitor as to whom there is reasonable suspicion is carrying contraband—must be given an opportunity to leave the prison rather than being subjected to the strip search. Accordingly, because at the time of the violation, plaintiff did not have a clearly established Fourth Amendment right to leave without being subjected to the search, defendant prison investigator was entitled to qualified immunity. (Cates v. Stroud, supra, at pp. 975-985.)

See also case authority from other federal circuits (supra, at pp. 981-982) for the argument that in addition to having a "reasonable suspicion," a visitor must be given the opportunity to leave the prison grounds before being subjected to a strip search of his or her person is justified. (E.g., see Spear v. Sowders (6th Cir. 1995) 71 F.3rd 626.)

Case Law: A "manual" or "physical" body cavity search of a jail visitor, requiring a touching and constituting more than a mere visual inspection, performed without at least a "reasonable suspicion" (and maybe full "probable cause") that the visitor was bringing contraband into the jail or prison, violates the Fourth Amendment.

See Laughter v. Kay (D. Utah 1997) 986 F.Supp. 1362; where probable cause and a search warrant were required.

But see Long v. Norris (6th Cir. 1991) 929 F.2nd 1111; inferring that no more than a reasonable suspicion is necessary, and that a search warrant was not required.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal addressed this issue in Cates v. Stroud (9th Cir. 2020) 976 F.3rd 972 (above), while affirming the district court's summary judgment for defendant prison guards and state officials for the Office of the Inspector General in an action brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, where it was alleged that plaintiff's constitutional rights were violated when she was, among other things, subjected to a strip search upon arriving at a prison to visit her boyfriend. Although she signed a "consent to search" form, the form did not specify that it included a strip search of her person. The Court held that plaintiff's unconsented strip search was unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment, and that even if there was a reasonable suspicion that plaintiff was seeking to bring drugs into the prison (based upon informant tips, the validity of which the Court did not discuss), the civil defendant female state investigator who performed the search violated plaintiff's rights under the Fourth Amendment by subjecting her to the search without first giving plaintiff the option of leaving the prison. However, prior to the decision in this case, there had been no controlling precedent in the Ninth Circuit, or a sufficiently "robust consensus of persuasive authority" in other circuits, holding that prior to a strip search a prison visitor—even a visitor as to whom there is reasonable suspicion that she is carrying contraband—must be given an opportunity to leave the prison rather than being subjected to the strip search. Accordingly, because at the time of the violation plaintiff did not have a clearly established Fourth Amendment right to leave without being subjected to the search, defendant prison guard was entitled to qualified immunity.

A Prisoner's Retained Constitutional Rights:

Infringement of Rights: It has been held that prison inmates do retain certain basic constitutional rights that may be infringed on, if at all, only when rationally related to "institutional penological interests." (Overton v. Bazzetta (2003) 539 U.S. 126 [123 S.Ct. 2162; 156 L.Ed.2nd 162].)

"When a prison regulation or practice offends a fundamental constitutional guarantee, federal courts will discharge their duty to protect constitutional rights." (Procunier v. Martinez (1974) 416 U.S. 396, 405-406 [94 S.Ct. 1800; 40 L.Ed.2nd 224, 236].)

However, absent a showing that prison regulations or practices "create inhumane prison conditions, deprive inmates of basic necessities or fail to protect their health or safety . . . (or) involve the infliction of pain or injury, or deliberate indifference to the risk that it might occur," there is no constitutional violation. (Overton v. Bazzetta, supra, at p. 137 [156 L.Ed.2nd at p. 173].)

Rights retained by prison inmates include:

- The right to "petition the government for a redress of grievances" (First Amendment). (Johnson v. Avery (1969) 393 U.S. 483 [89 S.Ct. 747; 21 L.Ed.2nd 718].)

- The right to be protected from "invidious racial discrimination" (Fourteenth Amendment, Equal Protection). (Lee v. Washington (1968) 390 U.S. 333 [88 S.Ct. 994; 19 L.Ed.2nd 1212].)

- The right to "due process" (Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments). (Wolff v. McDonnell (1974) 418 U.S. 539 [94 S.Ct. 2963; 41 L.Ed.2nd 935]; Haines v. Kerner (1972) 404 U.S. 519 [92 S.Ct. 594; 30 L.Ed.2nd 652].)

Dog Sniffs and Fourth Amendment Searches*:

Used to Search: Whether or not a dog-sniff constitutes a search depends upon what it is being sniffed. (See below)

Luggage: A sniff of one's luggage by a trained drug detection dog in a public place is not a "search" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Place (1983) 462 U.S. 696, 707 [103 S.Ct. 2637; 77 L.Ed.2nd 110, 121]; People v. $48,715 (1997) 58 Cal.App.4th 1507, 1515-1516.)

The Supreme Court first agreed with the lower court that the principles of Terry v. Ohio (1968) 392 U.S. 1 [88 S.Ct. 1868; 20 L.Ed.2nd 889], apply to the "detention" of the luggage. Terry, of course, allows for a temporary detention for investigation of a person on less than probable cause (i.e., a "reasonable suspicion"), "causing (the officer) to suspect that (1) some activity relating to crime has taken place or is occurring or about to occur, and (2) the person he intends to stop or detain is involved in that activity." (People v. Walker (2012) 210 Cal.App.4th 1372, 1381; Terry v. Ohio, at p. 27.) Based upon this reasoning, a majority of the Place Court, therefore, specifically held; ". . . that that when an officer's observations lead him reasonably to believe that a traveler is > carrying luggage that contains narcotics, the principles of Terry and its progeny would permit the officer to detain the luggage briefly to investigate the circumstances that aroused his suspicion, provided that the investigative detention is properly limited in scope." (United States v. Place, supra, at p. 706.)

>
> From here, the Court turned to the dog-sniff itself, analyzing the standards applicable to such an investigative tool. In so doing, the High Court in exercising its power to make law had no problem determining without the need to cite any authority, and simply by applying a little common sense, that dog-sniffs do not even amount to what is commonly labeled as a "search." (Id., supra, at p. 706.)
>
> The Place Court ultimately rule, however, that because the defendant's luggage had been detained too long (i.e., 90 minute) between its seizure and the dog-sniff, the detention was unlawfully prolonged, requiring the suppression of the resulting contraband. (Id., at pp. 709-710.)
>
> The Ninth Circuit is in accord with the rule in Place that dog-sniffs of one's luggage is not a search. (United States v. Beal (9th Cir. 1982) 674 F.2nd 1327.)
>
> See also People v. Mayberry (1982) 31 Cal.3rd 335: In concluding "that sniffing the air surrounding an object is neither an intrusion nor a search," the California Supreme Court referenced the "substantial authority supporting this conclusion," citing some nine federal circuit court cases and two law reviews to that effect." (Id., at p. 340.)

Vehicles: Running a properly trained narcotics-sniffing dog around a vehicle that is otherwise lawfully stopped for a traffic infraction does not implicate the Fourth Amendment, and is therefore not a search. As such, the defendant's expectation of privacy is not violated. Assuming the dog is properly trained and that the traffic stop is not unlawfully prolonged, probable cause is lawfully established, justifying a warrantless search, when the dog alerts on a part of the car. (Illinois v. Caballes (2005) 543 U.S. 405 [125 S.Ct. 834; 160 L.Ed.2nd 842], rejecting the argument that to do so "unjustifiably enlarge(s) the scope of a routine traffic stop into a drug investigation.")

> "It is well-established that an alert by a narcotics dog gives rise to probable cause for a vehicle search." (People v. Ayon (2022) 80 Cal.App.5th 926, 937; citing Florida v. Harris (2013) 568 U.S. 237, 248 [133 S.Ct. 1050; 185 L.Ed.2nd 61]; see also United States v. Diaz (6th Cir. 1994) 25 F.3rd 392, 296.)

However, the dog-sniff of one's vehicle must not be allowed to prolong the traffic stop beyond the time it would have taken to compete the "mission of the traffic stop." Absent the development of additional reasonable suspicion, running a drug-sniffing dog around the car beyond the time it takes to write the ticket and perform other functions reasonably related to the stop, the detention will be held to have been unlawfully prolonged. (Rodriguez v. United States (2015) 575 U.S. 348, 355 [135 S.Ct. 1609; 191 L.Ed.2nd 4927].)

> The so-called "mission of a traffic stop" has generally been held to include "ordinary inquiries incident to [the traffic] stop," such as "checking the driver's license, determining whether there are outstanding warrants against the driver, and inspecting the automobile's registration and proof of insurance." (Ibid.) It has also been noted that, "(t)he mission involves activities that serve the purpose of 'enforcement of the traffic code' . . . and the 'safety precautions' that officers may need to take while doing so." (People v. Vera (2018) 28 Cal.App.5th 1081, 1086-1087.)
>
> The time it took to set up and conduct the dog's sniffing of defendant's vehicle was held to have unlawfully prolonged by an additional six minutes defendant's detention on a traffic stop during which time the detaining officer talked about other unrelated topics, adding to an over-all 18-minute unlawfully prolonged detention. (People v. Ayon, supra, at pp. 937-941.)
>
> A dog sniff performed at a traffic stop, unless supported by independent reasonable suspicion or done during the time it would have taken to complete the purposes of the traffic stop, can cause the stop (or detention) to become "unlawfully prolonged," and will be held to be illegal. (United States v. Evans (9th Cir. 2015) 786 F.3rd 779, 787-788.)

Note also that this rule includes the dog-sniff of a semi-trailer parked at the rear of a gas station, as held by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal almost three decades earlier in United States v. Solis (9th Cir. 1976) 536 F.2nd 880.) In so ruling, the Court held that, "generally, evidence acquired by unaided human senses from without a protected area is not considered an illegal invasion of privacy, but is usable under doctrines of plain view or open view or the equivalent. Odors so detected may furnish evidence of probable cause of 'most persuasive character.'" (Id., at pg. 882; quoting Johnson v. United States (1948) 333 U.S. 10, 13 [92 L.Ed.436; 68 S.Ct. 367]. As such, the Court concluded that, "the use of the dogs was not unreasonable under the circumstances (i.e., sniffing around the outside of the trailer) and therefore was not a prohibited search under the (F)ourth (A)mendment." (At p. 883.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal has held that upon a suspect giving consent to search his car, the fact that officers choose to employ the assistance of a drug-sniffing dog to do so is irrelevant, even if the defendant wasn't aware that a dog would be used. The Court held in the case of United States v. Perez (9th Cir. 1994) 37 F.3rd 510, 515-516, that use of a drug-sniffing canine to search the defendant's car following his written consent to allow the officers to search, even if not something the defendant may have envisioned and even if the use of a dog may be "more effective," is not illegal."

"(A) canine sniff is not a 'search' under the Fourth Amendment and thus 'neither a warrant, nor probable cause, nor reasonable suspicion' is required for its use. United States v. Lingenfelter 997 F.2nd 632, 639 (9th Cir. 1993)." (United States v. Todhunter (9th Cir. 2002) 297 F.3rd 886, 891; the warrantless dog-sniff of a boat by law enforcement assisting the Coast Guard, based upon a "reasonable suspicion that "ripened into probable cause.")

And should a dog "instinctively" jump into the car, without assistance, facilitation, or other intentional act by the dog's handler, alerting once inside the car, no search or Fourth Amendment violation has occurred. (United States v. Pierce (3rd Cir. 2010) 622 F.3rd 209.)

A properly certified drug-detection dog's alert on a container in a vehicle establishes probable cause (as opposed to merely a reasonable suspicion) to search that container even though it is never verified that the item actually contains something the dog is trained to detect. The fact that the dog sniffed into the open bed of a pickup truck does not make the dog's acts a search. And even if it is, a dog's instinctive acts done without an officer's instigation does not violate the Fourth Amendment. (People v. Stillwell et al. (2011) 197 Cal.App.4th 996.)

A properly certified dog's "alert," or any change in his behavior in reaction to the odor of drugs, as opposed to his trained "indication," was sufficient to establish probable cause to search defendant's vehicle. A final indication by the dog was unnecessary. Thus the subsequent entry by the dog into the car (by jumping through an open window of the car) was not an illegal search. (United States v. Moore (10th Cir. 2015) 795 F.3rd 1224.)

See also United States v. Jackson (8th Cir. 2016) 811 F.3rd 1049; properly trained narcotics dog alerting on marijuana in a private plane.

A consent to search of one's vehicle, unless specifically limited, does not preclude the use of a drug detection dog, at least where the defendant should have been aware that the dog may be used and failed to object when it was. (People v. Bell (1996) 43 Cal.App.4th 754; United States v. Perez (9th Cir. 1994) 37 F.3rd 510, 516.)

An "alert" by "a certified, reliable narcotics detector dog" on the gas tank of defendant's vehicle, with nothing more, is sufficient to establish probable cause to arrest. (United States v. Cedano-Arellano (9th Cir. 2003) 332 F.3rd 568.)

Private Residences: In 2013, the United States Supreme Court varied from the rules announced in Place and Caballes when it considered the circumstance of a dog sniff done in what the Court refers to as "a constitutionally protected area." In Florida v. Jardines (2013) 569 U.S. 1 [133 S.Ct. 1409; 185 L.Ed.2nd 495], the High Court discussed the legal consequences of a warrantless dog sniff that occurs within the curtilage of a suspect's home; on the front porch in this case. The question considered by the Court was whether such a dog sniff constitutes a "search," despite the rulings in Place and Caballes.

A bare majority of the Court ruled that it did. In analyzing this issue, the Court compared the differences between a person coming up to the front door for the purpose of making contact with the occupants of the house, which is consistent with an "implied license to enter the porch," and a police officer approaching that same door for the purpose of collecting evidence of criminal wrongdoing. The latter, per the Court, constituted a search and, without the benefit of a warrant, violated the Fourth Amendment.

Note, however, that the dissenting justices make the perfectly valid argument that pursuant to Katz v. United States (1967) 389 U.S. 347 [88 S.Ct. 507; 19 L.Ed.2nd 576], where the Court ruled that, "(a) reasonable person understands that odors emanating from a house may be detected from locations that are open to the public, and a reasonable person will not count on the strength of those odors remaining within the range that, while detectible by a dog, cannot be smelled by a human." (Florida v. Jardines, supra, at p. 17.)

> See "Two Types of Searches," under "Searches of Residences and Other Buildings" (Chapter 13), below.

"(D)rug-detection dogs are highly trained tools of law enforcement, geared to respond in distinctive ways to specific scents so as to convey clear and reliable information to their human partners." (Florida v Jardines, supra, at pp. 13-14; concurring opinion, citing Florida v. Harris (2013) 568 U.S. 237, 241, 246-247 [133 S.Ct. 1050; 185 L.Ed.2nd 61].)

Note: See "Curtilage of the Home," under "Searches of Residences and Other Buildings" (Chapter 13), below.

The North Dakota Supreme Court, for instance, recently held in State v. Nguyen (2013) 841 N.W.2nd 676, that Jardines does not apply to the common hallway outside an apartment when used by anyone who might be living in or visiting an apartment. As such, use of a narcotics dog-sniff in the hallway outside the defendant's apartment was held not to have occurred in the curtilage of the defendant's apartment, even when the building was secured and tenants kept items in the hallway. In so ruling, the North Dakota Supreme Court cites with approval the 1993 Ninth Circuit case of United States v. Nohara (9th Cir. 1993) 3 F.3rd 1239, 1241-1242, where it was held that the defendant had no legitimate expectation of privacy in the hallway of his secured apartment building even if the officers may have been trespassing.

Use of a dog to sniff a motel room was lawful where the officers and the dog were voluntarily admitted by the defendant into the room and the dog was held on a six-foot leash. The dog was where it had a lawful right to be. (United States v. Esquilin (1st Cir. 2000) 208 F.3rd 315.)

Whether or not the theory of Jardines is applicable to a drug-sniffing dog used around the outside, and leaning up against, the open bed and tool box in a suspect's truck (which would over-rule prior case law), was left open by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, holding that pursuant to the "faith-in-case law" rule of Davis v. United States (2011) 564 U.S. 229, 236-239 [131 S.Ct. 2419; 180 L.Ed.2nd 285], it was unnecessary to decide the issue.

(United States v. Thomas (9th Cir. 2013) 726 F.3rd 1086, 1092-1095.)

The rule of Jardines has been extended to the locked, but shared hallway, outside defendant's apartment, even though the hallway was open to other residents and their guests. (United States v. Whitaker (7th Cir. 2016) 820 F.3rd 849.)

Consent to enter defendant's apartment when the officers had a drug-sniffing dog with them, and where the dog was visible to defendant, impliedly included defendant's consent to the entry of the dog as well. When the dog alerted on illegal drugs defendant had in his compartment, the dog being in a place it had the legal right to be, the alert did not constitute an illegal search. (United States v. Iverson (2nd Cir. 2018) 897 F.3rd 450.)

Use of a dog to search a private office without a search warrant is a violation of the Fourth Amendment, exposing the dog's law enforcement handler to potential civil liability. (Pike v. Hester (9th Cir. Nev. 2018) 891 F.3rd 1131; the officer held not to be entitled to qualified immunity.)

Even if evidence was obtained pursuant to execution of an invalid search warrant based on dog sniffs of curtilage of defendant's home, the good faith exception under United States v. Leon (1984) 468 U.S. 897 [82 L.Ed.2nd 677, 104 S.Ct. 3405], applied because it was reasonable for officers to rely on circuit precedent that dog sniffs at interior apartment door were permissible; defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied. (United States v. Hines (8th Cir. 2023) 62 F.4th 1087.)

Sniffing a Storage Facility:

In officers using a drug-sniffing dog to sniff a storage facility, the sniff was not contested. "A dog alert can provide the probable cause needed for a search warrant." (People v. Bautista (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 229, 236; citing United States v. Spetz (9th Cir. 1983) 721 F.2nd 1457, 1464; Estes v. Rowland (1993) 14 Cal.App.4th 508, 532.)

> The issue in Bautista was the use of an Army dog and whether to do so was a "posse comitatus" violation. The Court ruled that it was not, while it was conceded that a dog sniff can provide the necessary probable cause to obtain a search warrant for the storage facility that was in issue.

Officers using a drug-sniffing dog outside a storage unit rented by defendant, after which a search warrant was obtained for the storage unit itself, was held to be lawful, it being a place that was open to the public and where defendant did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy. (United States v. McKenzie (2nd Cir. NY 2021) 13 F.4th 233.)

Sniffing the Person:

A New York Court of Appeals held in People v. Butler (Dec. 19, 2023) 2023 NY Slip Op 06468, that for a police drug-detection dog to lawfully sniff a person, there must be cause—either probable cause or at least a reasonable suspicion (see below)—to believe that the person sniffed has illegal drugs on him.

In Butler, officers made a lawful traffic stop of Devon T. Butler after observing what appeared to be Butler and another person engaging in a hand-to-hand street drug transaction. Upon observing some traffic violations as he drove away, officers make a traffic stop. While talking to Butler about why he was stopped, an officer's drug-sniffing canine—"Apache"—alerted on the driver's seat area of Butler's car. Apache's handler then directed the dog towards Butler himself who, by this time, was out of his vehicle. Apache instantly alerted on the Butler's "groin/buttock region." Freaking out, Butler attempted to flee on foot, discarding a plastic bag found to contain 76 glassine envelopes of heroin as he did so. When finally apprehended, Butler admitted the heroin belonged to him.

Extrapolating the theory of Jardines to the expectation of privacy one has in his or her own body, the Butler Court held that, "the use of a canine to sniff defendant's body for the presence of narcotics qualified as a search." This is because like the curtilage around one's home, and as opposed to the air around our vehicles and luggage, we all have a reasonable expectation of privacy in our own bodies. As such, "the sniffing of the human body involves an obviously greater intrusion on personal privacy, security, and dignity."

The Butler Court also held that it is irrelevant that the dog did not make actual contact with the defendant and sniffed only the air closely > surrounding his person. Such a sniff violates what is sometimes referred to as our "personal space," making irrelevant the lack of any direct contact with a suspect's body.

>
> The Butler Court returned the case to the trial court for a determination of whether "probable cause" or only a "reasonable suspicion" was required to make legal a dog-sniff of one's person. Given the facts in Butler, it is likely that the Court will hold that full "probable cause" is required, but that given the dog-alert on defendant's vehicle, the officers likely had sufficient cause to have the dog sniff defendant himself.

In B.C. v. Plumas Unified School District (9th Cir. 1999) 192 F.3rd 1260, a high school principal had the students from one of the school's classrooms pass by a drug-sniffing dog, one by one. After alerting on one of the students (someone other than B.C.), the dog was run through the classroom, sniffing the students' backpacks, jackets, and other belongings which the students had left in the room. When the students were allowed to return to their classroom, they were again walked past the deputy and his dog, whereupon the dog alerted again on the same student. In the resulting civil suit filed by B.C., it was held that the students who were subjected to a dog-sniff for drugs were the victims of a warrantless Fourth Amendment violation, although the officers were entitled to qualified immunity from civil liability because the issue was not yet well settled in the law. (Id., at p. 1268.)

See also Horton v. Goose Creek Independent School District (5th Cir. 1982) 690 F.2nd 470, where it was held that although a dog-sniff of students' cars and lockers did not constitute a search, a dog-sniff of the students themselves was in fact a Fourth Amendment search, and as such, a violation of the students' Fourth Amendment rights.

It is the opinion of the California Attorney General that a policy of unannounced, random, neutral dog sniffing of students' personal belongings, such as backpacks, purses, jackets, and outer garments, after ordering students to leave these items in a classroom and remain in another area, would be unconstitutional absent some suspicion or probable cause to support the search. (83 Opn.Cal.Atty.Gen. 257 (2000))

However, see Doe v. Renfrow (7th Cir. 1981) 631 F.2nd 91, where the Seventh Circuit held that a dog-sniff of one's person is not a search.

Note: Given the more recent authority, as discussed above, it's safe to say that Butler, B.C., and Horton, particularly in light of the reasoning of Florida v Jardines, are the cases with which law enforcement officers and prosecutors need to be familiar, and ready to follow.

Mailed Packages:

"The postal-inspector's 'use of a well-trained narcotics detection dog . . . [did] not implicate legitimate privacy interests.'" (United States v. Jefferson (9th Cir. 2009) 566 F.3rd 928, 933.)

Movement of containers to be sniffed, without taking the containers from the defendant (United States v. Harvey (8th Cir. 1992) 961 F.2nd 1361, 1363-1364.), or otherwise interfering with the defendant's possessory interests (United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 1993) 990 F.2nd 1129, 1132-1133.), does not implicate the Fourth Amendment.

See "Detention of a Container," under "Searches of Containers" (Chapter 16), above.

Additional Case Law:

Only when the police conduct a canine sniff in a private place, or in a manner which otherwise violates a reasonable expectation of privacy, is the resulting intrusion a search. (Romo v. Champion (10th Cir. 1995) 46 F.3rd 1013, 1016-1017.)

Threatening to use a drug-sniffing dog, when such use does not require the suspect's consent and is otherwise lawful, will also not invalidate the resulting consent to search. (United States v. Todhunter (9th Cir. 2002) 297 F.3rd 886, 891.)

The United States Supreme Court reaffirmed the rules as they relate to dog-sniffs in Florida v. Harris (2013) 568 U.S. 237 [133 S.Ct. 1050; 185 L.Ed.2nd 61], where the Court rejected an attempt by the Florida Supreme Court to impose a more rigorous standard on the prosecution. (See Harris v. State (Fla. 2011) 71 So.3rd 756.) The Supreme Court criticized Florida's failure to apply the standard probable cause definition when it attempted to create a strict evidentiary checklist to assess a drug-detection dog's reliability.

> Per the Court: "The question—similar to every inquiry into probable cause—is whether all the facts surrounding a dog's alert, viewed through the lens of common sense, would make a reasonably prudent person think that a search would reveal contraband or evidence of a crime. A sniff is up to snuff when it meets that test." (Id., at p. 248.)
>
> But where the prosecution fails to disclose to the defense that a police dog had a history of mistaken identifications, such a failure being a violation of the discovery requirements of Brady v. Maryland (1963) 373 U.S. 83, and where the dog's scent evidence was the only evidence linking the defendant to the getaway car and was the only evidence corroborating "strikingly weak" eyewitness identifications, a resulting conviction is subject to being reversed. (Aguilar v. Woodford (9th Cir. 2013) 725 F.3rd 970, 981-985.)
>
> > Note: Per Pen. Code § 141(c); "(a) prosecuting attorney who intentionally and in bad faith alters, modifies, or withholds any physical matter, digital image, video recording, or relevant exculpatory material or information, knowing that it is relevant and material to the outcome of the case, with the specific intent that the physical matter, digital image, video recording, or relevant exculpatory material or information will be concealed or destroyed, or fraudulently represented as the original evidence upon a trial, proceeding, or inquiry, is guilty of a felony . . . ."
>
> But, where the records used to support a dog's training and reliability have been redacted to the point where it is impossible to tell whether there is any negative information contained therein, such records may not be enough to support a determination of probable cause. (United States v. Thomas (9th Cir. 2013) 726 F.3rd 1086, 1095-1095.)

Certification of a Dog:

> Proof of certification or successful completion of a training program supports a rebuttable presumption of a dog's reliability, subject to cross-examination and introduction of conflicting evidence by the defendant. (Florida v. Harris (2013) 568 U.S. 237, 246-247 [133 S.Ct. 1050; 185 L.Ed.2nd 61].)

> "[E]vidence of a dog's satisfactory performance in a certification or training program can itself provide sufficient reason to trust his alert. If a bona fide organization has certified a dog after testing his reliability in a controlled setting, a court can presume (subject to any conflicting evidence offered) that the dog's alert provides probable cause to search. The same is true, even in the absence of formal certification, if the dog has recently and successfully completed a training program that evaluated his proficiency in locating drugs."

It has been held that the issue of a drug-detection dog's reliability does not require an exhaustive showing of the dog's error and success rate. Instead, reliability can be shown when the K-9's handler testifies to the dog's training, certification, and testing, as well as to his own training and certification to handle the dog. "Nothing more was required." (People v. Stilwell (2011) 197 Cal.App.4th 996, 1006.)

"The standard enunciated by the district court, however, was proper: GCISD (i.e., "Goose Creek Consolidated Independent School District") need not show that the dogs are infallible or even that they are reliable enough to give the defendant probable cause; instead, the dogs must be reasonably reliable. It will not, however, be enough to show that the dogs are reasonably reliable in indicating the presence or recent presence of contraband. If the reaction is to justify a search, it must give rise to reasonable suspicion that the search will produce something — i.e., reasonable suspicion that contraband is currently present. If the school does have reasonable cause to suspect the presence of contraband, the ease with which it can be destroyed or moved presents an exigent circumstance that excuses the warrant requirement. (Italics in original: Horton v. Goose Creek Independent School District (5th Cir. 1982) 690 F.2nd 470, 482; citing United States v. Petty (5th Cir. 1979) 601 F.2nd 883, 890.)

Fourteenth Amendment Due Process:

See Horton v. Goose Creek Independent School District (5th Cir. 1982) 690 F.2nd 470, at pp. 482-483, declining to decide whether plaintiffs' due process rights were violated by having a drug-sniffing dog sniff students, but also noting that given the docility of the dogs used, and their training, that "as long as the dogs are carefully selected for their nonaggressive character, and the handlers supervise them during their playtime, we do not think that the minimal 'harassment' arising from their mere presence on campus rises to the level of a constitutional violation."

Used to Track (or Trail):

Rule: The use of a properly trained dog to track a suspect is lawful, and the evidence of canine tracking is admissible in court. (People v. Craig (1978) 86 Cal.App.3rd 905; "(W)e choose to require each particular dog's ability and reliability to be shown on a case-by-case basis." (Id., at pp. 916-917.)

Certification of a Dog: Proof of certification or successful completion of a training program supports a rebuttable presumption of a dog's reliability, subject to cross-examination and introduction of conflicting evidence by the defendant. (Florida v. Harris (2013) 568 U.S. 237, 246-247 [133 S.Ct. 1050; 185 L.Ed.2nd 61]; People v. Peterson (2020) 10 Cal.5th 409, 449.)

Prerequisites to Admission of Evidence:

The dog's handler was qualified by training and experience in the use of the dog;

The dog was adequately trained in tracking humans;

The dog has been found to be reliable in tracking humans;

The dog was placed on the track where circumstances indicted the guilty party to have been; and

The trail had not become stale or contaminated.

(People v. Malgren (1983) 139 Cal.App.3rd 234; dog tracked suspect for 35 minutes over about seven-tenths of a mile. See also People v. Westerfield (2019) 6 Cal.5th 632, 705-711; and People v. Peterson (2020) 10 Cal.5th 409, 445.)

Case Law:

The California Appellate Courts have specifically rejected the argument that the court was obligated to instruct that dog trailing evidence must be viewed with caution. (People v. Malgren, supra, at p. 241.)

> See also People v. Westerfield, supra, at pp. 708-709: "(W)e conclude an express cautionary admonition regarding dog-scent evidence is not a general principle of law necessary to the jury's understanding of the case."

See People v. Jackson (2016) 1 Cal.5th 269, 321-322, 325, modifying the Malgren factors necessary for an evidentiary foundation before dog scene evidence is admissible to a requirement that the proponent of the evidence establish as background qualifications the adequacy of the handler's and dog's training and supply evidence of the dog's reliability in trailing humans. The party must also show the adequacy of the manner in which the dog was given a scent to trail, whether by being allowed it to sniff the beginning of a known trail or by being "presented with a scent article" and then asked to smell for a corresponding trail of the same scent. Lastly, there must be some independent evidence tending to confirm that the person found at the end of the trail the dog followed was indeed the person who left the scent trail and supplied the initial scent.

Use of a dog to track defendant's scent from a stolen vehicle to where defendant was being detained held to supply the necessary "fair probability" which, with other evidence, justified the defendant's search and subsequent arrest for the theft of the vehicle. (In re Lennies H. (2005) 126 Cal.App.4th 1232, 1239.)

Use of a "scent transfer unit," which extracts scents from an object, transferring the scents to a sterile gauze pad from which a dog may obtain the suspect's scent (see also People v. Jackson (2016) 1 Cal.5th 269, 291.) requires proof of the unit's reliability and acceptability in the scientific community, per "Kelly/Frye," and that it was properly used by the handler, to be admissible in court. (People v. Mitchell (2003) 110 Cal.App.4th 772; People v. Willis (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 379, 385-386.)

> The "Kelly/Frye" test for evidence admissibility refers to the standards for the admission into evidence of new scientific techniques, per People v. Kelly (1976) 17 Cal.3rd 24; and Frye v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1923) 293 F. 1013.)
>
> But see People v. Jackson, supra, at pp. 298-326, below, where it was held that a hearing under Kelly or Evid. Code § 402 was not necessary before the jury could hear the evidence in that the prosecution laid an adequate foundation for such evidence.

> The California Supreme Court again held in People v. Peterson (2020) 10 Cal.5th 409, "that the trial court did not err in declining to subject the dog-trailing evidence to the threshold Kelly test. The nature of the dog-trailing technique at issue here is not meaningfully different from the technique at issue in Jackson, which we concluded was not subject to Kelly." (Id., at p. 446.)
>
> Note: As noted in Peterson, pursuant to People v. Kelly, when the admission into evidence of an expert's testimony is the issue, and that testimony relates to the use of novel scientific methods or techniques, the proponent of that evidence must first demonstrate the technique's reliability through testimony from an expert qualified to offer an opinion on the subject. The technique's reliability, in turn, depends upon a showing that it has achieved general acceptance among practitioners in the relevant field. Finally, the proponent of the evidence must show any procedures necessary to ensure the technique's validity were properly followed in the given case. The purpose of these threshold requirements—commonly referred to as the Kelly test—is to protect against the risk of credulous juries attributing to evidence cloaked in scientific terminology an aura of infallibility. (The Feds follow a similar requirement, pursuant to Frye v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1923) 293 F. 1013, thus establishing what is more popularly known as the "Kelly/Frye test.") However, not every issue requiring expert testimony needs to satisfy the Kelly test. Kelly does not apply unless the technique at issue is "novel;" i.e., "which is new to science and, even more so, the law." Also, Kelly only applies when the technique at issue is one whose reliability would be difficult for laypersons (i.e., the jurors) to evaluate. (Id., at p. 444; citing People v. Craig (1978) 86 Cal.App.3rd 905.)

However, where the prosecution fails to disclose to the defense that a police dog, used in a "scent transfer" identification of the defendant, had a history of mistaken identifications, such a failure being a violation of the discovery requirements of Brady v. Maryland (1963) 373 U.S. 83, and where the dog's scent evidence was the only evidence linking the defendant to the getaway car and was the only evidence corroborating "strikingly weak" eyewitness identifications, a resulting conviction is subject to being reversed. (Aguilar v. Woodford (9th Cir. 2013) 725 F.3rd 970, 981-985.)

> Note: Per P.C. § 141(c): It is a felony for a prosecutor to purposely withhold material evidence favorable to the defense.

Dog trailing evidence was properly admitted at both phases of a capital murder trial because a hearing under Kelly (People v. Kelly (1976) 17 Cal.3rd 24.) or E.C. § 402 was not necessary before the jury could hear the evidence in that the prosecution laid an adequate foundation for such evidence. There's no foundational requirement that, prior to admission of dog trailing testimony, the scent presented to the dog must be shown not to be stale or contaminated. (People v. Jackson (2016) 1 Cal.5th 269, 298-326, 362-365.)

> To the extent that People v. Malgren, supra, held to the contrary on the requirement that scent presented to the dog must be shown not to be stale or contaminated, that case was "disapproved." (Id., at p. 325.)

The California Supreme Court also added another modification to the necessary Malgren factors to consider before admitting such evidence. A proponent must establish as background qualifications the adequacy of the handler's and dog's training and supply evidence of the dog's reliability in trailing humans. The proponent of the evidence "must also show the adequacy of the manner in which the dog was given a scent to trail, whether (as in Craig and Malgren) by being allowed to sniff the beginning of a known trail or (as in Jackson) by being 'presented with a scent article' and then asked to smell for a corresponding trail of the same scent." (People v. Jackson (2016) 1 Cal.5th 269, 298-326, 321–322; see also People v. Peterson (2020) 10 Cal.5th 409, 445.)

> Note: In Jackson, a trained dog was given a gauze pad infused with scent from a fresh shoe print left outside a victim's house and then taken to a lobby through which a suspect had passed. Later, the dog was given a gauze pad infused with scent from an envelope left on a different victim's bed and believed to have been handled by the perpetrator. The dog was again asked to seek out and follow any matching trail, which it did, ultimately locating and alerting on the suspect. (Jackson, at pp. 308-309.)
>
> In Peterson, the dog was presented with the victim's sunglasses and then directed to smell for trails of the same human scent, if any, at the location where it was suspected that the victim's body had been taken. Per the dog's > handler: "This was not a novel technique; indeed, . . . teaching a dog to scent off an object and then seek a corresponding trail is a routine part of training dogs to trail humans." (Peterson, at p. 446.)

The California Supreme Court has approved the use of CALJIC No. 2.16, as follows: "Evidence of dog tracking has been received for the purpose of showing, if it does, that the defendant is the perpetrator of the crimes of kidnapping and murder. This evidence is not by itself sufficient to permit an inference that the defendant is guilty of the crimes of kidnapping and murder. Before guilt may be inferred, there must be other evidence that supports the accuracy of the identification of the defendant as the perpetrator of the crimes of kidnapping and murder. [¶] The corroborating evidence need not be evidence which independently links the defendant to the crime. It is sufficient if it supports the accuracy of the dog tracking. [¶] In determining the weight to give to dog-tracking evidence, you should consider the training, proficiency, experience, and proven ability, if any, of the dog, its trainer, and its handler, together with all the circumstances surrounding the tracking in question." (People v. Westerfield (2019) 6 Cal.5th 632, 708-709; rejecting the argument that the jury should also have been instructed with a cautionary instruction similar to CALJIC No. 376; i.e., as modified; that "the dog-sniff evidence is not by itself sufficient to permit an inference of the defendant's guilt and that there must be other corroborating evidence of the defendant's guilt before guilt may be inferred."

The same instruction, modified to reflect that the trailing was of the victim as opposed to the suspect, was also approved by the California Supreme Court. (People v. Peterson (2020) 10 Cal.5th 409, 453-456.)

The "Corroboration Requirement:"

The California Supreme Court has also held that there is a "need for some independent evidence tending to confirm that a person found at the end of the trail the dog followed was indeed the person who left the scent trail and supplied the initial scent." (People v. Peterson (2020) 10 Cal.5th 409, 445, citing People v. Jackson (2016) 1 Cal.5th 269, 321.)

But the corroborative evidence need not necessarily independently link the accused to the crime. "The corroborative evidence need only support the accuracy of the tracking itself." (People v. Gonzales (1990) 218 Cal.App.3rd 403, 414.)

Other Evidentiary Foundational Requirements:

Where the dog is not asked to smell for a scent trail, but instead is exposed to a scent and then watched to see if the dog shows interest in various locales frequented by the suspect, then a scent identification should be admissible only upon an evidentiary foundation concerning such matters as "how long scent remains on an object or at a location" and "whether every person has a scent that is so unique that it provides an accurate basis for scent identification." (People v. Willis (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 379, 386.)

> In Willis, the dog was given an initial scent from a matchbook but the prosecution failed to present any proof that the target had ever touched the matchbook from which a scent was collected. (Ibid.)

And where a dog has been given pads with the scent from murder shell casings and the victim's shirt, and a lineup of pads with scents from various people is performed, including the defendant's scent, this type of lineup smell test has also been held to be different than scent trailing. Such a lineup does not have the kind of centuries-long lineage that scent trailing does, and thus ought to be supported by additional foundation establishing the uniqueness of human scents and their persistence and rate of degradation. (People v. Mitchell (2003) 110 Cal.App.4th 772, 790–794.)

Note: Neither of these requirements were held to apply to the situation in People v. Peterson (2020) 10 Cal.5th 409, where the dog was asked to seek out and follow a trail, if any could be found, based on a given scent. (p. 447.)

> While evidence related to training of the dog handler in "cue avoidance" (specific instruction on how to avoid cueing dogs to go in a desired, predetermined direction when trailing) such evidence is not necessary for a court to find that the dog handler was sufficiently trained. (People v. Peterson, supra, at p. 449, fn. 16.)
>
> The California Supreme Court also held that the proponent of dog-trailing evidence is not required to demonstrate past performance in conditions that are identical to the case at hand. (People v. Peterson, supra, at p. 450.)

See also discussions concerning foundational requirements (or lack thereof) for trailing related to "enclosed targets" (i.e., such as when the person trailed was in a vehicle or wrapped in a tarp) and the so-called "missing person test" (i.e., training a dog to seek out only the missing person—the person still unaccounted for—after eliminating other known persons who may have touched an item sniffed by the dog), noting that trailing dogs are trained to follow the freshest, most recent scent on a particular object. Per the Court, The circumstances relevant to these two factors are "relevant to the weight the jury might accord this evidence, but not its admissibility." (People v. Peterson, supra, at p. 451.)

Use of Dogs in Making Arrests:

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal had previously held that "deadly force," when evaluating the use of force by a law enforcement agency through the use of a police dog, should be defined as: "Force which is reasonably likely to cause (or which 'had a reasonable probability of causing') death." (Vera Cruz v. City of Escondido (9th Cir. 1997) 139 F.3rd 659, 663; use of a police dog is not deadly force.)

"(T)he force used to arrest [the plaintiff] was severe" because the dog bit the plaintiff three times, dragged him between four and ten feet, and "nearly severed" his arm. (Chew v. Gates (9th Cir. 1994) 27 F.3rd 1432, 1439.)

However, use of a police dog to bite and hold a potentially dangerous fleeing felon for up to a minute, until the arresting officer could insure that the situation was safe, did not constitute the use of "deadly force," and was therefore not a violation of the Fourth Amendment (seizure), despite the fact that the suspect's arm was severely injured by the dog. (Miller v. Clark County (9th Cir. 2003) 340 F.3rd 959.)

The above, however, was a minority opinion. As a result, the Ninth Circuit has recently changed its mind, adopting the majority rule, agreeing that even in the use of a police dog, "deadly force" should be defined as "force that creates a substantial risk of death or serious bodily injury." (Smith v. City of Hemet (9th Cir. 2005) 394 F.3rd 689.)

"Deadly Force as Defined by the Model Penal Code § 3.11(2) (1962): "Force that the actor uses with the purpose > of causing or that he knows to create a substantial risk of causing death or serious bodily injury." (Emphasis added.)

>
> See also Seidner v. De Vries (9th Cir. June 30, 2022) 39 F.4th 591, at p. 597 (not a dog-use case), where the Ninth Circuit has also noted that: "(W)e have classified deployment of a police dog as both a severe use of force and a moderate use of force depending on the suspect's condition when the dog was ordered to attack, how long the attack lasted, and whether the dog was within its handler's control." (Citing Lowry v. City of San Diego (9th Cir. 2017) 858 F.3rd 1248, 1256-1257.)

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal further held in Smith that the defendant pleading guilty to resisting arrest, per P.C. § 148(a)(1), does not preclude him from suing the officers for using unreasonable force so long as the officer's legal actions can be separated from his use of unreasonable force. The California Supreme Court later ruled in Yount v. City of Sacramento (2008) 43 Cal.4th 885, that it is not necessary to find the officers' lawful actions divisible from their use of unreasonable use of force in order for the criminal defendant to be guilty of resisting arrest and still sue. Based upon this theory, the Ninth Circuit found that a criminal defendant, even after pleading guilty to resisting arrest per P.C. § 148(a)(1), may sue the officer for using unreasonable force in a continuous course of action so long as at least part of the officer's actions were lawful. (Hooper v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2011) 629 F.3rd 1127.)

Note: Both Smith and Hooper are dog bite cases.

However, the use of a police dog does not necessarily constitute the use of deadly force under all circumstances. It depends upon the circumstances of the case in question. In such a case, the issue for a civil jury is to merely determine whether the force used was reasonable under the circumstances. (Thompson v. County of Los Angeles (2006) 142 Cal.App.4th 154.)

Where the dog's handler closely followed his police dog and called her off very quickly after the initial contact with the plaintiff, and due to the officer's close proximity to his dog, the encounter between plaintiff and the dog was so brief that the officer did not even know if contact had occurred, where the risk of harm posed by this particular use of force, and the actual harm caused, was moderate, the district court properly determined that the use of force in this instance was not severe. Summary judgment for the City of San Diego was upheld. (Lowry v. City of San Diego (9th 2017) 858 F.3rd 1248.)

An officer/dog handler was entitled to qualified immunity when sued for using excessive force, where the officer deployed the dog without warning to find and bite plaintiff, who was armed with a knife, and then allowed the dog to continue biting the plaintiff until he was handcuffed despite the plaintiff's intent to surrender. First, the court found that even if plaintiff had dropped the knife and was lying flat on the ground, it was undisputed that (1) the officer saw the knife, which remained within plaintiff's reach, (2) the officer knew that plaintiff's mother had called 911 and told the police her son would not go without a fight, (3) plaintiff had committed a felony assault and (4) plaintiff had fled before hiding in a neighbor's backyard for approximately twenty minutes. (Escobar v. Montee (5th Cir. TX 2018) 895 F.3rd 387.)

> The lawfulness of deploying the dog without the usual warning was not an issue on appeal, the issue being decided in the officer's favor (i.e., entitled to qualified immunity) at the trial court level.

Use of a police dog to attack and pull what appeared to be an uncooperative driver from his vehicle, after a two-minute, 100-mph high speed chase, and what appeared to be an uncooperative driver (the plaintiff/driver later claiming that he refused to get out of his car because the car was still in drive and the officers had ordered him to stick his hands out the window), the court noted that the reasonableness standard does not take into account facts not known to the officer at the time force was used, nor does it require an officer to use the best technique available at the time. The Court also noted that in police work officers usually face a range of acceptable options, not a single, rigid right answer and that the reasonableness standard contains a "measure of deference to the officer's on-the-spot judgment." Under these circumstances, use of the police dog in subduing what appeared to be an uncooperative suspect was held to be reasonable. (Ashford v. Raby (6th Cir. 2020) 951 F.3rd 798.)

Use of a dog to subdue a fleeing suspect may subject the dog's handler to civil liability if the dog is allowed to bite and hold the suspect after the suspect has submitted and attempts to comply with the officer's orders to submit, causing serious injury to the suspect. (depublished: Hartsell v. County of San Diego (9th Cir. 2020) 802 F. Appx. 295; affirming the district court's ruling denying the officer qualified immunity.)

In a civil rights action brought by the family of a van driver shot by police and the van occupant against the city and police officers following a police chase that ended when the van crashed into a cruiser and the driver was killed, the trial court properly granted summary judgment to defendant officers on the 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 and Fourth Amendment claims. The Court held that the use of deadly force was reasonable where the driver was actively resisting arrest and attempting to drive toward the officers, who were on foot. The severity of the crime weighed in favor of the use of force. Also he officers did not use excessive force when they deployed a canine to physically apprehend the detainee after the shooting. Plaintiffs' state claims also failed because they could not show battery where the officers did not use unreasonable force. The negligence claim required the court to assess the reasonableness of the officers' actions. Lastly, the Bane Act claim failed where plaintiffs failed to show the officers interfered with any constitutional rights using threats, intimidation, or coercion. (Monzon v. City of Murrieta (9th Cir. 2020) 978 F.3rd 1150.)

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, where a police officer intentionally released his dog to bite a woman (the plaintiff) who posed no threat to the officers and who was not fleeing or resisting arrest, even assuming the officer's conduct violated the plaintiff's Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable seizure, that constitutional right was not clearly established as it relates to a second officer who failed to intervene. Because the law did not clearly establish when an officer must intervene, the officer was entitled to summary judgment on qualified immunity grounds for his failure to intervene when the dog was biting the plaintiff. (Penaloza v. City of Rialto (9th Cir. 2020) 836 Fed. Appx. 547; an unpublished opinion.)

Where a police dog was used to help subdue a resisting prisoner, and the prisoner later sues the officer alleging the use of excessive force, the Court held that to "defeat qualified immunity, [the plaintiff] must show that the state of the law as of [the events at issue] gave a reasonable officer 'fair warning' that using a police dog on a noncompliant suspect, who had resisted lesser methods of force to complete his arrest, was unconstitutional." (Hughes v. Rodriguez (9th Cir. 2022) 31 F.4th 1211, 1223-1224; citing Koley v. Williams (D. Ariz. 2021) 2021 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40149), where the district court concluded that a dog bite with no lasting complications was a minor injury.

> In Hughes, the plaintiff testified that he suffered dog bites to his left leg, abrasions to his head and face, and bruising on his upper right thigh. He claimed that this resulted in scarring and residual soreness in his left leg. However, he made no allegations that these injuries interfere with his work or daily life. Based upon this record, the Court concluded that plaintiff's injuries were relatively minor. (Id., at p. 1221.)
>
> Ultimately, with evidence that plaintiff, who the officers had reason to believe he might be armed (he was not), and who was hiding in a third party's home, the Hughes Court held that "the initial use of the police dog was proportional to the 'threats to the safety of [the officers], as reasonably perceived by the responsible officials on the basis of the facts known to them.'" (Id., at p. 1222; quoting Whitley v. Albers (1986) 475 U.S. 312, at p. 321 [106 S.Ct. 1078; 89 L.Ed.2nd 251].)

Miscellaneous:

Support Dogs:

Allowing a support dog in the courtroom for child sexual abuse victims who were adults at the time they testified was not error because Pen. Code § 868.4(a)(2) made support dogs available to prosecuting witnesses, regardless of age, in certain specified cases set forth in Pen. Code § 868.5(a), including child sexual abuse cases, and evidence on the potential trauma of testifying satisfied the requirement that the dog might reduce anxiety or otherwise be helpful to the witnesses while testifying under section 868.4(b)(3), even if the dog might not have been necessary. Although the standard support dog instruction in CALCRIM No. 377 was not as expansive as instructions in some cases, it adequately instructed the jury not to let the dog affect the assessment of evidence because it told the jury not to be distracted by, or consider, the dog's presence. (People v. Picazo (2022) 84 Cal.App.5th 778.)

Shooting Dogs in Self-Defense:

Officers are expected to use some discretion in the execution of a warrant to avoid the taking of unnecessarily excessive (i.e., "cumulative") property and engaging in unnecessarily destructive behavior. (San Jose Charter of the Hells Angels Motorcycle Club v. City of San Jose (9th Cir. 2005) 402 F.3rd 962; the shooting of several dogs without having considered alternative methods of controlling the dogs.)

A dog is property. The unreasonable seizure of that property is a violation of the Fourth Amendment. It is clearly established that unreasonably killing a person's dog is an unconstitutional seizure of property under the Fourth Amendment. But shooting and killing a suspect's dog may be justified when done in the necessary defense of oneself; e.g., when the dogs posed an imminent threat to the officers who were attempting to execute a search warrant. (Brown v. Battle Creek Police Dep't. (6th Cir. 2016) 844 F.3rd 556.)

The Fourth Amendment provides for "[t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures." Privately-owned dogs are "effects" under the Fourth Amendment. "(A) police officer "cannot shoot a dog in the absence of an objectively legitimate and imminent threat to him or others." Therefore, police officers must act reasonably when seizing them. Where it was alleged that an officer shot and seriously injured two of plaintiffs' dogs (although pit bulls, they were used as "emotional service . . . and seizure alert animals"), the officer was held not to be entitled to qualified immunity from civil suite absent evidence supporting the argument that they were a danger to the officer. Per the Court, when an officer "shoots and kills an individual's family pet when that pet presented no danger and when non-lethal methods of capture would have been successful," this is an unreasonable seizure of property. (Lemay v. Mays (8th Cir. MN 2021) 18 F.4th 283.)

Pen. Code §§ 295 et seq.*: The DNA and Forensic Identification Database and Data Bank Act of 1998:

DNA Testing: As noted by the United States Supreme Court: "DNA testing has an unparalleled ability both to exonerate the wrongly convicted and to identify the guilty. It has the potential to significantly improve both the criminal justice system and police investigative practices." (District Attorney's Office for the Third Judicial District v. Osborne (2009) 557 U.S. 51, 55 [129 S.Ct. 2308; 174 L.Ed.2nd 38]; see also Maryland v. King (2013) 569 U. S. 435, 442, [133 S.Ct. 1958; 186 L.Ed.2nd 1].)

California's Statutes:

Pen. Code § 295(a): Name of the Act: The DNA and Forensic Identification Database and Data Bank Act of 1998.

Pen. Code § 295(b): Statement of Intent: "It is the intent of the people of the State of California, in order to further the purposes of this chapter, to require DNA and forensic identification data bank samples from all persons, including juveniles, for the felony and misdemeanor offenses described in subdivision (a) of Section 296." (Para. (2))

Pen. Code § 295(c): Purpose: The stated purpose is to establish a data bank and database to assist federal, state, and local criminal justice and law enforcement agencies in the expeditious detection and prosecution of individuals responsible for sex offenses and other crimes, the exclusion of suspects who are being investigated for these crimes, and the identification of missing and unidentified persons, particularly abducted children.

Pen. Code § 295(d): Describes these provisions as "an administrative requirement to assist in the accurate identification of criminal offenders."

Pen. Code § 295(e): Unless otherwise requested by the Department of Justice, collection of biological samples for DNA analysis from qualifying persons is limited to collection of inner cheek cells of the mouth ("buccal swab samples").

Pen. Code 295(f): Authorizes the collection of blood specimens from federal, state or local law enforcement agencies when necessary in a particular case or would aid DOJ in obtaining an accurate forensic DNA profile for identification purposes.

Pen. Code § 295(g) & (h): Department of Justice is responsible for the management and administration of the DNA and Forensic Identification Database and Data Bank Program, and for liaison with the FBI. Provisions for the enactment of local and state policies and procedures.

> Provisions for providing information to an international DNA database and data bank program does not violate defendant's privacy rights and is therefore constitutional. (People v. McCray (2006) 144 Cal.App.4th 258.)

Pen. Code § 295(i): Counties' Responsibilities:

> (1) When the specimens, samples and print impressions are collected at a county jail or other county facility, including a private community correctional facility, the county sheriff or chief administrative officer of the county jail or other facility shall be responsible for all the following:
>
> > (A) Collect the specimens, etc., immediately following arrest, conviction, or adjudication, or during the booking or intake or reception center process at that facility, or reasonably promptly thereafter.
> >
> > (B) Collect the specimens, etc., as soon as administratively practicable after a qualifying person reports to the facility for the purpose of providing them.
> >
> > (C) Forward the collected specimens, etc., immediately to the Department of Justice, and in compliance with department policies.
>
> (2) The specimens, etc., shall be collected by a person using a collection kit approved by the Department of Justice and in accordance with the requirements and procedures set forth in P.C. § 298.

(3) Counties to be reimbursed for expenses.

Pen. Code § 295(j): Portion of the costs may be paid by defendants at sentencing.

Pen. Code § 295(k): Funds to be deposited in the DNA Testing Fund.

Pen. Code § 295(l): The Department of Justice DNA Laboratory to be known as the "Jan Bashinski DNA Laboratory."

Pen. Code § 295.2: Prohibits the DNA and forensic identification database and data bank, and the Department of Justice DNA Laboratory, from being used as a source of genetic material for testing, research, or experiments, by any person, agency, or entity seeking to find a causal link between genetics and behavior or health.

Pen. Code § 296(a): The below listed persons shall provide buccal swab samples, right thumbprints, and a full palm print impression of each hand, and any blood specimens or other biological samples as described in the statutes, for law enforcement identification analysis:

(1) Any person, including any juvenile, who is convicted of or pleads guilty or no contest to any felony offense, or is found not guilty by reason of insanity of any felony offense, or any juvenile who is adjudicated under W&I § 602 for committing any felony offense.

The mandatory requirements of this section have withstood constitutional attack, as far as adult defendants are concerned, a number of times. (See People v. King (2000) 82 Cal.App.4th 1363; Alfaro v. Terhune (2002) 98 Cal.App.4th 492; People v. Travis (2006) 139 Cal.App.4th 1271.)

It has also been held that the requirement that a juvenile comply with this section is constitutional (i.e., no Fourth Amendment violation) despite the stronger privacy interest in Juvenile Court proceedings. (In re Calvin S. (2007) 150 Cal.App.4th 443.)

Reduction of defendant's felony conviction to a misdemeanor, after having successfully completed certain terms and conditions of probation for one year, does not entitle defendant to the expungement of the DNA data or return or destruction of the DNA sample. (Coffey v. Superior Court (2005) 129 Cal.App.4th 809.)

In two cases consolidated for purposes of an appeal (In re C.B. (2016) 2 Cal.App.5th 1112, and In re C.H. (2016) 2 Cal.App.5th 1139.), defendants were juveniles who were declared wards of the court based on conduct that was felonious when committed. Juveniles declared wards based on felony conduct must submit DNA samples, but need not do so for most misdemeanor offenses. In 2014, the passage of Proposition 47 reclassified various drug and property offenses from felonies to misdemeanors. Defendants, with their offenses reduced to misdemeanors, argued they were entitled to have their DNA samples and profiles removed from the State's databank. The California Supreme Court disagreed: "While Proposition 47 spares some future offenders a duty to submit samples, it does not alter the past reality that [the juveniles] were adjudicated to have committed felonies and were obligated at the time to provide samples based on those adjudications" and "a showing of changed circumstances eliminating a duty to submit a sample is an insufficient basis for expungement of a sample already submitted." (In re C.B. (2018) 6 Cal.5th 118, 123-135.)

(2) Any adult who is arrested for or charged with any of the following felony offenses:

(A): All felony Pen. Code § 290 (sex registration) offenses, or attempts to commit such offense.

(B): Murder or voluntary manslaughter, or attempts to commit such offense.

(C): Any felony offense (effective 1/1/2009; Proposition 69).

The United States Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of taking a mouth swab for DNA testing of all arrestees for "serious offenses," as defined by Maryland statutes, likening the procedure to the taking of fingerprints and photos as part of the booking procedure. (Maryland v. King (2013) 569 U. S. 435 [133 S.Ct. 1958; 186 L.Ed.2nd 1]; see also People v. Marquez (2019) 31

Cal.App.5th 402, 409-410; noting, without deciding that a "serious offense" may be definable by whether the arrested-for offense was "jailable," or "non-jailable," citing People v. Thompson (2006) 38 Cal.4th 811, 824.)

The constitutionality of California's statutory requirement that all persons arrested for, or charged with, any felony, whether serious or not, submit to a mouth swab DNA test, was upheld in Haskell v. Harris (9th Cir. 2014) 745 F.3rd 1269.)

The constitutionality of Pen. Code § 296(a)(2)(C), allowing the collection of DNA from all post-arrest, pre-conviction felony suspects, even before a judicial determination of probable cause, was upheld in People v. Buza (2018) 4 Cal.5th 658; finding it violated neither the U.S. nor the California Constitutions, at least for a serious offense such as the offense in issue here; arson.

> The Buza Court also approved the immediate testing of the DNA sample, without needing to await a judicial determination of probable cause. (Id., at pp. 676-679.)

Note: The U.S. Supreme Court in Maryland v. King, supra, says that to be lawful, the warrantless collection of a DNA sample from an arrestee, done even before any judicial hearings, the offense must be a "serious" one. The State of Maryland apparently has a statutory list of what they consider to be "serious crimes." (See Md. Code Ann., Crim. Law § 14-101 (2012)) King was arrested for rape, which is listed in their statutes as "serious." The California Supreme Court in People v. Buza, supra, upheld the constitutionality of Pen. Code § 296(a)(2)(C) which allows a warrantless collection of DNA from anyone arrested for any felony offense, again upon their arrest and before any court hearings. Buza's crime was arson, which is certainly also serious. In People v. Marquez, supra, defendant was arrested for personal possession of a controlled substance, per H&S § 11350, which was a felony offense at the time. It was not decided in Buza, however, whether P.C. § 296(a)(2)(C) can constitutionally allow for DNA collection in a felony offense situation where the felony is not considered to be serious, leaving this issue "for another day." (4 Cal.5th at pp. 681, 693.) The Court in People v. Marquez (at p. 537) suggests that the difference between "serious" and "non-serious" is whether or the offense arrested for is "jailable" (citing People v. Thompson (2006) 38 Cal.4th 811, 824.), a definition that is no doubt broader than Maryland's statutory list, and of questionable validity when you consider that California statutes do not authorize the automatic collection of DNA in misdemeanor situations, jailable or not. In other words, we do not yet know whether Pen. Code § 296(a)(2)(C) is constitutional when used to justify the warrantless taking of a DNA sample from an arrestee where the felony offense involved is not considered to be "serious," however this term is to be defined.

Collecting DNA from defendant when he was validly arrested for a felony on probable cause did not violate search and seizure principles under the Fourth Amendment, or Cal. Const., art. I, § 13, even though defendant was never formally charged. Also, once validly obtained, the DNA evidence could be used in the investigation of an unrelated murder. The situation was noted to be no different than taking fingerprints and photographs of someone arrested on probable cause. There was also no violation of defendant's state constitutional right to privacy (Cal. Const., art. I, § 13), but even if there was, the "Truth in Evidence" provisions of Proposition 8 precludes the suppression of any evidence. (People v. Roberts (2021) 68 Cal.App.5th 64.)

(3) Any person, including any juvenile, who is required to register per Pen. Code §§ 290 (sex) or 457.1 (arson) because of the commission of, or attempt to commit, a felony or misdemeanor offense, or any person, including any juvenile, who is housed in a mental health facility or sex offender treatment program after referral to such facility or program by a court after being charged with any felony offense.

All registered sex offenders, even when convicted prior to the DNA statutes were passed, are required to provide a DNA sample. The statutes added by Proposition 69, adding more offenses to the list of people who must provide a DNA sample, are retroactive. (Good v. Superior Court* [People] (2008) 158 Cal.App.4th 1494.)

(4) Includes attempts.

(5) These provisions are not intended to preclude the collection of samples as a condition of a plea for a non-qualifying offense.

Pen. Code § 296(b): Provisions apply to all qualifying persons regardless of the sentence imposed.

Pen. Code § 296(c): Provisions apply to all qualifying persons regardless of placement or confinement in any mental hospital or other public or private treatment facility, and shall include, but not be limited to, the following persons including juveniles:

(1) Any person committed to a state hospital or other treatment facility as a mentally disordered sex offender, per W&I §§ 6300 et seq.

(2) Any person who has a severe mental disorder, per Pen. Code §§ 2960 et seq.

(3) Any person found to be a sexually violent predator, per P.C. §§ 6600 et seq.

Pen. Code § 296(d): Provisions are mandatory, and apply even if not so advised by the court.

One's religious beliefs might provide a particular defendant, under the "Religious Freedom Restoration Act" with a legal excuse for declining to provide a blood sample if the defendant can:

- Articulate the scope of his beliefs;
- Show that his beliefs are religious;
- Prove that his beliefs are sincerely held; and
- Establish that the exercise of his sincerely held religious beliefs is substantially burdened.

If defendant can prove the above, the government may still require he provide a blood sample if it can show that:

- Requiring that he provide a blood sample furthers a compelling governmental interest;
- It is the least restrictive means available.

(United States v. Zimmerman (9th Cir. 2007) 514 F.3rd 851.)

The Ninth Circuit has held that a warrantless, suspicionless forced mouth swap of a pre-trial detainee in Nevada, for inclusion in the state's cold case data bank, when there is no qualifying conviction, is a Fourth Amendment violation. (Friedman v. Boucher (9th Cir. 2009) 580 F.3rd 847.)

The California Supreme Court, in contrast, has held that mistakenly collecting blood samples for inclusion into California's DNA data base (See Pen. Code § 296), when the defendant did not actually have a qualifying prior conviction, is not a Fourth Amendment violation, but even if it were, it does not require the suppression of the mistakenly collected blood samples, nor is it grounds to suppress the resulting match of the defendant's DNA with that left at a crime scene. (People v. Robinson (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1104, 1116-1129.)

Pen. Code § 296(e): Duty of a prosecutor to notify the court of a defendant's duty to provide the required samples.

Pen. Code § 296(f): Duty of a court to inquire and verify that the required samples have been collected. Abstract of judgment to show that a defendant was ordered to provide such samples, and advisal to a defendant that he or she will be included in the DNA data bank. Failure to so notify a defendant is not grounds to invalidate an arrest, plea conviction or disposition, or affect the defendant's duty to provide such samples.

Pen. Code § 296.1(a): The specimens, samples, and print impressions shall be collected from persons as described in P.C. § 296(a) for "present and past qualifying offenses of record" as follows:

(1) Collection from any adult following arrest for a felony offense as described in P.C. § 296(a)(2)(A), (B) and (C):

(A): Immediately following arrest, or during the booking or intake or reception center process, or as soon as administratively practicable after arrest, but, in any case, prior to release on bail or pending trial or any physical release from confinement or custody; or

(B): Upon mandatory order of the court to report within five calendar days to a county jail facility or to a city, state, local, private, or other designated facility.

> The United States Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of taking a mouth swab for DNA testing of all arrestees for "serious offenses," as defined by Maryland statutes, likening the procedure to the taking of fingerprints and photos as part of the booking procedure. (Maryland v. King (2013) 569 U. S. 435 [133 S.Ct. 1958; 186 L.Ed.2nd 1]; see also People v. Marquez (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 402, 409-410; noting, without deciding that a "serious offense" may be definable by whether the arrested-for offense was "jailable," or "non-jailable," citing People v. Thompson (2006) 38 Cal.4th 811, 824.).)
>
> The constitutionality of California's statutory requirement that all persons arrested for, or charged with, any felony, whether serious or not, submit to a mouth swab DNA test, was upheld in Haskell v. Harris (9th Cir. 2014) 745 F.3rd 1269.)
>
> The constitutionality of P.C. § 296(a)(2)(C), allowing the collection of DNA from all post-arrest, pre-conviction felony suspects, even before a judicial determination of probable cause, was upheld in People v. Buza (2018) 4 Cal.5th 658; finding it violated neither the U.S. nor the California Constitutions, at least for a serious offense such as the offense in issue here; arson.
>
> > The Buza Court also approved the immediate testing of the DNA sample, without needing to await a judicial determination of probable cause. (Id., at pp. 676-679.)
>
> The 2006 collection of defendant's DNA sample was unlawful under the Fourth Amendment because the prosecution failed to prove that defendant was validly arrested or that his DNA was collected as part of a routine booking procedure. However, the trial court properly admitted the DNA evidence lawfully collected from defendant in 2008 because it was sufficiently attenuated from the unlawful 2006 collection of defendant's DNA sample, given that there was a substantial time break, as well as intervening circumstances and a lack of evidence concerning flagrant official misconduct. (People v. Marquez (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 402, 408-414.)

(2) Collection from persons (adult or juvenile) already confined or in custody after conviction or adjudication:

(A) Immediately upon intake, or during the prison reception center process, or as soon as administratively practicable at the appropriate custodial or receiving institution or program, if:

(i) The person has a record of any past or present conviction or adjudication as a ward of the court in California of a qualifying offense described in P.C. § 296(a), or has a record of any past or present conviction or adjudication in any other court, including any state, federal, or military court, of any offense that, if committed or attempted in this state, would have been punishable as an offense as described in P.C. § 296(a); and

(ii) The person's specimens, etc., are not in the possession of the Department of Justice DNA Laboratory, or have not been recorded as part of DOJ's DNA data bank program.

(B) Murder or voluntary manslaughter or any attempt to commit murder or voluntary manslaughter.

(C) Commencing on January 1 of the fifth year following enactment of the act that added this subparagraph, as amended, any adult person arrested or charged with any felony offense.

The constitutionality of Pen. Code § 296(a)(2)(C), allowing the collection of DNA from all post-arrest, pre-conviction felony suspects, even before a judicial determination of probable cause, was upheld in People v. Buza (2018) 4 Cal.5th 658; finding it violated neither the U.S. nor the California Constitutions, at least for a serious offense such as the offense in issue here; arson. Defendant's misdemeanor conviction for refusal to provide a DNA swab upon his arrest was also upheld.

The Buza Court also approved the immediate testing of the DNA sample, without needing to await a judicial determination of probable cause. (Id., at pp. 676-679.)

(3) Collection from persons on probation, parole, or other release:

(A) Any person, including a juvenile, who has a record of any past or present conviction or adjudication for any offense listed in Pen. Code § 296(a), who is on probation, parole, postrelease community supervision (Pen. Code §§ 3450 et seq.), or mandatory supervision pursuant to P.C. § 1170(h)(5) for any felony or misdemeanor whether or not listed under Pen. Code § 296(a), shall provide the required samples if:

(i) The person has a record of any past or present conviction or adjudication as a ward of the court in California of a qualifying offense described in Pen. Code § 296(a), or has a record of any past or present conviction or adjudication in any other court, including any state, federal, or military court, of any offense that, if committed or attempted in this state, would have been punishable as an offense as described in Pen. Code § 296(a); and

(ii) The person's specimens, etc., are not in the possession of the Department of Justice DNA Laboratory, or have not been recorded as part of DOJ's DNA data bank program.

(B) The person shall have the required specimens, etc., collected within five calendar days of being notified by the court, or a law enforcement agency or other agency authorized by the Department of Justice. The specimens, etc., shall be collected in accordance with Pen. Code § 295(i) at a county jail facility or a city, state, local, private, or other facility designated for this collection.

(4) Collection from parole violators and others returned to custody:

(A) If a person, including a juvenile, who has been released on parole, furlough, or other release for any offense or crime, whether or not set forth in Pen. Code § 296(a), is returned to a state correctional or other institution for a violation of a condition of his or her parole, furlough, or other release, or for any other reason, that person shall provide the required samples at a state correctional or other receiving institution, if:

(i) The person has a record of any past or present conviction or adjudication as a ward of the court in California of a qualifying offense described in Pen. Code § 296(a), or has a record of any past or present conviction or adjudication in any other court, including any state, federal, or military court, of any offense that, if committed or attempted in this state, would have been punishable as an offense as described in Pen. Code § 296(a); and

(ii) The person's specimens, etc., are not in the possession of the Department of Justice DNA Laboratory, or have not been recorded as part of DOJ's DNA data bank program.

(5) Collection from persons accepted into California from other jurisdictions:

(A) When an offender from another state is accepted into this state under the various listed agreements and compacts, whether or not the offender is in custody, the acceptance is conditional on the offender providing the required specimens if the offender has a record of any past or present conviction or adjudication in California of a qualifying offense as listed in Pen. Code § 296(a), or has a record of any past or present conviction or adjudication in any other court, including any state, federal, or military court, of any offense that, if committed or attempted in this state, would have been punishable as an offense as described in Pen. Code § 296(a).

(B) If the person is not in custody, the required specimens, etc., must be provided within five calendar days after the person reports to the supervising agent or within five calendar days of notice to the person, whichever occurs first. The person shall report to a county jail facility in the country where he or she resides or temporarily is located to have the specimens collected, in accordance with Pen. Code § 295(i).

(C) If the person is in custody, the required specimens, etc., shall be collected as soon as practicable after receipt in the facility.

(6) Collection from persons in federal custody:

(A) Subject to the approval of the FBI, persons confined or incarcerated in a federal prison or federal institution who have a record of any past or present conviction or juvenile adjudication for an offense listed in Pen. Code § 296(a), or a similar crime under the laws of the United States or any other state that would constitute an offense described in Pen. Code § 296(a), are subject to the requirements of these sections if any of the following apply:

(i) The person committed the qualifying offense in California;

(ii) The person was a resident of California at the time of the qualifying offense;

(iii) The person has any record of a California conviction for an offense described in Pen. Code § 296(a) regardless of when it was committed; or

(iv) The person will be released in California.

(B) The Department of Justice DNA Laboratory shall forward portions of the required specimens, etc., to the U.S. Department of Justice, upon request. Samples will be collected in accordance with Pen. Code § 295(i).

Defendant was convicted of felony marijuana possession (H&S § 11357(a)) in 2014 and at the time of his arrest provided his DNA by buccal swab. In 2016, the charge was reduced to a misdemeanor pursuant to the plea agreement and Pen. Code § 1170.18, and in 2017 it was reduced to an infraction under Proposition 64/H&S § 11361.8. Defendant thereafter moved to have his DNA expunged from the state's database, the motion was denied, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal affirmed: "Because DNA collection occurs at the time of the felony arrest ([Pen. Code §] 296.1) and is administrative [], the redesignation to an infraction for all purposes under Proposition 64 does not relate back to the initial charge for purposes of DNA expungement" and "[w]hile [defendant's] felony conviction was redesignated an infraction for all purposes, the retroactive impact is limited to ameliorate the punitive effects of the conviction. . . . DNA collection and retention is not punitive. . . . Thus, the redesignation has no effect on the DNA retention." (People v. Laird (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 458, 463-473.)

Pen. Code § 296.1(b): The above provisions are retroactive.

Pen. Code § 296.2: Procedures for obtaining replacement samples when the originals are not usable.

Pen. Code § 297: Analysis of crime scene samples.

Pen. Code § 298: Procedures for collection of samples:

(a)

(1) The Director of Corrections, or the Chief Administrative Officer of the detention facility, jail or other facility at which the specimens, etc., were collected shall cause them to be forwarded promptly to the Department of Justice. The specimens, etc., shall be collected by a person using a Department of Justice approved collection kit and in accordance with the requirements and procedures set forth below.

(2) A blood specimen or buccal swab sample taken from a person arrested for the commission of a felony as specified in Pen. Code § 296(a)(2) that has not been forwarded to the Department of Justice within six months following the arrest of that person because the agency that took the blood specimen or buccal swab sample has not received notice to forward the DNA specimen or sample to the Department of Justice for inclusion in the state's DNA and Forensic Identification Database and Databank Program pursuant to para (1) following a determination of probable cause, shall be destroyed by the agency that collected the blood specimen or buccal swab sample.

(b)

(1) Department of Justice's responsibility for providing kits.

(2) The withdrawal of blood shall be performed in a medically approved manner by health care providers trained and certified to draw blood.

(3) Buccal swab samples may be procured by law enforcement or correctional personnel or other individuals trained to assist in buccal swab collection.

(4) Thumb and palms prints shall be taken on forms prescribed by the Department of Justice, with palm print forms to be forwarded to, and maintained by, the Bureau of Criminal Identification and Information, Department of Justice. Thumbprints to be placed on the sample and specimen containers and forms as directed by the Department of Justice, and forwarded to, and maintained by, the DNA Laboratory.

(5) The collecting agencies responsibility to confirm that the person from whom the specimens, etc., are collected, qualifies.

(6) The DNA Laboratory is responsible for establishing procedures for entering data bank and database information.

(c) Protection from civil or criminal liability for errors in the above. Mistakes also not grounds for invalidating an arrest, plea, conviction, or disposition.

Pen. Code § 298.1(a): It is a misdemeanor for any person to refuse "to give any or all of the following, blood specimens, saliva samples, or thumb or palm print impressions as required by this chapter, once he or she has received written notice from the Department of Justice, the Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation, any law enforcement personnel, or officer of the court that he or she is required to provide specimens, samples, and print impressions pursuant to this chapter . . . ." (Italics added)

Sanctions for failure to provide the required samples upon written notification: Misdemeanor; 1 year and $500 fine. For persons already confined in state prison; "by sanctions for misdemeanors according to a schedule determined by the Department of Corrections."

The constitutionality of Pen. Code § 296(a)(2)(C), allowing the collection of DNA from all post-arrest, pre-conviction felony suspects, even before a judicial determination of probable cause, was upheld in People v. Buza (2018) 4 Cal.5th 658; finding it violated neither the U.S. nor the California Constitutions, at least for a serious offense such as the offense in issue here; arson. Defendant's misdemeanor conviction for refusal to provide a DNA swab upon his arrest was also upheld.

The Buza Court also approved the immediate testing of the DNA sample, without needing to await a judicial determination of probable cause. (Id., at pp. 676-679.)

Pen. Code § 298.1(b)(1): Authorized law enforcement, custodial, or corrections personnel, including peace officers as defined in Pen. Code §§ 830, 830.1, 830.2(d), 830.5, and 830.55, may employ reasonable force to collect blood specimens, saliva samples, or thumb or palm print impressions from individuals who, after a written or oral request, refuse to provide those specimens, samples, or thumb or palm print impressions.

Pen. Code § 298.1(b)(2): The withdrawal of blood shall be performed in a medically approved manner in accordance with the requirements of Pen. Code § 298(b)(2) (above).

Pen. Code § 298.1(c)(1)(A), (2)(A): "Use of Reasonable Force" is defined as force that an objective, trained and competent correctional employee, faced with similar facts and circumstances, would consider necessary and reasonable to gain compliance.

Pen. Code § 298.1(c)(1)(B), (2)(B): The use of force must be preceded by written authorization by the supervising officer on duty, which must include the details of the request and the subject's refusal.

Pen. Code § 298.1(c)(1)(C), (2)(C): The use of force must be preceded by efforts to secure voluntary compliance.

Pen. Code 298.1(c)(1)(D), (2)(D): If the use of force includes a jail "cell extraction," the extraction shall be videotaped.

Pen. Code § 299: Expungement of Data.

(a) A person whose DNA profile has been included in the data bank shall have his or her DNA specimen and sample destroyed and searchable database profile expunged from the data bank if the person has no past or present offense or pending charge which qualifies that person for inclusion within the state's DNA and Forensic Identification Database and Data Bank Program and there otherwise is no legal basis for retaining the specimen or sample or searchable profile.

(b) A person who has no past or present qualifying offense, and for whom there otherwise is no legal basis for retaining the specimen or sample or searchable profile, may make a written request to have his or her specimen and sample destroyed and searchable database profile expunged from the data bank program if:

> (1) Following arrest, no accusatory pleading has been filed within the applicable period allowed by law charging the person with a qualifying offense or if the charges have been dismissed prior to adjudication by a trier of fact;
>
> (2) The charges which served as the basis for including the DNA profile in the state's DNA and Forensic Identification Database and Databank Program have been dismissed prior to adjudication by a trier of fact, in which case the court shall forward an order to the Department of Justice upon disposition of the case, indicating that the charges have been dismissed;
>
> (3) The underlying conviction or disposition serving as the basis for including the DNA profile has been reversed and the case dismissed;
>
> (4) The person has been found factually innocent of the underlying offense pursuant to Pen. Code § 851.8 or W&I § 781.5; or
>
> (5) The defendant has been found not guilty or the defendant has been acquitted of the underlying offense.

(c) Except as provided in this section, the Department of Justice shall destroy a specimen and sample and expunge the searchable DNA database profile pertaining to the person who has no present or past qualifying offense of record upon receipt of the following:

> (1) A certified copy of the court order reversing and dismissing the conviction or case, or a letter from the district attorney certifying that no accusatory pleading has been filed or the charges which served as the basis for collecting a DNA specimen and sample have been dismissed prior to adjudication by a trier of fact, the defendant has been found factually innocent, the defendant has been found not guilty, the defendant has been acquitted of the underlying offense, or the underlying conviction has been reversed and the case dismissed.

(2) A court order verifying that no retrial or appeal of the case is pending.

(d) Pursuant to this section, the Department of Justice shall destroy any specimen or sample collected from the person and any searchable DNA database profile pertaining to the person, unless the department determines that the person is subject to the provisions of this chapter because of a past qualifying offense of record or is or has otherwise become obligated to submit a blood specimen or buccal swab sample as a result of a separate arrest, conviction, juvenile adjudication, or finding of guilty or not guilty by reason of insanity for an offense described in Pen. Code § 296(a), or as a condition of a plea.

The Department of Justice is not required to destroy analytical data or other items obtained from a blood specimen or saliva, or buccal swab sample, if evidence relating to another person subject to the provisions of this chapter would thereby be destroyed or otherwise compromised.

Any identification, warrant, probable cause to arrest, or arrest based upon a databank or database match is not invalidated due to a failure to expunge or a delay in expunging records.

(e) Notwithstanding any other law, the Department of Justice DNA Laboratory is not required to expunge DNA profile or forensic identification information or destroy or return specimens, samples, or print impressions taken pursuant to this section if the duty to register under Pen. Code §§ 290 or 457.1.

(f) Notwithstanding any other law, including Pen. Code §§ 17, 1170.18, 1203.4, and 1203.4a, a judge is not authorized to relieve a person of the separate administrative duty to provide specimens, samples, or print impressions required by this chapter if a person has been found guilty or was adjudicated a ward of the court by a trier of fact of a qualifying offense as defined in Pen. Code § 296(a), or was found not guilty by reason of insanity or pleads no contest to a qualifying offense as defined in Pen. Code § 296(a).

(g) This section shall only become operative if the California Supreme Court rules to uphold the California Court of Appeal decision in People v. Buza (2014) 231 Cal.App.4th 1446 in regard to the provisions of Pen. Code § 299, as amended by Section 9 of the DNA Fingerprint, Unsolved Crime and Innocence Protection Act, Proposition 69, approved by the voters at the November 2, 2004, statewide general election, in which case this section shall become operative immediately upon that ruling becoming final.

Note: The constitutionality of Pen. Code § 296(a)(2)(C), allowing the collection of DNA from all post-arrest, pre-conviction felony suspects, even before a judicial determination of probable cause, was in fact upheld in People v. Buza (2018) 4 Cal.5th 658; finding it violated neither the U.S. nor the California Constitutions, at least for a serious offense such as the offense in issue here; arson.

> The Buza Court also approved the immediate testing of the DNA sample, without needing to await a judicial determination of probable cause. (Id., at pp. 676-679.)

In two cases consolidated for purposes of an appeal (In re C.B. (2016) 2 Cal.App.5th 1112, and In re C.H. (2016) 2 Cal.App.5th 1139.), defendants were juveniles who were declared wards of the court based on conduct that was felonious when committed. Juveniles declared wards based on felony conduct must submit DNA samples, but need not do so for most misdemeanor offenses. In 2014, the passage of Proposition 47 reclassified various drug and property offenses from felonies to misdemeanors. Defendants, with their offenses reduced to misdemeanors, argued they were entitled to have their DNA samples and profiles removed from the State's databank. The California Supreme Court disagreed: "While Proposition 47 spares some future offenders a duty to submit samples, it does not alter the past reality that [the juveniles] were adjudicated to have committed felonies and were obligated at the time to provide samples based on those adjudications" and "a showing of changed circumstances eliminating a duty to submit a sample is an insufficient basis for expungement of a sample already submitted." (In re C.B. (2018) 6 Cal.5th 118, 123-135.)

Reduction of defendant's felony conviction to a misdemeanor, after having successfully completed certain terms and conditions of probation for one year, does not entitle defendant to the expungement of the DNA data or return or destruction of the DNA sample. (Coffey v. Superior Court (2005) 129 Cal.App.4th 809.)

Also, reduction of a defendant's felony conviction to a misdemeanor under the provisions of Pen. Code § 1170.18 (Proposition 47) does not allow for the expungement of the defendant's previously obtained DNA sample, as specified in the amended Pen. Code § 290(f). (People v. Harris (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 47, 54-60; also rejecting defendant's arguments that the collection and retention of a DNA buccal swap sample violates his constitutional and equal protection and privacy rights; at pp. 60-66.)

The 2006 collection of defendant's DNA sample was unlawful under the Fourth Amendment because the prosecution failed to prove that defendant was validly arrested or that his DNA was collected as part of a routine booking procedure. However, the trial court properly admitted the DNA evidence lawfully collected from defendant in 2008 because it was sufficiently attenuated from the unlawful 2006 collection of defendant's DNA sample, given that there was a substantial time break, as well as intervening circumstances and a lack of evidence concerning flagrant official misconduct. (People v. Marquez (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 402, 408-414.)

Pen. Code § 299.5: Confidentiality requirements and permitted disclosures:

Information obtained from an arrestee's DNA is confidential and may not be disclosed to the public. DNA samples and the biological material from which they are obtained may not be used "as a source of genetic material for testing, research, or experiments, by any person, agency, or entity seeking to find a causal link between genetics and behavior or health." (Id., § 295.2.) Any person who knowingly uses a DNA sample or profile for any purpose other than "criminal identification or exclusion purposes" or "the identification of missing persons," or who "knowingly discloses DNA or other forensic identification information … to an unauthorized individual or agency" for any unauthorized reason is subject to criminal prosecution and may be imprisoned for up to three years and fined up to $10,000. (Id., Pen. Code § 299.5(i)(1).) The Department of Justice is also subject to civil damages for knowing misuse of a sample or profile by any of its employees. (Id., Pen. Code § 299.5(i)(2)(A).) (People v. Buza (2018) 4 Cal.5th 658, 667.)

Pen. Code 299.6: Dissemination of information to law enforcement agencies:

(a) Sharing or dissemination of population database or data bank information, DNA profile or forensic identification database or data bank information, analytical data and results generated for forensic identification database and data bank purposes, or protocol and forensic DNA analysis methods and quality assurance or quality control procedures, may be made with:

(1) Federal, state or local law enforcement agencies.

(2) Crime laboratories, public or private, that serve federal, state and local law enforcement agencies, that have been approved by the Department of Justice.

(3) The attorney general's office of any state.

(4) Any state or federally authorized auditing agent or board that inspects or reviews the work of the Department of Justice DNA Laboratory for the purpose of ensuring that the laboratory meets described standards.

(5) Any third party DOJ deems necessary to assist the department's crime laboratory with statistical analyses of population databases, or the analyses of forensic protocol, research methods, or quality control procedures, or to assist in the recovery or identification of human remains for humanitarian purposes, including identification of missing persons.

(b) The population databases and data banks of the DNA Laboratory may be made available to and searched by the FBI and any other agency participating in the FBI's CODIS System or any other national or international law enforcement database or data bank system.

(c) The Department of Justice may provide portions of biological samples (as described) to local public law enforcement DNA laboratories for identification purposes provided that the privacy provisions are followed, and if each of the following conditions are met:

(1) The procedures used for handling of specimens and samples and the disclosure of results are as established by DOJ pursuant to Pen. Code §§ 297, 298 and 299.5.

(2) The methodologies and procedures used for DNA or forensic identification analysis are compatible with those established by DOJ pursuant to Pen. Code § 299.5(i), or otherwise are determined by DOJ to be valid and appropriate for identification purposes.

(3) Only tests of value to law enforcement for identification purposes are performed and a copy of the results of the analysis are sent to DOJ.

(4) All provisions concerning privacy and security are followed.

Pen. Code § 299.7: Disposal of samples.

Pen. Code §§ 300 et seq.: Construction and severability.

Additional Case Law:

The provisions of these statutes (formerly, Pen. Code § 290.2), requiring the providing of the listed samples, are constitutional. (People v. King (2000) 82 Cal.App.4th 1363.)

The new provisions replacing Pen. Code § 290.2 (Pen. Code §§ 295 et seq.) have similarly been held to be constitutional. (Alfaro v. Terhune (2002) 98 Cal.App.4th 492.)

The taking of blood samples from prison inmates, parolees and probationers for the purpose of completing a federal DNA database, is lawful. (United States v. Kincade (9th Cir. 2004) 379 F.3rd 813.)

See also United States v. Lujan (9th Cir. 2007) 504 F.3rd 1003; upholding the federal "DNA Analysis Backlog Elimination Act of 2000," 42 U.S.C. §§ 14135-14135e, when challenged on the basis that the Act violates the Fourth Amendment, the Ex Post Facto Clause, that it is a "Bill of Attainder, and that it contravenes constitutional "separation of powers" restrictions, when challenged by a federal felon who, when the requirement that she provide a DNA sample was imposed, was on supervised release.

Similarly, further amendment to this legislation by passage of the "Justice for All Act of 2004," expanding the DNA collection requirements to all federal felonies, crimes of violence, and all sexual abuse crimes, where the defendant is on probation, parole or supervised release, is constitutional. (United States v. Kriesel (9th Cir. 2007) 508 F.3rd 941.)

Reduction of defendant's felony conviction to a misdemeanor, after having successfully completed certain terms and conditions of probation for one year, does not entitle defendant to the expungement of the DNA data or return or destruction of the DNA sample. (Coffey v. Superior Court (2005) 129 Cal.App.4th 809.)

The amendments to Pen. Code § 296(a)(1), providing for the mandatory collection of DNA samples from anyone convicted of a felony offense, do not violate a defendant's Fourth (Search and Seizure) or Fourteenth (Equal Protection and Due Process) rights, and is not an Ex Post Facto violation despite being enacted after the date of defendant's offense. (People v. Travis (2006) 139 Cal.App.4th 1271; a felony DUI case.)

The "Kelly/Frye" (People v. Kelly (1976) 17 Cal.3rd 24; Frye v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1923) 293 F. 1013.) standard does not apply to a DNA data base search used to identify a possible suspect. Requiring inmates to supply a DNA sample, even though not a criminal suspect at the time of the taking of the sample, is a constitutional "search" pursuant to Pen. Code § 295. (People v. Johnson (2006) 139 Cal.App.4th 1135.)

All registered sex offenders, even when convicted prior to the DNA statutes were passed, are required to provide a DNA sample. The statutes added by Proposition 69, adding more offenses to the list of people who must provide a DNA sample, are retroactive. (Good v. Superior Court* [People] (2008) 158 Cal.App.4th 1494.)

California's provisions for extracting DNA samples from convicted felons, even over a prisoner's objection and through the use of reasonable force, does not violate either the Fourth Amendment search or seizure rules, the Eighth Amendment ("reckless and deliberate indifference"), nor Fourteenth Amendment due process. (Hamilton v. Brown (9th Cir. 2010) 630 F.3rd 889.)

The United States Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of taking a mouth swab for DNA testing of all arrestees for "serious offenses," as defined by Maryland statutes, likening the procedure to the taking of fingerprints and photos as part of the booking procedure. (Maryland v. King (2013) 569 U. S. 435, [133 S.Ct. 1958; 186 L.Ed.2nd 1].)

"(B)uccal swabs are 'brief and . . . minimal' physical intrusions '"'involv[ing] virtually no risk, trauma, or pain.'"'" (Bill v. Brewer (9th Cir. 2015) 799 F.3rd 1295, 1302, quoting Maryland v. King, supra, at p. 446.)

The constitutionality of California's statutory requirement that all persons arrested for, or charged with, any felony, whether serious or not, submit to a mouth swab DNA test, was upheld in Haskell v. Harris (9th Cir. 2014) 745 F.3rd 1269.)

Defendant's motion for the return of blood samples after completion of supervised release, collected upon his imprisonment, was properly denied because the Government's continued retention of the blood sample was reasonable under the circumstances in that the Government used blood samples to ensure the accuracy of DNA identification and CODIS (a nationwide database of genetic identifying information). The match confirmation process is a method of long-term quality control. The retention of the blood samples furthered the Government's goals by ensuring the accuracy of the CODIS profile match. (United States v. Kriesel (9th Cir. 2013) 720 F.3rd 1137, 1144-1147.)

> Note: "The CODIS database stores DNA profiles of convicted federal felons on supervised release and others who have had brushes with the law. See DNA Analysis Backlog Elimination Act of 2000 (DNA Act), Pub. L. No. 106-546, § 3, 114 Stat. 2746, 2728-30; see also 28 C.R.R. § 28.2. These DNA profiles are commonly generated from blood samples." (Id., at p. 1140.) CODIS is a "centrally-managed database linking DNA profiles culled from federal, state, and territorial DNA collection programs, as well as profiles drawn from crime-scene evidence, unidentified remains, and genetic samples voluntarily provided by relatives of missing persons." (Bill v. Brewer (9th Cir. 2015) 799 F.3rd 1295, 1 298, fn. 1.)

In two cases consolidated for purposes of an appeal (In re C.B. (2016) 2 Cal.App.5th 1112, and In re C.H. (2016) 2 Cal.App.5th 1139.), defendants were juveniles who were declared wards of the court based on conduct that was felonious when committed. Juveniles declared wards based on felony conduct must submit DNA samples, but need not do so for most misdemeanor offenses. In 2014, the passage of Proposition 47 reclassified various drug and property offenses from felonies to misdemeanors. Defendants, with their offenses reduced to misdemeanors, argued they were entitled to have their DNA samples and profiles removed from the State's databank. The California Supreme Court disagreed: "While Proposition 47 spares some future offenders a duty to submit samples, it does not alter the past reality that [the juveniles] were adjudicated to have committed felonies and were obligated at the time to provide samples based on those adjudications" and "a showing of changed circumstances eliminating a duty to submit a sample is an insufficient basis for expungement of a sample already submitted." (In re C.B. (2018) 6 Cal.5th 118, 123-135.)

The 2006 collection of defendant's DNA sample was unlawful under the Fourth Amendment because the prosecution failed to prove that defendant was validly arrested or that his DNA was collected as part of a routine booking procedure. However, the trial court properly admitted the DNA evidence lawfully collected from defendant in 2008 because it was sufficiently attenuated from the unlawful 2006 collection of defendant's DNA sample, given that there was a substantial time break, as well as intervening circumstances and a lack of evidence concerning flagrant official misconduct. (People v. Marquez (2019) 31 Cal.App.5th 402, 408-414; noting, without deciding that a "serious offense" may be definable by whether the arrested-for offense was "jailable," or "non-jailable," citing People v. Thompson (2006) 38 Cal.4th 811, 824.)

The trial court was held not to have erred in relying on expert testimony presented at a Kelly (i.e., "Kelly/Frye:" People v. Kelly (1976) 17 Cal.3rd 24; Frye v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1923) 293 F. 1013.) hearing in determining that a method of DNA analysis, which had been used on blood from a murder scene, had gained general acceptance. One expert was not shown to be biased, while another expert who had a vested professional interest in the method's acceptance did not fail to set forth the scientific community's views fairly and impartially while including any opposing scientific views,. Further, the prosecution supported the latter expert's testimony with literature and legal decisions. The evidence was also held not to be unduly prejudicial under Evid. Code § 352 because it was highly probative on the issue of identity and would not have caused the jury to decide the case on an improper basis. Lastly, due process was not violated because the jury was instructed with CALCRIM No. 332; i.e., that it was not required to accept expert testimony. (People v. Davis (2022) 75 Cal.App.5th 694.)

The trial court sustained, without leave to amend, a demurrer to a complaint alleging that a DNA collection program (Pen. Code §§ 295, 295.1, 296, 296.1), as applied by the county district attorney, violated alleged misdemeanants' rights to privacy (Cal. Const., art. I, § 1), counsel, and due process. The Court of Appeal reversed and remanded. Because taxpayer standing (Code Civ. Proc. § 526a(a)) is appropriate to challenge a government program as unlawfully implemented, taxpaying county residents who had not participated in the DNA collection program could bring suit challenging it. The taxpayers adequately pleaded that waivers of privacy and counsel rights were not knowing or voluntary because they alleged prosecutors improperly obtained waivers from uncounseled participants without disclosing how DNA was maintained and used. A due process claim sufficiently alleged deprivation of a protected interest because the privacy and counsel claims were viable.

(Thompson v. Spitzer (2023) 90 Cal.App.5th 436; as modified at 2023 Cal.App.LEXIS 350 (May 5, 2023).)

DNA Fingerprint, Unsolved Crime and Innocence Protection Act; Proposition 69*:

Proposition 69 (approved 2004), known as the DNA Fingerprint, Unsolved Crime and Innocence Protection Act, expanded the requirements for the collection of DNA identification information for law enforcement purposes. When the California electorate voted to pass the DNA Act, it substantially expanded the scope of DNA sampling to include individuals who are arrested for any felony offense, as well as those who have been convicted of such an offense. Pen. Code § 296(a). Similarly, the DNA Act amended California law to mandate DNA collection from any person who commits a misdemeanor offense requiring registry as a sex offender or arsonist. Pen. Code § 296(a)(3). The DNA Act's requirement to collect DNA from persons arrested for serious crimes has been generally found constitutional by the California Supreme Court. DNA samples collected under California law are stored in a statewide databank maintained by the California Department of Justice. Pen. Code §§ 295(g), (h), 295.1(c), (d). The Department of Justice is authorized to forward its DNA samples to the nationwide databank operated by the United States Department of Justice under certain conditions. Pen. Code § 296.1(a)(6)(B).

Because taxpayer standing under Code Civ. Proc § 526a(a), was appropriate to challenge a government program as unlawfully implemented, taxpaying county residents who had not participated in a county DNA collection program established under the authority of Pen. Code §§ 295, 295.1, 296, 296.1, could bring suit alleging that the program, as applied by the county district attorney, violated alleged misdemeanants' rights to privacy under Cal. Const., art. I, § 1, counsel, and due process. The taxpayers adequately pleaded that waivers of privacy and counsel rights were not knowing or voluntary because they alleged prosecutors improperly obtained waivers from uncounseled participants without disclosing how DNA was maintained and used. A due process claim sufficiently alleged deprivation of a protected interest because the privacy and counsel claims were viable. (Thompson v. Spitzer (2023) 90 Cal.App.5th 436.)

Taking DNA Samples from Minors*:

Wel. & Inst. Code § 625.4*:

(a) A law enforcement officer, employee of a law enforcement agency, or any agent thereof, shall not request that a voluntary DNA reference sample be collected directly from the person of a minor unless all of the following conditions are met:

(1) The minor consents in writing, after being verbally informed of the purpose and manner of the collection, the right to refuse consent, the right to sample expungement, and the right to consult with an attorney, parent, or legal guardian prior to providing consent.

(2) A specific parent or legal guardian identified by the minor, or an attorney representing the minor, is contacted, is provided the information specified in para. (1), is allowed to privately consult by telephone or in person with the minor, and, after that consultation, concurs with the minor's decision to consent.

(3) Local law enforcement provides the minor with a form for requesting expungement of the voluntary DNA buccal swab sample, if a sample is consented to and collected pursuant to this section.

(b) Nothing in subd. (a) is intended to create a right to the appointment of counsel.

(c) The detention of a minor that occurs for the purpose of requesting a voluntary DNA reference sample directly from the person of that minor pursuant to this section shall not be unreasonably extended solely for the purpose of contacting a parent, legal guardian, or attorney pursuant to subd. (a)(2), if a parent, legal guardian, or attorney cannot be reached after reasonable attempts have been made.

(d) The court shall, in adjudicating the admissibility of a voluntary DNA reference sample taken directly from a minor pursuant to this section, consider the effect of any failure to comply with this section.

(e) The law enforcement agency obtaining a voluntary DNA reference sample directly from the person of a minor pursuant to this section shall determine within two years whether the person remains a suspect in a criminal investigation. If, within two years, the voluntary DNA reference sample that is collected pursuant to this section is not found to implicate the minor as a suspect in a criminal offense, the local law enforcement agency shall promptly expunge the sample and the DNA profile information from that voluntary DNA reference sample from the databases or data banks into which they have been entered.

(f) If the minor requests expungement of a voluntary DNA reference sample collected directly from the person of a minor pursuant to this section, the local law enforcement agency shall make reasonable efforts to promptly expunge the sample and the DNA profile information from that voluntary DNA reference sample from all DNA databases or data banks unless the voluntary DNA reference sample has implicated the minor as a suspect in a criminal investigation. If expungement occurs, law enforcement shall make reasonable efforts to notify the minor when the minor's DNA sample and DNA profile information have been expunged.

(g) A voluntary DNA reference sample taken directly from the person of a minor pursuant to this section and the DNA profile information from that voluntary DNA reference sample shall not be searched, analyzed, or compared to DNA samples or profiles in the investigation of crimes other than the investigation or investigations for which it was taken, unless that additional use is permitted by a court order.

(h) Any local law enforcement agency that is found by clear and convincing evidence to maintain a pattern and practice of collecting voluntary DNA reference samples directly from the person of a minor in violation of this section after January 1, 2019, shall be liable to each minor whose sample was inappropriately collected in the amount of five thousand dollars ($5,000) for each violation, plus attorney's fees and costs.

(i) The scope of this section is limited to the collection of voluntary DNA reference samples directly from the person of minors, and, as such, subds. (a) to (h), inclusive have no application to the collection and use of DNA under other circumstances, including, but not limited to, any of the following:

> (1) The sample collection or use is expressly authorized pursuant to the state's DNA Act as set forth in the DNA and Forensic Identification Database and Data Bank Act of 1998, as amended, P.C. §§ 295 et seq. (Part 1, Title 9, Chapter 6).
>
> (2) A DNA reference sample collection and analysis that occurs pursuant to a valid search warrant or court order or exigent circumstances.
>
> (3) A DNA reference sample collection that occurs in the investigation or identification of a missing or abducted minor.
>
> (4) Any DNA reference sample collected from a juvenile victim or suspected perpetrator of a sexual assault or other crime as authorized by law.
>
> (5) Any DNA sample that is collected as evidence in a criminal investigation, such as evidence from a crime scene or an abandoned sample.

DNA Cases from Other Jurisdictions*:

Petitioner, convicted by a Texas jury f murder and sentenced to death, had standing to sue for post-conviction DNA testing of other physical pieces of evidence because he sufficiently alleged an injury in fact, which was denial of access to the requested evidence. A federal court's conclusion that Texas's post-conviction DNA testing procedures violated due process would have amounted to a significant increase in the likelihood that petitioner would obtain relief that directly redressed the injury suffered. When a prisoner pursued state post-conviction DNA testing through the state-provided litigation process, and that petition is denied, the statute of limitations for a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 procedural due process claim began to run when the state litigation ended. Petitioner's § 1983 claim, which raised a procedural due process challenge to Texas's post-conviction DNA testing law, was timely because the statute of limitations began to run when the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals denied petitioner's motion for rehearing. (Reed v. Goertz (Apr. 19, 2023) __U.S.__ [143 S.Ct. 955; 215 L.Ed.2nd 218]

Chapter 12*:

Searches of Vehicles*:

General Rule: Search warrants are not needed to lawfully seize and search a motor vehicle, at least in most instances, the applicable exceptions overwhelming the general Fourth Amendment search warrant requirement.

> Although the constitutional protections against unreasonable searches and seizures extend to automobiles, it is recognized that vehicles enjoy a lesser expectation of privacy than do other things or places, "often permit(ing) officers to dispense with obtaining a warrant before conducting a lawful search." (Byrd v. United States (2018) 584 U.S. 395, 403 [138 S.Ct. 1518; 1526; 200 L.Ed.2nd 805]; citing California v. Acevedo (1991) 500 U.S. 565, 579 [111 S.Ct. 1982; 114 L.Ed. 2nd 619].)
>
> "A warrantless search is unlawful under the Fourth Amendment 'unless it falls within one of the "specifically established and well-delineated exceptions."' (People v. Woods (1999) 21 Cal.4th 668, 674 . . .]; see also Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332, 338 [173 L.Ed.2nd 485; 129 S.Ct. 1710].) Automobiles are the subject of special exceptions, and warrantless searches of automobiles 'have been upheld in circumstances in which a search of a home or office would not.' (South Dakota v. Opperman (1976) 428 U.S. 364, 367 [49 L.Ed.2nd 1000; 96 S. Ct. 3092] . . .) These broader exceptions from the Fourth Amendment's general prohibition against warrantless searches derive from the inherent mobility of automobiles and a diminished expectation of privacy given the public nature of automobile travel. (Id. at pp. 367–368.)" (People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853. 861.)

Warrantless Searches of Vehicles can be justified under one or more of Eight legal theories, each of which is considered separately, below:

- Incident to Arrest
- With Probable Cause (The "Automobile Exception")
- When the Vehicle Itself is Evidence of a Crime
- Inventory Searches of Impounded Vehicles
- The "Protective Search" (or "Patdown") of a Vehicle for Weapons
- Statutory Automobile Inspections
- Statutory Automobile Searches
- Searching a Vehicle for a Driver's License and/or Vehicle Registration, VIN Number, Proof of Insurance, etc.

Searches Incident to Arrest:*

> General Rule: Any time a person is arrested "in," or "near" (see below), or (under the old rule) as a "recent occupant" (but see "Searches where Arrestee is a 'Recent Occupant,'" below) of his or her vehicle, a search of the suspect and the area immediately surrounding the suspect, including within the passenger area of his vehicle, is, as a general rule, lawful. (New York v. Belton (1981) 453 U.S. 454 [101 S.Ct. 2860; 69 L.Ed.2nd 768]; United States v. Robinson (1973) 414 U.S. 218 [94 S.Ct. 467; 38 L.Ed.2nd 427]; People v. Molina (1994) 25 Cal.App.4th 1038, 1044; Thornton v. United States (2004) 541 U.S. 615 [124 S.Ct. 2127; 158 L.Ed.2nd 905]; People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1032-1033.)

The Rationale: The traditional rationale of warrantless searches incident to arrest is the two-fold need to (1) uncover evidence of the crime, to prevent its destruction, and (2) to preclude the possibility the arrestee might reach for a weapon with which he could injure the arresting officer or effect an escape. (Preston v. United States (1964) 376 U.S. 364, 367 [84 S.Ct. 881; 11 L.Ed.2nd 777]; United States v. Rabinowitz (1950) 339 U.S. 56, 72-75 [70 S.Ct. 430; 94 L.Ed. 653]; Agnello v. United States (1925) 269 U.S. 20, 30 [46 S.Ct. 4; 70 L.Ed. 145]; United States v. Edwards (1974) 415 U.S. 800, 802-803 [94 S.Ct. 1234; 39 L.Ed.2nd 771]; People v. Diaz (2011) 51 Cal.4th 84; Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430].)

> But see Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], which has severely limited searches incident to arrest in a vehicle, at least where the arrested subject has already been secured and can no longer lunge for evidence or weapons. (See "Limitation of the Chimel/Belton 'Bright Line' Test; When the Arrestee Has Been Secured," below.)

Containers in the Vehicle:

> Rule: The searchable area includes any containers found in that area, even if not the arrestee's property. (People v. Mitchell (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 672, 674-677; People v. Prance (1991) 226 Cal.App.3rd 1525, 1531; purses belonging to passengers.)
>
> Case Law:
>
> > A warrantless search of those areas of the passenger compartment of a vehicle where an officer reasonably expects that the parolee could have stowed personal belongings or discarded items when aware of police activity, as well as a search of personal property located in those areas if the officer reasonably believes that the parolee owns those items or has the ability to exert control over them, is lawful. (People v. Schmitz (2012) 55 Cal.4th 909, 916-933.)
> >
> > > See People v. Maxwell (2020) 58 Cal.App.5th 546, extending the same rule to parolees. "We thus conclude an > officer may search 'those areas of the passenger compartment where the officer reasonably expects that the parolee could have stowed personal belongings or discarded items when aware of police activity.'" (Pg. 556.)

See also Wyoming v. Houghton (1999) 626 U.S. 295 [119 S.Ct. 1297; 143 L.Ed.2nd 408]; search of another person's purse when the search was based upon probable cause (below).

Similarly, a vehicle search based on a passenger's probation status may extend beyond the probationer's person and the seat he or she occupies, but is confined to those areas of the passenger compartment where the officer reasonably expects that the probationer could have stowed personal belongings or discarded items when aware of police activity. (People v. Cervantes (2017) 11 Cal.App.5th 860, 871.)

Where officers searched a backpack in a vehicle after arresting two of the occupants for falsely identifying themselves, the Court upheld the search, ruling that it was reasonable to believe that verification of the arrestee's identification would be found in that backpack. In so ruling , the court held that police officers may search a vehicle incident to a recent occupant's arrest if: 1) the arrestee is within reaching distance of the passenger compartment at the time of the search; or 2) it is reasonable to believe the vehicle contains evidence of the offense for which the occupant was arrested. Here, the court held that it was reasonable to believe that the defendants' vehicle contained evidence of the offense of providing false identification information. (United States v. Campbell-Martin (8th Cir. IA 2021) 17 F.4th 807.)

However, defendant's locked glovebox (defendant being the driver and owner of the car) was held not to be searchable merely because a parolee (subject to search and seizure conditions) was in the back seat, absent evidence tending to show that the parolee was capable of accessing the glovebox and in the absence of any observations by the police suggesting that the occupants of the car were maneuvering to get the gun from the back seat passenger into the glove box and lock it. (Claypool v. Superior Court (2022) 85 Cal.App.5th 1092.)

This rule has been held not to apply to cellphones in that cellphones do not pose a danger to officers and once seized, it is unlikely any evidence contained in the phone is going to be destroyed. When balanced with the large amount of personal information likely to be found in cellphones, a warrantless intrusion into the phone is not justified under the Fourth Amendment absent exigent circumstances. (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430].)

Once considered by some to be a container of information (See People v. Michael E. (2014) 230 Cal.App.4th 261, 276-279, where the Court included a whole segment criticizing the current trend of referring to computers and cellphones as "containers of information"), recent authority has decided that cellphones no longer fall into the category of containers. (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 941-943; see also United States v. Lara (9th Cir. 2016) 815 F.3rd 605, 610-611

And see "Limitations," below.

Probable Cause Not Needed: Except for that which is necessary to justify the arrest, there need not be any separate probable cause to believe there is anything there to seize, in order to justify the search of the vehicle. The arrest alone justifies the search. (United States v. Robinson (1973) 414 U.S. 218 [94 S.Ct. 467; 38 L.Ed.2nd 427]; People v. Molina (1994) 25 Cal.App.4th 1038.)

Limitations:

"The Lunging area:" The area to be searched is limited by Chimel v. California (1969) 395 U.S. 752 [89 S.Ct. 2034; 23 L.Ed.2nd 685], to the "lunging area" within the vehicle. (People v. Summers (1999) 73 Cal.App.4th 288.)

See the concurring, minority opinion in Summers discussing the legal justification for a search after the suspect has been immobilized and removed from the "grabbing area," delaying the search until it can be done safety.

The "lunging area" of Chimel generally includes the entire passenger area of the car. (New York v. Belton (1981) 453 U.S. 454, 460 [101 S.Ct. 2860; 69 L.Ed.2nd 768, 775].)

This includes the rear area of a hatchback vehicle, so long as that area is accessible to the passengers in the vehicle, whether or not that storage area is covered. (United States v. Mayo (9th Cir. 2005) 394 F.3rd 1271; see also United States v. Caldwell (8th Cir. 1996) 97 F.3rd 1063, 1067; United States v. Doward (1st Cir. 1994) 41 F.3rd 789, 794.)

See also United States v. Olguin-Rivera (10th Cir. 1999) 168 F.3rd 1203, 1205-1207; covered cargo area of a sport utility vehicle.

And United States v. Pino (6th Cir. 1988) 855 F.2nd 357, 364; cargo area of midsize station wagon.

The hatchback or rear hatch area of a vehicle held to be a part of the passenger compartment. (United States v. Stegall (8th Cir. Ark. 2017) 850 F.3rd 981.)

Contemporaneous in Time and Place: Defendant must be arrested in or near his car, and, except when impractical to do so under the circumstances, the search must be "roughly contemporaneous in time and place" with the arrest. (People v. Stoffle (1992) 1 Cal.App.4th 1671; People v. Boissard (1992) 5 Cal.App.4th 972; United States v. Weaver (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F.3rd 1104.)

What is meant by "near" the vehicle? If his car is within the "lunging area" of Chimel, the passenger area of the car may be searched despite the fact that the defendant was not in it when arrested. (Thornton v. United States (2004) 541 U.S. 615 [124 S.Ct. 2127; 158 L.Ed.2nd 905]; analyzing whether the arrestee was an occupant or a "recent occupant" as the definitive test.)

See "Searches where Arrestee is a 'Recent Occupant,'" below.

Federal law is in accord as to the requirement that the search be contemporaneous with the arrest. (Preston v. United States (1964) 376 U.S. 364 [84 S.Ct. 881; 11 L.Ed.2nd 777]; United States v. McLaughlin (9th Cir. 1999) 170 F.3rd 889.)

A ten to fifteen minute delay between an arrest in a vehicle and the search of that vehicle with no intervening occurrences is still a lawful warrantless search incident to arrest. (United States v. Weaver, supra.)

Arresting defendant a block and a half away after a foot pursuit, and when the car is then searched "well after" the arrest, is neither contemporaneous in time nor place with defendant's arrest. (United States v. Caseres (9th Cir. 2008) 533 F.3rd 1064, 1070-1074.)

See also United States v. Vasey (9th Cir. 1987) 834 F.2nd 782, 787; finding unauthorized a vehicle search conducted 30 to 45 minutes after an arrest and after the arrestee had been handcuffed and secured in the back of a police car.

Although defendant was arrested in his car, a search of his cellphone found in the car, but not searched until an hour and twenty minutes after his arrest, with a string of intervening acts occurring between the arrest and the eventual search, is too far removed to be considered a search incident to the defendant's arrest. (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 937-939.)

Arresting defendant two blocks from his vehicle, his arrest did not meet the requirement of being "when and where" his vehicle was searched. Therefore, the "incident to arrest" theory did not justify the search of his car. (People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1035-1037; but upholding the search under the "probable cause" justification. Pgs. 1037-1039. See "Search With Probable Cause," below.)

Limitation of the Chimel/Belton "Bright Line" Test; When the Arrestee Has Been Secured:

Chimel/Belton Rule Criticized:

In addition to the above limitations, a number of courts criticized the application of a "bright line rule" allowing for the search of a vehicle incident to arrest in those circumstances where a the arrestee has been removed from the vehicle and secured, and where there is no reasonable possibility he can still lunge for weapons and/or evidence. (E.g., see United States v. Weaver, supra, at p. 1107; Thornton v. United States (2004) 541 U.S. 615, 624 [124 S.Ct. 2127; 158 L.Ed.2nd 905]; concurring opinion.)

Arizona v. Gant:

Finally, the U.S. Supreme Court decided in Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], that a warrantless search of a vehicle incident to arrest is lawful only when the arrestee is unsecured and within reaching distance of the passenger compartment at the time of the search. (Overruling New York v. Belton (1981) 453 U.S. 454, 460 [101 S.Ct. 2860; 69 L.Ed.2nd 768, 775], in so far as it has been interpreted to allow the warrantless, suspicionless search of a motor vehicle incident to arrest after the suspect has been handcuffed and secured in a patrol car from where he could no longer lunge for weapons or destroy evidence.)

Although the United States Supreme Court has indicated that Gant is limited to "circumstances unique to the vehicle context" (Thornton v. United States, supra, at pp. 629-632; see also Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 398-399 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430], citing Gant at p. 343.), at least one California court has applied it to the residential situation. (See People v. Leal (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1051; arrest in a residence, citing as its authority United States v. Rabinowitz (1950) 339 U.S. 56 [70 S.Ct. 430; 94 L.Ed. 653].

> United States v. Rabinowitz, supra, is a case involving the warrantless search of a business office, based upon probable cause, itself being severely criticized later in Chimel v. California (1969) 395 U.S. 752, 759-768 [89 S.Ct. 2034; 23 L.Ed.2nd 685].

Also, citing United States v. Fleming (7th Cir. 1982) 667 F.2nd 602, 605-608, the Leal Court noted that handcuffing alone is probably not enough to fully secure the suspect.

> "Handcuffs are a temporary restraining device; they limit but do not eliminate a person's ability to perform various acts. They obviously do not impair a person's ability to use his legs and feet, whether to walk, run, or kick. Handcuffs do limit a person's ability to use his hands and arms, but the degree of the effectiveness of handcuffs in this role depends on a variety of factors, including the handcuffed person's size, strength, bone and joint structure, flexibility, and tolerance of pain. Albeit difficult, it is by no means impossible for a handcuffed person to obtain and use a weapon concealed on his person or within lunge reach, and in so doing to cause injury to his intended victim, to a bystander, or even to himself." (People v. Leal, supra, at p. 1062.)
>
> See also United States v. Cook (9th Cir. 2015) 808 F.3rd 1195, 1198-1200, upholding the search of defendant's backpack immediately upon his arrest even though he was already handcuffed, noting that he was not secured in a patrol car as was the defendant in Gant. Also, Gant had been arrested for a misdemeanor while Cook was under arrest for a felony.

See also United States v. Shakir (3rd Cir. 2010) 616 F.3rd 315, 321; where a similar result was reported in a search incident to arrest of the arrestee's duffle bag although he had been handcuffed and officers were holding his arms.

However, apparently putting a suspect into a locked patrol vehicle while unhandcuffed is sufficient to trigger the securing rule of Gant. (See United States v. Ruckes (9th Cir. 2009) 586 F.3rd 713; issue not discussed.)

Note: See People v. Lopez (2019) 8 Cal.5th 353, at pages 364-366.), for a historical review of the sequence of cases from Chimel v. California, supra, through New York v. Belton, supra, and Thornton v. United States, supra, to Arizona v. Gant, supra, as the law on searches incident to arrest developed.

Gant's Alternative Theory: The Gant Court, however, also provides for a second legal theory justifying the warrantless search of a vehicle, incident to arrest, even if the suspect has been removed from the vehicle and secured: I.e., when it is "reasonable to believe evidence relevant to the crime of arrest might be found in the car." (Arizona v. Gant, supra, at pp. 343-344; Davis v. United States (2011) 564 U.S. 229, 234-235 [131 S.Ct. 2419; 180 L.Ed.2nd 285]; People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1033-1034.)

Note: The Supreme Court in Gant mentions this as an "alternate" theory justifying the warrantless search of a vehicle incident to arrest, but fails to explain when and how it is applicable, merely citing Thornton v. United States, supra, as authority for its application.

The Court does state, however, that this alternate theory "stems not from Chimel (i.e., a "search incident to arrest") . . . , but from 'circumstances unique to the vehicle context.' (i.e., the "automobile exception")." (Arizona v. Gant, supra, at p. 343.)

"Some courts have concluded or implied that whether it is reasonable to believe offense-related evidence might be found in a vehicle is determined solely by reference to the nature of the offense of arrest, rather than by reference to the particularized facts of the case. Others have required some level of particularized suspicion, based at least on the facts of the specific case." (People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, 747-751.)

> The Evans Court (Second District Court of Appeal) concluded that "a reasonable belief to search for evidence of the offense of arrest exists when the nature of the offense, considered in conjunction with the particular facts of the case, gives rise to a degree of suspicion commensurate with that sufficient for limited intrusions such as investigatory stops." (Id., at p. 751.)

Also, the phrases "reasonable to believe" and "reasonable basis to believe" are not defined (e.g., "probable cause" or "reasonable suspicion?") in the Gant decision. Neither are the other legal parameters (e.g., is it limited to the passenger area of the car, must it be contemporaneous with the arrest in time and place, etc.?) even discussed.

> See People v. Osborne (2009) 175 Cal.App.4th 1052, 1065, where "reasonable basis to believe" in a Gant search of a vehicle was defined as "a standard less than probable cause." (See also People v. Nottoli (2011) 199 Cal.App.4th 531, 551, fn. 9, & 553.)
>
> California's Second District Court of Appeal concluded that the standard is a "(r)easonable suspicion, not probable cause, . . ." (People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, 751.)

This alternate theory under Gant for searching containers and other items found in a vehicle does not apply, however, to cellphones given the higher expectation of privacy in a person's cellphone. (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473, 2484-2495; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430]; see also United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 941-943.)

The search of defendant's vehicle was upheld when based upon probable cause to believe defendant was illegally transporting marijuana, the necessary probable cause being supplied by a trained and experienced officer's recognition of the odor of fresh and burnt marijuana coming from his vehicle. (United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2019) 913 F.3rd 793, 801-802.)

However, searching a defendant's vehicle after he fled from his car on foot, and after he was arrested for various traffic violations, was held to be illegal under both the alternate theory of Gant and absent any probable cause to believe the car might contain evidence related to the cause of the arrest. (United States v. Davis (4th Cir. 2021) 997 F.3rd 191.)

Subsequent Case Law:

Arresting defendant for vehicle burglary, sitting in a vehicle, particularly with tools visible in the vehicle, justified the warrantless search of the vehicle upon "a reasonable basis to believe" that evidence related to the suspected vehicle burglary might be found in the car. (People v. Osborne (2009) 175 Cal.App.4th 1052, 1062-1065.)

> Osborne interprets "reasonable basis to believe" to be something less than "probable cause." (Id., at p. 1065.)

The search of a cellphone at the scene of an arrest in a vehicle is lawful so long as it is "reasonable to believe evidence relevant to the crime of arrest might be found in the vehicle." When the driver is arrested for driving under the influence of drugs, and the record contains expert testimony concerning the use of cellphones by drug users, the warrantless search of the driver's cellphone is lawful. (People v. Nottoli (2011) 199 Cal.App.4th 531, 544-559.)

Arresting a person for driving on a suspended license does not establish a "reasonable basis to believe" that the car will contain any evidence of this offense. (United States v. Ruckes (9th Cir. 2009) 586 F.3rd 713, 718; citing Gant at 129 S.Ct. p. 1719.)

Stopped and physically arrested for driving on a suspended license (with a prior conviction for the same), defendant was secured in the back seat of a patrol car. The subsequent search of his vehicle, resulting in recovery of cocaine and an illegal firearm (defendant being a convicted felon), was found to be in violation of the rule of Gant. (United States v. Ruckes (9th Cir. 2009) 586 F.3rd 713, 716-718: Evidence was held to be admissible, however, under the inevitable discovery rule in that the vehicle was to be impounded and subjected to an inventory search; pp. 718-719.)

The federal Seventh Circuit Court of Appeal has found that in a drug conspiracy-related arrest, there is commonly going to be "a reasonable basis to believe" that evidence related to the drugs or the conspiracy are going to be found in the defendant's vehicle. (United States v. Slone (7th Cir. 2011) 636 F.3rd 845, 852; defendant arrested while in the process of conducting security or counter-surveillance operations in a drug trafficking conspiracy.)

Two searches of defendant's car were not justified as incident to his arrest for interfering with an investigation (Pen. Code § 148). The first search did not fall within the Gant first prong (arrestee within reaching distance of his vehicle) because defendant had been Tased and detained, and was lying face down on the ground with officers on him. The second search was conducted at the impound yard. But under the second Gant prong, it was not reasonable to believe evidence of interfering with the officer would remain in the vehicle after defendant was removed. A reasonable belief to search a vehicle for evidence of the offense of arrest exists when the nature of the offense, considered in conjunction with the particular facts of the case, gave rise to a degree of suspicion commensurate with that sufficient for limited intrusions. Reasonable suspicion, not probable cause, is required. Therefore, the automobile exception also did not justify either search. Also, probable cause was not established by defendant's erratic driving, nervousness, or refusal to exit the car, or by the location of the stop in gang territory, or the discovery of baggies and cash in the first search. (People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, 743-755.)

> The Court further rejected both the "inventory search" and "inevitable discovery" theories in that the evidence necessary to establish either theory was not sufficiently developed at the trial court level. (Id., at pp. 755-756.)

Arresting a person for driving while under the influence of a controlled substance supplies the necessary "reasonable basis for believing that evidence 'relevant' to that type of offense might be in his vehicle." (People v. Quick (2016) 5 Cal.App.5th 1006, 1011-1012; see also People v. Nottoli (2011) 199 Cal.App.4th 531, 553-554; "The presence of some amount of the controlled substance or drug paraphernalia in the interior of the vehicle would be circumstantial evidence tending to corroborate that a driver was in fact under the influence of the controlled substance.")

The federal Eight Circuit Court of Appeal upheld the warrantless search of the hatchback area of defendant's SUV as a valid search incident to arrest after defendant was secured in the backseat of a patrol car. The officers had a reasonable basis to believe the vehicle contained evidence relevant to the crime of arrest, making a terroristic threat, where defendant aggravated a road rage incident by pointing a pistol at the victim. The warrantless search was upheld under Gant's alternative theory; i.e., where it is reasonable to believe the vehicle contains evidence of the crime for which the suspect was arrested. The court held the warrantless search of defendant's SUV was reasonable under the second part of Gant because defendant had confirmed that he was the driver of the SUV involved in the earlier road rage incident, he told the officers he "probably" had a firearm in his vehicle, the 911 caller positively identified defendant as the driver who brandished a gun at him, and witness had seen defendant concealing something in the rear hatch of his SUV. The court further held that the hatchback or rear hatch area of a vehicle is part of the passenger compartment. (United States v. Stegall (8th Cir. Ark. 2017) 850 F.3rd 981.)

When a heavily intoxicated defendant was contacted by police in the passenger seat of a parked car in a bar parking lot, the officers believed he was in violation of a San Diego municipal code section (i.e., San Diego Municipal Code section 85.10, making it illegal to be under the influence in or near a car in public). The car was searched and multiple concealed handguns recovered. With defendant's motion to suppress the firearms being denied by the trial court, the Fourth District Court of Appeal ruled that the search was permissible as incident to defendant's arrest for public intoxication because he was still unsecured and the passenger area of his car was within reaching distance when officers discovered the first loaded firearm. (People v. Sims (2021) 59 Cal.App.5th 943, 953-955; citing Arizona v. Gant, supra.)

> The fact that defendant was paralyzed from the waist down did not render it unreasonable for the arresting officers to believe he might grab something from the vehicle's rear floorboard. "'"'[T]he only question the trial court asks is whether the area searched is generally "reachable without exiting the vehicle, without regard to the likelihood in the particular case that such a reaching was possible."' (U.S. v. Allen (1st Cir. 2006) 469 F.3rd 11, 15, italics omitted; see United States v. Stegall (8th Cir. 2017) 850 F.3d 981, 985 ['actual reachability under the circumstances' is irrelevant when considering the scope of a passenger compartment search].)" (Id., at p. 955.)
>
> The search of defendant's car was also subject to a warrantless search under the second prong of Gant; i.e., the officers had a reasonable basis to believe the vehicle contained evidence relevant to establish that defendant was publicly intoxicated in violation of San Diego Municipal Code section 85.10. (Id., at p. 955.)
>
> The warrantless search of the entire vehicle was also approved under the "automobile exception," where the officers had probable cause to believe open containers of alcohol might be found in the vehicle. (Id., at pp. 951-952.)
>
> Also note that the Court hinted that Pen. Code § 647(f), drunk in public, would have worked just as well as San Diego's municipal code section. (Id., at p. 949, fn. 3.)
>
> In a sex sting operation at South Dakota's annual Sturgis Motorcycle Rally, the Eighth Circuit Court of appeal upheld the trial court's determination that defendant was arrested on probable cause to believe that he was attempting to commit various sex trafficking crimes when he responded to an officer's posted advertisement entitled "Who Wants to Be Naughty" on a classified advertising website in its dating section under the category "women seeking men." In the resulting communications between the two, the officer posed as a 15-year-old female. Arrangements were made between the two to meet at a particular location. Defendant responded affirmatively to the officer's demand that defendant pay $200 for one hour of sexual intercourse, bring a condom, and not hurt her. Upon defendant showing up at the designated time and location with condoms and $200, the Court found this sufficient to establish the necessary probable cause to arrest defendant and to search his car incident to the arrest. (United States v. Slim (8th Cir. 2022) 34 F.4th 641.)

Exception: Where the person is arrested and transported to the police station, property found "on his person" may be searched (and/or his property taken for laboratory analysis) upon arrival at the station, there being little perceived difference between searching in the field and shortly thereafter at the police station. (United States v. Edwards (1974) 415 U.S. 800, 802-803 [94 S.Ct. 1234; 39 L.Ed.2nd 771]; In re Charles C. (1999) 76 Cal.App.4th 420, 425; see also United States v. Finley (5th Cir. 2007) 477 F.3rd 250, 260, fn. 7; United States v. Rodriguez (5th Cir. 2012) 702 F.3rd 206, 209-210; People v. Diaz (2011) 51 Cal.4th 84.)

This rule, however, has been held not to apply to cellphones in that cellphones do not pose a danger to officers and once seized, it is unlikely any evidence contained in the phone is going to be destroyed. When balanced with the large amount of personal information likely to be found in cellphones, a warrantless intrusion into the phone is not justified under the Fourth Amendment absent exigent circumstances. (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430]; overruling by implication any of the above cases that involve cellphones [e.g., Finley, Diaz, and Rodriguez.)

The California Supreme Court concluded in a warrantless cellphone search case (reversing a lower appellate court decision) that the search of defendant's cellphone would not have been proper even under its prior decision in People v. Diaz (2011) 51 Cal.4th 84 (a search incident to arrest case), and that a reasonably well-trained officer would have known this. Defendant was not under arrest when officers searched his phone. Under Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430], which overruled Diaz, even if defendant had been properly arrested, a warrant was required to search his cellphone. The search in this case violated the Fourth Amendment; the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply. Also, the search was not the result of negligence, nor did it result from any pressure to apply a newly enacted statutory scheme that was confusing and complex. The officers' conduct, including the search, was deliberate. Exclusion of the evidence in this case serves to deter future similar behavior. (People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1212-1226.)

Exception to Exception: The search of an arrestee's vehicle incident to his arrest was held to be justified where he was arrested for driving while under the influence of a controlled substance, and where upon stepping out of his vehicle to perform field sobriety tests, he threw his jacket and keys into the car, rolled up the window, and locked and shut the door. A person arrested for DUI may not defeat a search incident to arrest by locking incriminating evidence inside the car. (People v. Quick (2016) 5 Cal.App.5th 1006, 1011-1012.)

Retroactivity:

Following Gant, a gun found during the search of a vehicle in which the defendant was a passenger, searched incident to the arrest of another passenger and after defendant himself had been handcuffed and secured in a patrol car, should have been suppressed. (United States v. Gonzalez (9th Cir. 2009) 578 F.3rd 1130; also noting that the decision in Gant applies retroactively to any case not yet final (i.e., still on appeal) despite the officer's good faith in following the old rule that was valid at the time of the search.)

However, the United States Supreme Court has since ruled that searches conducted in objectively reasonable reliance on binding appellate precedent in effect at the time of the search, despite a later decision changing the rules, are not subject to the Exclusionary Rule. (Davis v. United States (2011) 564 U.S. 229, 236-239 [131 S.Ct. 2419; 180 L.Ed.2nd 285].)

As a result, a search of a defendant's vehicle following his custodial arrest, done in violation of Gant, did not require the suppression of two firearms found in the car in that this search occurred prior to the Gant decision. (United States v. Tschacher (9th Cir. 2012) 687 F.3rd 923, 932-933.)

An officer's good faith belief in the rules for searching vehicle's incident to arrest, as dictated under New York v. Belton (1981) 453 U.S. 454, 455, 460–461 [69 L. Ed. 2d 768; 101 S. Ct. 2860], as it existed in 1991 when defendant's vehicle was searched, held to apply despite the subsequent tightening of the rules under Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [173 L.Ed.2nd 485; 129 S.Ct. 1710]. (People v. Silveria and Travis (2020) 10 Cal.5th 195, 236, 239.)

But see People v. Leal (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1051, 1065-1066, a search incident to arrest in a residence where the Court applied the rule of Gant, and found that the law was sufficiently settled prior to Gant, at least under California authority as it applied to searches of residences, that "good faith" reliance upon prior authority did not allow for the admissibility of the evidence recovered in this case; a questionable decision in light of the decision in Davis v. United States, supra.)

Extending the Theory of Gant:

In United States v. Davis (4th Cir. 2021) 997 F.3rd 191, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeal applied the theory of Gant to an arrestee's backpack that he dropped on the ground upon being arrested following a foot pursuit, and which was searched after he was arrested and handcuffed.

Transportation: The arrestee must be subject to a post-arrest transportation to jail or the police station, or perhaps a detoxification facility, before a search incident to arrest is justified. (People v. Brisendine (1975) 13 Cal.3rd 528, 538-552.)

Therefore, if the procedure is to cite and release the subject at the scene of the arrest, no "search incident to arrest" is lawful. The theory is that a person is not as prone to attempt to destroy evidence or reach for a weapon if he is only to be cited, as opposed to taken to jail. (Ibid.)

Taking a person in to "protective custody," where, for instance, he is acting irrationally (e.g., intoxicated, in this case), allows for a patdown for weapons prior to transporting him. (United States v. Gilmore (10th Cir.) 776 F.3rd 765.)

See "Search Incident to Arrest," under "Searches of Persons" (Chapter 11), above.

Search Incident to a Citation: There is no such thing as legal justification for a "search incident to a citation," because of the lack of the right to physically transport the subject from the scene. (Knowles v. Iowa (1989) 525 U.S. 113 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142 L.Ed.2nd 492]; see also People v. Brisendine (1975) 13 Cal.3rd 528, 538-552; People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1216-1219; In re D.W. (2017) 13 Cal.App.5th1249, 1253.)

An exception to this rule is when there is probable cause to search for marijuana. The fact that the illegal simple possession of marijuana is a citable offense only, does not preclude officers from doing a probable cause vehicle search for illegally possessed marijuana, such as when the suspects are all under the age of 21 and thus could not legally possess marijuana. (See (People v. Castro (2022) 86 Cal.App.5th 314; finding the "automobile exception" to the warrant requirement applicable to a search of a vehicle for marijuana, and noting (at p. 320) that "[w]here such probable cause exists, a law enforcement officer may search the vehicle 'irrespective of whether [the offense] is an infraction and not an arrestable offense.'" Quoting from People v. McGee (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 796, 805; and People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, 564.)

See "Search Incident to a Citation" under "Other Requirements and Limitations," under "Searches of Persons" (Chapter 11), above.

However, it is not unconstitutional to make a custodial arrest (i.e., transporting to jail or court) of a person arrested for a minor misdemeanor (Atwater v. City of Lago Vista (2001) 532 U.S. 318 [121 S.Ct. 1536; 149 L.Ed.2nd 549].), or even for a fine-only, infraction. (People v. McKay (2002) 27 Cal.4th 601, 607; see also United States v. McFadden (2nd Cir. 2001) 238 F.3rd 198, 204; see also Virginia v. Moore (2008) 553 U.S. 164 [128 S.Ct. 1598; 170 L.Ed.2nd 559].)

In order to justify a search incident to arrest, however, the subject must have actually been subjected to a custodial arrest. Absent such an actual arrest and transportation, the rule that a search incident to a citation not being lawful, per Knowles v. Iowa (1998) 525 U.S. 113 [119 S.Ct. 484; 142

L.Ed.2nd 492], applies. (People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1216-1219; In re D.W. (2017) 13 Cal.App.5th1249, 1253.)

California's statutory provisions require the release of misdemeanor arrestees in most circumstances. (e.g., see Pen. Code §§ 853.5, 853.6, V.C. §§ 40303, 40500) However, violation of these statutory requirements is not a constitutional violation and, therefore, should not result in suppression of any evidence recovered as a result of such an arrest. (People v. McKay, supra, at pp. 607-619, a violation of Veh. Code § 21650.1 (riding a bicycle in the wrong direction); People v. Gomez (2004) 117 Cal.App.4th 531, 538-539, seat belt violation (Veh. Code § 27315(d)(1)), citing: Atwater v. City of Lago Vista (2001) 532 U.S. 318 [121 S.Ct. 1536; 149 L.Ed.2nd 549]; People v. Bennett (2011) 197 Cal.App.4th 907, 918.)

See also; "Search Incident to Arrest," under "Searches of Persons" (Chapter 11), above.

Searches where Arrestee is a "Recent Occupant:"

Old Rule: Under the past Chimel/Belton "Bright Line" rule (see above):

The arrestee need not have been arrested while physically within his vehicle to make it subject to search so long as he is at least a "recent occupant" of the vehicle. (Thornton v. United States (2004) 541 U.S. 615 [124 S.Ct. 2127; 158 L.Ed.2nd 905].)

See United States v. Osife (9th Cir. 2005) 398 F.3rd 1143, where the Court, without discussing the issue, found the defendant to be a "recent occupant" where he had left his vehicle, gone into a store, and returned to it before being arrested.

Being a "recent occupant" of a vehicle does not add a requirement that in order to search the passenger area of the vehicle there must be some reason to believe the vehicle contains evidence related to the crime for which the defendant was arrested. (United States v. Osife, supra, reaffirming the rule of New York v. Belton (1981) 453 U.S. 454, 460 [101 S.Ct. 2860; 69 L.Ed.2nd 768, 775], defendant arguing that a minority, concurring opinion in Thornton to this effect should be accepted as a new rule.)

New Rule: In Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1910; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], the old rule of Thronton was rejected.

"To read Belton as authorizing a vehicle search incident to every recent occupant's arrest," even when the arrestee was out of reach of the passenger compartment, would "untether the rule from the justifications underlying the Chimel exception." (Arizona v. Gant, supra, at p. 343.)

"For years, Belton was widely understood to have set down a simple, bright-line rule. Numerous courts read the decision to authorize automobile searches incident to arrests of recent occupants, regardless of whether the arrestee in any particular case was within reaching distance of the vehicle at the time of the search. [Citation.] Even after the arrestee had stepped out of the vehicle and had been subdued by police, the prevailing understanding was that Belton still authorized a substantially contemporaneous search of the automobile's passenger compartment." (Davis v. United States (2011) 564 U.S. 229, 233-241 [180 L.Ed.2d 285; 131 S.Ct. 2419]; recognizing the invalidity of the Belton rule after Gant, but noting that the search in this case took place well before Gant was decided, and applying the "good faith reliance" rule to uphold the search of a recent occupant in this case: "Evidence obtained during a search conducted in reasonable reliance on binding precedent is not subject to the exclusionary rule.")

Even before Gant, the Ninth Circuit was having trouble with the Thornton Rule: Where defendant is arrested a block and a half away after a foot pursuit from his vehicle, so that when arrested he was no longer within reach of the passenger area of his car, the Ninth Circuit is of the belief that he does not qualify as a "recent occupant." (United States v. Caseres (9th Cir. 2008) 533 F.3d 1064, 1070-1074.)

California courts are now in accord: The rule of Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1910; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], overruled Belton. Quoting Gant: "'To read Belton as authorizing a vehicle search incident to every recent occupant's arrest,' even when the arrestee was out of reach of the passenger compartment, would 'untether the rule from the justifications underlying the Chimel exception.' (Gant, supra, 556 U.S. at p. 343.)" (People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1032-1033.)

> Noting that "Gant . . . represented a substantial shift in the prevailing understanding of the Belton rule." (People v. Lopez (2019) 8 Cal.5th 353, 380.)

Similarly, the "recent occupant" rule of Thornton v. United States, supra, is limited to those instances when the vehicle is to be searched "when and where" the defendant is arrested; i.e., in compliance with the "contemporaneous in time and place" rule. (People v. Johnson, supra., at p. 1037; defendant was arrested two blocks away.)

Searches With Probable Cause* (The "Automobile Exception"): Searches with Probable Cause to believe there is contraband or other sizable items in a vehicle:

General Rule: If police officers have probable cause to search a car, they may, as a general rule, make a warrantless search anywhere a warrant could have authorized. (Carroll v. United States (1925) 267 U.S. 132, 150-153 [45 S.Ct. 280; 69 L.Ed. 543]; United States v. Ross (1982) 456 US. 798 [102 S.Ct. 2157; 72 L.Ed.2nd 572]; Pennsylvania v. Labron (1996) 518 U.S. 938 [116 S.Ct. 2485; 135 L.Ed.2nd 89]; Maryland v. Dyson (1999) 527 U.S. 465 [119 S.Ct. 2013; 144 L.Ed.2nd 442]; People v. Superior Court* [Nasmeh] (2007) 151 Cal.App.4th 85, 100-102; United States v. Davis (9th Cir. 2008) 530 F.3rd 1069, 1084; United States v. Noster (9th Cir. 2009) 590 F.3rd 624, 633-634; People v. Xinos (2011) 192 Cal.App.4th 637, 653-659; People v. Diaz (2013) 213 Cal.App.4th 743, 753-754, search of a vehicle's "black box," or "Sensing Diagnostic Module," or "SMD;" Collins v. Virginia (2018) 584 U.S. 586, 592 [138 S.Ct. 1663; 201 L.Ed.2nd 9]; United States v. Cervantes (9th Cir. 2012) 703 F.3rd 1135, 1148-1140; People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1034-1035; and see Florida v. Harris (2013) 568 U.S. 237, 243-250 [133 S.Ct. 1050; 185 L.Ed.2nd 61], a warrantless search of a vehicle based upon a drug-detection dog's sniff; People v. Waxler (2014) 224 Cal.App.4th 712, 718-719, a warrantless search of a vehicle based upon the odor of marijuana and observation of a pipe with apparent marijuana residue; People v. Moore (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 291, search of a backpack found in a car based upon the odor of marijuana.)

"'The automobile exception provides "police who have probable cause to believe a lawfully stopped vehicle contains evidence of criminal activity or contraband may conduct a warrantless search of any area of the vehicle in which the evidence might be found."' . . . (Italics added; People v. Leal (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 1143, 1147; quoting People v. McGee (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 796, 801, which in turn quotes People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, 753.)

"The scope of a warrantless search is 'defined by the object of the search and the places in which there is probable cause to believe that it may be found.'" (Ibid.; quoting United States v. Ross (1982) 456 U.S. 798, 824 [72 L.Ed.2nd 572, 102 S.Ct. 2157].)

Note that Leal uses the limiting phrase "in which the evidence might be found" instead of the more common; "anywhere a warrant could have authorized."

"In determining whether probable cause to search exists, we look at the totality of the circumstances. (People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 815. . . .) Our review is limited to the facts and circumstances known to the searching officer. (Henry v. United States (1959) 361 U.S. 98, 102 [4 L.Ed.2nd 134; 80 S.Ct. 168].) '[P]robable cause [to] search exists when an officer is aware of facts that would lead a [person] of ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously to entertain, a strong suspicion that the object of the search is in the particular place to be searched.' (Wimberly v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal.3rd 557, 571. . . .)" (People v. Leal, supra, at p. 1151.)

Search of a purse found in defendant's vehicle after defendant had been arrested outside the car from which he had just fled, with crack cocaine and a large amount of money in his pockets indicating that he had been engaged in the selling of drugs, constituted sufficient probable cause to believe that more contraband, or other evidence of drug dealing, would be found in his car. The warrantless search of the car, and the purse (in which a gun was found), was upheld as lawful. (United States v. Williams (9th Cir. 2017) 846 F.3rd 303, 312-313.)

That same probable cause allows for the warrantless seizure of the vehicle. (United States v. Magallon-Lopez (9th Cir. 2016) 817 F.3rd 671, 675-676.)

The "Automobile Exception:"

Sometimes referred to as the "automobile (or vehicle) exception" to the search warrant requirement (See Pennsylvania v. Labron (1996) 518 U.S. 938 [116 S.Ct. 2485; 135 L.Ed.2nd 89]), it is accepted that an automobile is commonly an exigent circumstance in and of itself. (People v. Nicholson (1984) 207 Cal.App.3rd 707, 711-712; People v. Superior Court* [Nasmeh] (2007) 151 Cal.App.4th 85, 100-102; People v. Waxler (2014) 224 Cal.App.4th 712, 718-719; People v. Hall (2020) 57 Cal.App.5th 946, 951.)

"A warrantless automobile search 'is not unreasonable if based on facts that would justify the issuance of a warrant, even though a warrant has not actually been obtained.'" (People v. Moore (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 291, 297, quoting United States v. Ross (1982) 456 U.S. 798, at p. 809 [72 L.Ed.2nd 572; 102 S.Ct. 2157].)

"Decisions upholding warrantless searches of vehicles thus do not distinguish between searches conducted on parked vehicles or > vehicles that have been stopped by police on a highway." (People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 814; citing People v. Superior Court* (Overland) (1988) 203 Cal.App.3rd 1114, 1119.)

Pursuant to the "automobile exception," a "warrantless search of a vehicle is permitted 'if there is probable cause to believe that the vehicle contains evidence of a crime.' United States v. Brooks, 610 F.3d 1186, 1193 (9th Cir. 2010). Probable cause exists if there is a 'fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place,' under the totality of the circumstances. United States v. Rodriguez, 869 F.2d 479, 484 (9th Cir. 1989) (quoting Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 238, 103 S.Ct. 2317; 76 L.Ed.2nd 527 (1983)). 'A finding of probable cause must be supported by the objective facts known to the officer at the time of the search.' United States v. Rogers, 656 F.3rd 1023, 1029 (9th Cir. 2011)." (United States v. Faagai (9th Cir. 2017) 869 F.3rd 1145, 1150; see also People v. Johnson (2020) 50 Cal.App.5th 620.)

> See also United States v. Rowe (8th Cir. MN 2017) 878 F.3rd 623; People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853, 861-867; and People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 814.)

> "'Probable cause to search exists when, based upon the totality of the circumstances . . . "there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place."'" (People v. Tousant, supra, quoting People v. Farley (2009) 46 Cal.4th 1053, 1098; and Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 230–239 [76 L. Ed. 2d 527; 103 S. Ct. 2317].)

"Under the so-called automobile exception officers may search a vehicle without a warrant if it 'is readily mobile and probable cause exists to believe it contains contraband' or evidence of criminal activity." (People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1034; quoting Pennsylvania v. Labron (1996) 518 U.S. 938, 940 [116 S.Ct. 2485; 135 L.Ed.2nd 89].)

"The automobile exception provides 'police who have probable cause to believe a lawfully stopped vehicle contains evidence of criminal activity or contraband may conduct a warrantless search of any area of the vehicle in which the evidence might be found.' (People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, 753 . . . ; see also Carroll v. United States (1925) 267 U.S. 132, 149 [69 L.Ed. 543, 45 S.Ct. 280, 549, . . .].) Once an officer has probable cause to search the vehicle under the automobile exception, they 'may conduct a probing search of compartments and containers within the vehicle whose contents are not in plain view.' (United States v. Ross (1982) 456 U.S. 798, 800 [72 L.Ed.2nd 572; 102 S.Ct. 2157].) Probable cause to search exists 'where the known facts and circumstances are sufficient to warrant a man of reasonable prudence in the belief that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found.' (Ornelas v. United States (1996) 517 U.S. 690, 696 [134 L.Ed.2d 911, 918, 116 S. Ct. 1657].)" (People v. McGee (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 796. 801; upholding the search of a vehicle upon the plain sight observation of an opened container of marijuana; a violation of Veh. Code § 23222(b)(1) and H&S Code § 11362.3(a)(4).)

> See also People v. Sims (2021) 59 Cal.App.5th 943, 950-951; search of defendant's vehicle after he was arrested while sitting in his vehicle, for being drunk in public.

"(T)he automobile exception does not permit an officer without a warrant to enter a home or its curtilage in order to search a vehicle therein." (Collins v. Virginia (2018) 584 U.S. 586, 601 [138 S.Ct. 1663; 201 L.Ed.2nd 9]; reaffirming the "plain-view seizure" principles articulated in Horton v. California (1990 496 U.S. 128 [110 S.Ct. 2301; 110 L.Ed.2nd 112, 123] and Soldal v. Cook County (1992) 506 U.S. 56, 65-66 [121 L.Ed. 2nd 450; 113 S.Ct. 538].

However, see Coolidge v. New Hampshire (1971) 403 U.S. 443 [91 S.Ct. 2022; 29 L.Ed.2nd 564, 581-582], decided the year after Chambers v. Maroney (1970) 399 U.S. 42 [26 L.Ed.2nd 419; 90 S.Ct. 1975], and holding that "the 'automobile exception' to the Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement did not apply to seizure and subsequent search at a police station of a car that had been parked in plain view in the defendant's driveway, when defendant already had been arrested inside his home. (Coolidge, supra, 403 U.S. at pp. 456, 458–464.) This was so despite probable cause to search the car. (Id. at p. 458 ["even granting that the police had probable cause to search the car, the application of the [automobile exception] to these facts would extend it far beyond its original rationale"]; id. at p. 464 ["Here there was probable cause, but no exigent circumstances justified the police in proceeding without a warrant."].)" (People v. Rorabaugh (2022) 74 Cal.App.5th 296, 308.)

> The search in Coolidge did not come within the automobile exception to the warrant requirement because the automobile was regularly parked in the driveway and was not fleeing, and the items searched for were not contraband. Finally, the Court found that the car was not an instrumentality of the crime that could be seized in plain view because the police knew in advance of the car's location and had ample opportunity to obtain a valid warrant. (Coolidge v. New Hampshire, supra, at pp. 455-484.)

A warrantless search of defendant's car, during which a police officer discovered a loaded handgun with no serial number in the trunk, fell within the automobile exception to the Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement. Based on the strong odor of burnt marijuana emanating from defendant's car, defendant's admission he had smoked marijuana two hours earlier, and the fact all occupants of the car were under 21 years of age, officers had probable cause to believe they would find contraband or evidence (e.g., marijuana possessed by someone under 21) of a crime in the car. The belief by one of the officers that there was still marijuana in the car based on the current smell of marijuana coming from inside the car was reasonable under the circumstances of this case. Accordingly, the officers had probable cause to search the car under the automobile exception, and the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress. (People v. Castro (2022) 86 Cal.App.5th 314; finding the "automobile exception" to the warrant requirement applicable to this situation, and noting (at p. 320) that "[w]here such probable cause exists, a law enforcement officer may search the vehicle 'irrespective of whether [the offense] is an infraction and not an arrestable offense.'" Quoting People v. McGee (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 796, 805; and People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, 564.)

Upon legally stopping a vehicle, and discovering that the passenger was in possession of methamphetamine, and upon noting a screwdriver in the passenger area of the car, it was held to be lawful to search all parts of the vehicle where there is a fair probability contraband could be concealed, including in the air filter under the hood of the vehicle. Citing Carroll v. United States (1925) 267 U.S. 132 [45 S.Ct. 280; 69 L.Ed.2nd 543], the court found that given the totality of the circumstances, including the passenger's possession of methamphetamine, defendant's previous drug-related arrest, and the presence of a screwdriver in the car—a tool known to be used for hiding drugs in vehicles—the officers had a fair probability to believe that methamphetamine could be concealed in the car, including under its hood. In so ruling, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeal held that the officers had probable cause to search the entire vehicle, including in the air filter under the hood. (United States v. Hays (7th Cir. 2024) 90 F.4th 904.)

Limitation:

The automobile exception, however, is limited to those areas of a vehicle for which there is actual probable cause to believe seizeable property might be found. (People v. Leal (2023) 93 Cal.App.5th 1143.)

In Leal, an officer received information via a radio broadcast from another officer that a juvenile on probation with a firearm restriction likely placed a firearm under the front passenger seat in defendant Leal's (a felon) car before defendant got into his car and drove away. Defendant's car was allegedly under constant surveillance from the time of the alleged firearm placement until the searching officer stopped defendant's car and conducted the search. No firearm was found under the seat. So the officer expanded his search to the trunk of the car where a loaded firearm was found. Pleading no contest to illegally possessing a firearm, the Court of Appeal reversed the trial court's denial of defendant's motion to suppress the firearm. (Pgs. 1147, 1149-1150) In so ruling, the Court held as follows:

> "We hold that when an officer has probable cause to believe contraband or evidence of a crime will be found specifically in the passenger compartment of a vehicle (as compared to having probable cause to believe it will be found somewhere in the vehicle), and no other subsequent discovery or information provides further probable cause to believe the evidence will be found in the trunk, an officer's search of the trunk exceeds the permissible scope of a warrantless search under the automobile exception." (Italics added, pg. 1148.)

The Court in Leal (at pgs. 1151-1152) noted that the automobile exception generally requires that a search fall into one or more of three categories of circumstances:

> "(1) officers have probable cause to believe contraband or evidence of a crime will be found specifically in the trunk or other enclosed compartment;
>
> (2) a search of the passenger compartment reveals contraband or other evidence generating further probable cause to search the trunk or other enclosed compartment; or
>
> (3) probable cause exists as to the entire car (i.e., that the contraband or evidence of a crime will be found somewhere in the car)."

In Leal, it was held that none of the above categories applied. Further, the defendant's mere nervousness was insufficient to establish probable cause. (pg. 1153.)

After Impoundment of the Vehicle:

"(W)here police have probable cause to stop and search a car without a warrant, a subsequent search of the car after it has been driven to a police station is also permissible without a warrant. [Citation] Chambers (v. Maroney (1970) 399 U.S. 42 [26 L.Ed.2nd 419; 90 S.Ct. 1975]) observed that the high court had long adhered to the rule that a warrantless search of an automobile is permissible so long as the police have probable cause to believe the car contains evidence or contraband. [Citation.] This exception to the warrant requirement, Chambers said, is justified by the ease with which an automobile might be moved out of the jurisdiction before a warrant can be obtained. [Citation.] Although Chambers recognized that the problem of mobility might be solved by first seizing the car and then seeking a search warrant, the high court declined to adopt such a rule: 'For constitutional purposes, we see no difference between on the one hand seizing and holding a car before presenting the probable cause issue to a magistrate and on the other hand carrying out an immediate search without a warrant. Given probable cause to search, either course is reasonable under the Fourth Amendment.'" (Italics in case decision; People v. Rorabaugh (2022) 74 Cal.App.5th 296, 308; quoting Robey v. Superior Court (2013) 56 Cal.4th 1218, 1225–1226.)

> However, see Coolidge v. New Hampshire (1971) 403 U.S. 443 [91 S.Ct. 2022; 29 L.Ed.2nd 564, 581-582], decided the year after Chambers, and holding that "the 'automobile exception' to the Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement did not apply to seizure and subsequent search at a police station of a car that had been parked in plain view in the defendant's driveway, when defendant already had been arrested inside his home. (Coolidge, supra, 403 U.S. at pp. 456, 458–464.) This was so despite probable cause to search the car. (Id. at p. 458 ["even granting that the police had probable cause to search the car, the application of the [automobile exception] to these facts would extend it far beyond its original rationale"]; id. at p. 464 ["Here there was probable cause, but no exigent circumstances justified the police in proceeding without a warrant."].)" (People v. Rorabaugh, supra.)

The "search with probable cause" rule applies so long as probable cause exists to believe the vehicle contains evidence of a crime. (United States v. Caldwell (4th Cir. 2021) 7 F.4th 191; search of the trunk of an impounded vehicle two weeks after being impounded was lawful in that a dead battery prevented the earlier opening of the trunk, the Court holding that there was still probable cause to believe the trunk contained evidence of a bank robbery.)

Justifications for the Rule:

The ready (or inherent) mobility of the automobile. (Carroll v. United States (1925) 267 U.S. 132 [45 S.Ct. 280; 69 L.Ed.2nd 543]; United States v. Ross (1982) 456 US. 798 [102 S.Ct. 2157; 72 L.Ed.2nd 572]; People v. Superior Court [Nasmeh] (2007) 151 Cal.App.4th 85, 100-102; People v. Waxler (2014) 224 Cal.App.4th 712, 719; United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 941-943; Collins v. Virginia (2018) 584 U.S. 586, 613 [138 S.Ct. 1663; 201 L.Ed.2nd 9]; People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853. 861; People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 814.)

> It has been held that an easily repairable flat tire on the vehicle does not make it any less inherently mobile. The probable cause rule still applies. (United States v. Short (8th Cir. 2021) 2 F.4th 1076.)

The lessened expectation of privacy in a vehicle, resulting from the "pervasive governmental regulation" of vehicles capable of traveling on public highways. (See Cady v. Dombrowski (1973) 413 U.S. 433 [93 S.Ct. 2523; 37 L.Ed.2nd 706]; South Dakota v. Opperman (1976) 428 U.S. 354 [96 S.Ct. 3092; 49 L.Ed.2nd 1000]; Carroll v. United States (1925) 267 U.S. 132, 153, 156 [45 S.Ct. 280; 60 L.Ed. 543]; People v. Diaz (2013) 213 Cal.App.4th 743, 753-754; People v. Waxler, supra; United States v Camou, supra; Collins v. Virginia, supra; People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853. 861; (United States v. Talley (Dist. Ct. N.D. 2020) 467 F. Supp.3rd 832, 834, referring to a "diminished expectation of privacy.")

> See also People v. Valencia (2011) 201 Cal.App.4th 922, 938-939, comparing the diminished expectation of privacy in one's vehicle when compared to the "heightened expectation of privacy" in one's residence.
>
> Some of that "pervasive regulation," as cited by the Supreme Court in In re Arturo D. (2002) 27 Cal.4th 60 (overruled to the extent it is inconsistent with the Court's holding in People v. Lopez (2019) 8 Cal.5th 353.) includes:
>
> > Veh. Code § 4462(a): Requirement that the vehicle's registration be produced on demand of a peace officer.
> >
> > Veh. Code § 12951(b): Requirement that the driver's license be produced on demand of a peace officer.
> >
> > Veh. Code § 2805(a): Right of the California Highway Patrol and other listed peace officers whose primary duties are to conduct vehicle theft investigations to inspect a motor vehicle for its title in order to determine ownership.
> >
> > Note: Although not mentioned by the Supreme Court, it would seem that Veh. Code § 16028(a), requiring production of proof of insurance upon demand when being cited for another offense, could be added to this list.

The expense, delay, and risk of loss in securing a vehicle while a search warrant is obtained. (People v. Superior Court* [Valdez] (1983) 35 Cal.3rd 11, 16.)

The need for clear guidelines for police. (People v. Superior Court* [Valdez], supra; see also People v. Chavers (1983) 33 Cal.3rd 462, 469; and Arkansas v. Sanders (1979) 442 U.S. 753, 760-761, 765, fn. 14 [99 S.Ct. 2586; 61 L.Ed.2d 235].)

Case Law:

A suspect's general consent to search his car does not allow the officers to drill through the floor of the trunk. "Cutting" or "destroying" an object during a search requires either explicit consent for the destructive search or probable cause. (United States v. Zamora-Garcia (8th Cir. Ark. 2016) 831 F.3rd 979.)

See "The Scope of the Consent," under "Consent Searches" (Chapter 20), below.

"A probable cause inquiry relies on an objective standard; we do not consider an officer's subjective beliefs." (People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853. 862: citing People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, at p. 753.)

> Probable cause "exists 'where the known facts and circumstances are sufficient to warrant a man of reasonable prudence in the belief that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found. . . .'" (People v. Lee, supra, quoting Qrnelas v. United States (1996) 517 U.S. 690, 696 [134 L.Ed.2nd 911; 116 S.Ct. 1657]; People v. Johnson (2020) 50 Cal.App.5th 620.)
>
> The "totality of the circumstances" must be considered. (People v. Lee, supra, citing Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 238 [76 L.Ed.2nd 527; 103 S. Ct. 2317].)

Although a driver's denial of having his driver's license or other identification with him does not justify an officer's search of the automobile for such identification, it might if the officer is able to develop the necessary "probable cause" that the driver lied about his identity. (People v. Lopez (2019) 8 Cal.5th 353, 372-373.), overruling In re Arturo D. (2002) 27 Cal.4th 60, which previously held that the simple denial of having identification justified a limited search of the driver's vehicle in those places were identification is most likely to be found.

The rule is that if such probable cause exists to believe that a lawfully stopped vehicle contains evidence of crime or other contraband, then anywhere in the vehicle that a warrant could have authorized is subject to search. Warrantless searches in such cases are justified by "the reduced expectation of privacy in a vehicle, the fact a vehicle is inherently mobile, and the historical distinction between searches of automobiles and dwellings." (People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, 753; People v. Waxler, supra; "justif(ying) the search of every part of the vehicle and its contents that may conceal the object of the search.")

> Erratic driving, nervousness, and a failure to cooperate, even when combined with knowledge that defendant had hidden a weapon in the air vents in his car on a prior occasion, were held to be insufficient to establish probable cause to search his car. (Id., at pp. 753-755.)

For a court to determine the existence of probable cause, it must consider whether, under the totality of the circumstances, there is a "fair probability" that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place. (People v. Little (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 1364, 1371; quoting Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 238 [103 S.Ct. 2317; 76 L.Ed.2nd 527].)

Warrantless search of defendant's vehicle justified by exigent circumstances (looking for a missing eight-year-old girl) and probable cause (blood seen in the vehicle and a cord hanging out of the trunk). (People v. Panah (2005) 35 Cal.4th 395, 468-469.)

This includes any compartments and containers in the vehicle; assuming the item for which there is probable cause for which to search would reasonably be expected to be in the container searched. (United States v. Ross (1982) 456 U.S. 798 [102 S.Ct. 2157; 72 L.Ed.2nd 572]; People v. Chavers (1983) 33 Cal.3rd 462, 466-467.)

"The scope of a warrantless search of an automobile 'is defined by the object of the search and the places in which there is probable cause to believe that it may be found.'" People v. Diaz (2013) 213 Cal.App.4th 743, 754, citing United States v. Ross, supra, at p. 824.)

Even if the container searched does not belong to the defendant, it is subject to search. (Wyoming v. Houghton (1999) 526 US. 295 [119 S.Ct. 1297; 143 L.Ed.2nd 408]: Where defendant was a passenger in the vehicle, the search of defendant's purse which was left in the car when the passengers were ordered out is okay.)

Note People v. Mitchell (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 672, and People v. Prance (1991) 226 Cal.App.3rd 1525, upholding the search of purses belonging to passengers under the "incident to arrest" theory (above).

However, a search of the female defendant's purse left in the car when an officer is conducting a parole search of a male parolee, is illegal absent a reasonable suspicion to believe that the parolee had joint access, possession or control over the purse. (People v. Baker (2008) 164 Cal.App.4th 1152.)

It is not relevant that the car must be damaged to get to the hidden compartments. (Wimberly v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal.3rd 557, 571.)

It is also lawful to make a warrantless seizure of a vehicle, found in any public area, when an officer has probable cause to believe that the vehicle itself is "forfeitable contraband" (Florida v. White (1999) 526 U.S. 559 [119 S.Ct. 1555; 143 L.Ed.2nd 748]; see also Carroll v. United States (1925) 267 U.S. 132, 150-151 [45 S.Ct. 280; 69 L.Ed. 543].), or is transporting contraband. (United States v. Alverez-Tejeda (9th Cir. 2007) 491 F.3rd 1013.)

"(C)ircumstances unique to the vehicle context justify a search incident to a lawful arrest when it is "reasonable to believe evidence relevant to the crime of arrest might be found in the vehicle." (Arizona v. Gant (2009) 556 U.S. 332 [129 S.Ct. 1710; 173 L.Ed.2nd 485], citing Thornton v. United States (2004) 541 U.S. 615, 629-632 [124 S.Ct. 2127; 158 L.Ed.2nd 905].)

Note: This theory for justifying a warrantless search, which is likely to be limited to the searches of vehicles (Thornton v. United States, infra, at p. 632.), generates more questions than it answers: For instance, "reasonable to believe" is not defined (e.g., "probable cause" or "reasonable suspicion?") Neither are the other legal parameters (e.g.: Is it limited to the passenger area of the car, must it be contemporaneous with the arrest in time and place, etc.?) even discussed. The theory itself comes from the concurring (two justices) opinion in Thornton v. United States (2004) 541 U.S. 615, at pp. 629-632 [124 S.Ct. 2127; 158 L.Ed.2d 905]. Thornton itself cites as its authority United States v. Rabinowitz (1950) 339 U.S. 56 [70 S.Ct. 430; 94 L.Ed. 653], which was itself all but overruled in Chimel v. California (1969) 395 U.S. 752, 759-768 [89 S.Ct. 2034; 23 L.Ed.2nd 685].

The warrantless search of a vehicle pursuant to the "automobile exception" to the warrant requirement is no less justified merely because the vehicle is parked at the defendant's apartment in a nearby carport. The "twin justifications" for not requiring search warrants to search vehicles; i.e., "the pervasive schemes of regulation, which necessarily lead to reduced expectations of privacy, and the exigencies attendant to ready mobility," applies just as much as when the car is out on the street. (People v. Hockstraser (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 883, 902-905.)

Having probable cause to arrest a passenger in a vehicle for providing false information to a peace officer concerning her age does not constitute probable cause to believe that she is hiding identification in a car when she tells the officer that she does not have any identification with her. (United States v. Rodger (9th Cir. 2011) 656 F.3rd 1023.)

During a traffic stop, defendant gave counterfeit bills to another passenger who stuffed them, folded, into the weather stripping between the right front passenger door and window. An officer noticed the partially-visible bills, removed them, unfolded them, and observed that they were counterfeit. The appellate court determined that suppression was not warranted because (1) the circumstances presented a fair probability that the money was involved in drug trafficking and that a search of the car would have revealed evidence of a crime since the passenger was nervous, a parolee, and appeared under the influence of a drug, and the money was located in a place that suggested an effort to conceal its presence and called to the officer's mind the door compartments and other hiding places used by drug couriers to transport contraband and cash, and (2) a separate "secondary" search did not occur when the officer unfolded the bills since the money was within the scope of the search. (United States v. Ewing (9th Cir. 2011) 638 F.3rd 1226, 1230-1234.)

> The fact that the defendant and his cohorts were involved in counterfeiting instead of drug trafficking did not detract from the fact that probable cause to believe that the crime being committed was related to drugs. (Id., at p. 1233.)

Two searches of defendant's car were not justified under the probable cause theory in that probable cause was not established by defendant's erratic driving, nervousness, or refusal to exit the car, or by the location of the stop in gang territory, or the discovery of baggies and cash in the first search. (People v. Evans (2011) 200 Cal.App.4th 735, 753-755.)

> "Although nervousness and furtive gestures are not sufficient by themselves to support a patsearch, "[n]ervous, evasive behavior is a pertinent factor in determining reasonable suspicion." (People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, 560; quoting In re H.M. (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 136, 144.)

> Mere nervousness, by itself, does not establish probable cause. (People v. Leal (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1051, 1153.)

A vehicle stop and search based upon the following was held to be based upon sufficient probable cause: (1) The vehicle was stopped only 33 minutes after the initial dispatch was sent out; (2) it was stopped in the city in which the crime of residential burglary had occurred, and only about three miles away from the scene of the crime; (3) the vehicle was "somewhat unique" in that it was a red Ford F-150 with chrome rims; and (4) two Black people were in the truck—one male in his 50's and one female in her 30's, all matching the descriptions put out by police dispatch. Also, upon contacting the vehicle's occupants, (5) one of the vehicle's occupants admitted being at the scene of the burglary, and (6) the clothing descriptions for both subjects matched the victim's descriptions. (People v. Little (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 1364, 1370-1373.)

A police officer's conclusory statement that a box in defendant's car came from a "suspected narcotics stash house," without defining why the residence was considered to be a "stash house," and his observation that defendant "did not take a direct route to his location," were not sufficient to establish probable cause to conduct a warrantless search of defendant's car under the automobile exception to the Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement. (United States v. Cervantes (9th Cir. 2012) 703 F.3rd 1135, 1138-1140.)

> The Court further held that a detective's conclusion that defendant had engaged in "countersurveillance driving techniques" was not substantiated by the record, at least when compared with prior cases (e.g., see United States v. Del Vizo (9th Cir. 1990) 918 F.2nd 821, 822.), when the only evidence was that defendant had not taken the most direct route. (United States v. Cervantes, supra, at p. 1140.)

"A police officer has probable cause to conduct a search when 'the facts available to [him] would "warrant a [person] of reasonable caution in the belief"' that contraband or evidence of a crime is present. [Citations] The test for probable cause is not reducible to 'precise definition or quantification.' [Citation]. 'Finely tuned standards such as proof beyond a reasonable doubt or by a preponderance of the evidence . . . have no place in the [probable-cause] decision.' [Citation]. All we have required is the kind of 'fair probability' on which "reasonable and prudent [people,] not legal technicians, act.' [Citation]" (Florida v. Harris (2013) 568 U.S. 237. 243-244 [133 S.Ct. 1050; 185 L.Ed.2nd 61]; a warrantless search of a vehicle based upon a drug-detection dog's sniff.)

Finding a cellphone in an arrestee's vehicle, and then not attempting a search of the phone for another hour and twenty minutes, negates any argument that an exigency existed, making such a search unlawful. (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 937-945.)

Information obtained from the suspects themselves (e.g., through a lawful wiretap), absent some reason to believe the subjects were not telling the truth, is entitled to the same level of belief as that from a citizen informant, and will supply the probable cause necessary to justify a traffic stop of the vehicle and then, particularly with corroboration received at the scene of the stop that "eliminat(ing) virtually any doubt on that score, the warrantless seizure of that car pending the obtaining of a search warrant. (United States v. Magallon-Lopez (9th Cir. 2016) 817 F.3rd 671, 675-676.)

An extensive narcotics investigation involving wiretaps and surveillances of defendant and a known drug dealer led to defendant being stopped in his vehicle. The Court upheld the trial court's conclusion that a warrantless search of defendant's truck, upon him being stopped and detained after an apparent buy of methamphetamine, was held to be justified by the automobile exception, there being probable cause to believe that defendant had just make a purchase and that the contraband would be found in his truck. (United States v. Faagai (9th Cir. 2017) 869 F.3rd 1145, 1149-1151.)

Removal of the dashboard console to an automobile, although beyond the scope of an inventory search, was held to be lawful based upon the separate legal theory of probable cause, under the "automobile exception," where a white powder, recognized by the officer as a cutting agent for a controlled substance, had been found under the seat and there were indications that the console had been tampered with. (People v. Zabala (2018) 19 Cal.App.5th 335, 343-344.)

Observing defendant make a hand-to-hand sale of a controlled "rock-like substance," where the officer had a "substantial basis to believe" that the rock-like substance observed in his hand, but not given to the buyer, and the money received from the buyer, when not found on defendant's person upon his later arrest, would likely be in his car that he entered immediately after the sale, a subsequent warrantless search of that car was held to be lawful. (People v. Johnson (2018) 21 Cal.App.5th 1026, 1038-1039.)

Probable cause justifying the warrantless search of defendant's vehicle was supported by any (or all) of the following factors: (1) Defendant, at the scene of a traffic collision, had claimed to be hurrying to pick up his daughter to take her to the hospital, only to be seen driving again in the same area 30 minutes later, the Court noting that apparently false statements and inconsistent stories can support a finding of probable cause that a person is involved in criminal activity. (2) Upon contacting defendant asleep in his vehicle and taking him out of the car, his sudden act of reaching toward the floor mat supported a finding of probable cause that contraband or evidence of a crime would be located in the vehicle. (3) A conspicuously raised floor mat where defendant had attempted to reach added to the officer's belief that defendant was involved in criminal activity. A warrantless search of that area under the floor mat (finding a firearm) was upheld under the "automobile exception," based upon probable cause to believe that there was evidence of illegal activity under the floor mat. (United States v. McGhee (8th Cir. 2019) 944 F.3rd 740.)

When a heavily intoxicated defendant was contacted by police in the passenger seat of a parked car in a bar parking lot, the officers believed he was in violation of a San Diego municipal code section (i.e., San Diego Municipal Code section 85.10, making it illegal to be under the influence in or near a car in public), the car was searched, and multiple concealed handguns recovered. With defendant's motion to suppress the firearms being denied by the trial court, the Appellate Court ruled that the search was permissible under the "automobile exception," where the officers had probable cause to believe open containers of alcohol might be found in the vehicle. (People v. Sims (2021) 59 Cal.App.5th 943, 950-952.)

> The Court further held that the initial search of the passenger area of the vehicle was lawful as incident to defendant's arrest for public intoxication because he was still unsecured and the passenger area of his car was within reaching distance when officers discovered the first loaded firearm. The fact that defendant was paralyzed from the waist down did not render it unreasonable for the arresting officers to believe he might grab something from the vehicle's rear floorboard. (Id., at pp. 953-955.)
>
> Also note that the Court hinted that Pen. Code § 647(f), drunk in public, would have worked just as well as San Diego's municipal code section. (Id., at p. 949, fn. 3.)

Upon arresting defendant for a violation of a municipal code section (section 85.10 of the San Diego Municipal, for being "under the influence" of alcohol, while "in or about" a motor vehicle while "in a public place," although the Court opined that Pen. Code § 647(f) would have worked just as well; see pg. 948, fn. 2, pg. 949, fn. 3, and pg. 951, fn. 4.), it was held that searching defendant's vehicle for evidence related to that violation (i.e., "evidence of alcohol consumption, such as unsealed alcohol containers") was lawful. (People v. Sims (2021) 59 Cal.App.5th 943, 950-952; rejecting defendant's arguments that his inebriation was just as likely to be because he was parked in the parking lot of a bar (which evidence of his state of intoxication without looking for more evidence.)

The Court upheld the warrantless probable cause search of defendant's car because it was a rental, it was parked haphazardly, it was unfamiliar to neighbors, and it was close to shell casings and an abandoned gun magazine at the scene of a shooting. The trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence downloaded from his cellphone, seized after the warrantless search of his car left at the scene of the shooting, where there was probable cause to search his car under the automobile exception to the warrant requirement, where there was probable cause to seize his cellphone, which was found in plain view in the car, and where the search warrant for the cellphone was valid under the independent source doctrine. (People v. Tousant (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 804, 814-820.)

> "Here, law enforcement could reasonably conclude the Camaro was connected to the shooting and could contain evidence relevant to the crime." (Id., at p. 814, citing People v. Superior Court (Hampton) (1968) 264 Cal.App.2nd 794, 798.)

The warrantless seizure of defendant's electronic devices and related items by the FBI from his vehicle with probable cause to believe that the devices contained child pornography was lawful. Probable cause was established where the agents (1) knew that someone associated with the defendant's IP address had downloaded child pornography; (2) they were told by defendant's future son-in-law and daughter that he was the likely suspect; (3) it was confirmed that none of the future son-in-law and daughter's electronic devices contained child pornography, which further supported the belief that defendant, being the only suspect left, was the primary suspect as well as a belief that he had the devices with him on the road (he being a truck driver); and (4) the FBI knew that defendant had previously committed a child pornography-related crime in another jurisdiction. (United States v. Keck (8th Cir. AR 2021) 2 F.4th 1085: A search warrant was later obtained for a forensic inspection of defendant's electronic devices.)

Having watched known criminal street gang members (belonging to a gang that was known to traffic in guns and drugs) visit a known gang hangout for three minutes, with two occupants of the vehicle going into the residence and them coming out, followed by the resident (also a known gang member) coming out immediately thereafter, leaning into the vehicle, and then going back into the house, the officers had probable cause to stop the vehicle as it left the scene and search it for guns and/or drugs. (People v. Delgado (2022) 78 Cal.App.5th 425, 429.)

These same observations and the results of the vehicle search also provided sufficient probable cause to obtain a search warrant for a search of the residence. (Id., at pp. 429-431.)

Note: Assuming that there is such a thing as an all-inclusive "automobile exception" to the search warrant requirement is perhaps a dangerous assumption. There are still situations where there are viable arguments that a search warrant is necessary in order to lawfully search a vehicle. (See below)

Problem: Odor of Alcohol:

Defendant was stopped for speeding. The officer smelled the fresh odor of beer emitting from the vehicle interior. There was no evidence the driver was impaired. A search of the passenger compartment for open alcohol containers was conducted. An open beer can, two straight blades knives, and a billy club were found. In pockets sewn into a seat cover a gun magazine was found. A loaded .380 auto/ammo clips was found in a duffel bag and cocaine and methamphetamine packaged for sale in a toiletry bag. Because of the fresh odor of alcohol, a probable cause search for open containers was justified. Once the knives were located, a protective frisk for more weapons was justified. Once the officer found the billy club, the entire passenger area could be searched for more weapons as incident to arrest which resulted in the legal discovery of the additional evidence. (People v. Molina (1991) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1038).

Problem: Marijuana in a Vehicle: Does the simple presence of a legal amount of marijuana, with or without the odor of marijuana emanating from the vehicle, provide an officer with probable cause justifying a warrantless search of the entire vehicle?

Other Jurisdictions:

The courts in some jurisdictions feel that the odor alone, without other suspicious circumstances, may not be sufficient to establish probable cause. (See People v. Taylor (Mich. 1997) 564 N.W.2nd 24; odor of marijuana did not justify the warrantless search of a vehicle.)

It has also been held elsewhere that there must be probable cause to believe that there is a criminal amount of marijuana in a vehicle in order to justify a warrantless search. (See Commonwealth v. Cruz (2011) 459 Mass. 459 [945 N.E.2d 899].)

However, it was not error for the federal district court to deny defendant's motion to suppress evidence retrieved from his car because the prolonged stop following a routine traffic stop was justified by the smell of marijuana along with the credible testimony by the police officer. The odor alone was sufficient to establish probable cause to search the automobile and its contents. (United States v. Smith) (8th Cir. 2015) 789 F.3rd 923.)

"(T)he smell of burnt marijuana alone establishes probable cause to search a vehicle for the illegal substance." (United States v. Snyder (10th Cir. 2015) 793 F.3rd 1241; see also United States v. Walker (8th Cir. 2016) 840 F.3rd 477; odor of unburned marijuana alone supplied sufficieint probable cause to search defendant's vehicle.)

Pre-Legalization of Marijuana:

Odor of marijuana smoke during a traffic stop justified the search of a vehicle. (People v. Lovejoy (1970) 12 Cal.App.3rd 883, 887.)

The odor of marijuana emanating from two trucks at a private airstrip, under circumstances consistent with smuggling operations, was found to constitute probable cause to believe the trucks contained marijuana. (United States v. Johns (1985) 469 U.S. 478 [83 L.Ed.2nd 890].)

The odor of beer noted during a traffic stop supplied probable cause to search the car for alcohol. (People v. Molina (1994) 25 Cal.App.4th 1038.)

The odor of burnt marijuana plus the plain sight observation of a pipe containing what appeared to be marijuana residue in defendant's vehicle was sufficient to justify the warrantless search of the vehicle. (People v. Waxler (2014) 224 Cal. App. 4th 712.)

The combined odor of burnt and fresh marijuana coming from defendant's motor vehicle supplied the necessary probable cause to search defendant's vehicle without a search warrant, under the "automobile exception" to the search warrant requirement. (United States v. Johnson (9th Cir. 2019) 913 F.3rd 793, 801; citing United States v. Barron (9th Cir. 1972) 472 F.2nd 1215, 1217.)

Post-Legalization of Marijuana (i.e., after January 1, 2018):

Issue: Since California legalized the possession of recreational use of marijuana (now referred to as "cannabis"), whether or not the odor of marijuana (or burning or bulk marijuana) in a vehicle alone, typically observed during a traffic stop, establishes probable cause to believe a crime is being committed in the officer's presence, thus justifying an immediate warrantless search for contraband, is an issue.

Case Law:

In People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, at pp. 561-562, the search of defendant's vehicle was upheld, noting the following:

> "[A] warrantless search of an automobile is permissible so long as the police have probable cause to believe the car contains evidence or contraband." (Robey v. Superior Court (2013) 56 Cal.4th 1218, 1225.) The issue is whether the officers' knowledge that a suspect possesses what, on its face, appears to be a lawful amount of recreational marijuana (i.e., now referred to as "cannabis") justifies a search of the vehicle for possible violations of the statutes regulating such possession. Proposition 64, effective as of November 8, 2016, made lawful the possession of limited amounts of cannabis. It is argued that since passage of Proposition 64, with its enactment of H&S § 113621, marijuana is no longer "contraband." Subdivision (c) of Section 113621 does in fact provide that "[c]annabis and cannabis products involved in any way with conduct deemed lawful by this section are not contraband nor subject to seizure, and no conduct deemed lawful by this section shall constitute the basis for detention, search, or arrest." (Italics added) However, it remains unlawful to possess, transport, or give away cannabis in excess of the statutorily permitted limits, to cultivate cannabis plants in excess of statutory limits and in violation of local ordinances, to engage in unlicensed "commercial cannabis activity," and to possess, smoke or ingest cannabis in various designated places, including in a motor vehicle while driving. (See B&P Code §§ 26001(k), 26037, and 26038(c); and H&S Code §§ 11362.1(a), 11362.2(a), 11362.3(a), and 11362.45(a).) Driving a motor vehicle on public highways under the influence of any drug (V.C. § 23152(f)) or while in possession of an open container of marijuana (V.C. § 23222(b)(1)), are > not acts "deemed lawful" by H&S § 11362.1. To the contrary, Section 11362.1 does not permit any person to possess an open container or open package of cannabis or cannabis products while driving, operating, or riding in the passenger seat or compartment of a motor vehicle or to smoke or ingest cannabis or cannabis products while driving a motor vehicle. (H&S § 11362.3(a)(4)) "[P]robable cause requires only a probability or substantial chance of criminal activity, not an actual showing of such activity." (Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 243, fn. 13. [103 S.Ct. 2317; 76 L.Ed.2nd 527].) The fact that there may also be an innocent explanation does not detract from the finding of probable cause. It has previously been held that a police officer has probable cause to search a vehicle based on the odor of marijuana despite the defendant's presentation of a medical marijuana prescription. (People v. Strasburg (2007) 148 Cal.App.4th 105.) It has also been held that a police officer is entitled to investigate to determine whether a person possesses marijuana for personal medical needs and to determine whether he adhered to the Compassionate Use Act of 1996's limits on possession. "It is well settled that even if a defendant makes only personal use of marijuana found in the passenger compartment of a car, a police officer may reasonably suspect additional quantities of marijuana might be found in the car." (People v. Waxler (2014) 224 Cal.App.4th 712, 723-724.) Other states where marijuana use has been legalized are in accord, finding that "the odor of marijuana is still suggestive of criminal activity."

The Court in Fews, therefore, held that "(d)ue to the odor of marijuana emanating from the (Saturn) SUV and Mims, as well as Mims's admission that there was marijuana in his half-burnt cigar, there was a fair probability that a search of the SUV might yield additional contraband or evidence." The search of defendant's vehicle, therefore, was held to be lawful. (Id., at p. 563.)

> See People v. Johnson (2020) 50 Cal.App.5th 620, at p. 630, agreeing with the rule of Fews.

Also cited in Fews (at pp. 563-564) as support for the Court's conclusions was People v. Zuniga (Colo. 2016) 372 P.3rd 1052, 1059 [2016 CO 52], holding that despite Colorado's legalization of marijuana, "a substantial number of other marijuana-related activities remain unlawful under Colorado law. Given that state of affairs, the odor of marijuana is still suggestive of criminal activity." Also cited in support of this theory was Robinson v. State (Md.Ct.App. 2017) 451 Md. 94 [152 A.3rd 661, 664–665].)

However, see People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853, 861-867, where it was held that a driver of a motor vehicle having on his person a small, legal (in a sealed bag) amount of marijuana (i.e., with no odor emanating from the vehicle) is of "fairly minimal significance" in determining whether there is probable cause to believe the vehicle contains an illegal amount. "(T)here must be . . . additional evidence beyond the mere possession of a legal amount" for there to be probable cause to believe there is more marijuana in a suspect's vehicle. (p. 862.)

Also, in People v. Johnson (2020) 50 Cal.App.5th 620, it was held that since passage of Proposition 64 (with its enactment of H&S Code § 11362.1(c)), legalizing the possession by adults (21 years of age, or older) of less than an ounce of marijuana, the simple observation of a small (legal) amount of marijuana, even with the odor of marijuana, no longer establishes probable cause to search the entire vehicle for more marijuana (differentiating the facts here from those of both Strasburg and Waxler.

> Note: There was no testimony in Johnson of the odor of "burning," or "bulk," marijuana, either of which would have indicated a violation of H&S Code § 11362.1. (See People v. Johnson, supra, at p. 630, differentiating the facts in this case from People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, at p. 563, where observing defendant smoking marijuana (as a violation of H&S Code §11362.3(a)(4) and V.C. § 23222(b)(1); open container of marijuana) was held to be sufficient to establish probable cause to search the vehicle.)

Possession of a legal amount of marijuana, but contained in an opened baggie in violation of both H&S Code § 11362.1(a)(4) and Veh. Code § 23222(b)(1), was held to take it from under the protections of H&S Code § 11362.1(c), where it was declared by statute that marijuana lawfully possessed (i.e, an ounce or less) is not contraband, and cannot be used as justification for a search, detention, or arrest. (People v. McGee (2020) 53 Cal.App.5th 796; search of a passenger's purse, based upon an officer's plain sight observation of an opened baggie of marijuana of under an ounce, was held to be lawful.)

The lawful possession of marijuana (i.e., an ounce or less) in a vehicle does not provide probable cause to search the vehicle. (People v. Hall (2020) 57 Cal.App.5th 946, 952.)

> In Hall, Division Two of the First District Court of Appeal reiterated the rule as established in People v. Johnson (2020) 50 Cal.App.5th 620, that "the mere presence of a lawful amount of marijuana" is not sufficient to establish probable cause to search under the "automobile exception." (Id., at pgs. 948-949, 954.)
>
> Also consistent with People v. Johnson, the Court noted that "open" container does not mean that the container must be sealed. A baggie of marijuana is not "open" merely because it is in a baggie that is easily opened or may have been opened at one time. (Id., at pg. 957.)

Possession of a legal amount of marijuana (i.e., cannabis), stored in a vehicle as allowed under the law, does not, by itself, justify a search for more marijuana. The Court further rejected the argument that the odor of fresh marijuana in a vehicle, by itself, not knowing how long that odor might linger, justifies a search of the vehicle for the source of the odor. (People v. Shumake (2019) 45 Cal.App.5th Supp. 1.)

Even though not sealed, a closed container (i.e., a pill bottle) is in compliance with V.C. § 23222(b)(1). Quoting People v. Shumake, supra, the Court ruled that an officer's "belief that any cannabis being transported in a vehicle must be in a heat-sealed container is not supported by the plain language of Section 23222(b)(1)." Therefore, an officer cannot rely on the presence of a closed (even though not sealed) container of less than an ounce of marijuana—it being lawful—as justification to search a vehicle for more marijuana. (United States v. Talley (Dist. Ct. N.D. 2020) 467 F. Supp.3rd 832, 835-836.)

> The District Court further ruled that the fact that the possession of any marijuana at all is still a violation of federal law (marijuana still being classified federally as a Schedule I controlled substance) does not provide an excuse to skirt the H&S § 11362.1(c) protections from being arrested or searched. The Ninth Circuit has already held that local police officers do not have probable cause to arrest when the alleged violation is of federal law in those circumstances where the officers are, at the time, investigating a violation of state law. See United States v. $186,416.00 in U.S. Currency (9th Cir. 2010) 590 F.3rd 942, 948. (Id., at pp. 836-837.)

Probable cause justifying a warrantless search of a vehicle was found where a trained and experienced officer was able to testify to the following factors: (1) the park where the searched vehicle was located was a high-crime area; (2) defendant was observed leaning into the open passenger's side door of a parked Jeep, indicating possible narcotics deal was going down; (3) upon seeing the officer, defendant walked away from the Jeep; (4) when the officer approached the vehicle, the occupant of the vehicle opened the driver's side door and there was a strong smell of fresh marijuana; (5) the vehicle's occupant appeared to be nervous; (6) when asked about the smell of fresh marijuana, vehicle's occupant claimed the smell came from him because he had recently smoked marijuana; (7) the vehicle's occupant also indicated that the odor might be from an empty mason jar with what appeared to be marijuana residue inside; and (8) when asked if there were illegal items in the Jeep, the occupant responded "[n]ot that I know of," arousing further suspicion. (People v. Moore (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 291, 298.)

> In Moore, the Court rejected defendant's "piecemeal approach to the probable cause analysis," noting that the officer's extensive training and experience, together with multiple factors indicating that the odor of marijuana coming from a vehicle was not explained by the empty jar shown > to the officer which the occupant said had at one time contained marijuana, and established the necessary probable cause to search the vehicle and it's containers (finding a loaded firearm in defendant's backpack). The Court also differentiated People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853 (above), on its facts. The officer was also able to testify that he could tell the difference between the odors of "burnt" and "raw" marijuana.

See also Commonwealth v. Craan (Mass. 2014) 469 Mass. 24: "Federal law does not supply an alternative basis for investigating possession of one ounce or less of marijuana."

It has also been noted (see United States v. Jones (U.S. Dist. Ct 2020) 438 F.Supp.3rd 1039, at pp. 1053-1054) that the issue of whether the odor of marijuana alone, since passage of Proposition 64, is sufficient to establish probable cause to search a vehicle is currently before the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal in several cases. (Referencing United States v. Martinez, Case No. 17-CR-00257-LHK, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 138329 (N.D. Cal. 2018) and United States v. Maffei, Case No. 18-CR-00174 YGR, 417 F. Supp.3rd 1212, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 177755 (N.D. Cal. 2019.)

During a lawful traffic stop, officers smelled marijuana. The Court held that without any evidence to the effect that defendant was driving while under the influence of marijuana, that he was smoking it while driving, or that he was in violation of any other marijuana-related restrictions, the search of the car could not be justified under a probable cause theory. The simple odor of marijuana alone being insufficient (See People v. Fews (2018) 27 Cal.App.5th 553, and People v. Johnson (2020) 50 Cal.App.5th 620.), there was no evidence of any such violations in this case. (Blakes v. Superior Court (2021) 72 Cal.App.5th 904, 910-913.)

A warrantless search of defendant's car, during which a police officer discovered a loaded handgun with no serial number, fell within the automobile exception to the Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement. Based upon the strong odor of burnt marijuana emanating from defendant's car, defendant's admission he had smoked marijuana two hours earlier, and the fact all occupants of the car were under 21 years of age, officers had probable cause to believe they would find contraband or evidence (e.g., marijuana possessed by someone under 21) of a crime in the car. The belief by one of the officers that there was still marijuana in the car based on the current smell of burnt marijuana coming from inside the car was reasonable under the circumstances of this case. Accordingly, the officers had probable cause to search the car under the automobile exception, and the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress. (People v. Castro (2022) 86 Cal.App.5th 314; finding the "automobile exception" to the warrant requirement applicable to this situation.)

Problem: More than one occupant in a vehicle: Where evidence is found in a vehicle within reach of more than one of the occupants, but no one admits ownership (or everyone specifically denies ownership), who, if anyone, is subject to arrest?

Where a large amount of money is found rolled up in a vehicle's glove compartment, and five plastic glassine baggies of cocaine are found behind the center armrest of the backseat, with the armrest pushed up into the closed position to hide the contraband, such contraband being accessible to all the occupants of the vehicle, the arrest of all three subjects in the vehicle (driver, right front and rear seat passengers) was supported by probable cause. (Maryland v. Pringle (2003) 540 U.S. 366 [124 S.Ct. 795; 157 L.Ed.2nd 769].)

Officers had probable cause to arrest both the passenger and the driver for possession of a billy club seen resting against the driver's door. (People v. Vermouth (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3rd 746, 756.)

Informing two suspects in a vehicle that they would both be arrested for possession of a concealed firearm, prompting a response from defendant that he'd "take the charge," was not the functional equivalent of an interrogation that required a Miranda admonishment. (United States v. Collins (6th Cir. 2012) 683 F.3rd 697, 701-703.)

Note: However, absent sufficient evidence to connect contraband found in the vehicle to one person or the other "beyond a reasonable doubt," the case is unlikely to be filed by a prosecutor.

Problem: Search of already impounded vehicle: Search of a vehicle that is already impounded and in police custody, where the search is no longer "contemporaneous in time and place?"

The "contemporaneous in time and place" requirement only applies to "searches incident to arrest." If probable cause to believe a vehicle contains contraband or other sizable items existed at the time the vehicle is seized and impounded, a delayed, warrantless search is no less valid than if searched at the time of seizure. The courts have held that such a delayed search imposes no greater intrusion upon a defendant's privacy rights than if it had been immediately searched upon initial seizure. (People v. Nicholson (1989) 207 Cal.App.3rd 707; United States v. Johns (1985) 469 U.S. 478 [83 L.Ed.2nd 890]; United States v. Garcia (9th Cir. 2000) 205 F.3rd 1182.)

> "(T)he passage of time between the seizure and the search of [a] car is legally irrelevant." (People v. Superior Court* [Nasmeh] (2007) 151 Cal.App.4th 85, 100-102; citing United States v. Gastiaburo (4th Cir. 1994) 16 F.3rd 582, 587.)

"Delays, however, must be 'reasonable in light of all the circumstances.'" (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 941; citing United States v. Albers (9th Cir. 1998) 136 F.3rd 670, where a seven-to-ten-day delay in viewing videotapes and file seized from a houseboat was upheld.)

But note; A Search Warrant Required? Based upon the reasoning of the above cases, it is arguable that when a vehicle is impounded at a time when there is no probable cause to believe it contains contraband or other seizeable items, developing probable cause to search the vehicle at a later time, probably does not allow a warrantless search after impoundment. There no longer being any legal theory allowing for a warrantless search of a vehicle when the probable cause is developed after the fact, nor any exigent circumstances, a search warrant should be obtained.

Problem: Searches of "closed containers" in a vehicle:

Old Rule: If a police officer had probable cause to believe a particular closed container in a vehicle contained contraband, as opposed to probable cause to believe that there was contraband in some unknown location in the vehicle in general, then the container itself would have to be seized and a search warrant obtained before opening it. (United States v. Chadwick (1977) 433 U.S. 1 [97 S.Ct. 2476; 53 L.Ed.2nd 538].)

New Rule: Recognizing the absurdity of trying to distinguish the rule of United States v. Ross (1982) 456 U.S. 789 [102 S.Ct. 2157; 72 L.Ed.2nd 572], allowing a warrantless search of containers in a vehicle if there was probable cause to search the car in general (above), and the rule of Chadwick, requiring a warrant for a particular container when there was probable cause to believe a known container in a vehicle itself contained contraband or other sizable items, the United States Supreme Court finally overruled Chadwick in California v. Acevedo (1991) 500 U.S. 565, 580 [111 S.Ct. 1982; 114 L.Ed.2nd 619].

> Now, pursuant to Acevedo, any time a closed container is found in a car, whether searched (1) incident to arrest, (2) with probable cause to believe there is contraband or other seizeable evidence somewhere in the car, or (3) with probable cause to believe a specific container within the vehicle contains contraband or sizable items, the container may be searched without a search warrant. (See also People v. Molina (1994) 25 Cal.App.4th 1038; and People v. Thompson (2010) 49 Cal.4th 79, 112.)
>
> This includes a closed container belonging to a passenger even though the passenger is not arrested (People v. Mitchell (1995) 35 Cal.App.4th 672; People v. Prance (1991) 226 Cal.App.3rd 1525.) and even though the passenger has already been ordered out of the vehicle. (Wyoming v. Houghton (1999) 526 U.S. 295 [119 S.Ct. 1297; 143 L.Ed.2nd 408].)
>
> Search of a purse found in defendant's vehicle after defendant had been arrested outside the car from which he had just fled, with crack cocaine and a large amount of money in his pockets indicating that he had been engaged in the selling of drugs, constituted sufficient probable cause to believe that more contraband, or other evidence of drug dealing, would be found in his car. The warrantless search of the car, and the purse (in which a gun was found), was upheld as lawful. (United States v. Williams (9th Cir. 2017) 846 F.3rd 303, 312-313.)
>
> If, however, the passenger takes the container (such as a briefcase) with him or her upon being ordered out of a vehicle, is that container subject to search? Maybe not. (See United States v. Vaughan (9th Cir. 1983) 718 F.2nd 332, suppressing the contents of defendant's briefcase which he took from a car as he exited the car during a traffic stop.)
>
> > Note: However, with probable cause to believe that a vehicle contains something such as illegal drugs, it is arguable that the occupant may have more of the same on his or her person, subjecting that person, and any containers they are carrying, to a probable cause search without a search warrant. (See "Searches with Probable Cause," under "Searches of Persons" (Chapter 11), above.
>
> While the odor of marijuana coming from a mailed package will justify the seizure of such package, it does not excuse the lack of a search warrant when law enforcement opens the package without exigent circumstances. (Robey v. Superior Court (2013) 56 Cal.4th 1218, 1223-1243; overruling People v. McKinnon (1972) 7 Cal.3rd 899, 909; which had held to the contrary.)

When the search of a cellphone is at issue, it has been held that the limitations imposed by Chadwick continue to apply. (Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373, 393-395 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430]; People v. Macabeo (2016) 1 Cal.5th 1206, 1215.)

> See "Exception; Cellphones," above, and "Problem: When the item searched is a cellphone," below.

Probable cause justifying a warrantless search of a vehicle was found where a trained and experienced officer was able to testify to the following factors: (1) the park where the searched vehicle was located was a high-crime area; (2) defendant was observed leaning into the open passenger's side door of a parked Jeep, indicating possible narcotics deal was going down; (3) upon seeing the officer, defendant walked away from the Jeep; (4) when the officer approached the vehicle, the occupant of the vehicle opened the driver's side door and there was a strong smell of fresh marijuana; (5) the vehicle's occupant appeared to be nervous; (6) when asked about the smell of fresh marijuana, vehicle's occupant claimed the smell came from him because he had recently smoked marijuana; (7) the vehicle's occupant also indicated that the odor might be from an empty mason jar with what appeared to be marijuana residue inside; and (8) when asked if there were illegal items in the Jeep, the occupant responded "[n]ot that I know of," arousing further suspicion. (People v. Moore (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 291, 298.)

> In Moore, the Court rejected defendant's "piecemeal approach to the probable cause analysis," noting that the officer's extensive training and experience, together with multiple factors indicating that the odor of marijuana coming from a vehicle was not explained by the empty jar shown to the officer which the occupant said had at one time contained marijuana, and established the necessary probable cause to search the vehicle and it's containers (finding a loaded firearm in defendant's backpack). The Court also differentiated People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853 (above), on its facts. The officer was also able to testify that he could tell the difference between the odors of "burnt" and "raw" marijuana.

Problem: When the vehicle is parked in the curtilage of a residence:

An exception to the general rule that vehicles are subject to warrantless searches when there exists probable cause to believe that the vehicle contains evidence of a crime exists when the vehicle is parked within the curtilage of a home. (Collins v. Virginia (2018) 584 U.S. 586, 594 [138 S.Ct. 1663; 201 L.Ed.2nd 9]; the illegal search in this case consisting of raising a tarp to expose a motorcycle parked in a home's driveway, and making visible the motorcycles license plate and VIN number.

> "The question before the Court is whether the automobile exception justifies the invasion of the curtilage. (fn. omitted) The answer is no." (Italics added; Id., at p. 594.)
>
> Note: The Court in Collins notes an exception to this rule when officers, observing a searchable vehicle on the street, follow the driver of that vehicle into the curtilage of a home. Under these unique circumstances, the "automobile exception" would allow for the warrantless search of the vehicle despite it being within the curtilage at the time of the search. (See Scher* v. *United States (1938) 305 U.S. 251 [59 S.Ct. 174, 83 L.Ed. 151].)

Problem: When the item searched is a cellphone:

The Ninth Circuit has held that cellphones are not containers for purposes of the vehicle exception to the search warrant requirement, and thus may not be searched under this theory. (United States v. Camou (9th Cir. 2014) 773 F.3rd 932, 941-943.)

> The Camou Court cites the Supreme Court decision of Riley v. California (2014) 573 U.S. 373 [134 S.Ct. 2473; 189 L.Ed.2nd 430], an "incident to arrest" case, for the argument that cellphones are entitled to an enhanced level of privacy given the quantity of personal information contained therein, "differ(ing) in both a quantitative and a qualitative sense from other objects that might be kept on an arrestee's person." (134 S.Ct. at p. 2489.) Camou thus extends the theory of Riley v. California to searches of a vehicle based upon probable cause.

See also United States v. Lara (9th Cir. 2016) 815 F.3rd 605, 610-611; declining to include defendant's cellphone under the category of a "container," in defendant's Fourth waiver search conditions.

See "Seizures and Searches of High Tech Devices" (Chapter 17), below.

Problem: A Motorhome, Travel Trailer, Fifth Wheel and other similar "Vehicles":

> A motorhome, although having many of the attributes of a private residence, is mobile and subject to registration like any other motor vehicle, and is therefore included within the vehicle exception to the search warrant requirement. (California v. Carney (1985) 471 U.S. 386 [105 S.Ct. 2066; 85 L.Ed.2nd 406].)
>
> > "When a vehicle (such as a motorhome) is being used on the highways, or if it is readily capable of such use and is found stationary in a place not regularly used for residential purposes—temporary or otherwise—the two justifications for the vehicle exception (i.e., 'mobility' and 'lessened expectation of privacy') come into play." (California v. Carney, supra, at pp. 392-393 [85 L.Ed.2nd at p. 414].)
> >
> > Thus, when a motorhome is not "readily capable of . . . use" on the highway, and is found stationary in a place which is "regularly used for residential purposes," (i.e., such as when hooked up in the residential area of a park), then the rules for searching homes would apply.
>
> Defendant's pickup/camper, which the parties stipulated was actually defendant's residence, but which was found parked on the street within 1000 feet of an elementary school, was held not to come within the "residence" exception to P.C. § 626.9 (firearm in a vehicle within a "gun-free school zone") when a firearm was found in it. (People v. Anson (2002) 105 Cal.App.4th 22, 26-27.)
>
> The same rule applies to a houseboat (United States v. Hill (10th Cir. 1988) 855 F.2nd 664, 668; United States v. Albers (9th Cir. 1998) 136 F.3rd 670.), and for a trailer used for residential purposes but hooked up to a vehicle and moved to a non-residential area. (Garber v. Superior Court (2010) 184 Cal.App.4th 724; discussing whether the exceptions to the concealed and loaded firearms statutes applied to defendant's trailer that he lived in; holding that, under the circumstances, they did not.)
>
> In writing a search warrant for a residence, the affiant failed to separately list a fifth-wheel-type trailer parked in the driveway, assuming that the warrant's authorization to search all vehicles on the property covered the trailer. The issue on appeal was whether the fifth-wheel was actually a separate residence. Although there was some evidence that the fifth-wheel was being used as a temporary residence, the officers observed the following facts supporting their belief that it was a vehicle: (1) The RV had fully inflated tires, could have been mobile within 30 minutes, and was parked on a driveway with ready access to a roadway; (2) the truck used to tow the RV was parked next to it; (3) the RV, which was parked at a Pennsylvania residence, had Missouri license plates, had a vehicle identification number, and was registered in Missouri; and (4) the RV, although hooked up to water and electricity, was not attached to the ground or permanently affixed to any structure. Finally, given that a "vehicle" is commonly defined as "an instrument of transportation or conveyance," it was reasonable for the officers to treat it as such. As a result, the court held that it was reasonable for the officers to believe the RV was a vehicle within the scope of the search warrant and that the district court improperly suppressed the evidence found inside it. (United States v. Houck (8th Cir. MO 2018) 888 F.3rd 957.)

> Note: It would have eliminated the issue altogether had the officers listed the fifth-wheel trailer separately in the warrant affidavit and in the description of the places to be searched.

Bicycles ridden on public streets are like cars and can be searched without a warrant when there is probable cause to believe it contains contraband. (People v. Allen (2000) 78 Cal.App.4th 445.)

The vehicle exception has been used with other types of vehicles, such as an airplane. (See United States v. Rollins (11th Cir. 1983) 699 F.2nd 530.)

Problem: Expanding the scope of the search beyond the purposes of the original cause for a traffic stop:

Having a drug-sniffing dog check the outside of a vehicle stopped for a traffic violation does not require any independent reasons for believing contraband is in the car in order to be lawful. The drug sniff is not a search, and thus does not implicate the Fourth Amendment. (Illinois v. Caballes (2005) 543 U.S. 405 [125 S.Ct. 834; 160 L.Ed.2nd 842], rejecting the argument that to do so "unjustifiably enlarge(s) the scope of a routine traffic stop into a drug investigation."

> See "Dog Sniff Searches," under "Searches of Persons" (Chapter 11), above.

But, if the dog-sniff is conducted after the purposes of the traffic stop are completed, and thus during an unlawfully prolonged detention, then it is illegal and the resulting evidence will be suppressed. (Rodriguez v. United States (2015) 575 U.S, 348 [135 S.Ct. 1609; 191 L.Ed.2nd 492]; the dog's alert to the presence of drugs being seven to eight minutes after the purposes of the traffic stop had been completed.)

The U.S. Supreme Court has had no difficulty expanding the scope of a detention into topics that were not part of the original reasonable suspicion justifying a detention in the first place, so long as the circumstances do not involve an unlawfully prolonged detention. (See Muehler v. Mena (2005) 544 U.S. 93, 100-101 [125 S.Ct. 1465; 161 L.Ed.2nd 299], rejecting Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal cases to the contrary.)

In other cases, the Supreme Court has held: "Even when law enforcement officers have no basis for suspecting a particular individual, they may pose questions, ask for identification, and request consent to search luggage—provided they do not induce cooperation by coercive means." (United States v. Drayton (2002) 536 U.S. 194 [122 S.Ct. 2105; 153 L.Ed.2nd 242].); citing Florida v. Bostic (1991) 501 U.S. 429, 434-435 [111 S.Ct. 2382; 115 L.Ed.2nd 389, 398-399].)

California courts are in accord with these latest Supreme Court pronouncements on the issue: "Questioning during the routine traffic stop on a subject unrelated to the purpose of the stop is not itself a Fourth Amendment violation. Mere questioning is neither a search nor a seizure. [Citation.] While the traffic detainee is under no obligation to answer unrelated questions, the Constitution does not prohibit law enforcement officers from asking. [Citation.]" (People v. Brown (1998) 62 Cal.App.4th 493, 499-500; see also People v. Bell (1996) 43 Cal.App.4th 754, 767; People v. Gallardo (2005) 130 Cal.App.4th 234, 238; People v. Tully (2012) 54 Cal.4th 952, 981-982; and People v. Gallardo (2005) 130 Cal.App.4th 234, 239; asking for consent to search during the time it would have taken to write the citation that was the original cause of the stop is legal, despite the lack of any evidence to believe there was something there to search for.)

Even the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal, previously resistant to this theory, has fallen into line. (See United States v. Mendez (9th Cir. 2007) 476 F.3rd 1077, 1079-1081; overruling prior decisions to the contrary.)

> Questioning defendant/truck driver and asking for consent to search the vehicle, when the truck was initially stopped for no more than an administrative check of its paperwork, is not unconstitutional. (United States v. Delgado (9th Cir. 2008) 545 F.3rd 1195, 1205.)

Note: Oregon Supreme Court authority to the contrary (i.e., State v. Arreola-Botello (2019) 365 Or. 695), that says that for the purposes of Article I, section 9 of the Oregon Constitution, there are both "subject-matter and durational limitations" to the questioning that may occur during a traffic stop, thus making it illegal for Oregon law enforcement officers to question a subject stopped for a traffic violation about anything other than topics related to the purpose of the traffic stop, is not applicable to federal or California courts, and may (or "should") be ignored by California law enforcement officers.

See "Enlarging the Scope of the Original Detention," under "Detentions" (Chapter 4), above.

Evidence of Probable Cause: Probable cause to search a motor vehicle is established just as in any other case. (People v. Carrillo (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 1662; defendant claiming no ownership interest in a vehicle when a registration check showed the vehicle to be registered to him, adds to the evidence needed to prove probable cause.)

An officer's probable cause to believe that a person is in illegal possession of marijuana is not diminished just because the person produces a medical marijuana identification card or a physician's authorization. (People v. Strasburg (2007) 148 Cal.App.4th 1052; defendant lawfully detained and his car lawfully searched despite producing a doctor's authorization to use marijuana for medical purposes.)

See also People v. Waxler (2014) 224 Cal.App.4th 712; holding that the odor of marijuana in a vehicle, with the plain sight observation of a marijuana pipe with what appeared to be a small amount of marijuana in the bowl, supplied probable cause to conduct a warrantless search of the vehicle. The fact that possession of less than an ounce of marijuana is an infraction, or that the defendant has a marijuana card, is irrelevant.

However, when the probable cause evidence is something that was illegally seized itself, the "fruit of the poisonous tree" doctrine dictates that that evidence may not be used as a part of the probable cause to search a vehicle. (United States v. Job (9th Cir. 2017) 871 F.3rd 852, 862-863; evidence discovered as a result of an illegal patdown used as probable cause to search the suspect's vehicle.)

"'(P)robable cause is a fluid concept—turning on the assessment of probabilities in particular factual contexts—not readily, or even usefully, reduced to a neat set of legal rules.;" (People v. Moore (2021) 64 Cal.App.5th 291, 297, quoting Illinois v. Gates (1983) 462 U.S. 213, 232 [76 L.Ed.2nd 527, 544; 103 S.Ct. 2317].)

In Moore, the Court rejected defendant's "piecemeal approach to the probable cause analysis," noting that the officer's extensive training and experience, together with multiple factors indicating that the odor of marijuana coming from a vehicle was not explained by the empty jar shown to the officer which the occupant said had at one time contained marijuana, and established the necessary probable cause to search the vehicle and it's containers (finding a loaded firearm in defendant's backpack). The Court differentiated People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853 (above), on its facts. The officer was also able to testify that he could tell the difference between the odors of "burnt" and "raw" marijuana.

When the Vehicle Itself is Evidence of a Crime:

Rule: Although there is not a lot of authority on the issue, and what authority there is tends to be a bit vague and inconsistent, it has been held that when the vehicle itself "constitutes evidence of a crime," or is the "instrumentality of a crime," rather than the "mere container of evidence," seizure and a warrantless search of that vehicle is lawful.

Case Law:

It is lawful to make a warrantless seizure of a vehicle, found in any public area, when an officer has probable cause to believe that the vehicle itself is "forfeitable contraband." (Florida v. White (1999) 526 U.S. 559 [119 S.Ct. 1555; 143 L.Ed.2nd 748]; see also Carroll v. United States (1925) 267 U.S. 132, 150-151 [45 S.Ct. 280; 69 L.Ed. 543].)

When the vehicle was used to kidnap the victim, it was found to be the "instrumentality" of the crime of kidnapping. (North v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal.3rd 301.)

The vehicle in which the victim was shot was evidence of the crime. (People v. Teale (1969) 70 Cal.2nd 497.)

> "[W]hen the police lawfully seize a car which is itself evidence of a crime rather than merely a container of incriminating articles, they may postpone searching it until arrival at a time and place in which the examination can be performed in accordance with sound scientific procedures." (Id., at p. 508.)

When the defendant was arrested for committing lewd acts on children where it was suspected that he took pictures of his victims in his van, the van became evidence of the crime. (People v. Rogers (1978) 21 Cal.3rd 542.)

Where the defendant's bloody shoeprint was observed on the floorboard of his vehicle, the vehicle itself was found to be evidence of the crime. (People v. Griffin (1988) 46 Cal.3rd 1011.)

> The California Supreme Court noted that this theory for justifying the warrantless seizure and search of a vehicle where the vehicle is itself evidence of, or the instrumentality of, a crime is implicit in a number of United States Supreme Court decisions as well. (People v. Griffin, supra, at p. 1025, citing Cardwell v. Lewis (1974) 417 U.S. 583, 592-593 [94 S.Ct. 2464; 41 L.Ed.2d 325, 336]; Coolidge v. New Hampshire (1971) 403 U.S. 443, 464 [91 S.Ct. 2022; 29 L.Ed.2nd 564, 581-582]; Cooper v. California (1967) 386 U.S. 58 [87 S.Ct. 788; 17 L.Ed.2d 730]; Carroll v. United States (1925) 267 U.S. 132, 153, 156 [45 S.Ct. 280; 69 L.Ed. 543, 551, 552-553]; United States v. Di Re (1948) 332 U.S. 581, 586 [68 S.Ct. 222; 92 L.Ed. 210, 216].)

Where defendant, driving while intoxicated, crashed head-on into another vehicle, killing the other driver, defendant's vehicle was held to be the instrumentality of the charged offenses of involuntary manslaughter (Pen. Code § 192(b)), as a lesser included offense to an alleged second degree murder charge, and vehicular manslaughter with gross negligence while intoxicated (Pen. Code § 191.5(a)). (People v. Diaz (2013) 213 Cal.App.4th 743, 755-757.)

The Court in Diaz rejected defendant's arguments that the "Evidence of a Crime" theory had been repudiated by subsequent case law, such as United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S.Ct. 945; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911]; the GPS case. (Ibid.)

Question; False Compartments: When a vehicle has within it a "false compartment" (i.e., a "box, container, space or enclosure that is intended for use or designed for use to conceal, hide, or otherwise prevent discovery of any controlled substance within or attached to a vehicle, . . ." See People v. Arias (2008) 45 Cal.4th 169.), per H&S § 11366.8, is the vehicle itself "evidence of a crime?" No known case has yet to address this issue.

Question; Chalking or Tapping a Person's Vehicle's Tires: Is not the law enforcement practice of "chalking" a vehicle's tires (to enforce parking time limitations) or "tapping" the tires (as a safety check) a situation where it could be argued that the vehicle itself is evidence of a crime? No court has yet considered this argument. However, both actions by law enforcement have been held to constitute a "search," for which a warrant might be necessary.

Chalking:

The Sixth Circuit has held that when the chalking of a person's tires is done for the purpose of determining how long the vehicle is parked at a specific location, to do so constitutes a "search," and illegal absent a search warrant. Neither the automobile nor the community caretaking exceptions to the search warrant requirement applies. (Taylor v. City Saginaw (6th Cir. 2021) 11 F.4th 483.)

> The Court also held that the "administrative-search exception" to the search warrant requirement does not justify the city's suspicionless chalking of car tires to enforce its parking regulations. The city's parking officer, however, was entitled to qualified immunity because every reasonable parking officer would not understand from prior case that suspicionless chalking of car tires violated Fourth Amendment. (Ibid.)

However, the Ninth Circuit, in a split, 2-to-1 decision, ruled to the contrary, finding that a city's practice of chalking tires as part of enforcing time limits on city parking spots fell within the administrative search exception to the Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement because complementing a broader program of traffic control, tire chalking was reasonable in its scope and manner of execution, it was not used for general crime control purposes, and its intrusion on personal liberty was de minimis at most. (Verdun v. City of San Diego (2022) 51 Cal.App.5th 1033.)

Tapping: The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal has held that an officer tapping a stopped motorist's tires out of concern that, having viewed them wobbling, they were a hazard to the motorist and others, is a "search," under of United States v. Jones (2012) 565 U.S. 400 [132 S.Ct. 945; 181 L.Ed.2nd 911], albeit a reasonable (thus lawful) one under the circumstances. (United States v. Richmond (5th Cir. Tex. 2019) 915 F.3rd 352.)

Inventory Searches of Impounded Vehicles:

General Rule: A lawfully impounded vehicle may be searched for the purpose of determining its condition and contents at the time of impounding, to avoid later disputes or false claims. Anything observed in the vehicle during the inventory search will be admissible in court. (Florida v. Wells (1990) 495 U.S. 1 [110 S.Ct. 1632; 109 L.Ed.2nd 1].)

> Vehicle inventory searches are a well-defined exception to the Fourth Amendment warrant requirement. (People v. Quick (2016) 5 Cal.App.5th 1006, 1010; citing Colorado v. Bertine (1987) 479 U.S. 367, 371 [93 L.Ed.2nd 739; 107 S.Ct. 738]; People v. Zabala (2018) 19 Cal.App.5th 335, 340; People v. Smith (2020) 46 Cal.App.5th 375, 393-394.)

> "An inventory search may extend to the car's trunk, glove compartment, and closed containers located within the car." (People v. Smith, supra.)
>
> "An inventory search of a vehicle is reasonable under the Fourth Amendment because the government's legitimate interests in conducting such a search 'outweigh[] the individual's privacy interests in the contents of his car.'" (United States v. Anderson (9th Cir. 2022) 56 F.4th 748, 757, quoting Illinois v. Lafayette (1983) 462 U.S. 640, at p. 647 [103 S.Ct. 2605; 77 L.Ed.2nd 65].)

"'When vehicles are impounded, local police departments generally follow a routine practice of securing and inventorying the automobiles' contents. These procedures developed in response to three distinct needs: the protection of the owner's property while it remains in police custody [citation]; the protection of the police against claims or disputes over lost or stolen property [citation]; and the protection of the police from potential danger [citation]. The practice has been viewed as essential to respond to incidents of theft or vandalism.'" (People v. Duong (2020) 10 Cal.5th 36, 52; quoting South Dakota v. Opperman (1976) 428 U.S. 364, 369 [49 L. Ed.2nd 1000; 96 S.Ct. 3092]; but declining to decide the lawfulness of the inventory search in this case as non-prejudicial even if illegal.)

Evidence found during a lawful inventory search of a vehicle that is being impounded is admissible in court. (See Harris v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 234 [88 S.Ct. 992; 19 L.Ed.2nd 1067].)

The impoundment of an automobile is a seizure within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. (United States v. Torres (9th Cir. 2016) 828 F.3rd 1113, 1118.)

However, there must be some evidence in the record that the vehicle was actually impounded. An arresting officer's testimony that he searched the vehicle as a pre-impound inventory search, without any evidence to support the theory that the officers in fact intended to impound the vehicle, or that it was it was actually impounded, is insufficient to sustain the trial court's conclusion that a warrantless search of the vehicle was a valid impound search. (People v. Wallace (2017) 15 Cal.App.5th 82, 89-93.)

Impoundment of a Vehicle; Statutory Authority:

> Veh. Code § 14602.5: Impoundment of a Vehicle on Conviction for Driving with a Suspended or Revoked License; Release to Legal Owner:
>
> > (a) Whenever a person is convicted for driving any class M1 or M2 motor vehicle, while his or her driving privilege has been suspended or revoked, of which vehicle he or she is the owner, or of which the owner permitted the operation, knowing the person's driving privilege was suspended or revoked, the court may, at the time sentence is imposed on the person, order the motor vehicle impounded in any manner as the court may determine, for a period not to exceed six months for a first conviction, and not to exceed 12 months for a second or subsequent conviction. For the purposes of this section, a "second or subsequent conviction" includes a conviction for any offense described in this section. The cost of keeping the vehicle shall be a lien on the vehicle, pursuant to Chapter 6.5 (commencing with Section 3067) of Title 14 of Part 4 of Division 3 of the Civil Code.

(b) Notwithstanding subdivision (a), any motor vehicle impounded pursuant to this section which is subject to a chattel mortgage, conditional sale contract, or lease contract shall, upon the filing of an affidavit by the legal owner that the chattel mortgage, conditional sale contract, or lease contract is in default, be released by the court to the legal owner, and shall be delivered to him or her upon payment of the accrued cost of keeping the motor vehicle.

Veh. Code § 14602.6*: *Upon Determination That a Person was Driving Without Valid License; Arrest; Removal and Seizure of Vehicle; Payment; Storage Hearing; Release of Impounded Vehicle:

(a)

(1) Whenever a peace officer determines that a person was driving a vehicle while his or her driving privilege was suspended or revoked, driving a vehicle while his or her driving privilege is restricted pursuant to Section 13352 or 23575 and the vehicle is not equipped with a functioning, certified interlock device, or driving a vehicle without ever having been issued a driver's license, the peace officer may either immediately arrest that person and cause the removal and seizure of that vehicle or, if the vehicle is involved in a traffic collision, cause the removal and seizure of the vehicle without the necessity of arresting the person in accordance with Chapter 10 (commencing with Section 22650) of Division 11. A vehicle so impounded shall be impounded for 30 days.

(2) The impounding agency, within two working days of impoundment, shall send a notice by certified mail, return receipt requested, to the legal owner of the vehicle, at the address obtained from the department, informing the owner that the vehicle has been impounded. Failure to notify the legal owner within two working days shall prohibit the impounding agency from charging for more than 15 days' impoundment when the legal owner redeems the impounded vehicle. The impounding agency shall maintain a published telephone number that provides information 24 hours a day regarding the impoundment of vehicles and the rights of a registered owner to request a hearing. The law enforcement agency shall be open to issue a release to the registered owner or legal owner, or the agent of either, whenever the agency is open to serve the public for nonemergency business.

(b) The registered and legal owner of a vehicle that is removed and seized under subdivision (a) or their agents shall be provided the opportunity for a storage hearing to determine the validity of, or consider any mitigating circumstances attendant to, the storage, in accordance with Section 22852.

Note: V.C. § 22852 describes the post-impound hearing requirements.

(c) Any period in which a vehicle is subjected to storage under this section shall be included as part of the period of impoundment ordered by the court under subdivision (a) of Section 14602.5.

(d)

(1) An impounding agency shall release a vehicle to the registered owner or his or her agent prior to the end of 30 days' impoundment under any of the following circumstances:

(A) When the vehicle is a stolen vehicle.

(B) When the vehicle is subject to bailment and is driven by an unlicensed employee of a business establishment, including a parking service or repair garage.

(C) When the license of the driver was suspended or revoked for an offense other than those included in Article 2 (commencing with Section 13200) of Chapter 2 of Division 6 or Article 3 (commencing with Section 13350) of Chapter 2 of Division 6.

(D) When the vehicle was seized under this section for an offense that does not authorize the seizure of the vehicle.

(E) When the driver reinstates his or her driver's license or acquires a driver's license and proper insurance.

(2) No vehicle shall be released pursuant to this subdivision without presentation of the registered owner's or agent's currently valid driver's license to operate the vehicle and proof of current vehicle registration, or upon order of a court.

(e) The registered owner or his or her agent is responsible for all towing and storage charges related to the impoundment, and any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5.

(f) A vehicle removed and seized under subdivision (a) shall be released to the legal owner of the vehicle or the legal owner's agent prior to the end of 30 days' impoundment if all of the following conditions are met:

(1) The legal owner is a motor vehicle dealer, bank, credit union, acceptance corporation, or other licensed financial institution legally operating in this state or is another person, not the registered owner, holding a security interest in the vehicle.

(2)

(A) The legal owner or the legal owner's agent pays all towing and storage fees related to the seizure of the vehicle. No lien sale processing fees shall be charged to the legal owner who redeems the vehicle prior to the 15th day of impoundment. Neither the impounding authority nor any person having possession of the vehicle shall collect from the legal owner of the type specified in paragraph (1), or the legal owner's agent any administrative charges imposed pursuant to Section 22850.5 unless the legal owner voluntarily requested a post-storage hearing.

(B) A person operating or in charge of a storage facility where vehicles are stored pursuant to this section shall accept a valid bank credit card or cash for payment of towing, storage, and related fees by a legal or registered owner or the owner's agent claiming the vehicle. A credit card shall be in the name of the person presenting the card. "Credit card" means "credit card" as defined in subdivision (a) of Section 1747.02 of the Civil Code, except, for the purposes of this section, credit card does not include a credit card issued by a retail seller.

(C) A person operating or in charge of a storage facility described in subparagraph (B) who violates subparagraph (B) shall be civilly liable to the owner of the vehicle or to the person who tendered the fees for four times the amount of the towing, storage, and related fees, but not to exceed five hundred dollars ($500).

(D) A person operating or in charge of a storage facility described in subparagraph (B) shall have sufficient funds on the premises of the primary storage facility during normal business hours to accommodate, and make change in, a reasonable monetary transaction.

(E) Credit charges for towing and storage services shall comply with Section 1748.1 of the Civil Code. Law enforcement agencies may include the costs of providing for payment by credit when making agreements with towing companies on rates.

(3) The legal owner or the legal owner's agent presents a copy of the assignment, as defined in subdivision (b) of Section 7500.1 of the Business and Professions Code; a release from the one responsible governmental agency, only if required by the agency; a government-issued photographic identification card; and any one of the following, as determined by the legal owner or the legal owner's agent: a certificate of repossession for the vehicle, a security agreement for the vehicle, or title, whether paper or electronic, showing proof of legal ownership for the vehicle. Any documents presented may be originals, photocopies, or facsimile copies, or may be transmitted electronically. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any other governmental agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, shall not require any documents to be notarized. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies may require the agent of the legal owner to produce a photocopy or facsimile copy of its repossession agency license or registration issued pursuant to Chapter 11 (commencing with Section 7500) of Division 3 of the Business and Professions Code, or to demonstrate, to the satisfaction of the law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, that the agent is exempt from licensure pursuant to Section 7500.2 or 7500.3 of the Business and Professions Code. No administrative costs authorized under subdivision (a) of Section 22850.5 shall be charged to the legal owner of the type specified in paragraph (1), who redeems the vehicle unless the legal owner voluntarily requests a post-storage hearing. No city, county, city and county, or state agency shall require a legal owner or a legal owner's agent to request a post-storage hearing as a requirement for release of the vehicle to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or other governmental agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, shall not require any documents other than those specified in this paragraph. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or other governmental agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, shall not require any documents to be notarized. The legal owner or the legal owner's agent shall be given a copy of any documents he or she is required to sign, except for a vehicle evidentiary hold logbook. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, or any person in possession of the vehicle, may photocopy and retain the copies of any documents presented by the legal owner or legal owner's agent.

(4) A failure by a storage facility to comply with any applicable conditions set forth in this subdivision shall not affect the right of the legal owner or the legal owner's agent to retrieve the vehicle, provided all conditions required of the legal owner or legal owner's agent under this subdivision are satisfied.

(g)

(1) A legal owner or the legal owner's agent that obtains release of the vehicle pursuant to subdivision (f) shall not release the vehicle to the registered owner of the vehicle, or the person who was listed as the registered owner when the vehicle was impounded, or any agents of the registered owner, unless the registered owner is a rental car agency, until after the termination of the 30-day impoundment period.

(2) The legal owner or the legal owner's agent shall not relinquish the vehicle to the registered owner or the person who was listed as the registered owner when the vehicle was impounded until the registered owner or that owner's agent presents his or her valid driver's license or valid temporary driver's license to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent. The legal owner or the legal owner's agent or the person in possession of the vehicle shall make every reasonable effort to ensure that the license presented is valid and possession of the vehicle will not be given to the driver who was involved in the original impoundment proceeding until the expiration of the impoundment period.

(3) Prior to relinquishing the vehicle, the legal owner may require the registered owner to pay all towing and storage charges related to the impoundment and any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5 that were incurred by the legal owner in connection with obtaining custody of the vehicle.

(4) Any legal owner who knowingly releases or causes the release of a vehicle to a registered owner or the person in possession of the vehicle at the time of the impoundment or any agent of the registered owner in violation of this subdivision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine in the amount of two thousand dollars ($2,000) in addition to any other penalties established by law.

(5) The legal owner, registered owner, or person in possession of the vehicle shall not change or attempt to change the name of the legal owner or the registered owner on the records of the department until the vehicle is released from the impoundment.

(h)

(1) A vehicle removed and seized under subdivision (a) shall be released to a rental car agency prior to the end of 30 days' impoundment if the agency is either the legal owner or registered owner of the vehicle and the agency pays all towing and storage fees related to the seizure of the vehicle.

(2) The owner of a rental vehicle that was seized under this section may continue to rent the vehicle upon recovery of the vehicle. However, the rental car agency may not rent another vehicle to the driver of the vehicle that was seized until 30 days after the date that the vehicle was seized.

(3) The rental car agency may require the person to whom the vehicle was rented to pay all towing and storage charges related to the impoundment and any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5 that were incurred by the rental car agency in connection with obtaining custody of the vehicle.

(i) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the registered owner and not the legal owner shall remain responsible for any towing and storage charges related to the impoundment, any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5, and any parking fines, penalties, and administrative fees incurred by the registered owner.

(j)

(1) The law enforcement agency and the impounding agency, including any storage facility acting on behalf of the law enforcement agency or impounding agency, shall comply with this section and shall not be liable to the registered owner for the improper release of the vehicle to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent provided the release complies with the provisions of this section. A law enforcement agency shall not refuse to issue a release to a legal owner or the agent of a legal owner on the grounds that it previously issued a release.

(2)

(A) The legal owner of collateral shall, by operation of law and without requiring further action, indemnify and hold harmless a law enforcement agency, city, county, city and county, the state, a tow yard, storage facility, or an impounding yard from a claim arising out of the release of the collateral to a licensed repossessor or licensed repossession agency, and from any damage to the collateral after its release, including reasonable attorney's fees and costs associated with defending a claim, if the collateral was released in compliance with this section.

(B) This subdivision shall apply only when collateral is released to a licensed repossessor, licensed repossession agency, or its officers or employees pursuant to Chapter 11 (commencing with Section 7500) of Division 3 of the Business and Professions Code.

Case Law:

The authority to impound a vehicle and hold it for 30 days, per V.C. § 14602.6(a)(1), when a person is arrested for driving on a suspended license or never had a license, including when the vehicle has been in an accident, is a discretionary act by law enforcement and does not generate civil liability when the vehicle is not held for 30 days. (California Highway Patrol v. Superior Court* [Walker] (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 1144.)

The California Highway Patrol and two of its officers could not be held liable in a consolidated wrongful death action brought against them under Gov't. Code § 815.6 for failing to perform a mandatory duty because Veh. Code § 14602.6(a)(1) confers only discretionary authority on law enforcement to impound an individual's vehicle if an individual is arrested for driving with a suspended license under V.C. § 14601.1. The legislature's use of the word "shall," instead of "may," in V.C. § 14607.6(c)(1) indicates that it understands the distinction between the two words and acts deliberately in choosing its vocabulary, and this clear distinction in the language employed in V.C. § 14602.6 and V.C. § 14607.6, as well as that employed in V.C. § 14602.5 and V.C. § 14602.7, supports the conclusion that V.C. § 14602.6(a)(1) confers discretionary authority on law enforcement. (Ibid.)

Use of V.C. §§ 14602.6 and 22852 to impound vehicles and hold them for 30 days, with the provisions for a post-seizure administrative hearing within two days of a request from the vehicle's owner to determine whether the impound was proper and the existence of any mitigating factors, was held to be lawful and not a violation of equal protection, due process, or the Fourth Amendment's search and seizure requirements. (Alviso v. Sonoma County Sheriff's Department et al. (2010) 186 Cal.App.4th 198.)

> Note: The initial impound of the vehicle was not contested, eliminating any need to discuss the possible applicability of the rules on law enforcement's "community caretaking" function. (Id., at p. 214.)
>
> Note: V.C. § 22852 describes the post-impound hearing requirements.

A police department has discretion to establish guidelines that would allow an impounded vehicle to be released in less than 30 days, under V.C. § 22651(p), in situations where a fixed 30-day statutory impoundment period, under V.C. § 14602.6(a)(1), may also potentially apply. (95 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen 1 (2012).)

A police department's policy regarding impounding vehicles, which sought to implement V.C. §§ 14602.6 and 14607.6, is within the wide discretion of the police chief because it neither creates new law nor conflicts with existing law but, rather, simply implemented existing law. The "Police Protective League" is without standing to challenge such a policy where the policy does not conflict with the Vehicle Code. (Los Angeles Police Protective League v. City of Los Angeles (2014) 232 Cal.App.4th 907.)

> Note: V.C. § 14607.6 deals with forfeiture as a nuisance of a motor vehicle if it is driven on a highway by a driver with a suspended or revoked license, or by an unlicensed driver, who is a registered owner of the vehicle at the time of impoundment and has a previous misdemeanor conviction for a violation of V.C. §§ 12500(a), 14601, 14601.1, 14601.2, 14601.3, 14601.4, or 14601.5.

Holding onto an impounded vehicle for 30 days, under authority of V.C. § 14602.6(a), is an unlawful seizure under the Fourth Amendment absent the establishment of some legal justification for the vehicle's continued seizure. (Brewster v. Beck (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F.3rd 1194, 1196-1197.)

> Specifically left undecided, the issues having been conceded by the parties, was the legality of the initial impound under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment due process clauses, and the applicability of the "Community Caretaking" theory to the driver being unlicensed.

Plaintiffs Sandoval and Ruiz each got pulled over in a separate incidents in Sonoma County. Both men had previously been issued a Mexican driver's license (though Ruiz's was expired) and had California-licensed friends willing to take possession of their vehicles. However, in both cases, the law enforcement officers making the stop caused the vehicles to be impounded for 30 days pursuant to Veh. Code § 14602.6(a)(1). Sued in federal court, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the trial court's granting of the plaintiff's summary judgment motion, holding that a driver who has been issued a driver's license in a foreign jurisdiction for the type of vehicle seized has not driven that vehicle "without ever having been issued a driver's license." (See V.C. § 310 which defines a "driver's license" as "a valid license to drive the type of motor vehicle or combination of vehicles for which a person is licensed under this code or by a foreign jurisdiction.") V.C. § 14602.6, therefore, did not authorize impounding their vehicles. (Mateos-Sandoval v. County of Sonoma (9th Cir. 2018) 912 F.3rd 509, 514-517.)

But see United States v. Cervantes (9th Cir. 2012) 703 F.3rd 1135, where it was held that impounding a vehicle when the defendant did not have a valid license, pursuant to V.C. §§ 12500(a), 14602.6(a)(1), and 22651(h)(1), violated the "Community Caretaking" rules in that defendant had pulled over to the curb and legally parked his car when stopped. The fact that defendant's car was not located close to his home was held to be of minor importance. (pp. 1140-1143.)

Despite the existence of authorizing statutes (e.g., V.C. § 14602.6(a)(1)), it is a Fourth Amendment violation to impound a vehicle (and conduct a subsequent warrantless inventory search) unless such an impoundment is also allowable under the so-called "Community Caretaking Doctrine." To be lawful, the impoundment of a vehicle must be both authorized by statute (such as V.C. § 14602.6(a)(1)) and in compliance with the Community Caretaking Doctrine. (People v. Lee (2019) 40 Cal.App.5th 853, 867-869.)

> Note: This section is used by some as authority to cite the unlicensed driver of a motor vehicle even though the driving occurred in other than in the officer's presence. No case yet discusses the legality of this practice.

On appeal from the denial of defendant's motion to suppress evidence found during a search of his cellphone, seized from his rental car after a high-speed chase, the court did not need to address whether defendant had standing to challenge the search because Fourth Amendment standing is not jurisdictional and hence need not be addressed before addressing other aspects of the merits of a Fourth Amendment claim. Defendant's cellphone was lawfully seized as part of a valid inventory search because there was no showing that the search was used to rummage for evidence. The failure to list the phone on an inventory sheet did not invalidate the search. (United States v. Garay (9th Cir. 2019) 938 F.3rd 1108, 111-1113; the vehicle impounded because it was totaled and lying in a ditch.)

In a case from the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal, it was held that under the Fourth Amendment's automobile exception, the government can seize a vehicle from a public area without a warrant when it has probable cause to believe that the vehicle itself was an instrument or constituted evidence of a crime. In this case, plaintiff's vehicle was seized from a private apartment parking lot. However, the Court held that although a private apartment parking lot is not "public," neither is it "private" in the sense relevant for Fourth Amendment protection. There is no reasonable expectation of privacy in a shared apartment parking lot. In this case, the officer had probable cause to believe that plaintiff's car had been involved in a hit and run. The officer, therefore, was entitled to seize plaintiff's car from an the parking lot. And because there was probable cause to believe the car was an instrument or evidence of a crime, a warrant was not required to seize it. Therefore, the seizure did not violate the Fourth Amendment and the officer was entitled to qualified immunity. (Rountree v. Lopinto (5th Cir. 2020) 976 F.3rd 606.)

In a federal First Circuit Court of Appeal case, the Appellate Court overruled the district court, holding that the Community Caretaking theory did in fact allow for the impoundment of defendant's vehicle (stopped for a traffic infraction), and the subsequent inventory search during which heroin and an illegal firearm were found, where the defendant was unlicensed and there was no licensed driver in the vehicle. Per the Court, the pre-impoundment inventory search was justified because even if defendant himself did not pose a danger to the trooper because items in the vehicle might have. In addition, even though defendant rode to the impound yard with the tow truck driver, given the late hour and the fact that defendant could not legally operate the vehicle, there was a risk that the vehicle would not be recovered promptly, necessitating the inventory search for the purpose of protecting against any loss from the vehicle while impounded. For these reasons, the court found that the trooper's search of defendant's vehicle served the purposes of a valid inventory search under the Fourth Amendment, and was lawful. (United States v. Rivera (1st Cir. 2021) 988 F.3rd 579.)

Veh. Code § 14602.7: Rights and Procedures for Impoundment; Release to Legal Owner:

(a) A magistrate presented with the affidavit of a peace officer establishing reasonable cause to believe that a vehicle, described by vehicle type and license number, was an instrumentality used in the peace officer's presence in violation of Section 2800.1, 2800.2, 2800.3, or 23103, shall issue a warrant or order authorizing any peace officer to immediately seize and cause the removal of the vehicle. The warrant or court order may be entered into a computerized database. A vehicle so impounded may be impounded for a period not to exceed 30 days. The impounding agency, within two working days of impoundment, shall send a notice by certified mail, return receipt requested, to the legal owner of the vehicle, at the address obtained from the department, informing the owner that the vehicle has been impounded and providing the owner with a copy of the warrant or court order. Failure to notify the legal owner within two working days shall prohibit the impounding agency from charging for more than 15 days impoundment when a legal owner redeems the impounded vehicle. The law enforcement agency shall be open to issue a release to the registered owner or legal owner, or the agent of either, whenever the agency is open to serve the public for regular, nonemergency business.

(b)

(1) An impounding agency shall release a vehicle to the registered owner or his or her agent prior to the end of the impoundment period and without the permission of the magistrate authorizing the vehicle's seizure under any of the following circumstances:

(A) When the vehicle is a stolen vehicle.

(B) When the vehicle is subject to bailment and is driven by an unlicensed employee of the business establishment, including a parking service or repair garage.

(C) When the registered owner of the vehicle causes a peace officer to reasonably believe, based on the totality of the circumstances, that the registered owner was not the driver who violated Section 2800.1, 2800.2, or 2800.3, the agency shall immediately release the vehicle to the registered owner or his or her agent.

(2) No vehicle shall be released pursuant to this subdivision, except upon presentation of the registered owner's or agent's currently valid driver's license to operate the vehicle and proof of current vehicle registration, or upon order of the court.

(c)

(1) Whenever a vehicle is impounded under this section, the magistrate ordering the storage shall provide the vehicle's registered and legal owners of record, or their agents, with the opportunity for a post-storage hearing to determine the validity of the storage.

(2) A notice of the storage shall be mailed or personally delivered to the registered and legal owners within 48 hours after issuance of the warrant or court order, excluding weekends and holidays, by the person or agency executing the warrant or court order, and shall include all of the following information:

> (A) The name, address, and telephone number of the agency providing the notice.
>
> (B) The location of the place of storage and a description of the vehicle, which shall include, if available, the name or make, the manufacturer, the license plate number, and the mileage of the vehicle.
>
> (C) A copy of the warrant or court order and the peace officer's affidavit, as described in subdivision (a).
>
> (D) A statement that, in order to receive their post-storage hearing, the owners, or their agents, are required to request the hearing from the magistrate issuing the warrant or court order in person, in writing, or by telephone, within 10 days of the date of the notice.

(3) The post-storage hearing shall be conducted within two court days after receipt of the request for the hearing.

(4) At the hearing, the magistrate may order the vehicle released if he or she finds any of the circumstances described in subdivision (b) or (e) that allow release of a vehicle by the impounding agency. The magistrate may also consider releasing the vehicle when the continued impoundment will cause undue hardship to persons dependent upon the vehicle for employment or to a person with a community property interest in the vehicle.

(5) Failure of either the registered or legal owner, or his or her agent, to request, or to attend, a scheduled hearing satisfies the post-storage hearing requirement.

(6) The agency employing the peace officer who caused the magistrate to issue the warrant or court order shall be responsible for the costs incurred for towing and storage if it is determined in the post-storage hearing that reasonable grounds for the storage are not established.

(d) The registered owner or his or her agent is responsible for all towing and storage charges related to the impoundment, and any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5.

(e) A vehicle removed and seized under subdivision (a) shall be released to the legal owner of the vehicle or the legal owner's agent prior to the end of the impoundment period and without the permission of the magistrate authorizing the seizure of the vehicle if all of the following conditions are met:

(1) The legal owner is a motor vehicle dealer, bank, credit union, acceptance corporation, or other licensed financial institution legally operating in this state or is another person, not the registered owner, holding a financial interest in the vehicle.

(2)

(A) The legal owner or the legal owner's agent pays all towing and storage fees related to the seizure of the vehicle. No lien sale processing fees shall be charged to the legal owner who redeems the vehicle prior to the 15th day of impoundment. Neither the impounding authority nor any person having possession of the vehicle shall collect from the legal owner of the type specified in paragraph (1), or the legal owner's agent any administrative charges imposed pursuant to Section 22850.5 unless the legal owner voluntarily requested a post-storage hearing.

(B) A person operating or in charge of a storage facility where vehicles are stored pursuant to this section shall accept a valid bank credit card or cash for payment of towing, storage, and related fees by a legal or registered owner or the owner's agent claiming the vehicle. A credit card shall be in the name of the person presenting the card. “Credit card” means “credit card” as defined in subdivision (a) of Section 1747.02 of the Civil Code, except, for the purposes of this section, credit card does not include a credit card issued by a retail seller.

(C) A person operating or in charge of a storage facility described in subparagraph (B) who violates subparagraph (B) shall be civilly liable to the owner of the vehicle or to the person who tendered the fees for four times the amount of the towing, storage and related fees, but not to exceed five hundred dollars ($500).

(D) A person operating or in charge of a storage facility described in subparagraph (B) shall have sufficient funds on the premises of the primary storage facility during normal business hours to accommodate, and make change in, a reasonable monetary transaction.

(E) Credit charges for towing and storage services shall comply with Section 1748.1 of the Civil Code. Law enforcement agencies may include the costs of providing for payment by credit when making agreements with towing companies on rates.

(3) The legal owner or the legal owner’s agent presents, to the law enforcement agency, impounding agency, person in possession of the vehicle, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, a copy of the assignment, as defined in subdivision (b) of Section 7500.1 of the Business and Professions Code; a release from the one responsible governmental agency, only if required by the agency; a government-issued photographic identification card; and any one of the following, as determined by the legal owner or the legal owner’s agent: a certificate of repossession for the vehicle, a security agreement for the vehicle, or title, whether paper or electronic, showing proof of legal ownership for the vehicle. Any documents presented may be originals, photocopies, or facsimile copies, or may be transmitted electronically. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any other governmental agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, shall not require any documents to be notarized. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, may require the agent of the legal owner to produce a photocopy or facsimile copy of its repossession agency license or registration issued pursuant to Chapter 11 (commencing with Section 7500) of Division 3 of the Business and Professions Code, or to demonstrate, to the satisfaction of the law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies that the agent is exempt from licensure pursuant to Section 7500.2 or 7500.3 of the Business and Professions Code. No administrative costs authorized under subdivision (a) of Section 22850.5 shall be charged to the legal owner of the type specified in paragraph (1), who redeems the vehicle unless the legal owner voluntarily requests a post-storage hearing. No city, county, city and county, or state agency shall require a legal owner or a legal owner's agent to request a post-storage hearing as a requirement for release of the vehicle to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or other governmental agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, shall not require any documents other than those specified in this paragraph. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or other governmental agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, shall not require any documents to be notarized. The legal owner or the legal owner's agent shall be given a copy of any documents he or she is required to sign, except for a vehicle evidentiary hold logbook. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, or any person in possession of the vehicle, may photocopy and retain the copies of any documents presented by the legal owner or legal owner's agent.

(4) A failure by a storage facility to comply with any applicable conditions set forth in this subdivision shall not affect the right of the legal owner or the legal owner's agent to retrieve the vehicle, provided all conditions required of the legal owner or legal owner's agent under this subdivision are satisfied.

(f)

(1) A legal owner or the legal owner's agent that obtains release of the vehicle pursuant to subdivision (e) shall not release the vehicle to the registered owner or the person who was listed as the registered owner when the vehicle was impounded of the vehicle or any agents of the registered owner, unless a registered owner is a rental car agency, until the termination of the impoundment period.

(2) The legal owner or the legal owner's agent shall not relinquish the vehicle to the registered owner or the person who was listed as the registered owner when the vehicle was impounded until the registered owner or that owner's agent presents his or her valid driver's license or valid temporary driver's license to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent. The legal owner or the legal owner's agent shall make every reasonable effort to ensure that the license presented is valid and possession of the vehicle will not be given to the driver who was involved in the original impoundment proceeding until the expiration of the impoundment period.

(3) Prior to relinquishing the vehicle, the legal owner may require the registered owner to pay all towing and storage charges related to the impoundment and the administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5 that were incurred by the legal owner in connection with obtaining the custody of the vehicle.

(4) Any legal owner who knowingly releases or causes the release of a vehicle to a registered owner or the person in possession of the vehicle at the time of the impoundment or any agent of the registered owner in violation of this subdivision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine in the amount of two thousand dollars ($2,000) in addition to any other penalties established by law.

(5) The legal owner, registered owner, or person in possession of the vehicle shall not change or attempt to change the name of the legal owner or the registered owner on the records of the department until the vehicle is released from the impoundment.

(g)

(1) A vehicle impounded and seized under subdivision (a) shall be released to a rental car agency prior to the end of the impoundment period if the agency is either the legal owner or registered owner of the vehicle and the agency pays all towing and storage fees related to the seizure of the vehicle.

(2) The owner of a rental vehicle that was seized under this section may continue to rent the vehicle upon recovery of the vehicle. However, the rental car agency shall not rent another vehicle to the driver who used the vehicle that was seized to evade a police officer until 30 days after the date that the vehicle was seized.

(3) The rental car agency may require the person to whom the vehicle was rented and who evaded the peace officer to pay all towing and storage charges related to the impoundment and any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5 that were incurred by the rental car agency in connection with obtaining custody of the vehicle.

(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the registered owner and not the legal owner shall remain responsible for any towing and storage charges related to the impoundment and the administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5 and any parking fines, penalties, and administrative fees incurred by the registered owner.

(i)

(1) This section does not apply to vehicles abated under the Abandoned Vehicle Abatement Program pursuant to Sections 22660 to 22668, inclusive, and Section 22710, or to vehicles impounded for investigation pursuant to Section 22655, or to vehicles removed from private property pursuant to Section 22658.

(2) This section does not apply to abandoned vehicles removed pursuant to Section 22669 that are determined by the public agency to have an estimated value of three hundred dollars ($300) or less.

(j) The law enforcement agency and the impounding agency, including any storage facility acting on behalf of the law enforcement agency or impounding agency, shall comply with this section and shall not be liable to the registered owner for the improper release of the vehicle to the legal owner or the legal owner’s agent provided the release complies with the provisions of this section. The legal owner shall indemnify and hold harmless a storage facility from any claims arising out of the release of the vehicle to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent and from any damage to the vehicle after its release, including the reasonable costs associated with defending any such claims. A law enforcement agency shall not refuse to issue a release to a legal owner or the agent of a legal owner on the grounds that it previously issued a release.

Case Law:

The California Highway Patrol and two of its officers could not be held liable in a consolidated wrongful death action brought against them under Gov't. Code § 815.6 for failing to perform a mandatory duty because Veh. Code § 14602.6(a)(1) confers only "discretionary authority" on law enforcement to impound an individual's vehicle if an individual is arrested for driving with a suspended license under Veh. Code § 14601.1. The Legislature's use of "shall" instead of "may" in Veh. Code § 14607.6(c)(1) indicates that it understands the distinction between the two words and acts deliberately in choosing its vocabulary, and this clear distinction in the language employed in Veh. Code § 14602.6 and Veh. Code § 14607.6, as well as that employed in Veh. Code § 14602.5 and Veh. Code § 14602.7, supports the conclusion that Veh. Code § 14602.6(a)(1) confers discretionary authority on law enforcement. (California Highway Patrol v. Superior Court* [Walker] (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 1144.)

Veh. Code § 14602.8*: *Impoundment of Vehicle; Release:

(a)

(1) If a peace officer determines that a person has been convicted of a violation of Section 23140, 23152, or 23153, that the violation occurred within the preceding 10 years, and that one or more of the following circumstances applies to that person, the officer may immediately cause the removal and seizure of the vehicle that the person was driving, under either of the following circumstances:

(A) The person was driving a vehicle when the person had 0.10 percent or more, by weight, of alcohol in his or her blood.

(B) The person driving the vehicle refused to submit to or complete a chemical test requested by the peace officer.

(2) A vehicle impounded pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be impounded for the following period of time:

(A) Five days, if the person has been convicted once of violating Section 23140, 23152, or 23153, and the violation occurred within the preceding 10 years.

(B) Fifteen days, if the person has been convicted two or more times of violating Section 23140, 23152, or 23153, or any combination thereof, and the violations occurred within the preceding 10 years.

(3) Within two working days after impoundment, the impounding agency shall send a notice by certified mail, return receipt requested, to the legal owner of the vehicle, at the address obtained from the department, informing the owner that the vehicle has been impounded. Failure to notify the legal owner within two working days shall prohibit the impounding agency from charging for more than five days' impoundment when the legal owner redeems the impounded vehicle. The impounding agency shall maintain a published telephone number that provides information 24 hours a day regarding the impoundment of vehicles and the rights of a registered owner to request a hearing. The law enforcement agency shall be open to issue a release to the registered owner or legal owner, or the agent of either, whenever the agency is open to serve the public for regular, nonemergency business.

(b) The registered and legal owner of a vehicle that is removed and seized under subdivision (a) or his or her agent shall be provided the opportunity for a storage hearing to determine the validity of, or consider any mitigating circumstances attendant to, the storage, in accordance with Section 22852.

Note: V.C. § 22852 describes the post-impound hearing requirements.

(c) Any period during which a vehicle is subjected to storage under this section shall be included as part of the period of impoundment ordered by the court under Section 23594.

(d)

(1) The impounding agency shall release the vehicle to the registered owner or his or her agent prior to the end of the impoundment period under any of the following circumstances:

(A) When the vehicle is a stolen vehicle.

(B) When the vehicle is subject to bailment and is driven by an unlicensed employee of a business establishment, including a parking service or repair garage.

(C) When the driver of the vehicle is not the sole registered owner of the vehicle and the vehicle is being released to another registered owner of the vehicle who agrees not to allow the driver to use the vehicle until after the end of the impoundment period.

(2) A vehicle shall not be released pursuant to this subdivision without presentation of the registered owner's or agent's currently valid driver's license to operate the vehicle and proof of current vehicle registration, or upon order of a court.

(e) The registered owner or his or her agent is responsible for all towing and storage charges related to the impoundment, and any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5.

(f) A vehicle removed and seized under subdivision (a) shall be released to the legal owner of the vehicle or the legal owner's agent prior to the end of the impoundment period if all of the following conditions are met:

(1) The legal owner is a motor vehicle dealer, bank, credit union, acceptance corporation, or other licensed financial institution legally operating in this state, or is another person who is not the registered owner and holds a security interest in the vehicle.

(2)

(A) The legal owner or the legal owner's agent pays all towing and storage fees related to the seizure of the vehicle. A lien sale processing fee shall not be charged to the legal owner who redeems the vehicle prior to the 10th day of impoundment. The impounding authority or any person having possession of the vehicle shall not collect from the legal owner of the type specified in paragraph (1) or the legal owner's agent any administrative charges imposed pursuant to Section 22850.5 unless the legal owner voluntarily requested a post-storage hearing.

(B) A person operating or in charge of a storage facility where vehicles are stored pursuant to this section shall accept a valid bank credit card or cash for payment of towing, storage, and related fees by a legal or registered owner or the owner's agent claiming the vehicle. A credit card shall be in the name of the person presenting the card. "Credit card" means "credit card" as defined in subdivision (a) of Section 1747.02 of the Civil Code, except, for the purposes of this section, credit card does not include a credit card issued by a retail seller.

(C) A person operating or in charge of a storage facility described in subparagraph (B) who violates subparagraph (B) shall be civilly liable to the owner of the vehicle or to the person who tendered the fees for four times the amount of the towing, storage, and other related fees, but not to exceed five hundred dollars ($500).

(D) A person operating or in charge of a storage facility described in subparagraph (B) shall have sufficient funds on the premises of the primary storage facility during normal business hours to accommodate, and make change in, a reasonable monetary transaction.

(E) Credit charges for towing and storage services shall comply with Section 1748.1 of the Civil Code. Law enforcement agencies may include the costs of providing for payment by credit when making agreements with towing companies on rates.

(3)

(A) The legal owner or the legal owner's agent presents to the law enforcement agency or impounding agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, a copy of the assignment, as defined in subdivision (b) of Section 7500.1 of the Business and Professions Code; a release from the one responsible governmental agency, only if required by the agency; a government-issued photographic identification card; and any one of the following as determined by the legal owner or the legal owner's agent: a certificate of repossession for the vehicle, a security agreement for the vehicle, or title, whether paper or electronic, showing proof of legal ownership for the vehicle. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any other governmental agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, shall not require the presentation of any other documents.

(B) The legal owner or the legal owner's agent presents to the person in possession of the vehicle, or any person acting on behalf of the person in possession, a copy of the assignment, as defined in subdivision (b) of Section 7500.1 of the Business and Professions Code; a release from the one responsible governmental agency, only if required by the agency; a government-issued photographic identification card; and any one of the following as determined by the legal owner or the legal owner's agent: a certificate of repossession for the vehicle, a security agreement for the vehicle, or title, whether paper or electronic, showing proof of legal ownership for the vehicle. The person in possession of the vehicle, or any person acting on behalf of the person in possession, shall not require the presentation of any other documents.

(C) All presented documents may be originals, photocopies, or facsimile copies, or may be transmitted electronically. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any person acting on behalf of them, shall not require a document to be notarized. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any person in possession of the vehicle, or anyone acting on behalf of those agencies may require the agent of the legal owner to produce a photocopy or facsimile copy of its repossession agency license or registration issued pursuant to Chapter 11 (commencing with Section 7500) of Division 3 of the Business and Professions Code, or to demonstrate, to the satisfaction of the law enforcement agency, the impounding agency, any other governmental agency, or any person in possession of the vehicle, or anyone acting on behalf of them, that the agent is exempt from licensure pursuant to Section 7500.2 or 7500.3 of the Business and Professions Code.

(D) Administrative costs authorized under subdivision (a) of Section 22850.5 shall not be charged to the legal owner of the type specified in paragraph (1) who redeems the vehicle unless the legal owner voluntarily requests a post-storage hearing. A city, county, city and county, or state agency shall not require a legal owner or a legal owner's agent to request a post-storage hearing as a requirement for release of the vehicle to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent. The law enforcement agency, the impounding agency, any governmental agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies shall not require any documents other than those specified in this paragraph. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or other governmental agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, shall not require any documents to be notarized. The legal owner or the legal owner's agent shall be given a copy of any documents he or she is required to sign, except for a vehicle evidentiary hold logbook. The law enforcement agency, impounding agency, or any person acting on behalf of those agencies, or any person in possession of the vehicle, may photocopy and retain the copies of any documents presented by the legal owner or legal owner's agent.

(4) A failure by a storage facility to comply with any applicable conditions set forth in this subdivision shall not affect the right of the legal owner or the legal owner's agent to retrieve the vehicle, provided all conditions required of the legal owner or legal owner's agent under this subdivision are satisfied.

(g)

(1) A legal owner or the legal owner's agent who obtains release of the vehicle pursuant to subdivision (f) shall not release the vehicle to the registered owner of the vehicle or the person who was listed as the registered owner when the vehicle was impounded or any agents of the registered owner unless the registered owner is a rental car agency, until after the termination of the impoundment period.

(2) The legal owner or the legal owner's agent shall not relinquish the vehicle to the registered owner or the person who was listed as the registered owner when the vehicle was impounded until the registered owner or that owner's agent presents his or her valid driver's license or valid temporary driver's license to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent. The legal owner or the legal owner's agent or the person in possession of the vehicle shall make every reasonable effort to ensure that the license presented is valid and possession of the vehicle will not be given to the driver who was involved in the original impoundment proceeding until the expiration of the impoundment period.

(3) Prior to relinquishing the vehicle, the legal owner may require the registered owner to pay all towing and storage charges related to the impoundment and any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5 that were incurred by the legal owner in connection with obtaining custody of the vehicle.

(4) A legal owner who knowingly releases or causes the release of a vehicle to a registered owner or the person in possession of the vehicle at the time of the impoundment or an agent of the registered owner in violation of this subdivision is guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine in the amount of two thousand dollars ($2,000) in addition to any other penalties established by law.

(5) The legal owner, registered owner, or person in possession of the vehicle shall not change or attempt to change the name of the legal owner or the registered owner on the records of the department until the vehicle is released from the impoundment.

(h)

(1) A vehicle removed and seized under subdivision (a) shall be released to a rental car agency prior to the end of the impoundment period if the agency is either the legal owner or registered owner of the vehicle and the agency pays all towing and storage fees related to the seizure of the vehicle.

(2) The owner of a rental vehicle that was seized under this section may continue to rent the vehicle upon recovery of the vehicle. However, the rental car agency shall not rent another vehicle to the driver of the vehicle that was seized until the impoundment period has expired.

(3) The rental car agency may require the person to whom the vehicle was rented to pay all towing and storage charges related to the impoundment and any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5 that were incurred by the rental car agency in connection with obtaining custody of the vehicle.

(i) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the registered owner, and not the legal owner, shall remain responsible for any towing and storage charges related to the impoundment, any administrative charges authorized under Section 22850.5, and any parking fines, penalties, and administrative fees incurred by the registered owner.

(j) The law enforcement agency and the impounding agency, including any storage facility acting on behalf of the law enforcement agency or impounding agency, shall comply with this section and shall not be liable to the registered owner for the improper release of the vehicle to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent provided the release complies with the provisions of this section. The legal owner shall indemnify and hold harmless a storage facility from any claims arising out of the release of the vehicle to the legal owner or the legal owner's agent and from any damage to the vehicle after its release, including the reasonable costs associated with defending any such claims. A law

